I agree that in addition to express contract you may have an implied contract—that is, a contract to be implied from the practice of the partners and the mode in which the partners have carried on the partnership; and the real question we have to consider here is, whether there is sufficient evidence of an implied contract to vary that which is the custom.

It is alleged that there is such sufficient evidence, and the way in which that allegation is attempted to be made out is this. It is said that, by the custom of this mine, when a member relinquished his shares, the amount of the liabilities of such relinquishing member was ascertained by dividing the total amount of the liabilities by the total number of shares then held by the shareholders, and by multiplying the quotient so arrived at by the number of shares held by the relinquishing member—that is, the amount of his liabilities was that proportion of the whole liability which the number of shares held by him bore to the whole number of the shares then held.

It is said that this practice of proceeding is evidence of a contract that this shall be the mode in which the retiring member's share of the liabilities is to be ascertained.

But it appears from the accounts, not only that that was the mode of ascertaining the liability of the retiring shareholder, which is against the company, but they shew something else against the company, which is this: In every case the assets of the company included all arrears of calls, whether the shareholder were solvent or insolvent—that is, the arrears were all treated as good debts. The accounts, if they are to shew anything with respect to a new contract, must shew a new contract that all bad debts for arrears of calls from insolvent shareholders were to be treated as good debts in favour of the retiring shareholder. That would be ridiculous, and the only conclusion which we can arrive at is that the purser made a blunder in the accounts.

But it is a very difficult thing to ascertain in a large company like this anything from which a Court can spell out an agreement to make a new contract. Such a company is very different from a small ordinary partnership, and the inference to be drawn from the mode of taking the accounts is not so strong in the case of a company as it would be in that of a small partnership. It is to my mind impossible to deduce from the mode of taking the accounts a contract that bad debts should be treated as good debts binding as against the company.

Nor ought we to draw from the accounts the inference which we are desired to draw with reference to the mode of ascertaining the liabilities. The evidence derived from the accounts being so made out only goes to this—that it shews the accounts were made out in a blundering way, and does not shew a new contract on the part of the members of the company to have the accounts taken in a different way from that which is the ordinary business-like mode of taking them.

I therefore think that in principle the order is right; but it cannot stand in its present form, because it has not allowed for certain sums received from the insolvent partners, and has not considered the position of the shareholders as at the date of the relinquishment, but as at the date of the winding up. The fair principle is to ascertain what was the share of the liabilities to be paid by the retiring member, having regard to what was the position of the other members at the time of the relinquishment. It was no doubt easier to make out the accounts in the way the Vice-Warden has made them out; but the answer is, you cannot make out any balance-sheet without the necessity of an enquiry. Every balance-sheet divides debts into three classes—good, doubtful, bad—and no single debt can be put down in a balance-sheet without there being some necessity for an enquiry as to the solvency of the debtor. There is, therefore, no real difficulty, and that seems to do complete justice.

The appellant has complained of another matter, and, as I think, rightly. He says: "I am entitled to have the machinery and plant valued at the date of the relinquishment as in a going concern." I think he is. The other partners take it as a going concern. I am not satisfied that the assets here have been valued on that principle. I think they have been valued at a break-up value, and I say so because in all my experience at the Rolls Court I have never seen assets worth 1,700*l.* as in a going concern realise 1,600*l.* on an auction. I think, therefore, we must direct a valuation of the machinery and plant on the principle claimed by the appellant.

There is only one other point—namely, the costs. Now, on principle no doubt the appellant has failed, and therefore prima facie ought to pay the costs; but it may turn out that he will win in substance. We will therefore leave the costs to be dealt with by the Vice-Warden, who will have regard to the result of the account.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the substantial question of the appeal no doubt it is a point of considerable importance; and if the appellant had adduced evidence sufficiently cogent to satisfy the Court that the universal custom of the company had been what he says it is, then a different state of things would have arisen; but the difficulty is this, that his evidence, although it goes some way to support his contention, does not go far enough. There is no documentary evidence—no minutes of any meeting to support his contention; but he asks us to infer the existence of the alleged contract from the mode in which the accounts have been kept by the purser.

It is agreed that the custom alleged by the appellant is opposed not only to general law, but even to the custom prevailing in Devonshire and Cornwall with regard to cost-book mines. The general law is plain—that in ascertaining the liability of a contributory, regard must be had to the solvency or insolvency of the persons trading with him. As to the custom of these mines, we are in the dark, except to the extent of the findings of juries in other cases. We are left to get at the custom as best we can. The best case on the subject is The Prosper United Mining Company; ex parte Palmer (2), and proves the general custom.

The appellant here says, "Whatever the general custom may be, I say that there is an agreement between the shareholders which has the effect of varying the custom." That is the whole question—Is there or is there not such an agreement?

I should have thought that the appellant had a strong case if it were not that it appears from the accounts that the bad debts are treated as good debts; and to ask the Court to find an agreement to that which is opposed to the general law and to the custom—and the only ground for implying such agreement is based on accounts which are taken on a wrong principle—is what the Court cannot do, and no such agreement can be implied.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and will only add a few words on one d that is the reference made by llant's counsel to the supposed tice of the company, because I possible to put the finger clearly ot or fallacy of their argument. ppellant, in order to succeed, ew that there was a contract. contract there was none; so Mr. was obliged to shew, if he could, d contract. There might be an ontract if there were such custom ed, because the custom would be incorporated. But there is no tom here. I am, I think, right for if there had been we should have heard of it. But it is said, there is no such custom, still y be an implied agreement in- m the past practice of the com- at is, that the past practice nake a contract. I think the llacy is this: the past practice he constitution of the company, ly evidence of the constitution of pany, which is liable to be re-proves to demonstration that this e view is the recollection that we ng with an implied contract. A eholder does not agree on coming business to the whole past prac- e company—to suffer everything e company has done before he o it, whether reasonable or un- le, to be continued—but only to of the practice as the others have ; and you must then go further, how much of the past practice nable. It cannot be said that a l practice necessarily constitutes a contract, for that would lead to dity. Suppose a purser, and one at the central office of the mine, 500*l.* a year fraudulently in his ket, and that appears on the , it cannot be said that the com- bound to allow that practice to , or to treat it as forming an it that that sum should be so ractice is not itself agreement, but lence of agreement. Past practice en two merchants, one of whom g with the other in a particular in the mode of taking accounts between them, is evidence of an agreement between the two parties that the accounts shall be taken in that mode; but it would be too strong to hold that a particular mode of dealing with the accounts is evidence of a practice to be proved against a company.

Solicitors—J. E. Fox & Co., agents for Chilcott & Son, Truro, for appellant; Gregory & Co., agents for Hodge, Hockin & Marrack, Truro, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
March 1, 8.

In re TOOMER; ex parte BLAIBERG.

Bill of Sale—Non-Registration—Bankruptcy of Grantor—Execution Creditor—Extent of Avoidance of Unregistered Bill of Sale as against Execution Creditor—Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36), s. 1; 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 8.

The taking in execution of goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale does not, under section 8 of the Act of 1878, avoid the bill of sale altogether, but only to the extent necessary to let in the claim of the execution creditor; consequently, where, by the doctrine of relation back of the title of the trustee in bankruptcy, an execution is avoided, the execution being swept away as if it never existed, the title of the holder of the unregistered bill of sale, which but for the execution would have been good as against the trustee, continues good as against him.

Richards v. James (36 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 116; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 285) distinguished.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge, dismissing an application made by Blaiberg, the holder of a bill of sale, for a declaration that the goods and chattels comprised in the bill were the property of Blaiberg, as against the trustee in bankruptcy of Toomer, the grantor of the bill of sale.

In re Toomer, App.

The bill of sale was dated the 3rd of March, 1882, and by it, Toomer, who was a trader, assigned his furniture, stock-in-trade, and other chattels in his shop, to Blaiberg, to secure payment of a sum of 400*l.* The bill was not registered.

On the 21st of March, 1882, Toomer signed a declaration of insolvency, which was filed in the London Bankruptcy Court at 12.30 p.m. on the following day. At 3.15 p.m. of the same day, a petition in bankruptcy founded on that act of bankruptcy was presented against him.

On the 22nd of March, 1882, Blaiberg went to Toomer's shop at 10 a.m., and endeavoured to obtain an entrance, but failed; and at 2 o'clock p.m. of the same day he went again with his bailiff, and on his arrival found a man breaking into the house by order of the sheriff of Middlesex, who entered and seized, on behalf of the City Bank, under writs of elegit issued by the bank as judgment creditors of Toomer. This entry was made about 2.30 p.m.

Blaiberg, as soon as the door was broken in, also entered, and seized the goods, and posted a notice before 3 p.m. on the window, stating that the whole of the furniture and effects within the premises were his property. At the time of the seizure there was a large quantity of goods upon the premises beyond those taken by the bank under their elegit.

On the 29th of March, Toomer was adjudicated a bankrupt. The City Bank subsequently relinquished their claim to the goods seized, admitting that their seizure was void as against the trustee in the bankruptcy.

The Registrar refused the application of Blaiberg, upon the ground that before possession was taken of the goods on his behalf, he had notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by Toomer previously to the filing of the declaration of insolvency (1).

Blaiberg appealed.

H. Reed, for the appellant.—Seizure by the sheriff did not avoid the bill of sale altogether, but only to the extent of and for the purpose of letting in the claim of the execution creditor; and as by the doctrine of the relation back of the trustee's title to the act of bankruptcy—in this case the filing of the declaration of insolvency—the seizure is avoided, and the execution creditor has no claim, the appellant's rights as against the trustee remain untouched.

The case of Richards v. James (2), which is relied on against the appellant, is no authority, it being a decision on section 1 of the former Act of 1854, which makes an unregistered bill of sale "as against all sheriffs' officers and other persons seizing any property comprised therein in the execution of any process," &c., "null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever"; but in section 8 of the Act of 1878, the language is changed, and by it, so far as it applies to the present case, the unregistered bill of sale "shall be deemed fraudulent and void." The change must be presumed to have been made for some reason, and that change must, I submit, have the effect contended for unsuccessfully in Richards v. James (2)—that it shall be void, but only for the purpose of letting in, in priority, the claims of those persons as against whom the bill of sale is to be deemed void.

If the decision of that case is to apply here, then though the execution creditor's claim might be only some 10*l.*, an unregistered bill of sale for 100*l.* would be avoided. But that could not be the intention of the Legislature, whose object was to protect an execution creditor, not to defeat altogether the security of the bill of sale.

In Ex parte Fourdrinier; in re The Artistic Colour Printing Company (3), Jessel, M.R., refers to Richards v. James (2), and says that he is not prepared to say that an execution avoids an unregistered bill of sale altogether; and in Hunter v. Turner (4) Lord Blackburn says, at p. 557, that the effect of Richards v. James (2) had been misapprehended.

(1) The Court held, upon the evidence, that there had been no previous act of bankruptcy.

(2) 36 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 116; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 285.

(3) Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 510.

(4) 32 Law Times (N.S.) 556.

Toomer, App.

ıALLAY, L.J., referred to Edwards ish (5).]

trustee here is, in fact, adopting ument which Bramwell, L.J., at- to him in the case of Ex parte (6)—that is, saying that my title ctly good against him were it t the existence of another person, no title against him, takes away against him.

r Willis, Q.C. (Whiteway with r the trustee.—Section 8 of the 1878 is substantially the same as 1 of the Act of 1854, and the vill not draw refined distinctions sections which are really the id have the same object in view ly, the registration of bills of xecution was valid at the date of id the seizure lawful at the time it le. The execution and seizure are validated because by a legal fic- goods were not then the goods of cution debtor, but of the trustee. ıstee, then, being entitled to the omprised in the bill of sale, that ale is void as against the execution ; and if the execution is avoided, ould that give the bill of sale holder which he would not have had if ad been no bankruptcy? Con- that the bill of sale is unregis- nd no apparent possession taken ill holder at the time of execution, t not be within the mischief of the hold that a bill holder need not his bill, and although he has no against the execution creditor, prior act of bankruptcy has oc- which ousts the execution creditor, stand in a better position than he otherwise have done?—such a de- would seem to give a premium to istration.

L, M.R.—Whatever may be the ken of section 8 of the Bills of ct, 1878, the result is singular; at we have to do is to ascertain its g, and not to trouble ourselves ecisions on former Acts. Any other course would be apt to lead us astray. If an Act is intelligible, and has only one meaning really, we ought to give it that meaning; and if, instead of doing that, we compare it with prior legislation on the same subject, and say that it differs from it to such and such an extent, and then turn to see the decisions come to upon the prior Acts, we may go back to one Act after another, and so on through a series of several Acts, and come to a conclusion different from that to which we should have naturally come upon the Act in question.

Looking then at the 8th section of the Act of 1878 by itself, I think that the right way of reading it is this. It means that an unregistered bill of sale is not void altogether, but only against certain persons and under certain circumstances. Against what persons is it void? First, it is to be deemed fraudulent and void as against the trustee in bankruptcy or liquidation of the grantor of the bill of sale, but only if "at or after the time of filing the petition for bankruptcy or liquidation," and after the seven days limited for registration of the bill, the chattels comprised in the bill of sale are in the possession or apparent possession of the person making such bill of sale. Then as against all assignees claiming under any assignment for the benefit of the creditors of the grantor of the bill of sale; and then as against all sheriffs' officers and other persons seizing chattels comprised in the bill of sale, in the execution of any process of any Court authorising the seizure; and then "as against every person on whose behalf such process shall have been issued."

What is the meaning of being fraudulent and void as against a person who has a security upon, or a demand against, the goods? It must mean void in respect of the demands of those persons—that is, in order to give effect to that security or that demand. If it was to be void to all intents and purposes, the section would have said so. If a deed is void against A and not against B, A having claims and B having claims, it must be avoided to the extent of letting in the claim of B. That is the obvious meaning of such words, and it is evidently so when you see that the bill of sale is to be void against the trustee, and so on. It remains good as against the grantor, though void as against the trustee. The result would be that if an execution is put in, and there is no bankruptcy at all, the execution creditor must be paid out. If the bill of sale is for 1,000*l.*, and the execution put in for 100*l.*, and the sheriff sold and paid out the execution creditor, and 900*l.* remained in his hands, there is no reason why the debtor who gave the bill of sale should be able to avoid the bill of sale. How could he? It was good before. If the execution creditor, instead of being paid out by a sale of part of the goods comprised in the bill of sale, were paid out by the bill of sale holder, his bill of sale would be good. It appears to me that this is the plain meaning of section 8, and there is no reason to go back to former Acts which are different from the present. In the present, the words "all intents and purposes" are omitted, and "deemed to be" substituted for "shall be." But I do not desire to go to a comparison of the different Acts of Parliament.

Law J. Rep. Q.B. 193; 7 E. & B. 564.
Law J. Rep. Bankr. 38; Law Rep. 4 3.

If, then, the meaning of the 8th section be that which I have given it, the next question is, what is the effect of getting rid of an execution? If it is got rid of by a sale or payment off, the execution would be got rid of, and I think the security of the bill of sale would remain. But what will happen if it be got rid of, not by payment off, but in some other way?

Here the grantor of the bill of sale has become bankrupt, and the result of the doctrine of the relation back of the trustee's title to the act of bankruptcy is, that the goods which the sheriff seized are, in law, to be deemed to be the goods of the trustee in bankruptcy at the time when the execution was levied.

There was then, by virtue of this doctrine, no execution levied upon the goods of the execution debtor, but against the goods of the trustee. That is the reason why the execution is got rid of; but that is not an execution in the meaning of the words of the 8th section. It was so at first, but it is not now. This execution is to be treated for all purposes as an execution against the goods of the trustee, and the trustee says the execution is nothing as against him. The sheriff must go out. By virtue of the doctrine of relation he has seized the goods of the wrong man. Every sheriff who issues an execution runs the risk of an act of bankruptcy by the debtor having occurred, which will destroy the title to the goods. Applying, then, this doctrine, we find that there is here no execution against the execution debtor; and therefore the execution creditor is not entitled to any priority or preference, because he has now no title. Can it make any difference whether the title he once had is destroyed ex post facto as from a time anterior to the levy, or whether he had none at the time when the levy was made? I think it can make none. Section 8 was intended for the benefit of the execution creditor. If the execution creditor has no right to execution he has no claim. It is a fortunate result, no doubt, for the bill of sale holder, but only because this is a bad execution; and the execution being bad, it is swept out of his way as completely as if there had never been any.

That, in my opinion, is the result of the section. It may not be what the Legislature intended, but I cannot see my way to any other logical conclusion. The decision of the Registrar must be reversed.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and on this ground—if there had been no execution creditor the holder of this bill of sale would have a right to the goods comprised in such bill of sale as against the trustee. But there is in this case an execution which, by the doctrine of the relation back of the trustee's title, is void as against the trustee.

If there were no bankruptcy the execution creditor would have prevailed against the holder of the bill of sale. But there is a bankruptcy, and that has the effect of displacing the execution creditor; and therefore the original right of the bill of sale holder must prevail. I do not think that this could have been the object of the Act, which was to cause bills of sale to be registered; but the construction of the egard to the present cir-he case, seems to me to ne to that decision.

App.

—I think that the con-my colleagues on the 8th although at first sight it dical and startling. Peruestion is not very impor-the parties, as the recent ct has repealed this sec-e to do is to construe the he Act of 1878, and also ie consequences upon the hat section of the doctrine ack of the trustee's title.

language of section 8, ean? I think the scope that an unregistered bill of med to be void against an or—that is, an execution satisfied in priority to the registered bill of sale who possession. "Fraudulent nst an execution creditor" oid to all intents and pur-far as is necessary to satisfy execution creditor. The ion 8 differs from the lane corresponding section of
4. The alteration points ifference between the two ving regard to this differ-lieved from the difficulty Richards v. James (2), much pressed on us.
w of bankruptcy, by force of relation back, the exe-against the goods of the bill, which are no longer
w vested in his trustee.
gone for all purposes. It ult of that doctrine that ie unregistered bill of sale benefit from the bankgrantor. But when once s gone, the question then tween the holder of the tee of the bankrupt; and took possession before the kruptcy petition, section 8 is rights. No other result h the construction of sec-doctrine of relation back, and I am therefore of opinion that the appellant is entitled to the goods.

Appeal allowed, with costs.

Solicitors—R. J. Jackson, for appellant; H. T. Tiddeman, for respondent.

FRY, J.
1883.
Feb. 26, 27.
March 5, 6, 12.

BOSWELL v. COAKS.

Trustee — Solicitor and Client — Administration—Sale.

C. was the solicitor of an executor, the defendant in a creditor's administration action. A life interest, part of the estate, was put up for sale, and C. obtained leave to bid. The interest was sold, after an abortive auction, to C. by private contract:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside by reason of non-disclosure by C. of circumstances affecting the value of the life interest.

The trustee of an estate in bankruptcy had a large claim against an insolvent estate. Before the claim was admitted he joined in the purchase of assets of the latter estate:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside.

In July, 1870, Sir Robert Harvey, member of the firm of Hudson & Harvey, bankers, of Norwich, committed suicide. He died insolvent, and his estate was administered under an order of the Court of Chancery made in two creditors' suits of Lacey v. Hill and Leney v. Hill. Coaks, a defendant to this action, was solicitor to the defendant in those actions, and also, under an agreement with Messrs. Link-later, the plaintiffs' solicitors, shared, on agency terms, in the costs of the plaintiffs.

The separate estate of Messrs. Kerrison, the other two partners in the banking firm, was administered in bankruptcy. The trustee of that estate was Bailey, one of the defendants to this action; and one of the committee of inspection was Watson, another of the defendants to this action. A claim was made on behalf of the Kerrisons' estate against Sir Robert Harvey's estate for 600,000*l.*, which was disputed, but was ultimately admitted by the Court to proof in the year 1874.

Part of the assets of the estate of Sir Robert Harvey consisted of an interest during the life of his brother Edward Kerrison Harvey. That life interest was put up for sale by auction. The defendant Coaks obtained leave from the Judge to bid, notwithstanding his position as solicitor. The auction took place on the 2nd of July, 1872. The property was not sold. Coaks and Bunyon, another defendant, immediately applied to the Court in chambers to purchase the life interest by private contract, and it was sold to them under an order of Lord Romilly, the Master of the Rolls, in whose Court the estate was being administered. Coaks and Bunyon bought on behalf of themselves and four other persons, namely, Bailey and Watson, one Coakes, a doctor, and the cestui que vie.

This was an action to set aside the sale of the life interest. One ground on which the right to set aside the sale was claimed was that Coaks has not disclosed during the negotiations for the sale circumstances within his knowledge as to the insurability of the life of the cestui que vie, which affected the value of the life interest. Another ground on which the plaintiffs based their claim was that Bailey and Watson, having a duty to the Kerrisons' estate, had also a duty to see that Sir Robert Harvey's estate was properly realised.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C., Charles Russell, Q.C., Cookson, Q.C., Crossley, Q.C., H. M. Giffard, Q.C., and Langworthy, for the plaintiffs.—Though a solicitor is not precluded from buying from his client, he can only hold a purchase from his client if he has obtained the sanction of a Court administering the property, and previously made a full disclosure of all facts within his knowledge affecting the value of the property. The giving leave to bid was for the benefit of the estate, to increase the competition, and did not put the solicitor entirely in the position of a stranger. He would have had no right to buy off a competitor, and it was still his duty to bring out all circumstances likely to increase the purchase-money any one else would give. If the leave to bid did, for the purpose of the auction, put him in the position of a stranger, the effect of the leave was confined to the auction, and was exhausted by the auction. When a solicitor ceases to act for his client the fiduciary relationship still clings to him—Gibson v. Jeyes (1), Pisani v. The Attorney-General for Gibraltar (2), Savery v. King (3), Edwards v. Meyrick (4), Kerr on Frauds (5), Hill on Trusts (6), Ex parte Bennett (7), The Aberdeen Company v. Blackie (8), Hamilton v. Wright (9), Pooley v. Quilter (10), Eyre v. M'Donnell (11), Gibbs v. Daniel (12), Carter v. Palmer (13), Tate v. Williamson (14) and Holman v. Loynes (15).

[FRY, J., raised the question, on the authority of Flower v. Lloyd (16), whether an action would ever lie to set aside an order of the Court.]

That was a decision between adverse litigants; a sale made by the direction of the Court is not like a judgment between two adverse litigants, and this action will lie—Brook v. Mostyn (17).

Davey, Q.C. (Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., with him), for the defendant Coaks, said:—A trustee or solicitor could properly buy from his cestui que trust, or client, if he had previously divested himself of his fiduciary position, and put himself at arm's length, when he was in the same position as if he had been a stranger from the

(1) 6 Ves. 266.
(2) Law Rep. 5 P.C. 516.
(3) 5 H.L. Cas. 627; 25 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 482.
(4) 2 Hare, 60; 12 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 49.
(5) p. 113.
(6) p. 554.
(7) 10 Ves. 380.
(8) 1 Macq. 461.
(9) 1 Bell, 534.
(10) 4 Drew. 184; 2 De Gex & J. 327; 27 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 180, 374.
(11) 15 Ir. Chanc. 534.
(12) 4 Giff. 1.
(13) 1 Dr. & W. 772.
(14) Law Rep 2 Ch. D. 55.
(15) 4 De Gex, M. & G. 270; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 529.
(16) Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 327.
(17) 2 De Gex, J. & S. 373; 34 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 65.

l v. Coaks.

ıe way of divesting himself of his was to get an order of the Court ninistration action. In this case, ter he had got leave to bid, was length, and was at liberty to any information he acquired for purpose in treating with the st as any buyer may in treating ndividual selling. If the opposite e correct, the Court could not, ly with the principles on which ıve given the leave or begun the n after the auction, for it ve been putting Coaks in a false in which his interest and his duty ıve been conflicting. Gibson v. Coles v. Trecothick (18), Campzlker (19), Cane v. Lord Allen Ex parte Bennett (7).

, stopped the defendants' counsel. licitor-General (Sir Farrer Her-C.), and Northmore Lawrence, n.

orney-General (Sir Henry James, l Phipson Beale, for Edward K.

Q.C., and Buckley, for Bailey. Mathews, Q.C., and Chadwyck r Watson.

, Q.C., and Stirling, for Cadge. ther, Q.C., and Knipe, for Hills. rne, Q.C., and Phipson Beale,

(after stating facts and observ-ertain allegations of fraudulent ntation in the pleadings had ubstantiated), said,—In fact, the ot been opened upon that charge, ı different suggestion in equity; been said that though leave to ;iven, Mr. Coaks still remained ary position towards the estate; fect of leave to bid was not to rson in a fiduciary position at ommonly called "arms' length," an end to that fiduciary posi-t had only varied the right of que trust to this extent—that efore the leave to bid, he could ction set aside the transaction, ave to bid he was no longer at liberty to set that aside at his mere election, but he was bound to prove there was some non-disclosure of a material fact which he was still obliged to disclose. In other words, it was said that Mr. Coaks, having obtained this leave to bid, was under his original obligation to disclose everything which it was material to the vendor to know, and if that disclosure was not made the sale could be set aside; and that the effect of the leave to bid was limited to this particular contingency. In my judgment nothing can be more inconvenient than such a rule, or more at variance with general principles. The Court strives anxiously not to place a person in such a position as that his interest should point one way and his duty another. This was the very reason why persons should not be put in a position in which their interest was adverse to their duty. It was said here that Mr. Coaks, notwithstanding his liberty to bid, was bound to disclose everything which it would be material to the vendor to know. What would be the result of such a rule? It would amount to this. That Mr. Coaks having bid, as he subsequently did, 40,000*l.*, would be bound to disclose his own willingness, if such were the case, to give 41,000*l.* or 42,000*l.*; he would be bound to admit that if pressed a little harder more money would be forthcoming. Now, it seems obvious that no transaction or bargain or sale could be regularly conducted under such circumstances. If that were the meaning of the leave to bid I am bound to say that I am of opinion that no leave to bid ought ever to have been given. Is there any authority for the proposition which has been urged on behalf of the plaintiffs? It has been admitted that there is none whatever. Is there any authority for the view which I have already expressed my adhesion to, and which would have been urged upon me by the defendants if I had heard them further? Yes, certainly; an authority which looked in favour of this view for which the defendants contended, and to which Mr. Davey referred me, was Campbell v. Walker (19). There the Judge was dealing with a difficulty in which the trustee was placed if he was willing to give more for an estate than any other person. He said, "the only thing a trustee can do to protect his purchase is, if he sees that it is absolutely necessary the estate should be sold, and he is ready to give more than any one else, that a bill should be filed, and he should apply to this Court by motion to let him be the purchaser. That is the only way he can protect himself; and there are cases in which the Court would permit it, as, if only 500*l.* was offered and the trustee will give 1,000*l.*, the consequence would be the Court would do that which this rule is calculated to procure. The Court would divest him of the character of trustee, and prevent all the consequences of his acting both for himself and for the cestuis que trust; for the reason of the rule is, that no man shall sell to himself, a case in which it is impossible for the Court to know that he did not do all he ought to have done." This passage is not perhaps so clear as it might be. It appears to me that Lord Alvanley considered that giving leave to bid prevented all the consequences of his acting both for himself and the cestuis que trust. In other words, he placed himself at arms' length with the cestuis que trust, which it would otherwise have been his duty to attend to. What applies to the trustee of a cestui que trust appears to me to be the really crucial question in this case; because although it was faintly suggested that independently of the fiduciary relation there was enough to set aside the contract of sale, the stress of the argument was laid upon the continued fiduciary relationship, notwithstanding the leave to bid.

(18) 9 Ves. 234.
(19) 5 Ves. 678.
(20) 2 Dow, 289.

[His Lordship continued his examination of the circumstances, and said he thought it impossible to come to the conclusion that the order of the 26th of July, 1872, was obtained by fraud, and continued:]

There is one remaining question to be adverted to. It was said that, whatever might have been the right of the other defendants to purchase, Messrs Bailey and Watson were disqualified by having duties relating to the joint estate, and that this estate had a claim against Sir Robert Harvey's estate. It was said that in their character as trustee and member of the committee of inspection of Kerrisons' estate they were bound to desire that Sir Robert Harvey's estate should be as large as possible; whereas in their character as purchasers they would desire to give as little as possible for this property. But it is to be observed that as trustee and member of the committee of Kerrisons' estate they had neither knowledge nor duty with regard to Sir Robert Harvey's estate. They had no means from their position in Kerrisons' estate of knowing anything about the life estate which was part of the property of Sir Robert Harvey, and they had no duty. They were not trustees; they had no right to intervene in the sale; and, lastly, I must observe that at this time they had no ascertained interest in Sir Robert Harvey's estate, because it was not until the year 1876 the claim of Kerrisons' estate against Sir Robert Harvey's estate was admitted by the Master of the Rolls. There is no reason or authority to justify me in saying that they were in a fiduciary position. The result is that, in my opinion, the plaintiffs' case fails, and I must dismiss the action with costs.

Solicitors—Whites, Renard & Co., agents for Emerson, Norwich, for plaintiffs; Johnson & Master, for defendant Coaks; Smythe & Brettel, for defendant Bunyon; Blake & Heseltine, agents for Field, Son & Pulley, Norwich, for defendant E. K. Harvey and for the Norwich Union; S. W. Johnson & Son for defendant Watson; Hudson, Matthews & Co., agents for Bailey, Cross & Barnard, Norwich, for defendant Bailey; Aldridge, Thorn & Morris, agents for Copeman & Cadge, Loddon, Norfolk, for defendant Cadge; Sturt, agent for J. B. Coaks & Co., Norwich, for defendant Hill.

J. 3. } In re FRASER. YATES v. FRASER.

eign Charity—Scheme.

ere an application to the Scotch Court le a charitable scheme was necessary, e the trustee, an executor, declined to e Court directed the application to be by the Attorney-General.

ıald Fraser, the testator in this ac- vas domiciled in England. His will, giving two annuities and making ıs charitable bequests, contained the ing clause: "and I hereby nominate ppoint the treasurer and trustees of onald Fraser bequest to the blind in ness to be my residuary legatee in for the benefit of that bequest." some further bequests, and a direction trustees as to investment, the will ded: "and I leave to my executors, vo or more trustees, to be appointed m, in trust to be invested for the t of the blind in Inverness-shire in nanner as they shall deem best."

action was brought by an annuitant t the testator's widow his executrix, ord Denton, his executor; the former nce died. Lord Denton did not de-) act on the trusts of the Donald bequest for the blind in Inverness- and on further consideration an order :onounced providing, amongst other , for an application to the Court of n in Edinburgh for a scheme for harity. The minutes given out by gistrar provided: "and the defendant, s Lord Denton, not desiring to act ustee of the testator's residuary es- r the benefit of the blind in Inver- ıire or the appointment of any trustees stee for that purpose: it is ordered he said defendant be at liberty to such application to the Court of ı in Edinburgh with reference to plication of the testator's residuary for the benefit of the blind in In- s-shire, and the settlement of a scheme ıt purpose, or otherwise, as the Judge mbers may direct."

proposed order was objected to by the ney-General, on the ground that he he proper person to make the appli- cation to the Scotch Court for a scheme, and the matter had been put in the paper to settle the minutes on that point.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and E. Ford, for Lord Denton, submitted that the order as framed by the Registrar was correct. Lord Denton, as the person nominated as trustee by the testator, was the proper person to act, and the Attorney-General had no official position in Scotland. They referred to Tudor on Charitable Trusts (1), Forbes v. Forbes (2) and The Attorney-General v. Sturge (3).

Stirling, for the Attorney-General.—Lord Denton had abdicated his position as trustee; he had no duty to prosecute the matter in Scotland; there was merely liberty given to him by the proposed order. It was more convenient that the Attorney-General—the public officer—whose duty it was to see that the funds were properly applied, should have the conduct of the proceedings in Scotland; expense would be saved, for the Attorney-General must attend the proceedings in chambers in this country in any event, and from his position as member of the Government he had facilities in communicating with the Scotch law officer.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., in reply, said the defendant was willing to have an order for him to apply to the Courts in Scotland, instead of having merely liberty.

FRY, J.—The question I have to determine now is simply one of convenience—namely, who is to be at liberty to apply to the Court of Session in Scotland? Now, in favour of the defendant it has been urged that he is the person named by the testator; but then I must bear in mind that he has not thought fit to assume the duty which the testator intended him to assume. Then, if I allow the person named by the testator simply to be at liberty, which is the form of the minutes already prepared, to make this application, there is no constat he will exercise the liberty. He is not a public officer having

(1) p. 259.
(2) 18 Beav. 552; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 422.
(3) 19 Beav. 597; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 495.

In re Fraser.

a duty to perform, and, in the event of his death, there is no one to carry on the application in Scotland; whereas, if I appoint the Attorney-General, there is a public officer who has a continuity of existence, and he has a duty to perform to the public.

I think, therefore, it is more convenient to appoint the Attorney-General to make the application. Further than that there is this convenience: that, inasmuch as application must be made in chambers here with regard to the application in Scotland, if the defendant has the conduct of the proceedings the Attorney-General must attend in these chambers—consequently there would be an increase of costs in the proceedings in chambers. I shall, therefore, direct that the Attorney-General be appointed.

Solicitors—Drake, Son & Parton, for Lord Denton; Hare & Co., agents for the Solicitor to the Treasury.

FRY, J. 1882. Dec. 19.

GREEN v. FOSTER.

Mortgage — Foreclosure — Title-deeds— Disclaimer—Costs.

The plaintiff in a foreclosure action is not entitled to the delivery up of documents relating to the equity of redemption.

A puisne mortgagee disclaiming is entitled to all costs incurred subsequently to offer to disclaim.

This was an action to foreclose a mortgage in fee made by John Warth the younger. John Warth the younger, by deed dated December, 1875, conveyed the equity of redemption to John Warth the elder. In January, 1878, John Warth the elder deposited his conveyance with a memorandum of charge with the defendants to this action by way of security. In January, 1880, John Warth the elder was adjudicated bankrupt. In August, 1881, the trustees of his estate in bankruptcy executed a deed disclaiming all interest in the property the subject of this action. In November, 1881, the writ in this action was issued. On the 2nd of February, 1882, before appearance by the defendants, their solicitor wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors offering to have the action dismissed without costs, and to hand over a release of the property by the defendants on payment of charges for the same.

The plaintiff, however, required the defendants to deliver up the conveyance of the equity of redemption and memorandum of deposit, and continued the action. At the trial two questions were argued: one of conduct, whether the defendants were entitled to costs subsequent to their offer to disclaim; the other, whether they could keep the documents affecting the equity of redemption.

Cookson, Q.C., and Elgood, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff is entitled to all deeds purporting to affect the subject of his mortgage. The defendants disclaiming can have no right to these. Their existence in other hands than those of the plaintiff would be a blot on his title, which he has a right to have removed—Fraser v. Jones (1), Hunt v. Elmes (2), Heath v. Crealock (3), Holmes v. Turner (4) and Coote on Mortgages (5).

The disclaimer of the defendants was not sufficient. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to go on and have his costs—Talbot v. Kemshead (6), Gowring v. Mowberry (7) and Clarke v. Toleman (8).

H. Fellows, for the defendants.—The documents dealing with the equity of redemption are no part of the plaintiff's title, and he can have no right to them. On the contrary, they are valuable to the subsequent incumbrancer as evidence of the debt to him, and may contain covenants on which he can sue, and may comprise other documents. It is a question of principle whether the plaintiff is entitled to such order, and is not to be tried by the par-

(1) 5 Hare, 475; 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 353.
(2) 2 De Gex, F. & J. 578; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 11, 255.
(3) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 157; Law Rep. 1 Chanc. 22.
(4) 7 Hare, 369*n*.
(5) 4th ed. p. 1022.
(6) 4 Kay & J. 93.
(7) 11 W.R. 851.
(8) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 23.

ticular circumstances. In some cases such an order would work great injustice. The fact that there is no precedent for such an order shews that the settled practice is against it.

The defendants are entitled to their costs after their offer to disclaim—Ford v. Lord Chesterfield (9), Davis v. Whitmore (10), Day v. Gudgen (11) and Furber v. Furber (12).

Cookson, Q.C., in reply.

FRY, J.—The general rule in respect of the costs of persons who are properly made defendants and disclaim is that they are dismissed without costs up to the time of an offer being made to disclaim, but they are entitled to costs incurred after a proper disclaimer or offer to disclaim has been made. In the present case, such offer was made on the 2nd of February. In my view the plaintiff is entitled to pay no costs down to that day; but is liable to pay costs of these defendants subsequently incurred.

Those observations arise in a matter rather of form. But then arises this question of substance, which is admitted by both sides to have prevented a settlement. The plaintiff asks for the delivery up of all deeds relating to the equity of redemption. He says that he is entitled to such delivery up as an incident to his right to foreclosure. And no doubt there is an argument on the ground of convenience in support of his contention. He may say that the possession of the deeds shews that he has foreclosure against all the proper persons. But, on the other hand, it is obvious that the documents may be of value to the persons foreclosed as evidence of the debt, and containing covenants still capable of being enforced, and may also include other property. There are therefore arguments on the ground of convenience on both sides. But there is, in my judgment, a well-established practice on the subject. In the forms of decree for foreclosure given in Seton, there is not any form providing for delivery up of such documents. There is no such form in any precedent so far as I can learn. None ever seems to have been seen by counsel in Court, or by the Registrar. The demand now made is therefore, I think, at variance with the well established and long settled practice. Of course, these observations have nothing to do with that class of cases where deeds purporting to affect the earlier title have got into the hands of a defendant a puisne mortgagee, and in which the plaintiff can say the deeds are a blot on his title, or can say that on some legal or equitable grounds they ought to be delivered up. All that I am deciding is that, on an order for foreclosure, the plaintiff has no right to the delivery up of deeds merely dealing with the equity of redemption.

(9) 16 Beav. 516; 22 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 630.
(10) 28 Beav. 617;
(11) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 263; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 200.
(12) 30 Beav. 523.

Solicitors—W. Elgood; Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Fosters & Lawrence, Cambridge.

FRY, J.
1883.
Jan. 13.

JOY v. HADLEY.

Practice—Order XXXI. rule 21*—Discovery—Attachment—Service.*

Leave to issue a writ of attachment for non-compliance with an order for production of documents for inspection was given on motion where the order and notice of motion had been served only on the solicitor of the person to be attached.

This was an action by the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for the sale of leaseholds, in which the plaintiff had obtained judgment. The plaintiff had obtained an order in chambers that the defendant should, within four days after service, produce at the office of the defendant's solicitor an abstract, and at the same time produce on oath, for inspection, all deeds and writings in his possession or power relating to the property. On the 13th of December, 1882, a copy of that order was served on the defendant's solicitors. The order was not complied with; and on the 21st of December, 1882, notice of motion by the plaintiff for leave to issue a writ of attachment against the defendant for breach of the order was served on the defendant's solicitor.

Joy v. Hadley.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Chadwyck Healey, moved in accordance with the notice. They said it was settled by Browning v. Sabin (1) that the notice of motion need only be given to the parties' solicitor; and Order XXXI. rule 21, expressly provided that the order for production on which the writ asked for was founded need only be served on the solicitor. They therefore asked for leave to issue the writ, notwithstanding that the client had not been personally served.

FRY, J., gave leave.

Solicitors—Steadman & Co., for plaintiff; Bellamy, Strong & Baker, for defendant.

FRY, J. 1883. Feb. 12. } In re THE CARRIAGE CO-OPERATIVE SUPPLY ASSOCIATION; ex parte CLEMENCE.

Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 163—Distress.

Where a company had taken possession under an agreement for a sublease, the superior landlord was allowed, after the commencement of a winding-up, to distrain on goods of the company, though he had taken from them a promissory note for the rent due to him.

Messrs. Catt & Boyfield held a lease of premises in Long Acre, from John Clemence, at the yearly rent of 600*l.* In May, 1880, the Carriage Co-operative Supply Association were incorporated, and shortly afterwards they took possession of the premises under an agreement with Messrs. Catt & Boyfield that the latter would grant an underlease. On the 25th of December, 1880, there was due to Mr. Clemence from Messrs. Catt & Boyfield a sum of 900*l.* for rent of the premises. Mr. Clemence took steps to distrain on the goods of the company; but on the 28th of December an arrangement was come to between his agent and the company, under which the company paid in cash 450*l.*, and gave a promissory note for the other 450*l.*, payable by instalments. The first instalment was dishonoured. In February, 1881, Mr. Clemence died. On the 10th and 11th of March, 1881, petitions were presented for winding up the company, on which a compulsory order was subsequently made. On the 24th of March, 1881, a distress for the 450*l.* rent still unpaid was levied on carriages at the premises in Long Acre. The goods were then held by Joseph Brown, a creditor, under a bill of sale from the company. Certain proceedings were taken in the winding-up respecting the goods at Long Acre, and the property was sold under an order of the Court which preserved the rights of the parties for future adjudication.

This was a summons by the executors of Mr. Clemence to be allowed the benefit of distress, notwithstanding section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862.

Cookson, Q.C., and Stirling, for the summons.—The landlord in this case had no privity with the company; he was a stranger to the company, and had no right of proof in respect of the rent. On the authorities, therefore, the distress will be allowed to go—In re The Lundy Granite Company (1), In re The Traders' North Staffordshire Carrying Company (2) and In re The Regent's United Service Stores (3).

In the second place the goods were not those of the company, but of Brown.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Terrell, for Brown.—The superior landlord by taking the note had made himself no longer a stranger, and could prove for the 450*l.* secured by the note, which was the amount of rent remaining due at the time of the distress.

(1) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 728; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 571.

(1) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 588; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 462.

(2) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 172; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 60.

(3) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 677; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 616.

goods were the goods of the com- because they had an equity of tion.

ord, for the liquidator.

J.—The question which now s in form a new one. It is not free from difficulty; at the same have formed an opinion, which I to express. The language of 63 is large. It makes a distress all intents. The Courts have eless felt themselves, not only at but bound to put a limit to the ion of the section; and if the d is a stranger to the company chattels are on the premises, dis- allowed; whereas if the landlord ight of proof then distress is dis- In arriving at that result the have proceeded upon an equitable ration of the rights of the parties. estion I have to consider is whether dlord here has a right to prove for t. I must apply those equitable les on which the Court has pro- : and if he has no right to prove rent, I must allow the distress to nst the goods of the company, if f the company they are. It appears if I were to deprive him of his right a third person which he has ob- I should be doing that which was y to the bargain, and should be inequitably. In respect of the l right of distress the company is a r. The case, therefore, seems to fall within the category of cases distress is allowed.

Lordship also held that the giving ote was merely by way of collateral y, that there was no extinguishment debt from the original lessees, nor ent to take the company as tenant.]

---

s—Nickinson, Prall & Nickinson, for ummons; W. Maynard, for respondent n; Harcourt, for the liquidator.

KAY, J. 1883. April 7, 14. } In re WATSON, KIPLING AND COMPANY.

Company—Winding-up—Rates made subsequently to commencement of Winding-up—Right of Rating Authority to Payment in Full—Beneficial Occupation.

The right of a rating authority to payment in full of rates on the property of a company in liquidation made subsequently to the commencement of the winding-up, is not necessarily governed by the same principle as that of a landlord in respect of rent.

In order to entitle the rating authority to payment in full it must be shewn that there has been an actual beneficial occupation or enjoyment of the property by the liquidator on behalf of the company.

Where the property of a company in liquidation consisted of chemical and other works and blast furnaces which had ceased to be used for manufacturing purposes or purposes of profit, but the liquidator kept some of the furnaces alight with a view to a sale of the property, and had used part of the works for the storage of plant,—

Held, that there was no such beneficial occupation or enjoyment of the property by the liquidator as would entitle a rating authority to payment in full of rates made subsequently to the winding-up of the company. Held, also, that the Court, in exercising its discretion on the matter, was at liberty to have, and would have, regard to the fact that the amount of the rates was excessive.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons, in the winding-up of the above company, by the overseers of the poor for the township of Dawdon, in the county of Durham, and the local board of health for the district of Dawdon, that the liquidator might be ordered to pay the sums of 31*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* (the amount of two poor rates assessed on the company's property) and 74*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.* (the amount of three district rates assessed on the same property) to the applicants respectively.

The property of the company consisted of blast furnaces, chemical and other works, and certain cottages.

In re Watson.

In May, 1881, the blast furnaces had ceased to be used for any manufacturing purpose.

In June, 1881, a voluntary liquidation was resolved upon and a liquidator was appointed, and on the 11th of September, 1881, the usual order was made that the voluntary winding-up should be continued under the supervision of the Court.

On the 5th of October, 1881, the chemical works ceased to be used, but sixteen of the blast furnaces were kept alight by the liquidator's direction. This was done in order that the works might be maintained in such a condition that manufacturing operations might readily be resumed and the manufactory sold as a going concern.

It did not appear that any profit whatever was made by the liquidator subsequently to the 5th of October, 1881. The works were, however, used to some extent as a storehouse for engines, machinery and plant belonging to the company.

The first poor rate was made on the 5th of May, 1882, the chemical works being rated at 1,000*l.* and the blast furnaces (which had been rated at 667*l.* in the previous rate) at 110*l.* The amount of this rate was 24*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*

The second poor rate was made on the 13th of October, 1882, and amounted to 7*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* only, the rateable value of the chemical works having been reduced from 1,000*l.* to 167*l.*, in consequence of an appeal by the liquidator to the assessment committee.

The first district rate was made on the 25th of October, 1881, amounting to 28*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; the second on the 25th of April, 1882, amounting to 38*l.* 8*s.*; and the third on the 31st of October, 1882, amounting to 7*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* In the first two district rates the chemical works were rated at 1,000*l.*, in the third at 167*l.* The blast furnaces were rated at 110*l.* in all three rates.

The proportion of the above rates payable in respect of the cottages was small, and the applicants' counsel, on the hearing of the summons, declined to argue the question as to that amount.

Northmore Lawrence, for the applicants.—The works have been used by the liquidator for the storage of plant, and the blast furnaces kept alight, manifestly with a view to the more beneficial sale of the property as a going concern. The liquidator has, therefore, retained possession of the property for the convenience of the winding-up; and on the authority of In re The Lundy Granite Company; ex parte Heaven (1), and in In re The Oak Pits Colliery Company (2), this is clearly a case in which a landlord of the company would have been allowed to distrain for rent. There is no direct authority on the question of rates; but it is submitted that there is no distinction in principle between rates and rent for this purpose. The nearest case to the present is In re The West Hartlepool Iron Company (3), where an application for payment of certain highway and improvement rates was refused, solely on the ground that there had been no beneficial enjoyment whatever by the liquidator, who had, to use the language of the Court in In re The Oak Pits Colliery Company (2), "done nothing except abstain from trying to get rid of the property." But the language of Bacon, V.C., shews that the decision would have been otherwise if there had been any such enjoyment as this liquidator has had. The occupation of the liquidator is the occupation of the company—In re The Weymouth Crown Glass Company (4); and as there has been a beneficial occupation by the liquidator, the company is liable.

Rigby, Q.C., and W. W. Cooper, for the liquidator.—There has been no such beneficial occupation of this property by the liquidator as will entitle the applicants to be allowed to distrain for these rates or to be paid the amount of them in full. The case of a rating authority representing the ratepayers is in no way analogous to that of a landlord. The reason why the landlord is allowed to distrain for rent accrued subsequently to the winding-up is that the Court considers it inequitable that he should be kept out of his property by the company without being paid; and therefore the Court exercises its discretion in his

(1) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 588; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 462.

(2) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 768; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 322.

(3) 34 Law Times, N.S. 568.

(4) Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 640.

In re Watson.

favour by allowing him to distrain, although his legal right to do so has been taken away by section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862. But there is no such equity in favour of ratepayers who are not being kept out of any property, but are mere outsiders. The question as regards them must be, can they make out such a case in equity as will justify the Court in enforcing the rate in their favour to the detriment of the other creditors? To do that they must at least shew that there has been a beneficial occupation of the property, that a benefit has been derived therefrom in the way of rent or profit—Staley v. The Overseers of Castleton (5) and Harter v. The Overseers of Salford (6)—e.g. if the liquidator had been carrying on the business of the company, and thereby making profits. There has been nothing of the kind here, and the enjoyment by the liquidator has been onerous rather than beneficial, as the expense of keeping the furnaces alight has been incurred without any corresponding return. Further, these rates are unconscionable in amount. In three of them the chemical works were rated at 1,000*l.*, which was plainly an excessive amount, as it was afterwards reduced on appeal. The Court, when asked to exercise its discretion in favour of ratepayers, can and will take into consideration the fact that the rate is excessive.

They referred also to In re The Albion Steel and Wire Company (7).

Northmore Lawrence, in reply.—The Court cannot look into the quantum of the rate, which has been legally fixed. If the liquidator objected to the amount he ought to have appealed to the proper forum. Staley v. The Overseers of Castleton (5) and Harter v. The Overseers of Salford (6) are clear authorities to shew that this property, being used for the storage of plant, was properly rateable.

He referred also to In re The North Yorkshire Iron Company (8).

(5) 5 B. & S. 505; 33 Law J. Rep. M.C. 178.
(6) 6 B. & S. 591; 34 Law J. Rep. M.C. 206.
(7) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 229; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 547.
(8) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 333; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 661.

KAY, J.—It seems very strange that this question, after so many years during which liquidations of companies have been going on, should not be covered by any decision. The subject is, indeed, almost bare of authority. This application is made by the authorities entitled to distrain for rates, and by their summons they ask that certain rates, which were made since the company was ordered to be wound up, shall be paid in full. Practically, I suppose, a better form of the summons would be that the applicants should be allowed to distrain. It is not, however, intended to make them go through the actual process of distraining; but the Court is asked simply to direct that the rates shall be paid in full. [His Lordship then stated the material facts of the case, and continued:] The first question which has arisen is, whether the occupation by the company since the rates were made has been such a beneficial occupation of the property as entitles the persons who claim these rates to have them paid in full. Under section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862, no distress or any proceeding at law can be taken by those who claim to be paid rates, because if any such were taken they would be, in the language of the section, "void to all intents." But, notwithstanding this section, the Courts have frequently, under the 85th and 87th sections, reading them jointly with the 163rd section, assumed power to give leave to a landlord who wanted to be paid his rent and to persons who wanted to be paid rates to distrain and recover the rent or rates in full, a proper case being made out. As I have said, the question is whether in this case there has been such a beneficial occupation and enjoyment of the property as to induce the Court, in the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction, to order these rates to be paid in full. The only authority which is directly in point is the case of In re The West Hartlepool Iron Company (3). In that case a similar application was refused. Vice-Chancellor Bacon, before whom the case came, said that he was informed by Mr. Buckley that it was a case of first impression, and he used this language:—"I am a little struck by the observation that the liquidators should stay in the occupation of rateable property without paying the rates. There is a clause giving the commissioners a right to distrain for the rates. What the Court has done with reference to the right of distress has been to exercise a sort of discretion upon it, always preserving the lawful right of a landlord to distrain. One cannot find it in the Act, or within the limits of common sense, that because the company is wound up, therefore the liquidators can remain in occupation without payment of rates, perhaps without payment of rent. The question ought to be considered and settled." And then his Lordship referred the case for further consideration, in order that counsel might see whether any authority could be found; and when it came on upon a future day he said this: "Common sense and common honesty ought to help me to decide this case. I hope it will be taken elsewhere. It seems that the possession of the liquidators is merely possession and occupation, but not enjoyment; and that, I think, is not the occupation intended by the Act. All I can do is to dismiss this summons without costs, leaving it to the commissioners to carry in such proof in the winding-up as they may be entitled to."

In re Watson.

Now I gather from the language of the Vice-Chancellor that he, after a very deliberate consideration of the matter, came to the conclusion that, in order to entitle the claimants to have the rates paid in full, they must make out not only possession and occupation, but enjoyment; so that possession only would not do, and occupation only would not do; but there must be something which the Vice-Chancellor defined, if his language be correctly reported, by the name of "enjoyment."

As regards the authorities which make manufacturing property rateable, two cases have been cited—namely, Staley v. The Overseers of Castleton (5) and Harter v. The Overseers of Salford (6)—from which it seems that there may be a rateable occupation of manufacturing premises although manufacturing is not being carried on, and probably such an occupation as the company had here after the winding-up might be an occupation which would subject them to a certain amount of rates; but that does not seem to conclude the question whether the Court ought to allow the rates to be paid in full. Mr. Northmore Lawrence argued that, where a liability is incurred during the winding-up, that liability ought to be paid in full, and therefore that these rates ought to be paid in full, because they were made during the winding-up. But I do not think I ought to accept that view of the matter. The question is, whether the liability so incurred ought to be paid in preference to other claims in the winding-up—to be paid in full before the claims of other creditors. It seems to me that the reasonable way for the Court to exercise its discretion is to have regard to all the circumstances of the case, and to see whether under all the circumstances the rates claimed are such rates as ought to be paid in full in priority to the claims of the other creditors. In the first place, I am not satisfied that the question of the payment of rates should be determined on absolutely the same principle as that of the payment of rent due to a landlord, because there is this difference, as was pointed out by Mr. Rigby—and I agree that it is a substantial distinction—in the case of a landlord, the company occupying his property is keeping him out of possession; and if the company has, and deliberately exercises, enjoyment of the property of the landlord, no doubt the rent ought to be paid in full. The language of Lord Justice Lindley, in the case of The Oak Pits Colliery (2), when he was expressing what seems to have been the judgment of the full Court, puts the cases in which the landlord ought to recover his rent in full, accrued due after the winding-up, in this way:—"If the liquidator has retained possession for the purposes of the winding-up, or if he has used the property for carrying on the company's business, or has kept the property in order to sell it or do the best he can with it, the landlord will be allowed to distrain for rent which has become due since the winding-up. But if he has kept possession by arrangement with the landlord, and for his benefit as well as for the benefit of the company, and there is no agreement with the liquidator that he shall pay rent, the landlord is not allowed to distrain. When the liquidator retains the property for the purpose of advantageously disposing of it, or when he continues to use it, the rent of it ought to be regarded as a debt contracted for the purpose of winding up the company, and ought to be paid in full like any other debt or expense properly incurred by the liquidator for the same purpose; and in such a case it appears to us that the rent for the whole period during which the property is so retained or used ought to be paid in full, without reference to the amount which could be realised by a distress." But every word of that refers to property which is only the property of the company sub modo—that is, subject to the company paying rent to the landlord—and it is because of their possession of the property as against the landlord, to which possession in law they are not entitled except on the terms of paying the rent, that that language is used by the learned Judge. Now not a word of that language applies in any way to the payment of rates. As to rates, there is no possession of any property which is held from the person who claims payment of the rates sub modo, in any way; and those rules which have been laid down in the case of a landlord from the very language I have read are shewn to depend entirely on the fact that the company are in possession of the land which they hold from the landlord upon the condition that they should pay rent. Therefore, that does not at all apply. But even in the case of a landlord, the Lord Justice goes on to say: "But no authority has yet gone the length of deciding that a landlord is entitled to distrain for or be paid in full rent accruing since the commencement of the winding-up, where the liquidator has done nothing except abstain from trying to get rid of the property which the company holds as lessee."

For the reasons which I have given it does not appear to me that the same rule necessarily applies to the case of a landlord and that of persons claiming to be paid rates. What rule, then, should be applied to persons claiming to be paid rates? According to the language of the Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the case of The West Hartlepool Iron Company (3), which I have read, in order to entitle claimants to have rates paid in full, the possession must not be mere possession, nor mere occupation, but something in the nature of enjoyment.

Now, suppose a liquidator is carrying on a business for the purpose of a more beneficial sale of it as a going concern. That would, as it seems to me, be a case in which the rates might be ordered to be paid in full, because they might be treated as part of the taxes payable in respect of the business so carried on by the liquidator acting for the benefit of the company. But there is nothing of that kind here. And what was said on the part of the liquidator in this case was this, that the only possession which the company has had since the rates in question were made was a possession which has been in no sense enjoyment, but a possession which has been onerous, as it has involved the company in expenses and liabilities for keeping the furnaces alight, and in doing other things, without any kind of profitable return. The liquidator acting for the company has made no profit, nor attempted to make any; therefore his possession has not been in any sense a beneficial occupation. It is true it produced a profit to this extent, that it prevented the necessity of paying rent for warehousing certain of the goods and other property of the company elsewhere, they having been, as stated, warehoused in the company's buildings free from the payment of any rent. That is the only sense in which the company has had such a beneficial occupation of this property as would make rates payable. Will it, then, under these circumstances, be equitable—which is what the Court has to consider when asked to give this leave—that these rates should be paid in full, to the great detriment of other creditors of the company? If there had been profits made I could see a reason why the rates should be paid in full; but no profits have been made whatever.

The only argument which could be used, and no doubt it was a strong one, was that if these portions of the property of the company had been stored elsewhere some rent must have been paid or would have to be paid. How much rent would have to be paid I do not know, nor what amount of storage would be wanted. Would the rent amount to as much as the rates? Looking at all the circumstances, I am not satisfied there has been such beneficial enjoyment by the liquidator as to make it equitable or right that I should order these rates to be paid in full. But the case does not stop there by any means. At different dates, beginning with October, 1881, after the works were all stopped, some of these rates were made upon the footing of the company's business being a going concern—that is, the premises were rated at 1,000*l.* a year. It was said that the liquidator might have appealed against the assessment and have got it reduced, that he had chosen not to appeal, and that, as the time had gone by for that purpose, they were proper rates fixed by law, and therefore the Court could have no regard to the amounts at all, but should order them to be paid in full. But would that be equitable as between the persons claiming to be paid the rates and the other creditors of the company? It seems to me that such an order would be most inequitable as against the other creditors; and sitting in the Chancery Division, as a Judge who has to exercise a judicial discretion, am I to leave out of sight the fact that some of the rates were extravagantly large, and that if the liquidator had appealed against the assessment it must have been reduced? I cannot leave all this out of sight. The applicants have not said that the liquidator failed in his duty in not getting the amount reduced, but they have asked me, in the exercise of my discretion, to say that the rates should be paid in full. It is a sufficient answer to say that it would not be equitable to allow rates of that amount to be paid in full. Even if there had been default on the part of the liquidator, are the rating authorities entitled to be paid rates upon an assessment which it would not be possible to maintain if there were an appeal against it? It is true that that observation does not apply to all the rates, for as regards some part of the property there was a large reduction obtained by the liquidator in the assessment, and therefore the rates were made on a different footing, and they are of a much smaller amount; but I cannot on this application distinguish one rate from another, nor say what amount ought to be proved for. I cannot say that the proof should be for one rate and not for another. The applicants come here asking for payment of the whole amount of the rates. That, as it seems to me, is an additional reason, if any were wanted, why I ought not, in the exercise of my discretion, to allow the rates to be paid in full; and I may say that I am not sure that any of the rates have been made on a scale which is really just and equitable. By the Companies Act, 1862, they are not recoverable at all: the right of distraint is absolutely taken away; and if I am asked to restore that right I ought to feel satisfied that the rates have been assessed in an equitable manner. Therefore I think for that reason also I ought not, in the exercise of my discretion, to accede to this application. But if I am right in my view on the first point this point would hardly arise. Upon the whole I am of opinion that this is not a case in which the Court ought to treat the company as having such an occupation of this property as that these rates ought to be paid in full. The summons, therefore, must be dismissed.

In re Watson.

Solicitors—Maples, Teesdale & Co., agents for H. B. Wright, Seaham Harbour, for applicants; J. J. & C. J. Allen, agents for Heap & Molesworth, Rochdale, for liquidator.

FRY, J. 1883. Jan. 27.

In re MASON; MASON v. CATTLEY.

Production of Documents—Privilege—Trustee.

Letters between trustees and between trustees and their solicitors relating to the trust before action brought, are not privileged against the beneficiaries.

This was an action to make a trustee, and the representatives of a deceased trustee, account for alleged breaches of trust, instituted by beneficiaries. The surviving trustee had made an affidavit of documents, in which he claimed privilege for letters and copies of letters which had passed between himself, his co-trustee and their solicitors relating to the matters in question before the commencement of the litigation. The plaintiffs took out a summons to compel production of such documents.

In re Mason.

Medd, for the summons, relied on Talbot v. Marshfield (1).

Micklem, for the surviving trustee, said Brown v. Oakshott (2) governed the case.

FRY, J.—I am of opinion the documents must be produced. It is admitted that they are relevant. They are communications by and to the trustees and their solicitors in relation to the trust estate made before action brought, and Talbot v. Marshfield (1) applies. The respondents must pay the costs of the summons.

Solicitors—Hughes & Son, for plaintiffs; Crowder, Anstie & Co., and Stibbard, Gibson & Co., for respondents.

CHITTY, J. 1883. March 3.

In re GODFREY'S TRUSTS.

Vesting Order — Copyholds — Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), ss. 15 and 28.

Where a bare trustee of copyholds has died intestate, and without an heir, the Court has, under sections 15 and 28 of the Trustee Act, 1850, when read together, jurisdiction to make an order vesting the copyholds in the absolute beneficial owner.

Petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, for the vesting of copyholds in the petitioner.

The copyholds were purchased by the petitioner in 1847, and by his direction conveyed to a trustee in trust for him absolutely.

The trustee was admitted as tenant on the court rolls, and died in 1876 without an heir, and intestate as to trust estates.

The petitioner had since the date of purchase been in possession of the copyholds.

A. St. John Clerke, for the petitioner, submitted that it was unnecessary to appoint a new trustee. The case fell within sections 15 and 28 of the Act. By section 15, the Court may, where a trustee of lands dies intestate without an heir, make an order vesting such lands in such person or persons in such manner and for such estate as the Court shall direct. By section 28, the effect of a vesting order of copyholds is to vest the land without any surrender or admittance. In In re White (1) an order was made; but in In re Holland (2) the Lords Justices declined to make the order.

CHITTY, J.—You may take the order. I am of opinion that the effect of the two sections taken together gives me jurisdiction to make the order.

Solicitor—E. H. Biggin.

(1) 2 Dr. & S. 585.
(2) 12 Beav. 252.

FRY, J. 1882. Dec. 9, 19. 1883. Jan. 16.

FEARNSIDE v. FLINT.

Statute of Limitations, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 8 and 80—Mortgage—Bond—Will—Express Trust.

The remedy on a bond given in respect of a debt secured by a mortgage of even date on land is barred by the lapse of twelve years from the last payment or acknowledgment.

A testamentary direction to pay just debts will not keep alive the remedy on a debt otherwise barred by lapse of time.

In March, 1832, J. Leonard Flint mortgaged certain copyhold heredita-

(1) Law Rep. 5 Chanc. 698.
(2) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 271; Law Rep. 16 Ch. D. 672.

ments to Thomas Knowlton, to secure 400*l.* and interest, and at the same time gave a bond for 800*l.* as collateral security for the mortgage debt and interest. Interest was paid on the mortgage debt down to the year 1847, but no interest has been since paid. At that time the mortgagor had gone abroad, and he had not been heard of since. His brother, George Flint, the testator in this action, was in possession of the mortgaged property as his heir, according to the custom, and acted as the owner of the property. He died in 1862, having made a will by which he directed his executors and trustees to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale of real estate and residuary personalty, on trust to pay all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and for the further trusts therein mentioned. After the death of George Flint, his executors wrote a letter to the mortgagee's representatives, offering to redeem.

This was a summons by the representatives of the mortgagee, in an action for the administration of the estate of George Flint, to obtain payment of the mortgage debt, and six years' interest.

Everitt, Q.C., and F. Thompson, for the claim.—The mortgage debt being secured by a bond could be recovered within twenty years of the last acknowledgment, notwithstanding that the remedy on the mortgage itself was barred by the lapse of twelve years under the 10th section of the Limitation Act, 1874; and the letter written by the executors of George Fearnside offering to redeem was an acknowledgment within twenty years by persons liable so as to keep up the remedy.

In the second place, the will of George Fearnside created a trust for payment of this debt, which would prevent the Statute of Limitations applying—Hughes v. Wynne (1).

Glasse, Q.C., and Lawson, for the executors.—The bond is part of the mortgage, and cannot be sued on, except within twelve years of the last payment or acknowledgment—Sutton v. Sutton (2).

If the will of George Fearnside created a trust for the payment of this debt, it is an express trust, and brought within the statute by section 10 of the Act of 1874.

J. Cutler and Alfred Smith, for other parties.

Everitt, Q.C., in reply, distinguished Sutton v. Sutton (2), because in that case the covenant which it was sought to enforce was in the mortgage deed, and here the bond was a separate instrument.

FRY, J., stated the facts, and said,—It appears to me that the claim cannot be supported. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Sutton v. Sutton (2) has determined that a sum of money secured by covenant and also by mortgage on land are to be treated as one and the same sum. So that where the right of action against the land is barred, the right on the covenant is also gone. It appears to me that there is no difference between a covenant contained in the mortgage deed and a bond given at the same time by a separate instrument.

It is only necessary, having referred to that decision, to refer to two sections of the Statute of Limitations of 1874, which came into operation in 1879. The first to which I will refer is the 10th. [His Lordship read the 10th section.] That, in my judgment, prevents the trust created by the will of George Fearnside from enlarging the time within which the present application can be made. [His Lordship then read the 8th section of the Statute of Limitations, 1874.]

In the present case it appears that the last payment was made in the year 1847. The only acknowledgment said to have been made was in December, 1862. This proceeding was taken more than twelve years after the last payment of interest and the last acknowledgment of the debt, assuming that it was made the just debt of George Fearnside. It appears to me that the present claim is barred—consequently I dismiss it with costs.

Solicitors—Robinson, Preston & Stow, agents for Burne & Rooke, Bath, for defendants; Redpath & Holdsworth, agents for Shackles & Son, Hull, for plaintiffs; A. E. Copp, for the mortgagee; W. W. Wynne & Son, for the claimant.

---

(1) Turn. & R. 307.

(2) Ante, p. 333; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 511.

IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.]

382.
16, 17,
, 22, 23.
c. 13.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY v. LOOG.

de-mark—Infringement.

defendants, manufacturers of sew-achines, issued trade circulars which bed certain sewing machines, therein to be manufactured by the defen-as "Singer sewing machines," er systems." The circulars were ily to wholesale dealers. The plain-omplained of the use of the name er," on the ground that it had no other ng than that the machines so named anufactured by the plaintiffs, and that was no system or principle common machines:—Held, that as the cir-expressly stated that the machines anufactured by the defendants, and y were issued only to persons who certainly not be misled, the defen-had evidently not intended to repre-heir machines as manufactured by intiffs, and had not infringed the iffs' trade-mark.

was an appeal from a decision of urt of Appeal, which reversed one on, V.C.

facts of the case and the arguments upon by the appellants fully appear judgment of the Lord Chancellor.

n, Q.C., and Benjamin, Q.C. (Rigby, and B. Coleridge with them), ap-for the appellants.

ster, Q.C., Everitt, Q.C., and *Abra-*for the respondents, were not called

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD CHANCELLOR (LORD SEL-).—The plaintiffs (appellants here) same American company who were unts in the case of The Singer Manu-ing Company v. Wilson (1), decided is House in 1877. They are the ors in business of an American acturer of and dealer in sewing machines, named Singer. Mr. Singer was not originally the inventor or patentee of any machines, but he held a licence to manufacture and sell them from a patentee named Howe. The plaintiffs succeeded to his business on their first incorporation, in 1863, and they have since carried on a large and successful trade both in this country and in America. They became proprietors of, or interested in, several patents (some American, some English) for improvements, or supposed improvements, upon the machines manufactured and sold by them. All these patents, however, had expired some time before the acts were done which are complained of in this suit.

The plaintiffs say that the machines which they now make and sell, and have for a considerable time past made and sold, are not in any important respect (except that most of them have what is called the "needle and shuttle" action) identical with any sewing machines which were ever patented; and that they have from time to time varied the form and construction of their machines, so that those which they make now are different from those which they, and Mr. Singer before them, formerly made. They allege that the word "Singer," as applied to sewing machines, is understood in the trade to signify machines of their own manufacture (of which there are several known varieties), and nothing else. They have used that word or name on the brass plates or labels which they have affixed to all the machines sold by them. They admit that everybody is at liberty to make and sell machines exactly similar, both in form and in construction, to their own; but they deny the right of any one to use the word "Singer" in any way whatever in connexion with machines not of their manufacture. The present action was brought by them for an injunction and damages against the defendant (the agent in this country of a sewing machine manufacturing company established at Berlin), on the ground, as alleged in the 16th paragraph of the statement of claim, that, by "representing sewing machines sold or offered for sale by him as Singer machines," he had endeavoured to obtain, and succeeded in obtaining, for the machines sold by him some of the reputation attaching to the plaintiffs' manufacture, and had induced (and, unless restrained, would continue to induce) purchasers of his machines to believe that the machines sold by him were in fact machines of the plaintiffs' manufacture, or (in the case of purchasers whose attention had not been called to the plaintiffs' firm) to believe that machines sold by him were machines made by the manufacturers of the machines by which the reputation of the name "Singer" had been acquired.

15 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 490; 47 ibid. 481; ep. 2 Ch. D. 434; 3 App. Cas. 376.

If the case, so stated, were established, there could be no doubt of the plaintiffs' right to some relief, upon the ordinary principles applicable to trade-marks and trade-names. To a certain extent the case was established, and indeed was not contested by the defendant. It was not in controversy that to some of the machines manufactured by the Berlin company and sold by the defendant (exactly similar in form, pattern and construction to some of those manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs), a brass plate or label, also similar in form, size and position to the brass plates or labels engraved with the plaintiffs' trade-mark, had been attached; on which brass plate or label the word "Singer" appeared, though associated with other words, which, if carefully read, might inform a customer that the machine was manufactured by the Berlin company. The defendant, as representative in this country of the Berlin company (in which character I shall throughout speak of him), was a wholesale dealer only; and all persons who bought direct from him knew that the machines which he sold were of the Berlin company's manufacture, and not of the manufacture of the plaintiffs. But the machines, bearing those brass plates or labels, though supplied by him to wholesale customers who could not be themselves deceived, would be liable to pass from them, by retail, into the hands of other persons, some perhaps ignorant and unwary, who, seeing upon them a brass plate or label with the same appearance as the plaintiffs', and also having the word "Singer" upon it, might mistake that plate or label for the plaintiffs' trade-mark, and believe that those machines were really of the plaintiffs' manufacture. The principles applicable to such a case are well established, and have been several times recognised and illustrated in your Lordships' House; the most recent authority in this House being Johnson v. Orr Ewing (2). The imitation of a man's trade-mark, in a manner liable to mislead the unwary, cannot be justified by shewing, either that the device or inscription upon the imitated mark is ambiguous, and capable of being understood by different persons in different ways, or that a person who carefully and intelligently examined and studied it might not be misled.

The plaintiffs have obtained an injunction to the full extent necessary to protect their trade-mark. But the Vice-Chancellor, by whom the action was tried, went further, and also prohibited the defendant (in effect) from using the word "Singer" in any way whatever with respect to any machines not manufactured by the plaintiffs' company. The Lords Justices on appeal, thought that, when the trade-mark was out of the case, nothing else was shewn by the evidence to have been done, or intended, or likely to be done by the defendant, against which he ought to be enjoined. They therefore discharged that part of the Vice-Chancellor's order which went beyond the protection of the plaintiffs' trade-mark; and the question upon this appeal is, whether they were right in doing so.

It is necessary for this purpose to consider what the defendant (representing the Berlin company) has actually done beyond the use of the objectionable brass plate or label, which must be taken to have now finally ceased; and what may be reasonably presumed, from the nature of his business and course of dealing, to be the intention, or the probable effect, of what he has done, or is likely hereafter to do.

The plaintiffs take exception to the employment of the word "Singer" in a certain manner in four documents of which the defendant makes use for the purposes of the Berlin company's business.

(2) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 797; Law Rep. 7 App. Cas. 219.

)ne of these documents is a broadsheet advertisement, printed on both sides, l headed on one side, "The improved ieeler-Wilson and Singer systems, manu-ured by the Sewing Machine Manufac-ing Company, late Frister & Rossmann, lin." In this title the words "Wheeler-lson," "Singer" and "Frister and Ross-n" are all in large type, and all equally spicuous. It is divided into two equal ts by an engraving of the Berlin com-y's manufactory, in the margin of which addresses of their agents, in nine con-ntal cities, besides London, are given. ow there follows half a page of letter-s in small type, in the course of which phrases "the Wheeler-Wilson" and e Singer systems" several times occur; also "our Singer machines, pronounced unquestionable authority to be supe-to the so-called original Singer hine;" also "Wheeler-Wilsons" and ngers" in a context evidently referring he "two systems"; also a statement "our Singer machines" are made in ay which causes them to work without e, "contrary to the very noisy Singer hine of our competitors." On the other of the broadsheet, fifteen different mbers of machines are figured, of which first ten are described as on the heeler-Wilson system," and the five as on the "Singer system"; and in the dle of that side, to the left is a "list of chments given with every Frister & smann machine, Wheeler-Wilson sys-" and to the right a "list of attach-ts given with every Frister & Ross-n machine, Singer system."

he second document is a small price headed, "The Sewing Machine Manu-ring Company, late Frister & Ross-n, Limited, 128 London Wall, London, Price List, Private." It is divided two parts, the first entitled "Wheeler 'ilson, improved system," the second ger improved system." That, except rices attached, is all.

f the third document, the title-page is, rections for the use of Frister & Ross-n's shuttle sewing machine, on Singer's oved system," the word "Singer's" g printed in large letters, but not conspicuously than "Frister & Ross-n's." The directions themselves, which extend over sixteen pages, do not contain the word "Singer"; but they are headed "Instructions for use of the family shuttle machine on the Singer system."

The fourth and last document was an invoice given to a witness who purchased one of the defendant's machines, representing himself to be in the trade, in which the article sold was described as "1 Singer hand machine, No. 14."

None of these documents (unless it be the "directions for use") were of a nature or character which, according to the course of the defendant's business, could be intended, or would be likely, to come into the hands of any retail dealer to whom machines sold by the defendant might afterwards be resold. The defendant's business was, as has been stated, exclusively wholesale; he would not circulate or deliver these documents, or any of them, to any person not "in the trade." Two of them (the price list marked "private," and the invoice, shewing the wholesale prices of the machines sold) were manifestly not addressed to retail purchasers, nor likely, in the ordinary course of the business of any persons who bought the defendant's machines, to be communicated to them.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs' witnesses, and to me it seems clear, that no purchaser of the class to whom alone these documents were issued by the defendant could possibly be thereby deceived or misled into supposing that the machines sold by the defendant were of the plaintiffs' manufacture, or that the business carried on by the defendant was the plaintiffs' business. All such purchasers must necessarily have understood that the articles which they ordered or bought were manfactured by the Berlin company, though some of them were made upon a "system" which was called "the Singer system." The invoice is the only document which, even if it had got into the hands of a careless retail purchaser, might (in my opinion) have been reasonably capable of being otherwise understood.

It is, therefore, in my judgment, superfluous to enter into a close comparison between these documents, or any of them, and that Dublin price list of the defendants in the case of The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Wilson (1), on which Lord Cairns, in this House, made certain observations, from which I in no way dissent. That was a price list, materially different in its form and phraseology from any of these documents, which list, in the ordinary course of Messrs. Wilson & Co.'s business (who were retail as well as wholesale dealers), was liable to pass into the hands of ignorant and unwary customers. The present documents (except the "directions") could not do so, without a deviation from the settled course of the defendant's, and from the natural and presumable course of his customers', business.

It was contended that the acts of the defendant enabled his wholesale customers to shew these documents to their own retail customers, for the purpose of passing off the goods bought from the defendant as the plaintiffs' manufacture. The answer is, that, unless the documents were fabricated with a view to such a fraudulent use of them, or unless they were in themselves of such a nature as to suggest, or readily and easily lend themselves to, such a fraud, (which, in my opinion, they were not), the supposed consequence is too remote, speculative and improbable to be imputed to the defendant, or to be a ground for the interference of a Court of justice with the course of the defendant's business. There is no evidence that, in point of fact, any such use was ever made of them. The "directions for use" spoke unmistakably of "Frister & Rossmann's shuttle sewing machine"; and no one, however careless, could read in that document the words "on Singer's improved system" without seeing and understanding their context.

The question therefore is, whether the defendant, not representing the machines which he sells as of the manufacture of the plaintiffs, but, on the contrary, representing them as manufactured by the Berlin company, is at liberty to say that he makes them "on the Singer system"? I agree with the Court of Appeal in thinking that he is at liberty to do so, and that by so doing (if, in substance, he does no more) he infringes no right of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs have insisted throughout this suit that the words "the Singer system" (so used) are misleading, arbitrary and unmeaning; that there is no system or principle whatever, distinctive or characteristic, of any class or classes of machines manufactured either by themselves or by the Berlin company, to which that term can rationally be applied; and therefore that it can only be intended, and can only have a tendency, to deceive. I will assume (without deciding) that, if it were so, this might be evidence of an intention, on the part of the defendant and his company and those dealing with them, to pass into the general market goods manufactured by the Berlin company under the denomination of "Singer machines," in order that they might obtain the benefit of the plaintiffs' reputation, and be supposed (more or less extensively) to be of the plaintiffs' manufacture. But, on this point, the contention of the plaintiffs appears to me to be disproved by the evidence. I am satisfied that the phrase "Singer system," whether scientific or not, whether exact or loose, is used by the defendant, and by other persons in the same trade, to signify not a figment but a fact.

The defendant, as agent of the Berlin company, deals in two only of the several varieties of machines which the plaintiffs also make — namely, those styled the "Family" and the "Medium" machines, the "Medium" scarcely, if at all, differing from the "Family" except in size. He also, it must be recollected, deals in other machines, at least as prominently put forward in his advertisement-sheets and price-lists, which he describes as manufactured on "the Wheeler-Wilson system." There are, in fact, a good many different kinds of sewing machines, well known in the trade, which have come to be described by appellations derived from the names of their original inventors, patentees or manufacturers, of which appellations "Wheeler-Wilson" is one. Messrs. Wheeler & Wilson, like Mr. Singer, formed a company for the manufacture of sewing machines, and that company, like the plaintiffs in the present case, sought to restrain the use of the name "Wheeler-Wilson" by other manufacturers. It was decided, however, by Vice-Chancellor James in 1869—Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Company v. Shakespeare (3)— that this name "Wheeler-Wilson" had come to signify in the trade, not the particular manufactures of Messrs. Wheeler & Wilson or of the Wheeler-Wilson Company, but the kind or kinds of machines which they made, the manufacture of which was publici juris. The injunction, therefore, asked in that case was refused. Your Lordships have not now to review that decision, nor do I assume either that it was or that it was not right; but it is part of the history of the trade in those sewing machines in which the present defendant now deals; and it is manifest, on the face of the defendant's advertisement sheets and price lists, that he has used the words "Singer system" in exactly the same sense, relatively to the plaintiffs and their predecessor in business, in which he uses the words "Wheeler-Wilson system," relatively to Messrs. Wheeler & Wilson, and the company carrying on business under that name.

(3) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 36.

The defendant's witness, Mr. Newton Wilson (Question 7499), says:—"Every sewing machine, as it came into the English market successively from America, came to be known, in the first place, by its outward form, and, secondly, by the arrangement of parts which constitute that machine; and that arrangement of parts, combined with that peculiar outward form, constitutes a type or class." This is evidently what the defendant and others in the trade, who use the same phraseology with the defendant, mean by the word "system." In the 9th paragraph of his statement of defence the defendant avers that the words "Singer system" and "Singer machines," as he uses them, are, and are understood in the trade to be, descriptive of certain special characteristics of outward form and internal construction, which he there specifies, and this statement is supported (with only, as it seems to me, verbal and immaterial variations) by the evidence of a scientific witness for the defendant, Mr. Imray. That witness divides sewing machines into three principal classes:—First, the lock stitch, working with a needle and shuttle; second, the chain stitch; and third, the double chain stitch. To the first, or "lock stitch" type of machines, he says all those known under the appellations "Howe," "Thomas," "Singer" and "Wheeler and Wilson" belong, and he specifies the distinctive characters of each kind, and (among them) in much detail (Questions 5904–5920) those of the machines known (according to him) under the name of "Singer." The names, he says (Questions 5856–7), "always convey to my mind a distinctive idea of a distinct thing"—that is, of "great similarity." "There might be variation in detail, and yet the broad construction and form might be the same." I believe this evidence. It is, in substance, confirmed by facts admitted in cross examination by the plaintiffs' own manager, Mr. Woodruff (Questions 834–858), and also by a considerable body of documentary evidence, some of which proceeds from sources independent of the parties to the present litigation, and some is traceable to the plaintiffs themselves.

Among the defendant's exhibits were circulars of two German houses (unconnected, so far as appears, with the Berlin company), carrying on business respectively at Frankfort and Hamburg, in which sewing machines made or sold by them are classified under the several appellations of "system Wheeler & Wilson," "system Singer," "system Grover & Baker," "system Howe" and "system Wilcox & Gibbs," shewing that these are known denominations of particular kinds of machines upon the continent of Europe. It may be (as was said by the plaintiffs' counsel) that all these were issued after 1870, the time to which the plaintiffs refer the commencement in this country of that use of the name "Singer" by other manufacturers which they allege to be unlawful.

No such explanation, however, can be given of the circulars of M. Callebaut, a French manufacturer, who in 1865 obtained a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition for a machine or machines of the plaintiffs' own manufacture, for which medal the plaintiffs, in their own circulars, claimed credit, and to whom the plaintiffs, by agreement, relinquished the exclusive right of manufacturing that class of machines in France. In this circular of M. Callebaut, published certainly before 1870, the words "système Singer" are used to describe the machines of his own French manufacture. Nay, more, the plaintiffs themselves, in the same circulars in which they reckoned M. Callebaut's gold medal among the premiums obtained by them at various industrial and international exhibitions, said, "The principle of the Singer Manufacturing Company's sewing machines has not been changed since their first introduction to the public; yet many beautiful labour-saving additions have been attached," &c.; and they described their family machine as "constructed on sound mechanical principles, which have been thoroughly tested with a view to attain the greatest possible degree of simplicity and durability without liability to derangement," and as sewing "with a straight needle, thus obtaining the greatest possible amount of strength and power to pass seams and irregularities in the work, which manifestly can never be equalled by any system using a curved needle." (The italics are in the circular.) This language the plaintiff's manager, Mr. Woodruff, tried in his cross-examination to explain away by saying that it "had no meaning," and was "very stupid," and "deceived people," and that the plaintiffs were "capable of doing stupid things as well as other people." It is superfluous to say that the fact appears to me to be of much more value than the explanation.

There were also expressions of an import which, in my opinion, amounts to much the same thing, in the specifications of several patents taken out in this country, by the plaintiffs or their agents, for improvements in their machines. In Newton's specification of 1863 (the invention patented being a communication from Mr. Singer) mention is made of an ordinary Singer machine fitted with a novel arrangement and of "Singer's well-known construction of sewing machine." In Woodruff's specification of 1865 "the means shewn for operating the needle and shuttle" are said to "require no special explanation," because it is "the well-known arrangement of Singer machines." I think it unnecessary to pursue this point further. It may be true, as the plaintiffs say, that the machines to which they now attach that appellation vary, in points which may possibly be useful and important, from their older machines by which it was originally acquired; but the conclusion to which I am brought unhesitatingly by the whole evidence is that there has been, for many years past, sufficient continuity and identity of method in the construction of the plaintiffs' lock-stitch machines (particularly of machines of those classes which they describe as "Family" or "Medium," and which are also manufactured by the Berlin company) to make the term "Singer system," as used with respect to those machines, a bona fide and intelligible description, which has obtained extensive currency both in England and on the continent of Europe, of some really distinctive character or characters in that method of construction.

It follows that, in my opinion, the use of that phraseology by the defendant is not evidence of any fraudulent purpose or intent. It was urged, however, that it ought not to be regarded separately from the use of the brass plate or label, which has been adjudged to be an infringment of the plaintiffs' trade-mark; that it is one of a series of acts, designed with a view to, and practically terminating in, the use of that plate or label; and that all such acts, being so connected together, ought to be alike prohibited. In this view I cannot agree. I think that the representations made by the defendant to his wholesale customers, whether orally or by broadsheet, price list, or invoice, have no natural or necessary connection, in intention or in fact, with any deception of retail customers, which might possibly arise from the use of the brass plate or label. No one would contend that there was any such connection if, in those representations to the defendant's wholesale customers, the word "Singer" had not occurred; and the case is really the same, if (as I think) the word "Singer" was so used as to obviate any reasonable possibility of misunderstanding or deception.

The counsel for the appellants lastly argued that the plaintiffs, trading under Mr. Singer's name, and using his trade mark, had acquired such a right of property in that name as to entitle them to restrain any rival in trade from introducing it into any of his price lists, circulars or advertisements, even in such a way as might exclude the possibility of it being understood to represent, directly or indirectly, that the goods sold by him were manufactured by the plaintiffs, or that his trade or business was identical or connected with the trade or business of the plaintiffs. For that argument no authority was cited; and it cannot, in my opinion, be maintained on any principle. The reputation acquired by machines of a particular form or construction is one thing; the reputation of the plaintiffs, as manufacturers, is another. If the defendant has no right, under colour of the former, to invade the latter, neither have the plaintiffs any right, under colour of the latter, to claim (in effect) a monopoly of the former. If the defendant has (and it is not denied that he has) a right to make and sell, in competition with the plaintiffs, articles similar in form and construction to those made and sold by the plaintiffs, he must also have a right to say that he does so, and to employ for that purpose the terminology common in his trade, provided always that he does this in a fair, distinct and unequivocal way. The Court of Appeal has thought that (apart from the infringement of the trade-mark) this is all that he has done. I think the same, and I therefore move your Lordships to dismiss this appeal. But with regard to costs, I have something special to say. The appendices before your Lordships are of enormous bulk; and it can hardly be doubted that most, if not the whole, of the matter contained in them, which does not consist of shorthand writer's notes, was printed and used in the Court below. Although your Lordships, if you should concur in the views which I have submitted to you, will think it your duty to dismiss this appeal, yet I am bound to say, looking both to that part of the case as to which the plaintiffs have obtained and retained an injunction, and to some other circumstances which I think one of my noble and learned friends will take notice of, that I cannot regard the conduct or the position of the defendant as standing in a very meritorious point of view. Looking, therefore, to the bulk and magnitude of the appendix, and to the introduction into it, in a manner which I think decidedly unnecessary and improper, of a vast mass of shorthand writer's notes, it seems to me that it would be right for your Lordships, subject to the modification which I am about to suggest, to give the respondent costs in the usual manner, but that you should limit those costs so far as the appendix is concerned; and what I would propose to your Lordships is, that the costs given to the respondent should not include either the shorthand writer's notes of the arguments which are in the appendix, or any allowance whatever for the drawing of the appendix.

LORD BRAMWELL.—The case of the plaintiffs (not from any fault of their counsel) was so loose and vague that, instead of trying to state and deal with it, it is easier to consider what the defendant is charged with having done, and see if there is anything in it of which the plaintiffs have a right to complain. Now, as has been said by the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack, there are four documents or papers, published or uttered by the defendant, to which the plaintiffs object. Three of them state the defendant to be a seller of sewing machines, which he calls "Singer Sewing Machines," but which he says are made by manufacturers at Berlin. The plaintiffs say that this is a representation that the machines are of the plaintiffs' make, because, say the plaintiffs, you, the defendant, mean something by the expression "Singer sewing machine"; but as there is no principle, or system, or plan which is peculiar to the machines we make, a "Singer sewing machine" must mean one of our make, though you say it is not. And in order to make out this case, practical men have been called to shew that by "Singer sewing machine," one made by the plaintiffs is understood in the trade, and what is called scientific evidence has been given to shew that there is no principle in the machines made by the plaintiffs. I cannot but think that my lamented friend Sir H. Jackson engaged in a very unprofitable verbal discussion on this head. For I am very clearly of opinion that, whether "principle" is or is not the right "word," there is undoubtedly the "thing" there, the existence of which he wished to establish, namely, a plan on which the plaintiffs make the bulk of their machines, a plan which may have been altered and improved from time to time, but which as it now exists is the usual plan. And I come to this conclusion from the acts and conduct of the plaintiffs themselves, who have continually spoken of "the Singer system," and to the like effect. I say, therefore, that it is not true that the "Singer sewing machine" has no meaning but that of a machine made by the plaintiffs. But further, suppose it to be unmeaning, inaccurate, wrong, as applied to any machine not made by the plaintiffs, it is manifest that, as the defendant's circulars say that the machines he sells are not made by the plaintiffs, the result is, not that he by implication says the contrary of what he expressly says, but that he has used a wrong, unmeaning, inaccurate expression. And so every one who reads his circulars would understand; at least no one would understand that the plaintiffs made the machines which the defendant says the Berlin company make. Those who know there is no Singer principle or system or plan, know that the defendant uses a wrong expression; those who do not know there is no Singer principle, system or plan, will on reading the circular suppose there is, but that it is used by the Berlin makers. As to the invoice and receipt, they were given to an agent of the plaintiffs, who knew the truth. I think the defendant was correct in calling the machines "Singer machines," but even if not, he only used a wrong word, and misled no one. But then it was said the word "Singer" is a catchword and is misleading. People who know no better may read "Singer sewing machine" and nothing more, and so be misled. I suppose such a thing is not impossible. But in the first place there was no evidence of it. In the next place it is eminently improbable, as the defendant deals with wholesale houses who know what they are about. And thirdly, the possibility of such a mistake is not a cause of action. The same thing might happen if the defendant issued circulars that his were "not" Singer sewing machines. For however large he printed the "not" some one might not see it. The result is that, in my judgment, the defendant has uttered no untruth, nor anything calculated or likely to mislead or deceive, in these four documents. But I cannot help saying that the defendant ought to be very much obliged to those who advised him to discontinue the brass ticket on the machines sold by him; and I think that advice might be carried further, and that he would do well to give up shape and stand and ornamentation, which to me look very much as though it was intended his machines should be taken for the plaintiffs'. I concur in advising your Lordships to dismiss the appeal.

Lord Blackburn.—In this case I agree with the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

I should not decide this without hearing the whole argument if I thought that any of those points were involved in this decision which in the case of The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Wilson (1) gave rise to a difference of opinion. In that case the present Master of the Rolls, and on appeal to them the then Lords Justices James, Mellish and Baggallay, came to the conclusion that on the plaintiffs' case and evidence they had failed to shew that the defendant had done anything wrong, and therefore that it was unnecessary to hear the defendant's evidence. I see that Vice-Chancellor Bacon says in his judgment that the Master of the Rolls "non-suited the plaintiff. The House of Lords, on appeal, thought the non-suit was wrong." That is an inaccurate expression, and the inaccuracy is one that may mislead. A non-suit is where a Judge who has not the power of deciding the facts rules, as a matter of law, that there is no evidence on which the jury, or whatever tribunal had to decide the facts, could properly find facts sufficient to support the plaintiff's case. The Master of the Rolls was Judge alike of law and fact, and what he decided was, that there was no evidence on which he found facts sufficient to support the plaintiffs' case; and the Lords Justices were of opinion that there was no evidence on which they found facts sufficient to support the plaintiffs' case. When the case came before this House, the Lord Chancellor (Cairns not only thought that there was evidence on which they might have found such facts, but he thought, and expressly said, that there was evidence on which he himself found facts sufficient to support the plaintiffs' case.

I do not now enquire whether the difference between these very high authorities was as to propositions of law or, as I incline to think, only as to the principles which ought to guide the tribunal when applying the law to the evidence, and as to the inferences which ought to be drawn, or the weight which ought to be given, to different matters.

That there were differences sufficient to lead to opposite results is clear, and if I thought that the evidence in the present case rendered it necessary to decide on any points on which those differences existed, I should certainly wish to hear all that was to be said by the counsel for the respondent; for I think it no light thing to dissent from an opinion of Lord Cairns, even though in doing so I should agree with such eminent Judges as the Master of the Rolls and Lords Justices James, Mellish and Baggallay. But I must also say that I think it no light thing to differ from such eminent authorities, even though in doing so I should agree with Lord Cairns. Neither should, I think, be done unless it is necessary for the decision, and then only after full and careful deliberation. These considerations induced me to agree to the Lord Chancellor's proposal "to reverse the decree of the Master of the Rolls, but to declare that this is to be without prejudice to any question in the case, and to remit," &c. And that only, I think, was the decision of this House.

I agree, I think, with every one who has as yet had to express an opinion on the case at bar, that, notwithstanding the enormous length of the evidence produced in this case, the matters of fact really in controversy are short and simple. And I also agree that all the law which is material for the decision of this case is well settled. Some points are, perhaps, still moot points. In what I now say I shall, when I touch on any one of those, point out why I think it is not necessary now to decide it.

The original foundation of the whole law is this: that when one knowing that goods are not made by a particular trader sells them as and for the goods of that trader, he does that which injures that trader. At first it was put upon the ground that he did so when he sold inferior goods as and for the trader's; but it is established (alike at law—Blofield v. Payne (4)—and in equity—Edelston v. Edelston (5))—that it is an actionable injury to pass off goods known not to be the plaintiff's as and for the plaintiff's, even though not inferior.

The modes in which goods may be passed off as and for the plaintiff's vary. The most usual is where a particular mark on the goods or on the packages in which they are sold has been used to denote that they are made by a particular firm to such an extent that it is understood in the market to bear that meaning. The law as to those trade-marks is now regulated by statutes; but before there was any legislation on the subject it was well settled that when any one adopted a mark so closely resembling the trade-mark of the plaintiff that it would be likely to be mistaken for it, and put it on his goods and sold them, knowing that though the persons to whom he sold them were well aware that they were not the plaintiff's make, yet that they were meant to be sold to others who would see only the trade-mark, and were likely to be deceived by its resemblance to that of the plaintiff, he might be properly found to have knowingly and fraudulently sold the goods as and for the plaintiff's goods—Sykes v. Sykes (6). And, so far, there was no difference between law and equity. But at law it was necessary to prove that an injury had been actually done. In equity it was enough to shew that the defendant threatened to do, and would, if not prevented, do that injury. But there is a further question on which there may be a difference between law and equity.

In 1838 the case of Millington v. Fox (7) was decided by Lord Cottenham, then Lord Chancellor. There the plaintiffs were (4) 4 B. & Ad. 410; 1 Nev. & M. 353; 2 Law J. Rep. K.B. 68.

(5) 1 De Gex, J. & S. 185.

(6) 5 Dowl. & Ry. 292; 3 B. & C. 641; 3 Law J. Rep. (O.S.) K.B. 48.

(7) 3 Myl. & Cr. 338.

the successors in business of a firm of manufacturers of steel, originally founded by a person of the name of Crowley, and afterwards carried on by Crowley, Millington & Co.; and those firms, and the plaintiffs as their successors, used as their trade-mark or brand on their steel the words "Crowley" and "Crowley Millington." The Lord Chancellor in that case said: "I see no reason to believe that there has in this case been a fraudulent use of the plaintiffs' marks. It is positively denied by the answer, and there is no evidence to shew that the defendants were even aware of the existence of the plaintiffs as a company manufacturing steel; for although there is no evidence to shew that the terms 'Crowley' and 'Crowley Millington' were merely technical terms, yet there is sufficient to shew that they were very generally used, in conversation at least, as descriptive of particular qualities of steel. In short, it does not appear to me that there was any fraudulent intention in the use of the marks. That circumstance, however, does not deprive the plaintiffs of their right to the exclusive use of those names; and, therefore, I stated that the case is so made out as to entitle the plaintiffs to have the injunction made perpetual."

It is, to my mind, obvious that though the defendants might have committed no actionable wrong whilst using the plaintiffs' trade-mark innocently, yet, if they persevered in the use of it after they had knowledge of the facts, they would do wrong, and there would be evidence to support a claim at law for damages for knowingly selling the defendants' goods as and for the plaintiffs'.

Crawshay v. Thompson (8) was an action at law in 1842. The declaration did not assert that the defendants had used the plaintiff's trade-mark, consisting of an oval figure with the letters W. C. on it; but that the defendants marked iron of their make with an oval figure containing the letters W. O., well knowing that this mark was intended to be in imitation of and similar in appearance to the mark so used by the plaintiff, and so sold their iron as and for the plaintiff's. Not guilty was pleaded, and, on the trial, evidence was given that the iron with the plaintiff's brand bore a high reputation in the Turkish market, and that the defendants had marked their iron with the brand W. O. at the request of a merchant at Constantinople. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendants that the use of this brand deceived the Orientals, and required them to desist. The defendants, nevertheless, persevered. Chief Justice Tindal, before whom the cause was tried, left it to the jury "to say, first, whether they were satisfied that the defendants' mark bore such a close resemblance to the plaintiff's, as in its own nature was calculated to deceive the unwary or persons who were moderately skilled in the article, and to injure the sale of the plaintiff's goods; and, secondly, what was the intention of the defendants in using the mark complained of—whether it was for the purpose of supplanting the plaintiff, or done in the usual course of trade, and in execution of foreign orders sent to their house; because his Lordship said it seemed to him that unless there were such a fraudulent intention existing (at least before notice), and it were proved, to the satisfaction of the jury, the defendants would not be liable." The effect of the defendants continuing to use the marks after notice, supposing the previous use to have been innocent, was reserved as a point of law for the consideration of the Court.

The jury found for the defendants, and a rule for a new trial was discharged. Language was used by the Judges which may be understood as laying down that proof of fraud, perhaps even of fraudulent intention, is essential at law to the maintenance of the action, and that even though the defendants had been proved to have done wrong after notice, yet, if they bona fide thought the notice was unfounded, the action would not lie, I suppose on the ground that the receipt of notice is not more than evidence of knowledge. I express no opinion as to whether this is the meaning of what was said in that case, or as to whether such is the rule at law. Lord Cairns expresses a decided opinion that it is not the rule in equity. All that I think it proper now to decide is that there is nothing in the evidence in the case at bar to raise such a point.

(8) 4 Man. & G. 357; 5 Sc. (N.S.) 562; 11 Law J. Rep. C.P. 301.

There is another way in which goods not the plaintiff's may be sold as and for the plaintiff's. A name may be so appropriated by user as to come to mean the goods of the plaintiff, though it is not, and never was, impressed on the goods, or on the packages in which they are contained, so as to be a trade-mark, properly so called, or within the recent statutes. Where it is established that such a trade-name bears that meaning, I think the use of that name, or one so nearly resembling it as to be likely to deceive as applicable to goods not the plaintiff's, may be the means of passing off those goods as and for the plaintiff's just as much as the use of a trade-mark; and I think the law (so far as not altered by legislation) is the same. And I think it settled by a series of cases, of which Hall v. Barrows (9) is, I think, the leading one, that both trade-marks and trade-names are in a certain sense property, and that the right to use them passes with the goodwill of the business to the successors of the firm that originally established them, even though the name of that firm be changed, so that they are no longer strictly correct. This was evidently Lord Cottenham's opinion in Millington v. Fox (7), and I know of no authority against it.

The plaintiffs here are the successors of I. M. Singer, and are as such entitled to the use of the trade-names acquired by him and their other predecessors. There is no question as to trade-marks. And, though I do not think it can be said as a matter of law that the name of a trader is necessarily, when applied to goods of the kind he deals in, to be understood as designating his goods, so as necessarily to be a trade-name, yet that is very likely to be the case; and I have no doubt that in this case it is proved that the words "Singer" or Singer's Machines," when applied to sewing machines, are understood by most persons to be the trade-name of the plaintiffs. The evidence intended to contradict this goes as far and, in my mind, no further than to establish that these terms were very generally used by particular persons, but not by every one, as designating machines of a particular type by whomsoever made or sold. And so far there is no solid distinction between the facts in this case and those found in Millington v. Fox (7).

In the case in Scotland against Kimball (10), and in that against Wilson (1), the defendants had used the name of Singer in advertisements as designating their machines, and they did not deny that they knew that the plaintiffs had used that name; but they alleged that they had always taken such precautions in the wording and heading of their advertisements, stating that the Singers they sold were made by them, that the use of the name could not mislead any one.

The Court of Session in Kimball's Case (10), by their interlocutor, "find that for a period of at least seven years prior to the petition for interdict being presented in the inferior Court, the name Singer had, in the sewing machine trade, been used and appropriated exclusively to designate and identify the sewing machines made by the pursuers." "Find that the defenders have recently sold and offered for sale machines made by themselves, under the name of 'Singers,' 'Singer machines,' and 'Singer sewing machines,' and therefore grant interdict," &c.

I do not think it necessary to say what, in my opinion, was the effect of this decision of the Scotch Court. It may be that, having found on the evidence that the pretences of warning all who bought the so-called Singers that they were not made by the pursuers, were, in plain English, shams, and that the defenders really sold their machines as and for the pursuers, they had sufficiently expressed this in their finding. It may be that they went further, and that this finding shews that, in the opinion of the Court of Session, the defence that the defenders had always qualified the use of the plaintiffs' trade-name in such a manner as to prevent its misleading was irrelevant, and that they need find nothing on it. Lord Justice Mellish seems to have understood them to go so far.

In Wilson's Case (1) the Master of the

(9) 4 De Gex, J. & S. 150; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 204.

(10) 11 Court Sess. Cas. 3rd ser. 267

Rolls and Lords Justices James, Mellish and Baggallay, all thought that it was proved that the defendant had always taken such precautions as effectually to prevent the possibility of deceit, and so doing proved a defence; and Lord Justice Mellish gives his reasons for thinking that the Scotch Court, as he understood their decision, had gone further than any English case had gone, and further than an English Court should follow. When the case was brought up to this House, Lord Cairns thought and said that the evidence did not, in his opinion, prove that effectual precautions had been taken. It may be that he thought that the Court of Session, if going as far as Lord Justice Mellish thought, had not gone too far, and that an English Court should follow them; I do not know how that may be, he did not express an opinion on that point either way.

As I have already said, if in the case now at bar the defendant had used the trade-name of the plaintiffs, as it is stated in the second finding of the Court of Session, I should not on this state of the authorities decide without at least hearing the whole argument. But the defendant in this case alleges, and I think proves, that he never has sold or offered for sale machines made by himself under the name of Singer, or Singer machines, or Singer sewing machines, or any name so resembling those names as to be calculated to mislead. He makes one admission, which I will read. "It is the fact that the defendant sometimes, but not always, attaches to Singer machines sold by him, and manufactured by the said foreign company hereinbefore referred to, and sold by the defendant as their agent as aforesaid, brass labels or plates. In many cases there is no label or plate at all upon the machine, in the great majority of cases in which there has been any such label or plate such labels have been German inscriptions, and in the case of from about 250 to 300 machines, and no more, before the commencement of this action, the defendant sold machines to dealers with brass plates or labels upon them, which contained the words in the centre 'F. & R. 128 London Wall, London,' which were the prominent and conspicuous words, and round them in smaller letters were the words 'Frister & Rossmann's Singer Machine' in letters of an uniform size, connected together by the words 'German' and 'manufacturer' in smaller letters. All the other labels or plates upon any sewing machines sold by the defendant have either had German words upon them, with no reference to the words 'Singer machine' at all, or have been labels similar in form, size and appearance to the first-mentioned labels, but with the words 'Frister & Rossmann's shuttle machine' in lieu of the words 'Singer machine.' Although the defendant is satisfied and believes that no person has been or could really be misled or deceived by the words 'Singer machine' as used on the said labels or plates in the only manner in which he has ever used them before the commencement of this action, yet the question is of no importance to the defendant, and to avoid all excuse for further litigation the defendant has, since the commencement of this action, absolutely ceased to use, and the defendant has not since the commencement of this action sold or disposed of any sewing machine with any such label, plate or mark thereon, or having the word 'Singer' upon it; and in order to avoid useless expense he hereby submits and undertakes not to use, and he offers to submit at once to a judgment and injunction, with such costs as this Court shall direct, against his using any label or brass plate upon or attached to any sewing machine in which the words 'Singer machine' or 'Singer system' or the word 'Singer,' either alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, is in any way used, or selling or using any such machine with the word 'Singer' on the above or otherwise affixed thereon or attached thereto."

An injunction was drawn up in terms of this submission, and against that the defendant has not, and after that submission could not, appeal.

The defendant does admit that he has in his advertisements and circulars said that he makes and sells machines made on the Singer system; and he maintains, and as I think correctly, that he has a right so to do, if he does no more. An attempt was made to prove was nothing that could pro-led a Singer system, and that e use of these words, said not y accurate, must be equivalent s "Singer Machines." I think ttempt totally failed. The emselves had in a patent as 3 used the words "an ordinary chine" and "Singer's well-truction of sewing machines," ıy of their circulars, both be-when the Scotch suit against s begun, and since, have used

I do not enquire whether it e scientific meaning. I agree he noble and learned Lord on k has just said, that scientific e or not, it has been used by s themselves, and by others in signify not a fiction, but a fact.
elieved from examining the uments relied upon, because I loing so only repeat what has y said by the Lord Chancellor, entirely concur. In only one,
ıe invoices, are the words chine" used. I entirely agree a person (in this case a person detective for the plaintiffs) er to a wholesale house for one ngers, it was very natural that le house should, in sending in e, adopt the term used in the that their doing so could not erson who had already ordered

And I think that there was for saying that the defendant ave been careful in using the on the invoice, lest it should a means for deceiving subsechasers of the article. The house throughout issued their ealers who came to them con-and that for an obvious reas not wished by those dealers urchasers from them should much they had added to the which they bought them from sale house, and the invoice w that price, and therefore be shewn to a purchaser from only one other matter on which necessary to say anything. The the Rolls in Singer v. Wilson

(1) says that the Attorney-General (Holker) "wanted the general question decided, whether he was entitled to the injunction as asked by the prayer—namely, to restrain the defendant from offering for sale any sewing machine as 'Singer's' or the Singer Machine, whether he said it was made by himself or not." I do not find that the counsel in the House of Lords, of whom Sir John Holker was not one, renewed this request. Nothing certainly was said about it by any of the Lords, unless it was in my mind when I said that the plaintiffs, if the allegations in their bill were proved, were entitled to some relief, and added "whether they would be entitled to an injunction to the extent which is asked for in the prayer of the bill is a different question." I have no independent recollection of what I meant, but I think it probable enough that I was referring to this. At all events nothing was decided in this House on this point; and nothing falls to be decided in this case as to whether there was such a right as to the use of the trade-name, for it is not used. But it was argued that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to prevent the use of the plaintiffs' name in any way in reference to articles such as they sell. It was not denied that every one was at liberty to make and sell machines in every respect identical with those made by the plaintiffs, and to say that the goods he made and sold were identical with those made by the plaintiffs in shape and construction, and to allege that the materials were better than those used by the plaintiffs, and more skilfully put together, and sold cheaper, and all this for the purpose of rivalling the plaintiffs. But it was said that the plaintiffs' family name must not be used at all for such an object. No authority was cited in support of such an extensive proposition, and I do not think it is founded on sound principles.

I also agree that the special order as to the costs proposed is just in this case.

LORD WATSON.—Notwithstanding the mass of evidence with which this case is encumbered, it does not, in my opinion, raise any doubtful or difficult question either of fact or law.

I think it is established by the evidence that the name "Singer," as used by the appellant company, and their predecessor in business Isaac Merritt Singer, has long been, and still is, generally understood to denote sewing machines of their manufacture. The machines made by Mr. Singer, and afterwards by the company, were of several different classes, suitable to the various kinds of work for which they were required by customers; and, as recent improvements were from time to time adopted by the manufacturers, the machines of each class varied at different periods both in the arrangement of their parts and in their outward form. It is, in my opinion, clearly proved that, notwithstanding these progressive improvements and variations, the sewing machines manufactured by Mr. Singer and the appellant company have been distinguishable by their external form and adjustment of parts from the machines of other manufacturers; and that a customer desiring to purchase a "Singer" sewing machine invariably understood that he was buying, and expected to get, not merely a machine made by Mr. Singer, or the company, but a machine of the same shape and character with one or other of the classes which he or they were known to be making at the time.

The legal consequence of these facts is, that the appellant company have a right —an exclusive right—to use the name "Singer," as denoting sewing machines of their manufacture; and that no one has a right to use the word for the purpose of passing off his goods as theirs, or, even when he is innocent of that purpose, to use it in any way calculated to deceive or aid in deceiving the public. None of the numerous authorities cited at the bar by the appellants' counsel carry the exclusive right of a trader to a particular name, beyond that limit. There is no authority, and, in my opinion, no principle for giving the trader any higher right. If he cannot allege and prove that the public are deceived, or that there is a reasonable probability of deception, he has no right to interfere with the use of the name by others.

No doubt, as has been noticed by the noble and learned Lord (Lord Blackburn), Lord Justice Mellish, in the case of The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Wilson (1), states that the Scotch Courts had gone the length of holding "that there is a property acquired in a trade-mark or trade-name to this extent, that no one else is entitled to use that mark or name at all, as applied to the particular article in connection with which it has been used, even though he does it perfectly honestly and in a way not calculated to deceive." I venture to think that the learned Lord Justice misapprehended the judgment of the First Division in Kimball and Morton's Case (10). What the majority of the Court, at least, intended to decide, and the import, as I read it, of their interlocutor, which was quoted in full by my noble and learned friend, is this—that the defendants had so used the name "Singer" in connection with the sale of their own machines, that purchasers of their machines believed they had been made by the Singer Manufacturing Company. Lord Deas, in that case, stated that the result of the proof went to shew that, "what so enabled the defenders to increase their trade was the belief of purchasers that their machines were made by the Singer Company." Lord Ardmillan was "satisfied both of the intention and the tendency of the defenders' proceedings to deceive the public into the acceptance of the machines as made by Singer & Co., though not so made." The Lord President (Inglis), who does not go so far as to hold with his brethren that actual deception had been proved, does use some expressions which, taken per se, might, in the opinion of some, lead to the conclusion which Lord Justice Mellish thinks was accepted by the Court. But the Lord President proceeds to make the grounds of his judgment very clear by summing up the law and facts of the case in these words:—"I do not think it necessary that they (that is, the pursuers) should go the full length of their averment when they say that this has been done with the object and effect of leading and inducing the public to believe that the machines are manufactured by the said company. It is sufficient to my mind if it is calculated to have that effect; and that it is calculated to have that effect is a most reasonable conclusion from the evidence before us."

er Manufacturing Co. v. Loog, H.L.

the respect which I entertain idicial utterances of the late ice Mellish, I should not have necessary to make these obser-on Kimball and Morton's Case
h appears to be a decision in ordance with the principles re-by the English authorities.
these principles the acts of the
, with which we are concerned peal, constitute no invasion of ants' exclusive right. What were I shall not attempt to use I entirely agree with the essed by the noble and learned e Woolsack as to their character le effect.

ore agree with your Lordships dgment of the Court of Appeal be affirmed, and I concur in hat in the circumstances of this sts of the respondent ought to th as your Lordships have sug-appealed from affirmed, and eal dismissed with costs, subject the following directions:—That taxing the respondent's costs of appeal, nothing be allowed for wing the appendix, and that all s of so much of the appendix consists of shorthand notes of uments be disallowed.

J. D. Wansborough, for appellants; Abrahams & Co., for respondent.

HE COURT OF APPEAL.]

, L.J.
J.J.
.

BALFOUR v. COOPER.

t—Portions—Trust to Charge Charge—Interest—Rate of—reland.

rriage settlement certain lands stood limited to trustees for a 00 years, upon trust to raise 15,000l. for the younger chil-marriage, by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the said lands, in such proportions and at such time as Lord D. should by deed or will appoint, but there was no provision as to interest on the portions. Lord D. by his will appointed 5,000*l. and* 6,000*l. to two of his sons, and by the marriage settlement of his daughter appointed* 4,000*l. in her favour to be raised with interest at five per cent., which sum was assigned to the trustees of the settlement. An action was brought by the trustee of the portions term for the purpose of having the trusts of that term carried into execution, and in that action the* 4,000*l. was ordered to be raised by mortgage, and a receiver was appointed to receive the rents and profits of the settled estates, and thereout to keep down the interest on the* 4,000*l. at four per cent. until the sum was raised. The trustee being unable to raise the* 4,000*l. by mortgage, the trustees of the daughter's settlement applied for an order that the receiver might apply the rents and profits towards discharge of the capital of the* 4,000*l., and in payment of the interest thereon at five per cent. until the sum should be raised by mortgage:*—Held, that the rents and profits must be applied in reduction of the capital sum of 4,000*l. and the interest, and the lands being situate in Ireland the interest must be computed at five per cent., the legal Irish rate of interest.*

Young v. Lord Waterpark (13 Sim. 199) distinguished.

Held, however, that Lord D. had no power to fix the rate of interest at five per cent.; the rule laid down by Lewis v. Freke (2 Ves. jun. 507) and Boycot v. Cotton (1 Atk. 552), that the donee of a power of charging land with a particular sum has a right to fix the rate of interest, does not apply to a case where there is an absolute trust to charge with a certain sum, with a power to some person nominated to fix how that particular sum is to be distributed.

By a settlement made upon the marriage of the late Earl of Desart and the Hon. Elizabeth Lucy Campbell, dated the 27th of June, 1842, and made between the late earl of the one part, the late Earl of Cawdor and his daughter the Hon. Elizabeth Lucy Campbell of the second part, the Hon. Octavius Duncombe and

Balfour v. Cooper, App.

James Corry Connelon of the third part, Sir J. Burke and Lord W. Thynne of the fourth part, Viscount Emlyn and John Power of the fifth part, and John Balfour (the plaintiff) and Charles Going, since deceased, of the sixth part, the lands of Desart and other hereditaments in the county of Kilkenny, subject to a term of ninety-nine years to secure the payment of pin-money to the then intended wife, were settled to the use of the late earl for life, with remainder to the use that the then intended wife should after his death receive out of the said hereditaments the yearly sum of 2,000*l.* for her jointure, and in bar of dower with remainder, subject as aforesaid, for a term of 200 years for securing that jointure, with remainder to the use of the plaintiff and C. Going, their executors, administrators and assigns, for the term of 1,000 years, upon trust as thereinafter mentioned, with remainder in the events which happened to William Ulick O'Connor, the present Earl of Desart, in tail male, with divers remainders over. And it was declared that the term of 1,000 years was so limited in trust as follows:—

Upon trust in case there should be any child or children of the said late Earl of Desart by his then intended wife, besides an eldest or only son, that they the said J. Balfour and C. Going, and the survivor of them, and the executors, administrators and assigns of such survivor, should after the decease of the late Earl of Desart, or in his lifetime with his consent in writing, by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the said lands and other hereditaments comprised in the said term of 1,000 years, or any of them or any part thereof, or out of the rents and profits thereof, or by any other ways or means, raise and levy such sum and sums of money for the portion and portions of such child and children (other than and beside an eldest or only son as aforesaid) as hereinafter mentioned —that is to say, if there should be but one such child, the sum of 5,000*l.*, and if there should be two such children, the sum of 10,000*l.*, and if there should be three such children, the sum of 15,000*l.*, to be so shared and divided between them in such parts, shares and proportions, and to be interests vested in and to be paid to them respectively at such ages, days or times as the late Earl of Desart should by any deed or deeds, or instrument or instruments in writing, with or without power of revocation and new appointment, to be by him duly sealed and delivered, and duly attested, or by his will direct and appoint; and for want of such direction or appointment then the said sum of 10,000*l.* or 15,000*l.* was to be shared and divided between and amongst the children entitled thereto respectively in equal shares and proportions, the share or shares of a son or sons to be vested in him or them respectively at twenty-one, and of a daughter or daughters at twenty-one or marriage, which should first happen after the decease of the late earl, but if in his lifetime immediately after his decease.

Besides the present Earl of Desart there were three younger children of the marriage—namely, Alice Mary, the wife of Lord Henniker, Hamilton John A. Cuffe and Otway F. S. Cuffe.

The late earl, by a codicil dated the 13th of January, 1864, directed and appointed that 5,000*l.*, part of the 15,000*l.* which had then become raiseable, should be paid to H. J. A. Cuffe, and 6,000*l.* to O. F. S. Cuffe, at their respective ages of twenty-one years, which they both attained.

By a settlement made on the marriage of Lord and Lady Henniker, dated the 13th of January, 1864, and made between the late earl of the first part, Lady Alice Mary Cuffe, then an infant, of the second part, Lord Henniker of the third part, and the late Marquis Camden, the Hon. A. L. A. Cooper, the Hon. H. W. Campbell and J. O. Wemyss of the fourth part, the late earl, pursuant to the powers in that behalf, appointed 4,000*l.*, part of the 15,000*l.*, to Lady Henniker, and directed that 3,000*l.*, part of the 4,000*l.*, with interest in the meantime from the marriage at five per cent. per annum, should be raised at the end of six calendar months after her marriage, and that the remaining 1,000*l.* should be raised at the end of six calendar months from the death of the then Dowager Countess Catherine (who died on the 13th of February, 1874), with interest from her death at the like rate, and the late earl declared that neither of the sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*, or any part thereof, should be raised or raiseable, or any step be taken for that purpose, until the expiration of six months after notice in writing of the intention to raise and levy the same should have been given to the present Earl of Desart, his heirs or assigns.

By the same indenture Lord and Lady Henniker assigned to the trustees the said sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* so appointed, with full power to give receipts for the same, to hold the sums upon trusts as therein mentioned.

The marriage took place on the 14th of January, 1864.

The late earl died in 1865.

The 5,000*l.* appointed to H. J. A. Cuffe was raised and paid in 1870, and two sums of 350*l.* and 600*l.* on account of the 6,000*l.* appointed to O. F. S. Cuffe were raised by mortgage and paid to him.

On the 21st of November, 1879, Balfour, the surviving trustee of the portions term, instituted an action against the trustees of Lady Henniker's settlement, the present Earl of Desart and O. F. S. Cuffe, alleging that he had been called upon to raise the portion of 4,000*l.*, that he was unable to raise it by mortgage, that interest was greatly in arrear on the portions directed to be raised, and that there were mortgages affecting the title subsequent to the portions term. He claimed that the trusts of the portions term might be carried into execution under the order of the Court for the purpose of raising the 4,000*l.* and interest, and the balance payable to O. F. S. Cuffe, and also the appointment of a receiver.

On the 20th of March, 1882, after a decree had been made for the execution of the trusts, the Court, on the plaintiff's application, appointed Wade a receiver of the rents and profits of the settled property, and ordered that the 4,000*l.* raiseable for the benefit of Lady Henniker, together with the 5,050*l.*, the balance raiseable for O. F. S. Cuffe, with the interest for the time being due on such sums respectively, should be raised on mortgage of the estates comprised in the settlement of the 27th of June, 1842, or of a sufficient part thereof, and that the receiver should out of the rents and profits of the estates discharge the interest to become due under such mortgage, and that he should until such mortgage was completed out of such rents and profits discharge the interest then due, and keep down the interest to accrue due in respect of the two sums of 4,000*l.* and 5,050*l.* respectively, at four per cent. per annum, without prejudice to any question as to what rate of interest such sums respectively bore, and should pay the balance to Earl Desart.

On the 16th of June, 1882, the defendants, the trustees of Lady Henniker's settlement, took out a summons that, notwithstanding the order of the 20th of March, 1882, the receiver might be ordered, subject to the jointure rentcharge of 2,000*l.* per annum, to pay the rents and profits (after payment thereout of all proper outgoings) to the plaintiff, to be by him applied in reduction (according to the proportion one bore to the other) of the capital of the sums of 4,000*l.* and 5,050*l.*, and in payment of the interest on such two sums respectively at five per cent. until the same two sums should have been raised, in pursuance of the order of the 20th of March, 1882, by mortgage of the estates, or a sufficient part. This summons was adjourned into Court.

On the 3rd of February, 1883, Pearson, J., made an order declaring that interest at four per cent. only was payable, and the plaintiff undertaking to apply 1,500*l.* in his hands, received by him as trustee of the term on account of interest of the 4,000*l.* portion, towards payment of the arrears of interest on that portion, and Earl Desart undertaking to pay the plaintiff on or before the 1st of March the balance of such interest at four per cent. in arrear down to the 13th of November, 1882 (the last quarterly day of payment), as the 1,500*l.* should not extend to satisfy, it was ordered that, pursuant to the order of the 20th of March, 1882, the 4,000*l.* portion and the 5,050*l.* should be raised by mortgage, and that in the meantime the interest should be paid out of the rents and profits, subject to the jointure rentcharge of 2,000*l.* per annum.

There were several incumbrances affecting the settled hereditaments, subsequent to the portions term. Some evidence was before the Court below and the Court of Appeal that various attempts had been made to procure further advances on the settled estates, chiefly from existing encumbrances, but that they had been unsuccessful. It did not appear whether any attempt had been made to raise it under the term which would be in priority to the subsisting encumbrances.

Balfour v. Cooper, App.

The trustees appealed.

Robinson, Q.C., and Owen, for the appellants.—The first question is, whether interest is to be calculated on the charge of 4,000*l.* at four per cent. or five per cent. A power to charge an estate with a gross sum likewise implies a power to charge it with any legal rate of interest, and the rule of the Court to give four per cent. only applies where no rate is fixed by the donee of the power—see Boycot v. Cotton (1) and Lewis v. Freke (2); and the latter case is important, for on a former hearing Lord Eldon held that although interest at five per cent. was directed, only four per cent. should be raised, but afterwards confessed that his former opinion was mistaken, and ordered it to be computed at five per cent. The late earl is the person who has the power of fixing the rate of interest, and has fixed it here at five per cent. See Sugden on Powers (3).

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—In those cases the person who fixed the rate of interest was the donee of a power to charge—here there is a distinct trust created by the settlement of 1842.]

The Judge below went upon the case of Young v. Lord Waterpark (4), where the Vice-Chancellor directed interest to be paid at four per cent.; but there no particular rate was mentioned. But there is no hard and fast rule as to the four per cent. rate; if money cannot be got at four per cent., interest is allowed at five per cent. See Codrington v. Lord Foley (5).

(1) 1 Atk. 552.
(2) 2 Ves. jun. 507.
(3) 8th ed. 151, 427, 697.
(4) 13 Sim. 199. This case is reported 11 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 367, and 15 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 63, but not on this point.
(5) 6 Ves. 364, 374.

But besides the direction to pay interest at five per cent., considering that this land is all situate in Ireland, the interest ought to be raised at the ordinary Irish rate, which is five per cent. In Young v. Lord Waterpark (4), some of the estates charged were in England and some in Ireland, and therefore it may be that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was right, as it would have been inconvenient to have two different rates of interest on the different estates; but in Purcell v. Purcell (6) and Simpson v. O'Sullivan (7) five per cent. was given as the Court rate of interest.

Then the receiver should be ordered, after keeping down the 2,000*l.* jointure, to apply the rents and profits received by him in keeping down the interest due to us and the arrears of interest, and any surplus rents towards discharge of the principal sum. We have a clear charge on the rents and profits, and the receiver has no right to pay away any of the rents to any person subsequent to us.

This is a question between us and mortgagees on the life estate of the present earl.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Latham, for Lord Desart.—Lewis v. Freke (2) and the cases cited against us only shew that where by an instrument power is given to a person to charge estates with a sum of money, that person can in consequence also fix the rate of interest; but here there is a trust.

[They were not called on to argue this point.]

Then as to the Irish rate of interest being payable, we submit that this is an English settlement; the question of the rate of interest is to be interpreted by the intention of the parties, and not the position of the property. The lex fori will generally govern the allowance of interest for delay of payment, and the rate thereof unless it be shewn that the lex loci contractus requires a different rule—see Story on Conflict of Laws (8); and Young v. Lord Waterpark (4) is in our favour because if the fact that the property is in Ireland fixes the rate of interest at five

(6) 2 Dr. & W. 217; 1 Conn. & L. 371.
(7) 3 Dr. & W. 446.
(8) 6th ed. § 296.

lfour v. Cooper, App.

ənt., the Vice-Chancellor ought to ixed a different rate for the different ties, instead of the English rate for That case is referred to in 3 David-mv. (9).

n the receiver ought not to apply nts in payment of the capital. The ants have the power to raise it by age, and they should do so, and they ıot shewn that it is impossible.

ld for trustees.

inson, Q.C., replied.

GALLAY, L.J. — By a settlement on the marriage of Lord Desart on th of June, 1842, in the first place, oney is secured to the intended wife Desart, with a term of ninety-nine o secure that, and then in the event surviving Lord Desart there is a re of 2,000*l.* a year, with a term of ars to secure that, and that jointure r payable, the then Lord Desart now dead; and next to that, the ty stands limited to certain trus-f whom Mr. Balfour is the surviv-ıstee, for the term of 1,000 years, he trusts which I am now about to n: that in case there should be ild or children of the then intended ge, at the decease of Lord Desart, is lifetime with his consent, there be raised by virtue of the term of years certain sums of money depend-on the number of younger children 0*l.* for one, 10,000*l.* for two, and l. for three or more—and there been three younger children be-e present Lord Desart, 15,000*l.* was n to be raised under this term. It e observed that it is to be raised by gaging or otherwise disposing of id lands and other hereditaments, of the rents and profits thereof." ave said, there were three younger n of the marriage, and 15,000*l.* ngly became raiseable, and it was ted in the form of 5,000*l.* to one er son, 6,000*l.* to another younger nd 4,000*l.* was appointed to the t Lady Henniker upon the occasion marriage in 1864. The language used was that the sum of 4,000*l.*, nterest at the rate of five per cent., was to be raised for her benefit. Of course these three capital sums exhausted the whole of the capital sum which the trustees were directed to raise. The question arises now—I am speaking in round numbers—as to the sum of 6,000*l.* already raised and disposed of, Lady Henniker's 4,000*l.*, and the other 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.*, for one of the sons, which has not been raised. Therefore a sum of 8,000*l.* or 9,000*l.* remains to be raised by virtue of the term. This action was commenced for the purpose of having the trusts of the term of 1,000 years carried into effect so far as regards that object of the trust, the raising of 4,000*l.* for Lady Henniker, and to have a receiver appointed. Upon the hearing of the action it was directed that the trusts should be carried into effect, and in substance directions were given for a mortgage. In March, 1882, a receiver was appointed, and he was then directed to keep down the interest until such time as the mortgage should be raised, to keep down the interest to accrue due at the rate of four per cent. per annum, without prejudice to any question as to what rate of interest such sums respectively bear. It is stated, and it does not appear to be contradicted, that attempts have been made to raise the sum of 4,000*l.* by a proper mortgage, and for some reason or other, which does not appear very material to go into now, great difficulty has been found in the way, partly from the disturbed state of Irish property, and partly in this case probably from other charges having been created upon it by Lord Desart, charges either in respect of his life estate, or whatever else it might be. There were those difficulties, and, those difficulties existing, the trustees of Lady Henniker's marriage settlement came to the Court and ask now to have two directions—the first one to have it declared that her charge of 4,000*l.* carries five per cent. interest, and not four per cent. as provided for by the order of March, 1882, and to have also a further direction that the receiver should pay over to the trustee of the term all the rents and profits as they should be raised, including the balance in their hands, in the first place in liquidation of the arrear of interest, which amounts to a considerable sum, and in the next place towards gradually liquidating the capital. That is the application made to the Court. A proposal seems to have been made on the part of Lord Desart to the Court, agreeing that the receiver should apply the balance in his hands, so far as it extends, to the liquidation of the arrears of interest upon the 4,000*l.*, and Lord Desart undertook that he would by a certain day, which is now past, or at any rate about the present time, clear off and himself discharge the balance of such unliquidated interest, and the receiver for the future should keep down the interest upon Lady Henniker's 4,000*l.*, and upon such as remains unprovided for of Mr. Cuffe's 6,000*l.*, pari passu, at the rate of four per cent.

(9) 3rd ed. 451.

The Judge appears to have considered the proposal so made on the part of Lord Desart as a fair one, and he made an order substantially in accordance with the terms I have stated to be the offer of Lord Desart. The trustees of Lady Henniker's settlement are not satisfied with this view of the case, and they now apply to the Court to declare that they are entitled to five per cent., instead of four per cent. as provided by that order; that they are also entitled to have the rents and profits, as from the time mentioned, applied, first, in payment of arrears, and afterwards in keeping down the capital. The argument, as far as regards the rate of interest, was two-fold. In the first place, they said the late Lord Desart, when he appointed the 4,000*l.* in favour of his daughter, about then to be married to Lord Henniker, directed that the money should be raised, with interest at five per cent., upon 3,000*l.*, part of it, from a certain date, and upon 1,000*l.*, the balance of it, as from another date; and it was contended, having regard to some very early authorities, commencing in the time of Lord Hardwicke, and continuing, as was suggested, down to the present time, that any directions, given by the party who had the power of charging, as to the rate of interest, would be attended to, and that, in point of fact, he would have the right to fix the rate of interest. It was also contended, if the argument based upon the form of the appointment made by Lord Desart should fail, that, inasmuch as this was a charge affecting property in Ireland, the ordinary rate of interest to be paid upon the portion remaining unraised upon property in that country was to be five per cent., and not four per cent. as recognised by the Courts in this country. As far as regards the first argument, as to the claim to five per cent. instead of four per cent., it does not appear to me that that argument can prevail.

There is no question that the cases referred to of Boycot v. Cotton (1) and Lewis v. Freke (2), and other cases, establish this, which will be found also quoted in Lord St. Leonards' Book on Powers (10), that the donee of a power to charge has a right to fix the rate of interest. It will be found from a close examination of both cases that they were cases where there was, in fact, a donee of the power, who had the right of directing whether the charge should be raised, or to what extent it should be raised. When you come to examine the case of Lewis v. Freke (2) still more closely, I think it will be found to follow from that, and particularly from a passage in Lord Eldon's judgment, that that does not apply to a case where the trustees have trusts vested in them to raise a specific sum of money, and the only power given to anybody in connection with the money so raised is to state in what proportion the money is to be divided between the parties, and at what time it shall be payable. That is the distinction between the two classes of cases. Lord Eldon used this expression about the middle of his judgment (at page 512): "If the party entitled to charge or to give interest from the time the fund is to be productive fixes the rate, the Court cannot control it, or diminish it if he give more than four per cent., or increase it if he gives less than legal interest. Therefore the course of the Court obtains only where no rate is specified by him who has a proper right to fix the sum, and any rate of interest he thinks proper not exceeding legal interest." Here it will be found that the trust is to the trustees named in the original marriage settlement of the late Lord Desart, merely that they should raise the sum of 15,000*l.*, and it was only to be divided in such way as Lord Desart should direct.

(10) 8th ed., p. 697.

pears to me that the present case ıot come within the line of cases of Boycot v. Cotton (1) and Lewis v. (2) are examples. I think that is borne out also by various text- upon the same subject. I should ay this, that the direction of Lord t, that there should be five per cent. ıst in addition to the capital sum ı should be raised, might possibly had effect given to it if the whole nt of the capital sum authorised to ıised had not been previously ex- ed; but, inasmuch as 11,000*l.* out of 0*l.* had been exhausted, he only had r to give so much, having regard to mount of capital; otherwise, if the ı capital sum had not been exhausted, ıte of interest, or the additional rate terest, might have been by way of ion to the capital sum to be named. ass from that to a passage in Mr. n's book (11), which really sums up uthorities upon the question as to the of interest which should be allowed pect of portions when charged upon estates, as distinguished from por- charged upon English estates.

e case of Young v. Lord Waterpark ; there given as an authority that ıte of interest is four per cent. on sh property, and Purcell v. Purcell ıat such rate is five per cent. on property. Now that edition of Mr. 's book brings the cases down to a period—1879; it was actually rinted and issued till after Mr. 's death. I gather from that that w was this, that he regarded Young ıd Waterpark (4) as the case of an estate being dealt with in England, erefore giving effect to the law of um and not to the law of the y where the property was situate. gards it as English property, and for ason, as pointed out by Lord Justice y, because it would have been rather ing to say, "I direct a sum of money raised out of English and Irish pro- together, and on so much that is raised f English property to raise four per interest, and on so much that is raised f Irish property five per cent. interest."

(11) 7th ed., p. 376.

That would have led to confusion. The English Court was dealing with the property; the English property was immediately under the control of the English Court, and therefore it is properly dealt with as English property. Now with regard to the other case there was a distinct dealing, although by an English Court, with property in Ireland, and therefore in that case the rule as to five per cent. was applied. I think, as far as this Court is concerned, we are bound by those decisions to which I have referred, and therefore to that extent the appeal will succeed, and the rate of interest will be five per cent. and not four per cent. There may be some little detail as to the mode in which it should be precisely expressed, but that is the principle of our decision.

Then as regards the other portion of the appeal, namely, as to that part of the order which directs the receiver only to keep down future interest, and not otherwise directing him to apply any part of the rents and profits to capital, I confess that for a long time I was very adverse to the view put forward by Mr. Robinson; but upon a more full and complete consideration of the whole case I think the language of the words in which the trust is expressed is too strong to be got over. I had for some time thought that the receiver was appointed before the action was heard; but, as I understand, the receiver was appointed after the hearing of the cause and after it was found that there was a difficulty in giving effect to the decree as originally pronounced; but I am disposed to think that this is a case in which effect should be given in accordance with the strict language of the terms of the trust. The terms of the trust are these, that the trustees "should after the decease of Earl Desart, or in his lifetime, with his consent signified by some writing under his hand, by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the said lands and other hereditaments comprised in the said term of 1,000 years, or any of them, or any part thereof, for the whole or any part of the same term, or out of the rents and profits thereof." I should have been very glad if any arrangement could have been come to as to the application of the rents and profits towards clearing off the capital and so on, till some endeavours had been made to ascertain whether the amount could not be raised by mortgage. It is admitted on both sides that the parties are now here upon their strict rights, and as far as I am concerned it appears to me that the strict right of the appellants is to have the order made as asked. I wish also to make an observation that I felt some doubt upon this point for some time as to our being asked to act upon the assumption that a mortgage cannot be effected. I am not satisfied upon the affidavits which have been made, and the other statements made going beyond what the affidavits mention, that every effort has been made which might have been made for the purpose of raising this fund. It appears to me to be quite consistent with all that appears upon the affidavits that the attention of the parties who were asked to advance the money was never drawn to the fact that the money would be raised under the term which would take priority over a large number if not all the charges which were created by the tenant-for-life upon his life interest. At the same time it is quite possible that the parties to whom application has been made had those circumstances under their consideration at the time they declined to make any further advance. That cannot, however, affect the decision we ought to arrive at in this case. Upon both grounds, as regards the amount of interest, and the application of the rents and profits to payment off of capital, I think the appeal must succeed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The first question to my mind is to consider the settlement of 1842, and the rights of the parties under it, and everything that is based upon it. It is a settlement of Irish property upon certain trusts. It is not what is commonly called a contract, but in some sense every marriage settlement is a contract. There is no contract to pay a particular sum of money—that is to say, there is no personal obligation to pay, in pursuance of what is ordinarily called a contract. It does not appear to me that a case of this kind is at all within those general cases referred to by Mr. Justice Story. There is a direction contained in the settlement as to what is to be done with land in Ireland. The direction is, that out of certain land in Ireland, 15,000*l.* is to be raised in certain events. There is a clause in the settlement which says that, during the minority of the persons entitled to 15,000*l.*, it shall be lawful for the trustees to apply the rents and profits, not exceeding interest at the rate of four per cent., towards their maintenance and education. I thought at first that shewed that four per cent. only was to be the rate of interest borne by the 15,000*l.*; but upon reflection I do not think that that is so. It is not exceeding that. One can see that the trustees are not to apply more than a certain sum, that there is a limit put to the maximum which they are to expend. It does not really throw any light upon the question we have to consider, namely, what rate of interest, if any, is to be borne by the 15,000*l.* after it becomes payable to the children under any appointment. The settlement says nothing at all about it; it is merely 15,000*l.*, and nothing is said about interest.

The first question we have to consider is whether any interest is payable upon the 15,000*l.*, and, if any interest is payable, at what rate it is payable. Can the rights of the parties in any sense or reason depend upon whether the estate in relation to the execution of these trusts is situated in Dublin or London? That cannot be. Their rights must depend upon the law as applied to land in Ireland, and the trusts to be worked out by the sale or mortgage of those lands. When we find, as I think we do, that under a settlement such as this, the rule is—I do not say the rule of the Courts in Ireland, I do not understand them—that charges of this kind are in Ireland deemed to bear interest at five per cent., it appears to me that whether the parties execute those trusts in London or Dublin, their rights must be to have that rate of interest raised by these trustees unless there is anything to the contrary. It is said that Young v. Lord Waterpark (4) is a decision to the contrary. That case is reported so shortly that I confess I am not sure that I thoroughly understand it; but as I understand it, it was this—there was a sum of 10,000*l.* to be raised under a single term of 500 years out of nds in Ireland and England—one raise one sum under one term—and not appear that any part of that . was charged upon any part of the states in particular, or upon any the English estates in particular. ems to me to make a considerable ce between that case and this. er the Vice-Chancellor went upon rinciple or not I do not know. I t sure that he did not go on the ng principle—the settlement said g about interest, and therefore he red what he would give in the case ages. However, I must confess do not quite understand that case. ars to me, for reasons I have pointed be so substantially different to this at I do not feel myself compelled pt the same view. The principle applicable to this case is that to I referred; and, if that is so, it be- immaterial to consider what the of the appointment with regard to 000*l.* was. If the 15,000*l.* bears t at five per cent., according to les which are sound and correct not excessive. If I am wrong, if ,000*l.* only bears interest at four nt., then it appears to me that the Vesey is no authority upon the It is a power to charge; and it o me to be settled by that case and that if there is a power to charge s a power to charge interest. This rust to raise a particular sum of , and the distinction between that d this is obvious when it is closely ed.

s now to the second point, namely, re the rights of the trustees in this f 1,000 years under the circum- which now exist? The case was rn as a short cause, asking that the might be carried into execution. hey obtain the appointment of a r, with an important clause direct- at this sum of money should be by mortgage. That has not been nd we are told it cannot be done. idence as to that is not so satisfac- it ought to be. It does not seem eriously controverted except in the f a suggestion that they have not in the right way. I should like to have had that put a little more plainly. We are now asked to make an order that the receiver shall pay off the second charge out of the rents and profits. Are they entitled to that or not? That depends upon the terms of the settlement—and the terms of the settlement are in their favour upon that point. I do not see any answer to it except this, that they have not perhaps exhausted every means of obtaining the money. That is the only possible answer. I should have liked it to have been more clearly made. And then it is subject to this remark, that it is plain they are asking for that which they are entitled to; and if the defence to this application is that they can raise the money by other means, we should have had evidence of it in a little more satisfactory state than we have now. I infer from the evidence, loose as it is, that they cannot do it; and, that being so, I think they are right, and that the order of Mr. Justice Pearson must be discharged and an order made in the terms of the notice of motion. It is made without prejudice to any application by the mortgagees. I do not suppose that any question of priority arises.

Solicitors—Maples, Teesdale & Co., for the appellants the trustees; Freshfields & Williams, for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Jan. 19, 20.

In re SPEIGHT; SPEIGHT v. GAUNT.

Trustee—Employment of Broker—Negligence—Loss of Trust Fund—Liability of Trustee.

A trustee is bound to conduct the business of the trust in the same manner in which an ordinary prudent man of business would conduct his own, and beyond that there is no liability or obligation on the trustee.

Therefore a trustee is authorised to employ agents to do that which in the ordinary course of business other people would employ agents to do; and if at the time of their employment such agents are in good repute, and the trustee has no reason to doubt their fitness, he is not to be held responsible for the dishonesty or insolvency of the agents.

In re Speight, App.

The Court should not be astute in finding reasons for fixing a trustee with liability; the law is not to be strained against him to make him liable for what he has done in the exercise of his duty, unless a plain case is made against him.

A trustee directed a broker to invest 15,000*l. in the securities of three corporations. On the 24th of February the broker handed the trustee what purported to be a bought-note for* 5,000*l. debenture stock of three corporations (two of which were issuing debentures only). The note named no date for settlement, and contained no charge for commission. But the trustee had made an agreement with the broker that he was to have a net price—the broker having to obtain his commission from the other side. The broker told the trustee he wanted the money for the next day, and the trustee drew three cheques for* 5,000*l. each to the broker's order. The broker misapplied the proceeds of the cheques, and filed a liquidation petition on the 28th of March, and absconded. Between the 25th of February and the 28th of March the trustee made enquiries for the securities, but was told by the broker that they were not ready. Evidence was adduced to shew that experts would have gathered from the bought-note that the bonds were to be purchased from the corporations direct; but the Court held that there was nothing in the form of the note to give such information to an ordinary man of business:—*

Held (reversing the decision of BACON, V.C.), that the trustee was not liable to make good the loss to the trust fund; that, assuming the broker to be in good repute at the time of his employment, there was no impropriety on the part of the trustee in paying to the broker the purchase-money for the investments.

Bostock v. Floyer (35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 23; Law Rep. 1 Eq. 26) explained; Hopgood v. Parkin (Law Rep. 11 Eq. 74) questioned.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, V.C., holding the defendant, who was an executor and trustee of the will of John Speight, liable to replace a sum of 15,275*l.*, part of the trust estate, which had been lost by reason of the default of one R. E. Cooke, a stock-broker, doing business at Bradford.

The facts were briefly as follows: There being a sum of 15,000*l.* trust money on deposit at the bankers, the defendant proposed to invest it in securities of the corporations of Leeds, Huddersfield, and Halifax—securities authorised by the will—and employed Cooke to obtain 5,000*l.* of the securities of each corporation. The Leeds Corporation issued debentures and debenture stock; the two latter borrowed on debentures only.

There was no absolute necessity to employ a broker in the purchase of the securities.

On the 24th of February, 1881, Cooke called on the defendant and handed him a paper, which purported to be a bought-note, and was as follows: "John Cooke & Son, Exchange, Bradford, February 24, 1881. To the executors of the late John Speight. We have this day bought for you, as per your order, subject to the rules of the London Stock Exchange, 5,000*l.* Leeds Corporation debenture stock at 105¼ commission net 5,275*l.*; 5,000*l.* Huddersfield Corporation ditto ditto at 100 commission net 5,000*l.*; 5,000*l.* Halifax Corporation ditto ditto at 100 commission net 5,000*l.*: total, 15,275*l.* account. Signed, John Cooke & Son."

Cooke, on delivering the note, said that the payment was to be made the next day, and the defendant signed three cheques for the total amount to Cooke's order, which appropriated them to his own use, and on the 28th of March filed a liquidation petition, and absconded.

The facts of the case are more fully reported 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 715, where the arguments are set out at length.

The defendant appealed.

Hemming, Q.C., Davey, Q.C., and J. G. Wood, for the defendant.

Millar, Q.C., and Stirling, for the plaintiffs.

The arguments used in the Court below were repeated.

Speight, App.

following cases were cited for the nt—Ex parte Belchier (1), Bacon v. (2), Clough v. Bond (3) and Castle land (4).

following cases were cited for the lents—Mendes v. Guedalla (5), v. Floyer (6) and Hopgood v. (7).

L, M.R.—This is an appeal from cision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, the defendant, Mr. Gaunt, who trustee, liable to make good some ., which has been lost through the of the stockbroker employed by him e investments on account of the questions which we have to decide ortant, not only on account of the in dispute, but also on account of nciples which ought to govern the n deciding points of this nature.

e first place I think we ought to r what is the liability of a trustee dertakes an office which requires make an investment on behalf of ui que trust. It seems to me that, eral principles, a trustee ought to the business of the trust in the anner in which an ordinary prudent business would conduct his own, t beyond that there is no liability gation on the trustee. In other trustee is not bound, because he is e, to conduct business in other than dinary and usual way in which business is conducted by mankind actions of their own. It never be reasonable to make a trustee urther and better precautions than linary prudent man of business adopt, or conduct business in any ay. If it were otherwise, no ld be a trustee at all. He is not it. He says, "I take all reason- cautions, and all the precautions which are deemed reasonable by prudent men of business, and beyond that I am not required to go." What are the usual precautions taken by men of business when they make an investment? If the investment is one made on the Stock Exchange through a stockbroker, the ordinary course of business is for the investor to select a stockbroker in good credit and in a good position, having regard to the sum to be invested, and to direct him to make the investment—that is, to purchase on the Stock Exchange of a jobber or another broker the investment required. In the ordinary course, all that the broker can do is to enter into a contract, usually it is for the next account day. Of course you may by special bargain make it for cash, or for any other day, but in the ordinary course it is for the next account day. Before the account day arrives the purchasing stockbroker requests his principal to pay him the money, because on the account day he is himself liable to pay over the money to the vendor, whether a jobber or broker, and therefore he must have it ready for the account day; and, according to the usual course of business, he sends a copy of the purchasing note to the principal, stating when the money is required to be paid; and he obtains the money from him a day or two before the account day. When he gets it he pays it over, if it is a single transaction, to the vendor; and if it is one of a number of transactions, he makes out an account with his vendor, and pays over to or receives from him the balance on the transactions. It by no means follows, therefore, that he pays over to his vendor the sum received—indeed, there may be a number of transactions, and if the balance is the other way then he has to receive money on the account; but he must in any case have the money in order to keep himself out of cash advances.

It is after payment, and very often several days after payment, that he gets the securities perfected. If they are shares or stock in a railway or other company, it may be a considerable time before the transfers are lodged at the office; and it is not until the matter is ready for completion that he gets the transfer and the certificates. But in all cases, except in the ab. 218.

Ves. 331.
Myl. & Cr. 490; 8 Law J. Rep. Chanc.

Beav. 660.
Jo. & H. 259; 31 Law J. Rep. Chanc.

Law J. Rep. Chanc. 23; Law Rep. 1 Eq.

aw Rep. 11 Eq. 74.

In re Speight, App.

case of consols, and a few other such stocks, there is some interval between the payment of the purchase-money and the obtaining of the security or of the investment purchased.

If, therefore, a trustee has made a proper selection of a broker, and has paid him the money on the bought-note, and, by reason of the default of the broker, the money is lost, it does not appear to me in that case that the trustee can be liable. Indeed, it was not argued in this Court that he would be liable, and I have said what I have upon the subject more on account of an observation reported to have been made by Vice-Chancellor Bacon than because of any argument that was addressed to us upon that point.

Having said what I have on the general principle, I think it right to call attention to the authorities upon the subject, in order to shew that I have given the fair result of the authorities as they stand. There is first the case of Ex parte Belchier (1), before Lord Hardwicke, which is the leading case on the subject. There it was the assignee of a bankrupt; but the same principle applies to the assignee of a bankrupt as to a trustee. A large quantity of tobacco belonged to a bankrupt, and the assignee employed a broker to sell it; the money was paid to the broker, who, ten days afterwards, died insolvent. The commissioners fixed the assignee with the loss, who appealed to Lord Hardwicke. It was proved that it was the common practice to sell mercantile goods by auction, and to employ a broker, and for him to receive the money. That was the ordinary course of business. It would be the same thing if a trustee sold goods by auction—the auctioneer would receive the money; and, as regards certain transactions, an auctioneer is called a broker. Lord Hardwicke says: "If Mrs. Parsons is chargeable in this case, no man in his senses would act as assignee under a commission of bankrupt. This Court has laid down a rule with regard to the transactions of assignees, and more so of trustees, so as not to strike a terror into mankind acting for the benefit of others and not for their own." He says, "not to strike a terror into mankind"—the phrase is rather rhetorical; but he means not to discourage respectable people from accepting the office of trustee. Then he says, "Courts of law and equity too are more strict as to executors and administrators." I must say I do not concur with this observation. I think that in modern times the Courts have not distinguished between assignees, executors and trustees, but they have put them all together, and considered that they are all liable under the same principles—but that is only a bye point. Then Lord Hardwicke goes on to say, "But where trustees act by other hands, either from necessity or conformable to the common usage of mankind, they are not answerable for losses." That, of course, means where they act by other hands, and properly choose the hands by which they act. What is meant by "either by necessity or conformable to the common usage of mankind"? It means where in the ordinary course of business transactions an agent is employed. A gentleman, for instance, who has rents to collect, as a rule, employs a rent collector. He might go round himself and collect them, but he does not do so. It is the common usage of mankind in such a case to employ an agent to do it. So a man who buys stock on the Stock Exchange employs a stockbroker; and there it is absolutely necessary for him to do so—he cannot buy himself; but even if he could, it is usual to employ a stockbroker. Then Lord Hardwicke goes on: "Secondly, moral necessity, from the usage of mankind. If a trustee acts as prudently for the trust as for herself, and according to the usage of business. If a trustee appoints rents to be paid to a banker at that time in credit, and the banker afterwards breaks, the trustee is not answerable. So in the employment of stewards and agents—the receiver of Lord Plymouth's estate took bills in the country of persons who at the time were reputed to be of credit and substance in order to return the rents to London. The bills were protested and the money lost, and yet the steward was excused. None of these cases are on account of necessity, but because the persons acted in the usual method of business." Then he answers a little further down the objection that Mrs. Parsons herself might have received the money. The answer is that it is not usual to receive the money

e Speight, App.

: Then he says, "A question fre- y happens by reason of bankruptcy goods which are shipped but not ed, to whom they belong. In those his Court generally orders the goods sold, and the money paid into the for the benefit of the parties who e entitled in the event. But yet the is the hand to receive the money Then there was an objection that ight have taken security; but to do a every occasion would tend greatly hindrance of business." That seems to go the whole length we are d to go here, and to establish the l principle.

case which I shall next refer to is se of Bacon v. Bacon (2), and is a a of Lord Loughborough. There cutor was sought to be charged for money to his co-executor to pay The fact of the man being co- r was not considered to be material. estion was, whether it was a reasoning to leave the money in the hands o-executor to pay the debts. Lord orough said this (8), "Supposing had not been co-executor, but that ecutor, living in London, and re- money of the testator's, had re- it to the attorney of the testator to debts, could he have been liable?" , he had to send it down from Lon- pay the debts in the country, and st send it to somebody. "Kirby no insolvent circumstances. He man of business at Ipswich; had ne attorney of the testator (I take higher than that); was acquainted l his affairs; had his accounts in his and the first payment was three after his death. In the ordinary ment of executor, how was he to funeral expenses and the number l debts appearing upon the books estator without sending the money? yment is made by the defendant cause he happened to have money testator in his hands at the time. business was transacted in the y manner, unless there was some tance to awaken suspicion, surely. owance is fair.

"Suppose he had paid the money into the hands of his own clerk, and the clerk had run away. Kirby could not prove the will. Supposing he had, what would have been the difference? The mention of him in the will adds to the confidence the testator may be supposed to have in him as an attorney of credit in the town. By proving he would not have been more worthy of trust than by the nomination the testator had made of him as executor. It would have been only a difference of character, but would not invest him with more authority."

In other words, Lord Loughborough's view was this—that where you must necessarily employ an agent, or where you might reasonably in the ordinary course of business employ an agent, and you use due diligence in the selection of your agent, you are not liable for the consequences. You have only conducted the business in the way an ordinary prudent man of business would have done.

The next decision I shall refer to is the decision of a late Lord Chancellor, Lord Redesdale, in the case of Joy v. Campbell (9). He first of all says that if the executors join in a receipt without necessity they are both liable; and then he says, "But this does not apply to what is done in the discharge of a necessary duty of the executor; for example, an executor living in London is to pay debts in Suffolk, and remits money to his co-executor to pay these debts—he is considered to do this of necessity. He could not transact business without trusting some persons, and it would be impossible for him to discharge his duty if he is made responsible where he remitted to a person to whom he would have given credit, and would in his own business have remitted money in the same way. It would be the same were one executor in India and another in England, the assets being in India, but to be applied in England; there the co-executor is appointed for the purpose of carrying on such transaction; and the executor is not responsible, for he must remit to somebody, and he cannot be wrong if he remits to the person in whom the testator himself reposed confidence." That is a mere question of selecting an agent. Of course, although the testator reposed confidence in him, something else might happen afterwards—the man might become insolvent or the like; it does not mean that, but it is an additional reason that a man who was in good credit at the time was actually named as executor by the testator.

(8) 5 Ves. at p. 334.

(9) 1 Sch. & Lef. 328, 341.

In re Speight, App.

There is only one other case to which I will refer—that of Clough v. Bond (3). There Lord Cottenham, after speaking of the loss, and remarking that a trustee is not liable for loss occasioned by an authorised investment, goes on to say (10): "So when the loss arises from the dishonesty or failure of any one to whom the possession of part of the estate has been entrusted. Necessity, which includes the regular course of business in administering the property, will in equity exonerate the personal representative. But if without such necessity he be instrumental in giving to the person failing, possession of any part of the property, he will be liable, although the person possessing it be a co-executor or a co-administrator." The value of that statement of the law is that he says, "Necessity which includes the regular course of business in administering the property," interpreting the word as being nothing more and nothing less than the regular course of business. It appears to me, therefore, that it is clear and settled law; and Mr. Millar was quite right in not contesting it, notwithstanding the remarks which had fallen, I think per incuriam, from the learned Judge in the Court below as to this part of the case, that if it was an ordinary purchase on the Stock Exchange a trustee could not be liable for the failure of the broker, provided that the broker was in good credit at the time, and there was no circumstance to excite suspicion brought to his knowledge which ought to induce him to distrust the broker.

I now come to the point upon which the case was decided, and on which it was argued before us. I must say as I read the pleadings that the law is stated in conformity with that which I have been laying down. The accusation against the trustee is one of negligence. It is called "gross negligence." That does not matter. Negligence is the charge made against the trustee, and the question is whether he has been guilty of negligence. Now where you have, as in this case, an innocent man—that is, innocent at any rate as to any moral guilt—who was sincerely anxious to do his best for the trust fund, and as to whom, as was stated by the Vice-Chancellor, there was really nothing that he could be reproached with, unless it was carelessness, I think the Court is bound to look carefully at the pleadings to see what he is charged with, and not to allow the charge to be extended beyond the pleadings. I shall not decide the case upon that ground, because, as will be seen presently, even if I had thought the plaintiffs were at liberty to go beyond the pleadings, I should come to the same conclusion as I have upon the pleadings.

Now the Vice-Chancellor said this about Mr. Gaunt, in which I think he was fully justified, and I merely quote it to shew that my view of these cases against trustees is rather corroborated by the observation which I am about to read. My view has always been this, that where you have an honest trustee, fairly anxious to perform his duty, and to do as he thinks best for the estate, you are not to strain the law against him to make him liable for doing that which he has done, and which he believes is right, in the execution of his duty, unless you have a plain case made against him. In other words, you are not to exercise your ingenuity, which it appears to me the Vice-Chancellor has done, for the purpose of finding reasons for fixing a trustee with liability, but you are rather to avoid all such hypercriticism of documents and acts, and to give the trustee the benefit of any doubt or ambiguity which may appear in any document, so as to relieve him from the liability with which it is sought to fix him.

I think it is the duty of the Court in these cases, where there is a question of nicety as to construction or otherwise, to lean to the side of the honest trustee, and not to be anxious to find fine and extraordinary reasons for fixing him with any liability upon the contract. You are to endeavour as far as possible, having regard to the whole transaction, to avoid making an honest man, who is not paid for the performance of an unthankful office, liable for the failure of other people, from whom he receives no benefit. I think that is the view taken by modern Judges, and some of the older cases in which a different view has been taken would now be repudiated with indignation.

(10) 3 Myl. & Cr. at p. 497.

In re Speight, App.

It appears to me that the Vice-Chancellor has adopted an entirely different view. I think he has inferred that which is not to be fairly inferred in this case; and even if he were right it could only be inferred by taking one of two views, and we ought not to take the adverse view if the other view, being equally as good, can be adopted.

Now the way it is put by the statement of claim is this. It appears that there was a broker of the name of Cooke, who was a young man who had come into his father's business, who had also been a stock and share broker at Bradford in a considerable way of business. Young Cooke had not been very long in business, but for upwards of three years he was a man of good credit and large business at Bradford. There is another circumstance about his position which I must mention, although I do not think it would exonerate the trustee. The family for whom Mr. Gaunt was trustee were some people of the name of Speight, and the Speights were friends of Cooke, and one of the Speights, the son, naturally asked Mr. Gaunt to employ Cooke. It does not matter much, because if Mr. Cooke was not in good credit Mr. Gaunt ought not to have complied with the request, and therefore it does not really, from a moral point of view, affect the transaction—Mr. Gaunt would be liable if he had employed an improper broker, although he had done so by the wish of the Speight family. However, it is a remarkable circumstance that Mr. Gaunt did not employ his own ordinary broker, but did, at the request of the Speight family, employ this gentleman, who was, as I said before, as far as was known, a fit person for Mr. Gaunt to employ; he was employed to sell the property, the proceeds of which were to be afterwards re-invested—and he did sell, as I can gather, some 13,000*l.*, and paid the money into the bankers. So far it was all right. Then they had a sum of upwards of 15,000*l.* to invest, and the question was how it was to be invested.

The matter was considered by Mr. Gaunt, and he thought the best way of investing it was to invest it, in three sums of 5,000*l.* each, in the purchase of corporation bonds, as we generally call them—debentures or debenture stock as they are called in the documents. It seems that they had 6,000*l.* invested in Bradford debenture bonds or debentures, and therefore he would not have any more of Bradford securities, and he suggested that it would be well to divide them into three, and to make the remaining investments in Huddersfield, Leeds and Halifax, being large towns, and in good credit, and there was no objection whatever to the securities selected. Whether they were debentures or debenture stock is not material—they were very good securities; and, indeed, Mr. Gaunt says he does not know whether they were debentures or debenture stock, but they were bonds of these corporations. Then how was he to get them? We read from the statement of claim that there are two ways of getting them—one way is by going to the corporation and asking them to take a loan, and to issue debentures or debenture stock, if they have power to issue debenture stock; and on this occasion it appears to be the practice (I am taking it from the statement of claim) that if a person employed a solicitor or broker, the solicitor's commission or the broker's commission is paid by the corporation. They find it to their advantage to do so, and they do it. But of course it may happen that you can buy these securities on the Stock Exchange—for the lenders may die, or the lenders may want the money before the debentures are repayable, or if it is debenture stock it would not be repayable at all, and upon those occasions they would sell their securities on the Stock Exchange. It appears from the statement of claim that occasionally these securities do come on the Stock Exchange, and are bought there. That is stated at page 5 of the statement of claim, where it is said, "debentures are occasionally, and debenture stocks are frequently, the subject of purchase and sale, and in such cases a broker is usually employed." Of course it may happen, and it did happen, as we find by the evidence, that in the case of a large town like Leeds, the quantity of debentures or debenture stock being very great, there is a regular market for them, and you can always buy them; but in the case of Huddersfield and Halifax, being smaller towns, that is not so, and there appears to be no regular market for them. If you want them at all, as a general rule you must go to the corporation to get them, although there may be some for sale privately. That being the position of things, Mr. Gaunt instructs Cooke to procure these three sums of 5,000*l.* each; he did not tell him how to get them, he told him to procure them. Mr. Cooke, on the 24th of February, brought a document, which has been the subject of a great deal of comment, to Mr. Gaunt, and that is the only allegation in the statement of claim. There is no allegation in the statement of claim, although it has been argued, that Mr. Gaunt ought not to have employed a broker. I dismiss that argument at once. It is quite plain that he was entitled to employ a broker in the ordinary course of business, whether the purchase was on the Stock Exchange, or whether the securities were to be obtained from the corporation. The advertisements not only authorised the employment of a broker, but offered to pay the brokerage, and there was no occasion for a gentleman who was a trustee to do that himself which might properly in the ordinary course of business be done by another, and especially where the costs of employing that other would not fall on the trust estate. I think therefore that he was entitled to employ a broker, even if he could have obtained the securities from the corporations direct. But there is no allegation in the statement of claim that he ought not to have employed a broker; it only states the fact of this bought-note, it being received by him on the 24th of February, 1881. Now it was alleged in the argument both here and below, and the allegation was adopted by the Vice-Chancellor in his judgment, that the receipt of this bought-note informed Mr. Gaunt that the stocks in question were to be obtained direct from the corporations. There was some evidence before the Vice-Chancellor to lead to that conclusion: there was the evidence of experts, who gave it as their opinion that there was an omission in the bought-note which ought to have aroused suspicion. Now I must say that there is no allegation in the statement of claim that Mr. Gaunt knew that these securities were to be obtained direct from the corporations, the only allegation being that he had received the bought-note, and the true interpretation of that bought-note was not such as to give him information as to buying the stocks of the corporations. In my opinion it was not regular or proper to go into evidence to shew that he knew it, there being no allegation of knowledge except that to be derived from the interpretation of the bought-note; but Mr. Gaunt says he did not know it; and, in my opinion, on the balance of testimony, it is not proved that he did know it. Therefore, if there had been that allegation, I should have held it not proved.

I now come to the bought-note itself, and I will make one observation, although it is not strictly in the statement of claim. It appears in evidence that Mr. Gaunt had made an agreement that he was to have a net price—that he was not to pay any commission to the broker, but the broker was to get it from the other side; he was to have a net price, and it appears in the evidence that that is a very common course in country cases, because people in the country do not like an indefinite charge, even of a small amount. They bargain for a net price; and that explains what appears in the bought-note.

The next thing I have to consider is the meaning of the bought-note. I do not rely on the expression "bought-note" as used in the statement of claim. You do not call a thing a bought-note which is an expression of a contract or loan made by a corporation. But, apart from that, let me see what it is. [His Lordship read the bought-note as stated above, and continued:] I must say, it being for the Court to construe that instrument, to my mind it would convey but one impression—namely, that the broker had bought these things for the purchaser on the ight, App.

Exchange, subject to the rules ndon Stock Exchange. With t possible respect to the Vice- , it appears to me that that can meaning. "We have this day you as per your order, subject les of the London Stock Ex- I have looked with some t the evidence to see how it le to arrive at any other con- to the meaning of the document. come to look at the evidence it there are experts who say it mean what it says, "bought," nean "agreed to lend to these s;" that, first of all, there is no y named. That is true; although t for the account, it does not lay, and no doubt as a general ate is named. But we must : is not a document issued by ns, it is a document issued by ; and it appears in the evidence unt that he was told that the which was the material point, next day; so that the only was that the broker who m the note did not fill up the ebruary in the note itself, but 1 he wanted the money on the I cannot conceive that that difference as to the construction ment. The omission to put in t day no doubt was an omission ld apparently have been noticed ersons; but if the man who says, "I want the money to- for that is what the evidence it is really nothing more than ne did not put it into the note use he gave the information per-ere is another witness who says, commission, and if a broker had the Stock Exchange he would ed his commission." The answer ould if it had not been to buy e on the face of it it is net. He ecial bargain that he is to make s at the time, and therefore he his commission to the stock at e in order to make the amount gets rid of any notion that the tells you he had not bought it. ne said for a moment that you can control the plain language of the document by any such outside things as those. The experts say that the word "bought" has a technical meaning, and does not mean "bought," and this is a case in which they, from their expert knowledge, would come to a conclusion that there was a mistake in the language of the note, that the word "bought" should not have been "bought," but should have been some other word. It does appear to me that there is no evidence which is admissible to contradict the plain construction of the document itself, and the meaning of the document is a statement by the broker to the principal that he had bought these debenture stocks. Now, if that were so, what is a trustee to do? It is suggested that he might have enquired whether the broker had actually bought them. Of whom was he to enquire? Is it tolerable that a man should so far be bound to suspect his own broker as that he should be compelled to go on the Stock Exchange to find out from whom his broker had purchased, and then to enquire of him. Would it not be that the trustee would be informed by his broker, "You treat me like a thief; I will have nothing more to do with you"? It is quite plain that no man in the ordinary course of business ever does anything of the kind. He may or he may not know the name of the stock-broker from whom the security has been purchased. He must trust his broker for bringing him a genuine contract. It is not for him to go on the Stock Exchange and enquire whether his own broker has sent him a fictitious note or not. It is quite out of the question that he is to be liable for not enquiring whether there was or was not a genuine contract. He must rely in the ordinary course of business on the statement of his broker, and pay the money to him on that statement. Well, that being so, I cannot see any ground whatever for saying that Mr. Gaunt was guilty of negligence.

Then there is this allegation in the statement of claim, that no bonds or debentures were given by Mr. Cooke. Of course there were not. Then it goes on to say that no such securities as debenture stocks of Huddersfield and Halifax exist. Does that matter? I think not. It is quite true the representation was that there were such, and I think that that is the fair reading of it. But, supposing it were so, Mr. Gaunt did not know it—perhaps he did not know the difference between debentures and debenture stock—he instructed Mr. Cooke to procure, not debentures or debenture stock, but corporation securities, and he left to Mr. Cooke of course to ascertain what they were; but if Mr. Cooke represented to him that he bought debenture stock, how was he to find out that these particular corporations had no power to issue it, or that one of the corporations had power and the other had no power? How is a man to find out whether a railway company or a corporation or any other company has debenture stock except by instructing his broker or some other agent to enquire? I repeat, therefore, that when Mr. Cooke told him that he had bought debenture stock, he would make no further enquiry as to whether such things existed or not; he would assume in the ordinary course of business that the securities did exist; and if he were entitled to trust his broker, in the ordinary course of business he was entitled to trust him to the extent of that representation. It appears to me, therefore, that the fact of the non-existence of some of the securities has no bearing upon the question.

Then, that being so, we come to consider the further allegation in the statement of claim. "Even if the pretended purchase by the said R. E. Cooke had been real and bona fide, there would not have been any necessity for the defendant Gaunt to part with the purchase-money of the debenture stocks or any part of it on the 24th of February, 1881, or in fact at any time, without receiving in exchange proper transfers of the stocks purchased, or certificates of the ownership thereof. On a purchase of stock, and particularly on a purchase of the magnitude and character represented to have been made by the said bought-note, it is unusual and unnecessary to pay for the stock on the day of the date of such bought-note, or until the purchase is ready for completion." It was said that it was the duty of Mr. Gaunt to pay the money direct to the bankers of the corporation, or, at all events, to make the cheque payable to the order of the corporation. If it is to be assumed against him that he knew the stocks were to be acquired from the corporation direct, I do not say whether or not he ought to have paid the broker. I reserve my opinion upon that question. If it were not so, if he had neither notice nor knowledge that the stocks were to be procured otherwise than on the Stock Exchange, then I think the argument that he might have paid it through the bankers falls to the ground. In the first place, as I said before, the usual custom is to pay your broker, and, in the next place, it by no means follows that the money would ever have reached the vendor; and, indeed, in the case where the purchase is in London, I suppose it would go to a London broker; so that I cannot see, either according to the ordinary course of business, or according to any possible mode of conducting business, how you could pay otherwise. It seems to me, therefore, that if you once arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Gaunt was uninformed by the bought-note that the purchase had been made in that way, there was no obligation on him to make any further enquiry. He trusted his broker; and he was not bound to ask the broker whether he had written a falsehood, whether he had really entered into a contract or not. The man told him in writing that he had, and he was entitled to trust him; and, as it seems to me, there was no obligation on him to make any further enquiry.

For these reasons, it appears to me that the decision of the Court below ought not to be affirmed.

I will only now quote two paragraphs from the judgment, because I think it right to say that I think that the error which I conceive the Vice-Chancellor to have fallen into very plainly appears from those passages. He says, "A trustee who takes another man's money into his hands is bound, whatever other duties he may have to discharge, to take care that that money shall be preserved, and not to deal with it or to do anything with it which a prudent and reasonable man would not do with his own money." That is a very clear statement of the law, and I have no fault to find with it. "That is the rule which is properly to be applied to this and to all such like cases. Now when I come to apply that rule to this case, can ody else say that a trustee with of other people's money in his uld have parted with it to Cooke ; scrap of paper?" Whether it is unds or 15,000 pence it makes no if the man is in a position to be ith the money. The Vice-Chan- s, "Certainly not. The paper, face of it, as a witness has said . Gaunt, meant, 'Your money is he corporations.'" If that were y different considerations would the mode of paying the money. ie key of the judgment, that Mr. as told by that paper that the is to go to the corporations. I dy given my reasons for stating y mind, it is plain the paper told ng of the kind. It told him, on ry, that the stock was bought on ford Exchange. Then the Vice- r says, "No suggestion has been pt this, that certain stockbrokers called—two gentlemen of great one in London and one in the who both say, 'It is our custom buy for clients to take a cheque hat we may pay the vendor of That may be the custom with r character and credit, and that e set custom for anything I it is not a lawful custom as the state of facts I have just ing." I have said all I have that. I do not think that true version of it. I cannot hy it should not be a lawful ve the money to your broker stock which you cannot get oney. I cannot help think- was some little misappre- nind of the Vice-Chancellor, f the counsel who supported as to the expression used. unlawful or unreasonable not get the stock on the without dealing with a he Vice-Chancellor says, it as a rule of law estab- that, if a man employs a from him a sale-note, he rty to pay to that broker ng bought." It appears w is exactly the other the ordinary course of nc.

Weight, App.

business, it is lawful for a trustee to pursue that course which he would pursue in investing his own money.

There is only one other remark I have to make upon the case, and that is this. There is an allegation in the statement of claim, and there was some slight argument addressed upon it—that the broker having failed on the 28th of March, Mr. Gaunt should have done something in the interval to get the money back. There is really no evidence that if, after the money was paid, Mr. Gaunt had asked for security he would have got it; and, indeed, I am quite satisfied that he could not have got the money if he had brought an action or taken any proceedings at all. The only suggestion is, that some other creditor, who pressed Mr. Cooke, got a sum of 3,000*l.* out of him. Mr. Gaunt had no reason to suspect Cooke's honesty, and if he had asked him for security, or brought an action, as I have said before, there is no evidence that he would have got the money; but there is the most cogent evidence to my mind that he could not have got it, because the money was paid away immediately most improperly by Cooke in the satisfaction of his own debts. He was in that state of hopeless insolvency that no action or proceeding in bankruptcy could have resulted in any benefit; and I do not see that there is any case made against Mr. Gaunt for negligence, or that he had sufficient knowledge of Mr. Cooke's improper dealing to have induced him to take such proceedings even if they would have resulted, which I am of opinion they would not, in getting the money back.

Therefore the appeal will be allowed. Mr. Gaunt will have his costs both here and below.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This case appears to me to be one of very great importance, not only to Mr. Gaunt and the cestuis que trust, but also to trustees in general who have to invest money or who do invest money through brokers.

The first observation to be made is, that this is a case in which the trustee is not even accused of having acted in any way with a view to his own benefit, or otherwise than with perfect bona fides and honesty—a remark which, of course, is important, because one approaches such a case in a different state of mind from that with which one would approach a case if one were dealing with a dishonest trustee.

In re Speight, App.

The next remark is, that the trust for investment was so worded that nobody pretends that the investment of the trust property in debentures or in debenture stock of these corporations was not within the investment clause. It is not suggested that it would be a breach of trust on the part of the trustee in this case to invest the trust money in that kind of securities in which he directed the broker to invest it.

Now what the trustee in this case did was this. Some of the trust moneys, to the extent of 13,000*l.*, had been paid over, and in that transaction Mr. Cooke, I understand, had been employed. He was the family broker. He was not the broker Mr. Gaunt generally employed in his own business, but he was a person recommended by the family. I do not attach much importance to that; but it is a circumstance which should, I think, be mentioned. Mr. Cooke was at the time a broker in good repute. He was a person to whom an ordinary prudent man desiring to employ a broker in Bradford would have recourse. Then Mr. Gaunt, being desirous of investing 15,000*l.* in debentures or securities of these corporations, instructs Mr. Cooke to make the investment.

The first point that occurs to my mind is this. Was it proper for the trustee to employ Mr. Cooke in the transaction at all, because if it was not, I take it that the trustee must be responsible for the consequences. A trustee has no business to cast upon brokers or solicitors, or anybody else, the duty of performing those trusts and exercising that judgment and discretion which he is bound to perform and exercise himself. On the other hand, a trustee is not bound to do everything himself. A trustee is entitled to employ brokers and solicitors to do that which, in the ordinary course of business, other people would employ brokers and solicitors to do.

The real importance of this case is, that it lies between these two propositions—that a trustee cannot delegate his trust, and that, on the other hand, he is entitled to employ persons to do that which an ordinary man of business would employ an agent to do. Now, looking at the matter fairly and properly, as a business man would look at it, can it be said to be an improper thing on the part of a trustee, who is desirous of investing 15,000*l.* in this class of securities, to go to a broker? That he might have acted otherwise is plain enough, but was it a reasonable and proper thing not to apply to the secretaries or treasurers of these corporations, but to employ a broker for that purchase? So far as the evidence goes, it appears to me that on the balance of the evidence it is impossible to say that this was an improper step for a trustee to take. Although business men can do these things for themselves, unless we can go the length of saying that the employment of Mr. Cooke was an improper delegation of the trusts or an improper employment, it will follow that it was not an unreasonable thing or a breach of trust to employ a broker to do this kind of work; and the conclusion that I have arrived at on that point is, that we cannot say the trustee, acting honestly, was not entitled to employ a broker to do this kind of business.

Then the next thing is, what did Mr. Gaunt employ Mr. Cooke to do? He employed him to invest this money in these securities. He did not tell him or suggest to him how it had better be done, he did not know; and I do not think he was bound to ascertain whether these securities were in the market in the ordinary commercial sense, or where Mr. Cooke was to get them from. He left that to Mr. Cooke's discretion, and I think he was not guilty of negligence in so doing. Mr. Cooke told him he would get them for him. There had been apparently some discussion as to the class of bonds, Mr. Gaunt preferring to have Halifax bonds; and although Mr. Cooke said there would be some difficulty about Halifax bonds, the result is, that he comes to Mr. Gaunt and says that he has got 5,000*l.* Halifax corporation debenture stock. I do not attach much importance to the distinction pointed out between debentures and debenture stock. The substance of the thing is, that what was wanted was securities of these corporations, whether debentures or debenture stock. Nothing turns upon that as far as I can see. Mr. Gaunt would have been satisfied with either, and either would be within the trust.

I now come to the bought-note, which is a very important document, and I confess I cannot look at it from the same point of view as the Vice-Chancellor. The bought-note is a printed form, filled up, of course, with a pen. Judging from the words of the document, and from the appearance of it, and bringing to bear upon it the knowledge which every one has of the ordinary transaction of business, I confess this document would have completely misled me. I could not possibly, looking at it with the utmost care and vigilance such as an ordinary man would exercise, extract from this document the slightest information or notice that this was a purchase other than in the ordinary course of business upon the Stock Exchange. If it would mislead a person like myself, why should it not mislead others? I am quite aware that experts have been called who say that to their experienced eyes there are signs on this document which indicate, to them at any rate, irregularities; but the question is not whether experts, like brokers, or those who are accustomed to deal in these things, see irregularities—the question is, whether these signs of irregularity are such as would attract the attention of an ordinary prudent man of business.

There is no irregularity of that sort at all in it that I can discern. It is a question of fact, and not a question of law, whether upon the face of this document there are or are not such signs of impropriety as to excite the suspicion of anybody. Nobody suggests any, except that the experts say there are signs which would put them on enquiry.

Now the signs which are visible to them are apparently these. First of all the absence of the name of the selling broker, of which I do not think much; and, secondly, that there is nothing charged for stamps or commission, and no date for the settlement of the account. The absence of a charge for commission is explained by the fact that in the commission column, the word "commission" being in print, under it is written "net"—that is to say, that the purchase was to be for a net price. Then it is said that the word "account" being printed, it ought to have been followed by a date, and that a broker would look with suspicion on a document with the word "account" in it not followed by the date. I do not pretend to say that there are not signs of suspicion to the eyes of a broker. But we are not looking at it with the eyes of a broker; we are looking at this document with the eyes of ordinary men of business, and there is no evidence to shew that there is anything which would lead an ordinary man of business to suppose that there was anything wrong. I am not able to come to the conclusion that Mr. Gaunt was put on enquiry, or ought to have been put on enquiry, as a reasonable and cautious man. If anything was calculated to lull suspicion in his mind, this document was, in my opinion, calculated to do so. That he was deceived was plain enough upon the evidence; but I cannot see that blame is to be imputed to him for not suspecting that there was something wrong. Upon this point—and it is a question of fact, not of law—I differ from the Vice-Chancellor, who seems to have been more impressed than I am with the evidence of the experts, and to have looked at this paper with the eyes of an expert, and too little with the eyes of an ordinary man of business.

Now, assuming that the trustee was justified in employing Mr. Cooke, and assuming that he was not negligent in not having his suspicions aroused when this document was brought to him, the next question is, was he acting improperly in paying the purchase-money to the broker? That is to say, ought he, as a prudent man of business, to have paid it to somebody else—namely, to the principals from whom the broker ought to have got, but did not get, these securities, whether upon the Stock Exchange or otherwise? If the trustee had notice, and really did know that these things had not been bought on the Stock Exchange, it is quite possible that he ought so to have paid it. I say nothing about that. It might be that in that case the trustee would be bound to see further into the application of the money; but misled as he was, and entitled as he was to treat these things as bought by the broker in the ordinary way of his business as a broker on the Stock Exchange, it appears to me that it is perfectly impossible to hold that he was bound to see to the application of the money in the sense that he was bound to pay the persons with whom the broker negotiated the purchase. We know the way in which business is done through brokers in buying ordinary stock. If a broker buys 10,000*l.* of stock, there are sometimes half-a-dozen people from whom he gets the stock. It is not in the ordinary course of business for a buyer, whether a trustee or not, to pay to persons from whom the broker has bought; he pays the broker. He is entitled to do that by the ordinary course of business. I do not myself understand that there is any evidence that, in point of fact, a trustee, or any other person employing a broker to buy, could do it in any other way. As a matter of business he could not. At all events the evidence is conclusive that the ordinary practice in employing a broker on such occasions is to send a cheque to the broker. There was, therefore, no negligence in Mr. Gaunt doing so; there was no impropriety or breach of trust in his conduct up to this point.

In re Speight, App.

Then, if we look a little farther, we shall see how the matter was done. Mr. Gaunt did not find out, nor could he, by reasonable diligence, have found out, anything which would lead him to stop his own cheques. If anything could be brought home to him to shew that he was negligent in not stopping his cheques, the case would have been quite different; but there was nothing to justify him in doing so, there was nothing sufficient to excite his suspicion.

Then it was said that there was negligence in not getting the securities. If the ordinary course of business had been that the securities should be exchanged for the cheques, of course it would be different; but that is not the ordinary course of business. You pay the broker, and he gets you the securities. He sees to all that. That is the ordinary course of business. It is very true that the broker did not fail for three weeks or a month afterwards; but, so far as the evidence goes, it seems to me clear to demonstration that no discovery Mr. Gaunt could have made after the cheques were cashed could have saved the property. If he was not negligent in not looking after the matter during the month, I do not see that the lapse of time or the so-called negligence caused the loss. The loss was anterior to that negligence, if negligence there were. I have made these observations in consequence of the passage that has been read from the judgment of the late Lord Hatherley in Mendes v. Guedalla (5). I have looked at the case since it was cited, and it appears to me, having regard to the facts which were before the Court, that the passage which was read does not go to the length contended for so far as I can understand it. In that case there was negligence in not looking after the securities; the negligence was long-continued, and but for that negligence, and if enquiry had been made, the securities might have been got back. The charge there was that the trustees trusted the agent for several years, and that they put the securities in a box and never asked anything about them. There is no doubt that in that case there was not only negligence, but the evidence was such as to shew that but for the negligence the loss would not have been incurred. As to Mr. Gaunt not asking for and not getting these securities, the time was short, and the misappropriation of the fund had taken place; and I am satisfied myself that the loss would have been sustained all the same if he had asked for them. In other words, the cause of the loss was not the want of enquiry by Mr. Gaunt, but the fraud which was practised upon him.

Now I do not propose to go through the authorities, but I will advert to two cases, because they have been brought to the attention of the Court, and they require notice. One is Bostock v. Floyer (6), in which Lord Romilly held that a man was responsible for the sum of 40*l.* which he had given to his solicitor to invest. The solicitor had pretended to invest it on a mortgage of some copyholds; but he had not done so; and the money was lost, and the trustee was held responsible. As I understand it, the ratio decidendi of the case was this, that it was not the ordinary course of business for a trustee to place money in the hands of a solicitor to invest. It was not a specific investment, it was handed to the solicitor; and in that point of view the case was intelligible enough, upon the ground that it was not right for the trustee to hand over the money to the solicitor for the purpose of investment. The other case was Hopgood v. Parkin (7), cited by Mr. Millar. That case certainly goes much further than I should have thought right, but in the result the case was appealed. An infant was concerned, and the Court of Appeal sanctioned a compromise on behalf of the infant.

In re Speight, App.

I wish most emphatically to say that if the trustees are justified by the ordinary course of business in employing agents, and they do employ agents in good repute, and whose fitness they have no reason to doubt, and employ those agents to do that which is in the ordinary course of their business, I protest against the notion that the trustees guarantee the solvency or honesty of the agents employed. Such a doctrine would make it impossible for any man to have anything to do with a trust. I differ from the Vice-Chancellor upon the question of fact; the principles of law which he stated in the first part of his judgment are entirely sound; but I differ from the conclusion at which he arrived on the bought-note—and so differing from him I cannot agree with the judgment he pronounced.

BOWEN, L.J.—This is a case of the greatest possible importance, and I think it right therefore to add my own expression of opinion to the judgments which have been already given, not merely because of the importance of the case, but because during a portion of the arguments I certainly did not feel quite so clear as the Court appeared to do—not as to the law, which has throughout been admitted on all sides to be open to no doubt—but as to the correct inference from one particular point to be drawn by the tribunal that has to decide the case. However, I have come to a decided opinion about the matter, and, as I have done so, I think it is as well that I should express fully what that opinion is.

Now, with regard to the law, it is clear that a trustee is only bound to conduct the business of the trust in such a way as an ordinary prudent man of business would conduct his own. I agree with what was said by the Master of the Rolls in the opening part of his judgment, and the cases which he has cited seem to me to be conclusive upon the point. The truth is that the law upon the subject is clear, because it is based upon common sense. A trustee cannot, as everybody admits, delegate his trust. If confidence has been reposed in him by a dead man, he cannot throw upon the shoulders of somebody else that which he has had placed upon his own shoulders.

On the other hand, in the administration of a trust, a trustee cannot do everything himself—he must, to a certain extent, make use of the arms, legs, eyes and hands of other persons; and the limit within which it seems to me he is confined has been described throughout, both in the cases which have been referred to, and the judgments which have preceded me, to be this, that a trustee may follow the ordinary course of business provided he runs no needless risk in doing so. That is, in substance, what was laid down in the case before Lord Hardwicke of Ex parte Belchier (1). Lord Hardwicke's view, putting aside peculiarities of language, is based upon reason and common sense. In other words, a trustee may not employ an agent where he should do the work himself; but he may employ an agent where there is a moral necessity—adopting the form of expression used in that case—that he should use the instrumentality of others; that is to say, he may use others if it is in the ordinary course of business to use others, and if he runs no needless risk in doing so. A similar sort of test is applied every day by commercial men in the business world to transactions which are carried on through agents. A contract of agency, a contract which a man makes with his agent when he commits anything into his hands, is, to a certain extent, a personal one, and, to the extent to which it is a personal one, it cannot be delegated; but everybody knows that nothing is more common than that a large portion of commercial business should be performed through sub-agents. It is entrusted to the hands of an agent, not to do it himself, but to get it done; and in that class of cases, provided the agent chooses carefully the sub-agent, he really discharges the functions he is employed to discharge; and the proposition as to trustees or agents that they cannot delegate, means this simply—that a man employed to do a thing himself has not the right to get somebody else to do it; but when he is employed to get it done through others he may do so. Now, applying that sort of reasoning to the present case, I begin with this, that a trustee who employs a broker to buy in the ordinary course of business on the Stock Exchange is justified in employing and in paying money to the broker whom he has employed. I fail to see what a trustee could be expected to do different. When the time comes for the completion of the purchase the broker wants the money, and the payment to the broker is, therefore, one of the means of effectuating the completion of the purchase. It is wanted for that purpose. There is a moral necessity for it.

In re Speight, App.

Now what are the facts of this case, and is there any ground for saying that a distinction ought to be made between this case and such an ordinary case as I have described? John Speight left certain trust funds by his will, and the trustees had power to invest them in corporation securities. It was determined, after due consultation, that such investment should be made. Now these corporation securities are securities which may be in the nature of debentures or in the nature of debenture stock. They may be, and in the first instance of course must be, created by the act of the corporation—whether purchase is the exact definition of the transaction or not, I pass over that for a moment—but the person who wishes to obtain the corporation securities may either get them from the corporation direct, provided they are issuing them, or he may get them by purchase from some other person. It appears in the case of these corporation securities with which we have been dealing, that some of them were and some of them were not upon the Stock Exchange. One can understand, without much consideration, how that might be the case. Corporations differ in the magnitude of their resources, and some corporation stocks are sold usually upon the Exchange, and some only occasionally; and in the case of certain of these securities with which we have been dealing, it is clear that they were not in the market in the ordinary way; but in one way or the other everybody who wishes to purchase corporation stocks or corporation securities, whether they be the security of corporations whose stock is not in the market, or the reverse, is entitled to look to his broker as the person through whom to get them. In the first place you can only find out whether they are in the market or not by asking the broker—at least, that is the natural course to pursue; and, in the second place, if he can get them in the market it is much more for the client's interest to do so, because he would probably get them cheaper there than if he got them direct from the corporation. Therefore it would be perfectly wise and sensible for anybody, and so for a trustee, to go to his broker to see if he could get the securities upon the Stock Exchange, instead of purchasing them from the corporation; for even those which are not upon the market as an ordinary matter would occasionally find their way into the market in the case of the death of or transfer by the original purchaser. It seems to me, therefore, that Mr. Gaunt was perfectly justified, as a man of sense, in going to his broker and telling him, "Get the securities on the market or off the market as you find it best." That is exactly what the evidence shews Mr. Gaunt did.

The first question argued in the case was, whether Mr. Gaunt was entitled to employ a broker at all. I answer the question affirmatively in favour of Mr. Gaunt. I think it was a sensible thing for Mr. Gaunt to employ a broker. As to the choice of broker I need not say anything; enough has been said about that. But that does not exhaust, of course, the points we have to decide. Assuming that Mr. Gaunt was right in employing a broker, was he right in paying over so large a sum as 15,000*l.* to him? Now a payment of that sort would be wise or unwise, I should say, according to whether there existed, or did not exist, a reasonable necessity for it, having regard to the ordinary course of business. If it was a transaction on the Stock Exchange, as I have said, and the money was wanted to complete the transaction, I think the trustee, Mr. Gaunt, would have been justified in paying it to his broker. If the purchase of the broker was made direct from the corporation, I am by no means so clear; and I feel even more doubts, if I may say so, than my brothers who have preceded me on that point. If there had been no practical necessity for paying the broker, it would be a large sum to pay him; and I cannot myself see that it is made out that such a course would be conformable to the ordinary usage of mankind in the sense in which those words are used by Lord Hardwicke, and in other cases. I should feel the greatest doubt whether Mr. Gaunt would be justified in paying a broker on the market if the broker made the purchase direct from the corporation, and that was understood to be the bargain. But the question whether the payment was right or wrong depending on the nature of the transaction, how was Mr. Gaunt to know the nature of the transaction? He could not find it out from the broker himself. He could not walk into the market and ask the persons with whom Mr. Cooke might be supposed to be dealing, whether it was true or not that Mr. Cooke had made a bargain with them; nor could he be expected to write to the corporation in the first instance, to know whether he was justified in trusting his own broker. Of course he was justified in trusting his own broker on that point just as much as on the other points which have been discussed. I do not see what he could have done otherwise. If that is so, the question we have to answer in this case is narrowed. It really resolves itself into this—was Mr. Gaunt informed by the broker in effect that the transaction which had been completed was a transaction of purchase and sale upon the Stock Exchange in such a way that Mr. Gaunt was justified in believing it? Now the oral evidence in the case certainly does not shew that Mr. Gaunt had any reason to doubt that this was an ordinary Stock Exchange transaction. But I do not myself rest very much upon the oral evidence, for Mr. Gaunt was the only person called on this question; and it may not be right to examine the account he has given, in his own favour, of the conversation, as minutely as if it were the language of a marriage settlement. But at any rate I see nothing in that evidence, and I have looked most carefully into it, to help the plaintiffs. There is nothing in it to shew that Mr. Gaunt was informed that this was a purchase direct from the corporation.

In re Speight, App.

Then I come to the document, which is the only document in the case, upon the construction of which, and upon the true inference to be drawn from which, it seems to me we are obliged to part company with the Vice-Chancellor. I agree with the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Lindley, that the cardinal hinge of the judgment of the Court below is the view taken by the Vice-Chancellor, that this document would have told a reasonable person that the purchase was direct from the corporation. Now the Master of the Rolls says we must lean to the side of an honest trustee. I will pass away from that without expressing any opinion upon it. It does not seem to me, when we have facts from which an inference can be drawn, that it becomes necessary to consider the question where the onus of proof lies. We have this document, and I think that any reasonable person to whom it was presented would believe that the broker had effected the transaction upon the Stock Exchange. Every business man knows that it is common, or not as uncommon as it should be, for persons who are engaged in commerce continually to use a form, which is designed for one thing, to communicate notice of, or even to effect another. I remember myself a case, in which the whole of the difficulty in a very important matter arose from a circumstance of this sort. There was a sale of munitions of war to a foreign government, and it had been drawn up and effected, so to speak, by an instrument which was a form used for the sale of oils in the Levant. The difficulty arose from applying a form which was applicable to the sale of oils in the Levant to the sale of munitions of war. The true question is what Mr. Gaunt would reasonably believe when this was presented to him by his own broker, without any further explanation than the explanation which the document itself supplies, taken with the information also conveyed to him that the money was wanted for the payment of the broker. It is said there is upon the face of the document no charge for commission, and no charge for transfer stamps. The answer to that seems to me to be decisive, that the instructions were to purchase net. Then it is said that no date is filled in. One would expect unquestionably that the date would be filled in, and that information would be given in the ordinary way, whether it was a transaction for cash or for the next account. But then, admitting that as I do to the full, and thinking as I do that the document may be in that respect irregular, we must not be deceived by terms. What do we mean by saying that the document is irregular in that way? The document is not something which a broker transmits as a voucher for his own assertion, any irregularity in which ought to excite just suspicion. It is an irregularity which does not point to anything irregular in the transaction itself. It is only an irregularity in the way in which the broker communicates the transaction. It is therefore an irregularity which the broker can cure himself by a word. It seems to me no more an irregularity than if the broker had forgotten to date his letter, but supplied by word of mouth the missing date There is, therefore, nothing on the document to suggest, as it appears to me, that this was other than a purchase on the Stock Exchange. If the document were ambiguous, and left that in doubt, I am not at all sure I should be satisfied with the trustee for not going further, and asking about it; as it was a large sum of money, I think it would have been prudent for him, if he did not get the information from his broker, to have asked his broker what the transaction was. But it seems to me that the document is not ambiguous—and that is the answer to the Vice-Chancellor's judgment in the Court below, and the answer to the hesitation which I felt during a considerable part of the argument. In the first place, the document begins, "We have this day bought for you," and in the second place, it continues, "We have bought for you, subject to the rules of the London Stock Exchange"; and I think when a document was presented which began in that way, and which contained nothing upon the face of it to awaken suspicion, he was justified in paying over the sum of money. Whether I should have done it, or whether the Master of the Rolls would have done it, or whether Lord Justice Lindley would have done it, is hardly the test, because we lawyers become suspicious after hearing cases of this sort. The true test is whether a reasonable man of business would do it. I think that ninety-nine reasonable men out of a hundred would have done it.

In re Speight, App.

With regard to what has been said as to the cases of Bostock v. Floyer (6) and Hopgood v. Parkin (7), referred to by Lord Justice Lindley, I entirely agree with him, and also with what has been said by the Master of the Rolls as to the subsequent alleged default in not requiring an explanation from Mr. Cooke of the delay which occurred after the money had once been paid.

Solicitors—Johnson & Weatherall, agents for Rawson, George & Wade, Bradford, for plaintiffs; W. & J. Flower & Nussey, agents for Killick, Hutton & Vint, Bradford, for defendant.

FOLLETT v. PETTMAN.

l—Construction—Confirm-by Codicil—Implied Revo-ediate Codicil.

will dated in 1875, after specific bequests, gave the eal and personal estate to trust for his children in By a codicil in February, ed a legacy given to his d increased a legacy given E., and concluded, "In all confirm my said will."

, 1878, he made a second cing, "This is a codicil to l testament of me, G. F."; ng that he was desirous of residuary devise contained and of making the specific er contained, he devised a his son W. and to C. P. nts in common, and the and in all other respects y and confirm my said

s executed a third codicil, d, "This is a codicil to the G. F., bearing date on or of February, 1875," by eciting a promise made before to that effect, he ecutors to grant to his L. an underlease of a cer-gave to his wife a legacy ion to the benefit which she his "said will"; and the us: "In all other respects id will, except as altered by il thereto made in 1878, ed a legacy given to my —

he words of confirmation tator in his third codicil ed as meaning that he did er his general testamentary ther than by making the in that codicil, and that an oke the second codicil was sufficient clearness to en-to reject the devise thereby

CHANC.

Special Case.

George Follett, by his will dated the 26th of February, 1875, after making a specific bequest of furniture to his wife, Susan Follett (who died in the testator's lifetime), and a gift to each of his daughters Mary Ann Follett and Ellen Coutts of 19*l.* 19*s.*, bequeathed No. 32 Radnor Street, Peckham, to his trustees thereinafter named, as therein mentioned, upon trust for the separate use of his daughter Caroline Susan Follett during her life, free from the control of any husband and without power of anticipation, with remainder to such of her children, and in such manner as she might, as therein mentioned, appoint, and in default of appointment among her children equally. And after a bequest of a leasehold house, No. 31 Radnor Street, Peckham, the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of unto his son Walter George Follett, and the defendant Francis Smith Walker, their heirs, executors and administrators, according to the nature and tenure thereof, upon the trusts therein declared. And the testator declared that, upon the death of his wife, his trust property should be held by his trustees upon trust for his children, including the plaintiff Walter Follett, in equal shares. And the testator appointed the plaintiff and the defendant Francis Smith Walker the executors of his will.

The testator made a codicil to his will, dated the 27th of February, 1878, in the following terms:—

"I, George Follett, of Godwin Road, Margate, builder, declare this to be a codicil to my last will, dated the 26th day of February, 1875. Whereas in my said will I have given 19*l.* 19*s.* to each of my daughters, Mary Ann Follett (now Mary Ann Campoverde) and Ellen Coutts, now I hereby revoke the legacy given to the said Mary Ann Campoverde, and I give to the said Ellen Coutts 40*l.* instead o the sum of 19*l.* 19*s.* In all other respect I confirm my said will."

The testator made a second codicil to his will, dated the 4th of November, 1878, which was as follows:—

"This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, George Follett, of Novelty House, New Town, Margate, in the county of Kent, gentleman. Whereas I am desirous of altering the residuary devise contained in my said will, and of making the specific devise hereinafter contained: Now, therefore, I hereby give and devise all that my freehold house and premises wherein I now reside, known as Novelty House, New Town, Margate, aforesaid, together with the freehold land thereunto belonging, ... unto and to the use of my son Walter George Follett, of No. 16 Bird in Bush Road, Peckham, in the county of Surrey, solicitor's clerk, and Charlotte Matilda Pettman, their heirs and assigns, to hold the same unto them the said Walter George Follett and Charlotte Matilda Pettman, their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, for their and each of their own absolute use and benefit. And in all other respects I hereby ratify and confirm my said will."

Follett v. Pettman.

The testator signed and caused to be affixed to this second codicil the following memorandum, attested by the two persons who were the attesting witnesses to the second codicil:—

"I herewith lodge my codicil to my will with Mrs. Pettman, and especially request my witnesses thereto to certify that such is my wish.—November 4, 1878."

The testator made a third codicil, dated the 4th of August, 1879, which ran as follows:—

"This is a codicil to the last will of me, George Follett, of 60 Godwin Road, Margate, builder, such will bearing date on or about the 27th day of February, 1875. Whereas I promised several years ago to give to my daughter-in-law Louisa Follett the house in which she resides, situate and being Ivy Cottage, Radnor Street, Peckham, and am desirous that such promise should be carried into effect as soon as possible after my decease: I accordingly direct my executors, Walter George Follett and Francis Smith Walker, to grant to her, for her separate use, an underlease of the said house for the residue of my term therein, less three days, at the yearly ground rent of 3*l.* I give to my wife, Susan Follett, 50*l.*, in addition to the benefit which she derives from my said will, such sum to be paid within one month after my decease. In all other respects I confirm my said will, except as altered by a certain codicil thereto made in 1878, whereby I revoked a legacy given to my daughter Mary Ann Campoverde. In witness whereof I have set my hand this 4th day of August, 1879."

The testator died on the 8th of December, 1881, without having revoked or altered his will except by the said three codicils, and the will and codicils were duly proved on the 28th of April, 1882, by the executors.

The question for the opinion of the Court was whether the third codicil in any and what manner affected the devise of Novelty House contained in the second codicil.

Ingle Joyce, for the plaintiff W. G. Follett.

Kekewich, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the defendants other than Charlotte Matilda Pettman.—We submit that the effect of the third codicil is to revoke the second.

[KAY, J.—Of course a mere confirmation of the will would include a confirmation of the codicil.]

In Burton v. Newbery (1) it was held that a codicil which refers to a will of a particular date, and does not refer to a subsequent codicil, does not operate as a republication of that subsequent codicil.

[KAY, J., referred to Gordon v. Lord Reay (2)].

Burton v. Newbery (1) was commented on in Green v. Tribe (3).

[KAY, J.—In that case the testatrix merely confirmed her will without mentioning the date of it. Revocation of a will requires very strong evidence of an intention to revoke.]

Burton v. Newbery (1) is a decision which indicates what the law is in our favour. By the first codicil the testator altered his will, and by the third codicil he confirmed the will as altered by the first codicil. The property passed by the will, and not according to the second codicil.

(1) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 202; Law Rep. 1 Ch. D. 234.
(2) 5 Sim. 274.
(3) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 783; Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 231.

lett v. Pettman.

est Witt, for the defendant Charlotte da Pettman.—I contend that the l codicil is not revoked. The true ple of construction is that, where is a clear disposition, it is not to be ed except by clear and unequivocal
.
› words "except as altered by a a codicil made in 1878, whereby I ed a legacy to my daughter, &c.," mere pleonasm, and must be regarded tially explanatory of the word "will," in its general sense embraces codicils than as implying a revocation of mentioned codicil.
ain, the recital in the third codicil of stator's intended disposition of his property does not mention the def "Novelty House," and from his › it may be inferred that he had no ion of revoking that devise.
the Goods of De la Saussaye (4) is arest case.
KY, J.—That is only Gordon v. Lord
(2) over again.]
s case is clearly distinguishable from n v. Newbery (1).
KY, J.—If there had been merely of confirmation without reference to rst codicil by date, I suppose there have been no revocation of the l codicil.]
The words referring to the first are a mere pleonasm, and a partial nation of what he meant by his will.
KY, J.—It may have been accident, t the same time it may have been
.]
› true solution seems to be that the l codicil was not present to his mind.
swick, Q.C., in reply.—The arguas to the recital helps me also, for stator does not recite his intention ing his wife the additional 50*l.*
KY, J.—The main purpose of the l was to make the alteration in the ition of the real estate; the other tion was a mere pecuniary bequest.]

Cur. adv. vult.

Y, J. (March 7), after stating the as above set out, proceeded as s:—

It is argued that the effect of the third codicil is to destroy the devise contained in the second codicil, because, by confirming his will, except as altered by a codicil revoking the legacy to Mary, the testator in effect repeated the residuary devise in his will, and so revoked the alteration of that residuary devise made by his second codicil.

The question of revocation has always been treated as a question of intention, and this is distinctly recognised in the 20th section of the Wills Act. In Smith v. Cunningham (5) the testator by a sixth codicil confirmed and republished his will (the date of which he mentioned), and the several codicils thereto, respectively bearing date August, 1813, and January, 1818, omitting all mention of any other codicils. The question came before the Ecclesiastical Court whether the omitted codicils could be proved, and it was held they could, partly from indications derived from the manner in which the codicils had been preserved, but mainly from the internal evidence of the codicils themselves, considerable reliance being placed upon the fact that it appeared in some of them that where the testator intended to revoke he did so in express and formal words.

In Greenhough v. Martin (6) the testatrix had made a will, and then a series of codicils by which she left additional legacies to two of her servants by name. She then gave instructions to her solicitor to make a new will including legacies of 1,000*l.* each to those two servants. The solicitor suggested they might be given by codicil, which was done, and he brought the will and read it to her just before she executed the codicil, which ended with the clause, "My said will having been this day read over to me, I hereby confirm the same," and upon all these facts the Ecclesiastical Court decided that she did not intend the intermediate codicils to have any operation.

Turning to cases which have occurred before a Court of construction, I find in Crosbie v. Macdoual (7), by a fifth codicil, reciting that by his will dated the 27th of May, 1790, he had appointed Jackson

(5) 1 Addams, 448.
(6) 2 Addams, 239.
(7) 4 Ves. 610

Follett v. Pettman.

an executor, the testator appointed Macdoual in his place, and concluded, "and I do hereby confirm my said will in all other respects." It was argued that, the will being referred to by date, this destroyed an intermediate codicil which had revoked a bequest in the will, and thus revived that bequest. But it was held that the effect of the words of confirmation was that the substitution of a new executor was the only point in which the testator intended to make any alteration in his will; and it was pointed out that there was a great distinction between wills and codicils in this respect, because if there were two separate papers, both called wills, inconsistent with each other, the last is the will, and, from the nature of the instrument, it revoked the other. This was followed in Booker v. Allen (8), in In the Goods of De la Saussaye (4) and in Green v. Tribe (3). The case of Burton v. Newbery (1), which has been cited, is not at all in opposition to this current of authority; it merely decided that a codicil which referred to a will of a particular date did not make effectual a previous codicil which was otherwise inoperative, because, in order to incorporate a paper not testamentary, there must be a distinct reference to it. There is a very clear and strong rule thus stated by Lord Chief Justice Tindal in the well-known case of Doe v. Hicks (9), in the House of Lords. If a devise in the will be clear, it is incumbent on those who contend it is not to take effect by reason of a revocation in a codicil to shew that the intention to revoke is equally clear and free from doubt as the original intention to devise. This was referred to and illustrated by Lord Selborne in the recent case of Farrer v. St. Catherine's College (10), and the rule applies to the present case.

By the first codicil the testator shews that when he intended to revoke he knew how to use express and apt words. If he had intended to revoke the clear devise made by the second codicil he would, no doubt, have done it by express words also. The words of confirmation which he has used are, according to the authorities which I have referred to, to be read a meaning that he does not intend to alte his general testamentary disposition fu ther than by making the gifts containe in that codicil; and I do not think I a at liberty to hold that an intention to re voke the second codicil has been shew with sufficient clearness to enable th Court to reject the devise thereby made.

(8) 2 Russ. & M. 270.
(9) 8 Bing. 475; 1 Cl. & F. 20.
(10) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 809; Law Rep. 16 Eq. 19.

Solicitors—Daniel Birt, for plaintiff and all the defendants except Pettman; W. H. Armstrong, agent for C. F. Gibson, Margate, for defendant Pettman.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
April 13.

In re JOHN BROWN; WARD v. MORSE.

Practice—Claim and Counter-claim—Costs where both succeed—Apportionment of Costs.

The principle of taxation laid down in Saner v. Bilton (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 545; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 416) applies equally to a case where both claim and counter-claim have been successful, as where they have both been dismissed with costs. The successful plaintiff is, in the absence of any special direction to the contrary, entitled to the general costs of the action, notwithstanding that the result of the whole litigation is in favour of the defendant; and there is to be no apportionment of those costs which would have been duplicated if the counter-claim had been the subject of an independent action.

This was an appeal from a decision of Chitty, J., refusing an application made on behalf of the defendant to review the Master's taxation.

An order had been made by North, J. in chambers, on the 19th of April, 1883, referring it to the Taxing Master to tax—first, the costs of the plaintiffs and of the above-named John Brown of the action of Ward v. Morse, including the costs of the transfer thereof to the Chancery Division

e Brown, App.

) tax, secondly, the costs of the ant Morse of his counter-claim in id action, and of his claim against tate of the above-named testator, ing therein the costs reserved by " a ılar order mentioned; and it was d that the amount of the first-men- costs be set off against the amount) second-mentioned costs, and the e added to or deducted from the t found to be due to the defendant editor of the testator.

facts under which the order was were briefly as follows :—John ı, the testator, was a contractor, ncerned in constructing the Severn) Railway; and the defendant, n Morse, was a sub-contractor under ngaged to do certain masonry work. Brown determined his contract with mpany. Morse was indebted to ı, and Brown in his lifetime brought ion to recover the amount, and took summons for judgment under Order Morse opposed the summons, and ed leave to set up a counter-claim mages for breach of the sub-contract had resulted from the determination) contract above mentioned. Before tion was tried Brown died, and the administration order was made for ng up Brown's estate; and the action own v. Morse, which was continued) executors of Brown, was transferred the Exchequer Division into the ery Division.

lgment was given in the action of v. Morse for 238*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, the amount) debt claimed by Brown, less a small laimed in the defence by way of set- r goods sold and delivered by Morse own, and judgment was given for es on the counter-claim, which was ed back to chambers by Jessel, M.R., certain directions as to the basis which the damages claimed thereby to be assessed; and ultimately the es were allowed at 591*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*

the 19th of April, 1883, the order mentioned was made in chambers, ursuant thereto the costs were taxed, of the plaintiffs and the late J. Brown) action at 92*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and those of efendant at 89*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.*

e Taxing Master in taxing the costs allowed the whole of the costs of the action to the plaintiffs, and to the defendant only his costs of the counter-claim, notwithstanding the objections made by the defendant in the course of such taxation. The objections were as follows :—

" Objections of Morse to allowances in the bill of costs of plaintiffs in action, and of above-named J. Brown, and to disallowances in his own bill of costs.

" 1. As to the bill of costs of plaintiffs.

" a. Objection to the allowance in that bill of the whole of the several items common to the action and counter-claim, and insists that the same ought to be apportioned, on the ground that neither the action nor the counter-claim was dismissed, and that the plaintiff should be allowed only such part thereof as is fairly attributable to the action.

" b. To the allowance in that bill of all costs or increase of costs occasioned by the counter-claim—e.g. the application for judgment under Order XIV. rule 1, and similar charges; and says that the plaintiff should be disallowed all such costs as he failed on the counter-claim.

" 2. As to his own bill.

" c. Objection to disallowance of the whole of the items common to both action and counter-claim, and says that such items should be apportioned, and that he should be allowed such part thereof as is fairly attributable to the counter-claim.

" d. Objection to the disallowance of items relating in effect wholly to his counter-claim—e.g. those on obtaining leave to defend on the application under Order XIV., and similar charges."

The Taxing Master disallowed the objections, holding the case to be undistinguishable in principle from Saner v. Bilton (1) and Mason v. Brentini (2).

The defendant subsequently applied by summons in chambers that it might be referred back to the Taxing Master to review his taxation.

On the 14th of November, 1882, Chitty, J., dismissed the summons.

The defendant, on the 20th of February, 1883, moved to discharge the order of Chitty, J.

(1) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 545; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 416.

(2) Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 287.

In re Brown, App.

J. G. Wood, for the motion.

A. Beddall, for the plaintiffs.

CHITTY, J.—In this case Mr. Justice North has ordered that it be referred to the Taxing Master to tax, first, the costs of (what I will call for shortness) the plaintiffs, and of the above-named John Brown, of the action of Ward v. Morse, including the costs of the transfer thereof to this Division; and, secondly, to tax the costs of Stephen Morse of his counter-claim in the said action, and of his claim against the estate of the above-named testator, including therein the costs reserved by a particular order. And the order went on to direct a set-off as between the costs to be paid on one side and the other.

The point raised is this: the Taxing Master has given to the plaintiffs the whole costs of the action without apportionment; and the substance of the argument on the part of the defendant is that it is a miscarriage on his part, and that the costs ought to be apportioned—that is to say, the common charges in the action, such as term fees, attendances in Court, and the like, ought to be apportioned as between the costs of the action on the one side and the costs of the counter-claim on the other.

Let me state very shortly what the nature of the litigation was. The action was commenced by a Mr. Brown against the defendant for a debt, and the defendant put in a defence setting up a set-off to a certain extent which did not exhaust the whole demand of the plaintiff, and a counter-claim for damages. In the action the plaintiff succeeded in recovering the whole amount of the debt, but the defendant succeeded in his set-off to the extent the set-off was pleaded, and the defendant recovered damages on his counter-claim, and the balance on the two accounts is in the defendant's favour. In these circumstances the order I have read was made, and all I have now to do is to say whether the Taxing Master has correctly interpreted the order and given effect to the directions contained in it. Whether the order is right or not is not a matter for my consideration.

Now the point came before Mr. Justice Fry in Saner v. Bilton (1); and in that case the plaintiff, who had commenced an action against the defendant, failed, and the defendant, who set up a counter-claim, failed, and both the action and counter-claim were dismissed with costs. Mr. Justice Fry obtained the opinion of Mr. Bloxam, in which other Taxing Masters of great experience concurred, and upon that opinion he acted; and he says, at page 419 of the report (1), "The principal reason which leads me to that conclusion is this, that the plaintiff in the original action is the person who first commences litigation. The plaintiff in the action first lets out the waters of litigation, and it is impossible to say how far the counter-claim ever would have been agitated if he had not begun that litigation. That appears to me to furnish a reason why, as a general rule, the action should be treated as if it stood by itself, and the counter-claim should only bear the amount by which the costs of the proceedings are increased by it." In Mason v. Brentini (2) the same point came before the Court of Appeal, and the Master of the Rolls stated that he entirely agreed "with the decision of Mr. Justice Fry in Saner v. Bilton (1), and for the reasons for which he has given, and am of opinion that his judgment is to be considered as expressing the rule of the Court."

The Taxing Master, having this decision before him, has stated in his answer to the objections brought in, that he considers the case is disposed of by the two authorities which I have mentioned. He says: "Finding nothing in the objections to distinguish the case before me from these two authorities, I disallow these objections." That is the question I have to consider, stated in its narrowest form. Now if the principle is, where the plaintiff who commences the litigation is wrong there is to be no apportionment of costs, it seems to me that by analogy where the plaintiff is right and the defendant is also right, as the Taxing Master says, the same rule must be applied. In my opinion, if the plaintiff who commences the litigation is right, the same rule ought to be applied to him; but inversely, of course, as to the plaintiff who commences his litigation being wrong. The effect of the new procedure under the Judicature Act appears to me to be this:

e Brown, App.

aintiff who has commenced his action , and succeeded in it, is met by a r-claim. Before the Judicature Act would have been a cross action for s. The damages of course would ave been set off. The judgment not have been for the balance, but would have been a separate judg-

The effect, then, of the Judicature this, that the costs of the whole on are reduced by not requiring two and it appears to me that the defen- annot complain of this practice. aintiff recovers, as he would before dicature Act, the whole costs of tion, but the defendant is put to its in regard to his counter-claim, herefore he has a less demand in of the costs of the counter-claim; that way it appears to me there is stice done to the defendant. He incur less costs in his counter- y reason of the amended procedure, nsequently, in order to indemnify ainst these costs, which have been incurred by him, the plaintiff has them, but they are of a less amount hey would have been. In Baines romley (3), Lord Justice Brett ex- an opinion that "the proper prin- f taxation, if not otherwise ordered, ake the claim as if it and its issues an action, and then to take the r-claim and its issues as if it were ion, and then to give the allocatur ts for the balance in favour of the t in whose favour the balance

In such a case, where items are n to both actions, the Master would them. When the so-called counter- s a set-off there is but one action." ictum appears not to have been upon in that particular case. There een a miscarriage in the Taxing 's office, but it was set right by the of Appeal. I have made enquiry, e Taxing Masters are unable to tell at occurred on the subsequent taxa- these costs; but Mr. Beddall has d some information, which I do ubt as being correct, that there was portionment in that case, after the of Appeal's order had been made, between the action on the one hand and the counter-claim on the other. That is but a dictum. I rather understand it to mean that when the Court is making the order for costs, regard should be had to the principle which the Lord Justice states to be the right principle according to his firm opinion. No doubt, in this case, it might have been contended before Mr. Justice North, when he made the order for costs, that he ought to have directed an apportionment; but he has not done so; and I think I am precluded by the true effect of the authorities I have cited, and, consequently, this application fails. I therefore refuse the motion, with costs.

0 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 120, 465; Law Rep. 6 197, 691.

The defendant appealed.

J. G. Wood, for the appellant.—The question is, whether in a case where both claim and counter-claim succeed the common charges arising in the course of the litigation ought to be paid entirely to the plaintiff, who succeeds on his claim, or be apportioned between the two parties. It is submitted that when both succeed, costs of action mean the separate costs of the action in addition to a proper amount of the common charges—costs of counter-claim, the separate costs of the counter-claim and a proper amount of the common charges. Otherwise the inconvenient result follows, that the result depends upon the question who is the first party to rush into litigation. Chitty, J., held himself bound by Saner v. Bilton (1); but there the plaintiff failed and had to pay the costs of the action, and the main point on which the Judge relied was, that the plaintiff is the person who "first lets out the waters of litigation." That case was followed in Mason v. Brentini (2), where the same state of things occurred, and the decision in Saner v. Bilton (1), and the reasons for that decision, were affirmed and approved.

The case of Baines v. Bromley (3) was more like the present, for there both claim and counter-claim were successful. There the Taxing Master, seeing that there was a balance in the defendants' favour, gave them the costs of the action—which is more than the appellant asks for here—and the Court of Appeal held that the taxation must be reviewed; but the question there was, whether the defendants were entitled to the general costs of the action and not as to an apportionment of common charges. The dictum of Brett, L.J. (on p. 695)—to the effect that "the proper principle of taxation, unless otherwise ordered, in a case where the plaintiff succeeds on his claim and the defendant on his counter-claim, is to take the claim as if it and its issues were an action, and then take the counter-claim and its issues as if it were an action, and give the allocatur for costs for the balance in favour of the litigant in whose favour the balance turns; in such a case, where items are common to both actions, the Master would divide them"—applies to this case. Chitty, J., has decided that there is to be no apportionment unless directed in the order. The opinion of Brett, L.J., appears to be directly contrary. The defendant is, at all events, entitled to the costs of the summons upon which he obtained leave to defend and to put in his counter-claim.

In re Brown, App.

[COTTON, L.J.—It has recently been decided by the other branch of the Appeal Court, that if a claim is dropped the counter-claim does not fall with it—McGowan v. Middleton (4).]

The counter-claim is an independent action, and I submit that those costs which, if there were two separate actions, would be duplicated, should, when combined into one, be divided.

Ince, Q.C., and Beddall, contra, were not called upon.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The question involved in this appeal appears to be this. In a case where there have been claim and counter-claim, and both have been successful, but the whole amount recovered on the counter-claim exceeds the amount recovered on the claim, how and in what way the costs common to both proceedings are to be disposed of. To some extent we have authority in the cases of Saner v. Bilton (1) and Mason v. Brentini (2). In each of those cases both parties failed, the claim and counter-claim being both dismissed with costs, the costs of the action to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the costs of the counter-claim to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff; and the question raised on the taxation was, whether all the proceedings which related to the claim and the counter-claim were to be apportioned, or whether the defendant was to pay only so much of the plaintiff's costs as were occasioned by the counter-claim; and the Court decided that the plaintiff was to pay the general costs of the action, and the defendant only the costs of the proceedings so far as they had been increased by reason of the counter-claim.

The case of Saner v. Bilton (1) was decided by Mr. Justice Fry in 1879, and his decision was followed by the Court of Appeal in Mason v. Brentini (2). A case appears to have come before the other branch of the Appeal Court—Baines v. Bromley (3)—which is, in form, more like the present, because there both parties succeeded. There the plaintiff obtained on his claim a verdict for 114*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and the defendants on their counter-claim a verdict for 230*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*; and the Judge directed that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff on his claim, and judgment for the defendants to recover the difference between the two sums; and by the judgment as entered, it was adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendants £ for his costs of suit, and that the defendants recover against the plaintiff 115*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* on the counter-claim, and £ for their costs of the counter-claim; and the question before the Court was, how and in what way those costs should be disposed of. The Court decided that the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the cause. A principle of taxation however, proper, in the opinion of Lord Justice Brett, to be adopted, is summed up by him as follows:—"I have, however, a firm opinion that where there is a claim, with issues taken on it, and a counter-claim, not a set-off, but in the nature of a cross action, with issues on it, and where the plaintiff succeeds on the claim and the defendant on the counter-claim, the proper principle of taxation, if not otherwise ordered, is to tax the costs of the counter-claim and its issues as if it were an action, and then to give the allocatur for costs for the balance in favour of the litigant in whose re Brown, App.

(4) 52 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 355.

r the balance turns. In such a case, ı items are common to both actions, aster would divide them." He there a distinction between the case where is a counter-claim—a separate action l where the so-called counter-claim is ıy of set-off only, in which case there y one action; and the decision arrived ıs, as I have before mentioned, that laintiff was entitled to the general of the action.

art from the authority of that case, pears to me that the principle of v. Bilton (1), although a case ı both parties failed, should be ly applicable to a case where both s have succeeded. The plaintiff l recover from the defendant the of the action, except so far as they tributable to the counter-claim, and lefendant should recover from the iff the costs of the counter-claim. re are any costs which may be con- d common to both proceedings—e.g. f fee—if there is only one brief on laim and on the counter-claim, or ees of assessors on a reference, or items which can be fairly considered common to both proceedings, they l be divided. But, apart from this cation, I think that the case of v. Bilton (1) is equally applicable, er claim and counter-claim both both succeed.

TON, L.J.—I think that this case is l by Mason v. Brentini (2), fol- ; Saner v. Bilton (1). True it is ı each of those cases both claim and r-claim were dismissed with costs, was in each case held that there ı be no apportionment of the general of the action. There was in the ıt case a judgment to tax the costs ı plaintiffs of the action, and to tax sts of the defendant of his counter- , as in the case of Saner v. Bilton The form of order is the same, and l receive the same construction. I e no reason why a different con- ion should be put upon the same ı in different orders, because in one oth parties are to pay costs, and in her both are to receive costs.

is said, why should not the defendant call on the plaintiff to pay to him the costs which he would have had to pay had the defendant brought a cross action and succeeded? But the defendant is not injured; he gets a benefit from the combination of both actions in one. But in truth we should disregard the result of the proceedings when interpreting the words of the order before us; because we have to consider the words of the order in the same way without reference to any question whether the plaintiff was right or wrong. It may be, perhaps, a ground for making some variation in the form of order when it is being made, but when made it should be construed without reference to any such question.

FRY, L.J.—The appellant's counsel has failed to convince me of any miscarriage, either in the taxation or in the judgment of the Court below.

Solicitors—Grundy, Izod & Grundy, agents for M. F. Carter, Newnham, for appellant; C. J. Mander, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1882.
Nov. 30.

In re ORR EWING.
ORR EWING v. ORR EWING.

Administration—Domiciled Scotchman—Assets in England and in Scotland—Administration in England—Appearance of Scotch Executors without Protest—Jurisdiction.

A domiciled Scotchman by his will appointed six executors; three of them were resident in England, and the other three were resident in Scotland. The bulk of the testator's property was in Scotland, but he was possessed of about 25,000*l. in England. The will was proved in both countries by all the executors. A beneficiary under the will commenced an action in England against all the executors (who appeared without protest) to administer the entire estate. All the assets had, in* the meantime, been transferred to Scotland. At the trial the defendants objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an administration order, and MANISTY, J., in the exercise of his discretion, refused to make the order:—Held, on appeal, that as the defendants had by appearing without protest submitted to the jurisdiction, there was no discretion to exercise, and that the plaintiff was entitled as of right to an administration order.

In re Orr Ewing, App.

This was an appeal from a decision of Manisty, J.

J. Orr Ewing, a domiciled Scotchman, and carrying on in Scotland an extensive business in partnership, made a will in Scotch form, dated the 17th of November, 1873, by which he gave his property to the six defendants, all of whom were Scotchmen, upon certain trusts.

The testator died on the 15th of April, 1878; and the six defendants proved the will both in Scotland and England. The personal estate of the testator amounted to nearly half a million, of which 25,000*l.* was in England, the rest was in Scotland.

Amongst the trusts of the will, a legacy of 60,000*l.*, as well as the ultimate residue of the estate, was directed to be held upon trusts for the children of James Ewing, who was a brother of the testator, and one of his executors and trustees.

In February, 1880, this action was commenced by the three youngest of the children of James Ewing, by G. W. Hope, their next friend, for the administration of the testator's estate.

At the commencement of the action two of the defendants were resident in England, and another, being a Member of Parliament, was in London during the session. The other three defendants were resident in Scotland, and leave was obtained to serve the writ upon them there. All the defendants entered an appearance in the usual way.

In May, 1880, the plaintiffs issued a summons for an administration order under Order XV. rule 1, which was opposed by the defendants on the ground that it would not be for the benefit of the infant plaintiffs that the action should go on. The summons came before Jessel, M.R., personally in chambers, and an enquiry was directed whether the action was properly instituted, and whether it would be fit and proper and for the benefit of the infant plaintiffs that it should be further prosecuted; ultimately, two of the plaintiffs, one of whom had attained twenty-one, and the other of whom was about to do so, and who did not desire the action to continue, were discharged from being plaintiffs; but his Lordship considered that it was for the benefit of the youngest child, who was resident in England, that the action should continue. The writ was accordingly amended; and on the 9th of April, 1881, the plaintiff delivered his statement of claim.

The statement of claim alleged that an arrangement come to between the defendants and the surviving partners of the testator as to the payment out of the value of the testator's share in the partnership assets was founded on a wrong principle, and was a devastavit; and that it was for the benefit of the infant plaintiff that he should be made a ward of Court, and that the testator's estate should be administered under the direction of the Court. The plaintiff claimed an order for administration, a declaration that the defendants were jointly and severally liable to make good all loss resulting from their alleged improper arrangement with the surviving partners, accounts on the footing of wilful default, and further relief.

The defendants, by their statement of defence, stated that there were then no assets of the testator in England, that proceedings had been instituted, and were then pending before the proper Scotch Court, against the defendants in respect of the testator's estate, in which proceedings all questions raised in the present action relating to the administration of the testator's estate could be disposed of by a tribunal conversant with the law of the country according to which those questions must be decided; and that in particular the question as to the mode in which the share and interest of the testator in the partnership business ought to be paid out would be settled by the Scotch Court. They alleged that it was not for the benefit of the plaintiff that he should be made a ward of Court, and that the action was commenced against the wishes of all per-interested in the estate other than the her of the plaintiff, and they sub-ed that under the circumstances the rt had no jurisdiction to make any.

In re Orr Ewing, App.

order as was claimed, and that, in event, it had only jurisdiction to make lministration order as to the personalty ngland.
appeared that the proceedings taken he Scotch Courts would settle all ques-between the partners and the testaestate, but were not adapted to ining an administration of the testaestate.
n the 17th of February, 1882, the n came on for trial before Manisty, J., ng for Kay, J. One of the defendants then examined, and said that he did think that the testator had any debts ngland at the time of his death, and there were none now; that he did remember any claims having been in in respect of any alleged English anisty, J., considered that the Court a discretion as to granting an order the administration of the estate in land, and, under the circumstances, ned to make an order.

ie plaintiff appealed.

igby, Q.C., and Fellows, for the ap-nt, contended that there was no stion for the Judge to exercise, and the plaintiff was entitled as of right to der for administration. They relied tirling Maxwell v. Cartwright (1).
wey, Q.C., and Maclean, for the ndents, contra, argued that the Scotch ts were the primary forum for the nistration of the estate, and that, r the circumstances, the view taken he Court below was correct. They Enohin v. Wylie (2), Eames v. Hacon
Preston v. Melville (4), Crispin v.
ioni (5), Meiklan v. Campbell (6),
Pipon v. Pipon (7), The Carron Iron Company v. Maclaren (8), Weatherby v. St. Giorgio (9), Cook v. Gregson (10), Innes v. Mitchell (11), and Wallace v. The Attorney-General (12).

No reply was called for.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Manisty; and after hearing the arguments addressed to us on the part of the respondents I am not surprised at that decision, because I think that the learned Judge might fairly arrive at the conclusion that the practice of the Court of Chancery, which in this respect is the same as the Chancery Division, was very different from what it really is. He could not suppose that eminent counsel would address him with long and elaborate arguments which had no bearing on the case which he had to decide, and he would be naturally led to the conclusion that there was some important discretion to be exercised by him. If there had been such a discretion it may well be that he arrived at a correct decision as to the exercise of it. But when we look at the facts there was no discretion to be exercised, and no right, as it appears to me, on the part of the defendants to resist a judgment for administration.

The facts are of the simplest kind. The plaintiff is an infant entitled to a substantial share or interest in a legacy of 60,000*l.*, and also in the residuary estate. There is no question at all about his title. The property, according to the statement of the defendants, who must approximately know its amount, is nearly half a million after payment of the debts. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to something very substantial. He brings an action asking for general administration of the estate, on the ground that he is entitled to have his share of the legacy of 60,000*l.*, and his share of the residuary property, secured for his benefit as an infant, and that proper provision may be made for his main-

48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 562; Law Rep. . D. 522.
10 H.L. Cas. 1; 31 Law J. Rep. Chanc.

50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 182; 740; Law 16 Ch. D. 407; on app. 18 ibid. 347.
8 Cl. & F. 1.
3 Sw. & Tr. 96; 32 Law J. Rep. Prob. & M.

24 Beav. 100.

(7) Amb. 799.
(8) 5 H.L. Cas. 416.
(9) 2 Ha. 624.
(10) 2 Drew. 286; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 734.
(11) 4 Drew. 141; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 625.
(12) 35 Beav. 21; 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 124; Law Rep. 1 Chanc. 1.

In re Orr Ewing, App.

tenance as a ward of the Court. If the testator had been an English testator, and the executors English executors, a judgment would have been a matter of course. The case would then no doubt have been heard as a short cause, and the ordinary judgment for administration pronounced. But it happens that the testator was a domiciled Scotchman, and that his six executors were also Scotchmen. The plaintiff was resident in England, two out of the six executors were resident in England, another of them was resident for a considerable part of the year in England, the other three executors resided in Scotland; and all the six executors proved the will both in Scotland and England. It also appears that of the half a million or thereabouts of which the testator died possessed he was at his decease entitled to about 25,000*l.* in England, and that the rest of his property was in Scotland.

Now for the present purpose it makes no difference whether the testator was a domiciled Scotchman, or a domiciled Irishman, or a domiciled Frenchman. If people in this country are liable to pay or to give security for a large sum of money, it is quite immaterial how the plaintiff's title arises, provided he has a title, to the money in the hands of the defendants, and the defendants are within the jurisdiction —three of the defendants clearly were within the jurisdiction, and as to them I cannot see a shadow of defence. The other three were served in Scotland, out of the jurisdiction. They appeared not under protest, but in the ordinary way, and so submitted to the jurisdiction. It appears to me that from that moment they were in exactly the same position as the other three, and that they could no longer object that they were not properly served. Then what did they do after they appeared? They took a proceeding to enquire as to whether the suit as then constituted was for the benefit of the infant. This enquiry, it appears, ultimately came before me, though I have no recollection of it. In the result it was decided that the suit was a proper suit, and ought to go on. It went on to trial, and then at the trial the executors urged the objection which they have taken by their pleadings, that there was no jurisdiction. Now the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery which has been transferred to the High Court was a personal jurisdiction which can be exercised against a defendant who is within the jurisdiction, or is properly served outside the jurisdiction and submits to the jurisdiction. Therefore there was clear jurisdiction to pronounce a judgment for administration, and the arguments of the defendants really amount to nothing.

I will say a word or two about the supposed hardship and the supposed inconvenience. When a defendant in Scotland is served out of the jurisdiction, he has a right to come to the Court and say, "There are sufficient reasons why I should not be dragged up from Scotland to be sued in England." The three defendants who were served in Scotland could, therefore, at the proper time, have moved (with what prospect of success under the circumstances of this case I do not say) to have the order for service on them discharged, on the ground that they ought to be sued in Scotland, the country of their residence, and not in England. In considering that motion, it being in the discretion of the Court whether it will order service out of the jurisdiction, the Court would have had regard to the inconvenience that might be suffered by the defendants from being sued out of their own country, as well as to the other circumstances of the case; but such an application stands on a totally different footing from a resistance to a judgment at the trial.

There is another point to be noticed. I caught during the argument an expression to which I do not assent. Scotland was called a foreign country. That, in my opinion, is quite erroneous. Ever since the union of the kingdom of Great Britain Scotland has been an integral part of Great Britain. It is not a foreign country. It has a separate legal jurisdiction; but so had several counties in England, and one of them still has. At one time Wales had a separate jurisdiction, the Court of Great Session. Until far on in this century the County Palatine of Durham had a separate jurisdiction; and there are still the Duchy and Palatine Courts in Lancashire. To talk of Scotland as a foreign country, and to say that the same rules apply as if it

e Orr Ewing, App.

foreign country, is, I think, a great
It is not only an integral part of ingdom, but the judgment of this can be enforced in Scotland in the way that the judgment of a Scotch can be enforced in England. Moren the case of a foreign country there difficulty in ascertaining the foreign Where questions of foreign law hey have to be tried by the sworn or rn testimony of advocates and exas to what the law is. This is very enient, and it would be much more ctory to obtain the decision of the s of the foreign country on the law ir own country. This, however, in se of a foreign country cannot be but the Legislature has empowered nglish Courts, where a question of law arises in the course of English ion, to take the opinion of the Scotch , which they are bound to give, and tively has empowered the Scotch to take the opinion of the English on a point of English law arising tch litigation. There is, therefore, iculty at all where a point of Scotch ises in an English litigation, because be decided in Scotland; and so a f English law arising in a Scotch ion can be decided in England. At me time there may be questions of e and inconvenience, which would e attention on a motion to discharge er for service out of the jurisdiction.
y in some cases be very expensive roublesome to have a Scotch estate istered in London, or an English administered in Scotland. But, on her hand, it is quite possible, espen a case like the present, where three defendants are resident in England, n administration in England may use any additional expense. I do t my judgment upon considerations enience or inconvenience, but upon ound, that at the trial of an action, Court has jurisdiction, and a liability blished against a defendant, the cannot decline to exercise the juris, except in the one single case where s an attempted abuse of jurisdiction is, where the defendant alleges that doubly vexed. We were formerly r with the case where a plaintiff sued both at law and in equity at the same time for the same matter, and was compelled to elect in which Court he would proceed. The same case may still occur as regards the County Palatine and the High Court; and there the Court will stop one suit, because such a double proceeding is an abuse of litigation. I should be prepared to say that the same principle would apply to Scotland, on the ground that we should give credit to the Queen's Courts in Scotland, as I do most cheerfully and fully, that they would administer justice quite as well as the Queen's Courts in England. Consequently, if there was an administration suit pending in Scotland, especially if it was a prior suit, I should think that this Court had jurisdiction to stay the suit instituted in England, on the ground that the defendants were not to be doubly vexed. I know, however, of no ground on which a Judge can refuse to give a plaintiff the relief to which he is entitled as against the defendant, merely because it might be more convenient in that Judge's opinion that the defendant should be sued somewhere else.

On these grounds I am compelled to differ from the result at which Mr. Justice Manisty has arrived, and to say that this order ought to be discharged, and the common administration judgment made in the plaintiff's favour. This being a family suit, it will be best that the costs of the appeal, as well as the costs below, should be costs in the action.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of opinion that the order appealed from was erroneous, and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree in the ordinary form.

The facts are very simple. The plaintiff undoubtedly is interested as cestui que trust under a will made by a domiciled Scotchman, and the suit is properly framed, the personal representatives having been constituted such in England, and being before the Court. I mention this because it gets rid of many of the cases cited, and of much of the argument. Three of these six defendants are resident in England. The other three are not resident here; but when served out of the jurisdiction, they came in and appeared absolutely, and did not in any way object to the sufficiency or propriety of the order for service. That being so, they must, in my opinion, be treated in exactly the same way as if they were subject to the jurisdiction by residence. They had an opportunity, if they thought fit, of appearing conditionally, and moving to discharge the order for service out of the jurisdiction. If they had done so, the Court might have considered all the circumstances bearing upon the question—whether it was more reasonable to leave them to be sued in their natural tribunal of residence, or to bring them before a Court which was not their natural tribunal. But that is past; and they are here as defendants, subject to the jurisdiction, just as if they had been served in London. That gets rid of all the cases cited where, upon motion to discharge an order for service out of the jurisdiction, the Court has considered whether, in the exercise of its discretion, it ought to bring the parties before that which was not their natural tribunal. That being so, we have the simple case of trustees and executors within the jurisdiction being sued by one who under the will of which they have to administer the trusts is a cestui que trust.

In re Orr Ewing, App.

What, then, are the objections which have been raised by the defendants? Objections have been raised founded on cases where there was an entirely different state of circumstances—where there were two sets of personal representatives—one appointed by the tribunal of the country where the testator was domiciled, and another and different set of persons appointed representatives in another country where there happened to be personal estate. There the questions which have arisen have been of two kinds. What are the rights of the executors in the country of the domiciled as against the administrator appointed in this country, and when and at what stage can the trustees and executors of the country of domicile require the person whom we may call the ancillary administrator to hand over to them the assets collected under the ancillary administration? Those questions in no way arise here. The cases which perhaps come a little nearer to the present case in form, though not in reality, are the cases as to suing the ancillary administrator in the country where he has collected the assets. Pipon v. Pipon (7) was a case of that nature. The intestate was domiciled in Jersey; and the bill was brought to have the English assets administered here, the general administrator not being before the Court; and it was decided that such a suit could not be maintained. That can have no application where all the persons in whom the estate is vested are here, so that there can be a complete administration, and it is admitted that the plaintiff is a cestui que trust.

Great reliance was placed by the respondents on the observations of Lord Westbury in Enohin v. Wylie (2). I shall not comment upon those observations, but will only remark that if they bear the sense which was attributed to them by the counsel for the respondents in the present case, neither Lord Cranworth nor Lord Chelmsford, who also moved the judgment of the House, in any way acceded to them. Lord Cranworth puts the case in a way very appropriate to the present (2). "Applying these well-established rules to the present case, we have to deal with a will, valid by the law of the domicile, appointing executors generally, and proved by them in our Court of Probate. By virtue of the probate they, as a matter of course, obtained possession of the Consols in question. The duty of the Court is to take care that they distribute this large fund according to the provisions of the will, all debts having been paid." The defendants in the present case are just in the same position as the executors there; and, in my opinion, it is the duty of the Court, unless a strong reason is shewn to the contrary, to see that the fund is properly administered. Lord Chelmsford deals with the matter in exactly the same way. It is very true that when we have to decide the rights of the parties under a Scotch instrument, we must consider whether the Scotch law gives to its terms an effect and signification which the English law would not; and if there is any reasonable doubt on that question, we must look to the Courts in Scotland to tell us what meaning the Scotch law attributes to the instrument. But that does not bear on the question whether the decree should now be made. When there is a decision in the Scotch Court, as there shortly will be, on the point as to the account between the testator's estate and his partners, of course it will be the duty of the Courts in England to follow that decision. So if, in working out the decree now to be made, a question should arise turning on Scotch law, about which there is any substantial doubt, undoubtedly the Court, if there was a suit there, would wait until that suit had decided the question; or if there were no such suit, would send the question to be decided by a Scotch Court. But that is an entirely different thing from saying that this Court is not to administer the trusts of an instrument where the trustees of that instrument are here subject to the jurisdiction.

It has been strongly impressed upon us that this estate would be more conveniently administered in Scotland. Now if there were an administration suit already pending in Scotland in which the estate could be administered, and all the questions that can arise in the course of the administration could be decided, though I doubt whether there could be a plea of a pending suit, I do not doubt that it would be the duty of the Court to stop a suit from going on here vexatiously and unnecessarily, when all questions would be decided in the Scotch suit by a competent tribunal. In the present case there is no suit in Scotland which can be called an administration suit, but only a suit which will decide one of the questions involved in this action.

For these reasons I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, and the usual judgment for administration pronounced.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors—Lattey & Hart, for plaintiff; Johnsons, Upton, Budd & Atkey, for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Jan. 25.

Ex parte RITSO; in re RITSO.

Bankruptcy—Rehearing—Limit of Time—Debtor's Summons—Judgment Debt—Statement of Consideration—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 71—Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, rule 143—Rules of Court, 1875, Order LVIII. rule 15.

As a general rule, in granting a rehearing of a matter in bankruptcy, the Court will be guided by the analogy of the time limited for appealing from an order, but on special grounds a rehearing will be granted after the expiration of such time: —So held on an application to rehear a bankruptcy petition which had been dismissed.

Where a debtor's summons is founded on a judgment debt it is not necessary that the consideration for the judgment should be stated in the summons, and if it is wrongly stated the summons will not necessarily be invalidated thereby.

On the 26th of July, 1882, a debtor's summons for the sum of 585*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* was issued against Ritso by Humphrey as trustee in the liquidation of Brown & Co. It was stated in the summons that the amount claimed was for debt, interest and costs on a judgment dated the 24th of November, 1881, the consideration being for money lent and advanced by the liquidating debtors. Ritso having failed to comply with the summons on the 4th of September, Humphrey presented a bankruptcy petition against him. The petition stated the judgment and the consideration for it in the same way as they were stated in the summons; but it was afterwards amended by leave of the Registrar by stating the consideration as being "a promissory note, dated the 9th of September, 1880, for 527*l.*, given by the said Ritso to Brown & Co." The petition was heard by the Registrar on the 26th of October, and dismissed, on the ground that the act of bankruptcy was not proved, the consideration for the judgment being incorrectly stated in the summons.

This decision was not appealed against; but on the 16th of November (the last day for giving notice of appeal) Humphrey applied ex parte for a rehearing, which was granted by the Registrar, he having come to the conclusion that he had been wrong in dismissing the petition. The rehearing took place on the 9th of December, when an adjudication was made against Ritso, who now appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and Doria, for the appellant.—Unless special grounds are shewn, a rehearing ought not to be granted after the expiration of the time limited for appealing—Ex parte Brown (1). A rehearing ought not to be granted ex parte.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That is discretionary. He referred to Parmiter v. Parmiter (2) and Markham v. Markham (3).]

The consideration for the judgment was incorrectly stated in the summons. According to the evidence there was no consideration for the judgment, and therefore there was no good petitioning creditor's debt.

Herbert Reed, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R., expressed his opinion that the judgment could not be impeached, and that therefore there was a good petitioning creditor's debt, and continued:—

Another point has been taken which is wholly insufficient. It is said that the debtor's summons is to go for nothing, because in it the consideration for the judgment was wrongly stated. It was stated to be money lent to the debtor, instead of what it was in fact, a promissory note given for money lent. It is the merest technicality in the world. The ultimate consideration was the money lent, though no doubt the legal consideration was the promissory note. But what is the effect of the misstatement? There is no law requiring the consideration for a judgment debt to be stated in a debtor's summons. The judgment debt is the debt due, although, no doubt, in bankruptcy the judgment can be disregarded if it is shewn that there was no consideration for it. But this does not make the summons wrong because the consideration is wrongly stated in it.

Another objection arises in this way. The petition stated the consideration for the debt in the same way as it was stated in the summons. The petition was afterwards amended by leave of the Court, and no fresh affidavit was made to verify the amendment. Well, there is no rule requiring a fresh affidavit. The Judge has a discretion, and of course he would not require a fresh affidavit if only an immaterial alteration had been made in the petition. But this objection ought to have been taken in the Court below. It was not taken there, and we cannot allow it to be raised now.

I come now to the only important objection. The petition was originally heard by the Registrar on the 26th of October, and he dismissed it. He made a mistake in his decision, and this was brought to his attention on the 16th of November, the last day for giving notice of appeal; and he then, on an ex parte application, gave leave to have the petition reheard, and fixed the 30th of November for the rehearing. It was, in fact, reheard on the 9th of December, more than a fortnight after the time for appealing had elapsed. The question is, whether the rehearing was too late. This matter was considered by the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Brown (1). They noticed the fact that no limit of time is fixed by the Act or the Rules for presenting a petition of rehearing. But they said that the Court must be careful not to allow a man to escape from the rule which limits the time for appealing by granting a rehearing as a matter of course. The decision, however, laid down no hard and fast rule, though the Court said that, as a general rule, they would, in granting a rehearing, be guided by the analogy of the time for appealing. In that case they held that the delay had been too long; it was a delay of several months. In the present case there was a lapse of only a few days. And we must also recollect that under the Judicature Act the Court

(1) 43 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 105; Law Rep. 9 Chanc. 304.

(2) 2 De Gex, F. & J. 526; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 508.

(3) Law Rep. 16 Ch. D. 1.

as power to extend the time under special circumstances; we adopt the analogy of an full extent, still the time may on special grounds. Now ed in the present case? The me to the conclusion that he blunder, and wished to set it nay trust Judges not to grant too readily on such a ground en, another rule which has n is this, that when a Judge nce has exercised his discre- t of Appeal will not interfere as been a gross miscarriage— y plain miscarriage would be n. In my opinion, in the not only has there not been rriage, but there has been no at all. I think there is no aying that the rehearing was uite agree with Mr. Winslow ers relating to adjudications y we ought to be very careful g a rehearing after a petition missed, because persons may deal with the debtor on the tition having been dismissed, eal having been presented ime allowed for that purpose. at objection is met in the by the memorandum of the of a day for the rehearing laced on the file of the pro- that any one who was search- with the view of discovering night safely give credit to the have seen the memorandum, hus have had notice of the due time. No third party een injured by the rehearing. rever, wish to lay it down as that, if the application for a lelayed for a few days beyond appealing, it ought to be gh of course the delay would stance to be taken into con- I think the decision of the the present case was right.

L.J.—I am of the same opi- e question whether the notice ring was too late I do not anything. As to the judg- ne that in bankruptcy a judg- —CHANC.

ment is not conclusive; but this does not mean in every case the consideration for the judgment must be stated. It only means that if the debtor can impeach the judgment he will be allowed to do so. But prima facie the judgment stands. And as to the amendment of the petition, it does not appear to me that it affected the substance of the case, and it would be absurd to say on that ground that an act of bankruptcy has not been committed. I think the adjudication was rightly made at last.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors—S. B. Somerville, for appellant; T. Allingham, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 20.

ARUNDELL v. BELL.

Partnership—Solicitor's Business—Dissolution—Goodwill.

In 1877 the three partners in a firm of solicitors agreed that the partnership should be dissolved, that two of them should continue to carry on the partnership business, and should employ the third as a clerk at a salary, and that all the books, papers and other property of the firm should vest in and be the property of the two continuing partners. The third partner died shortly afterwards, and in an action by his administratrix against the two continuing partners, an order was made directing the partnership accounts to be taken as from January, 1874.

In taking the accounts, the plaintiff claimed that a sum should be allowed in respect of the interest of the deceased partner in the "goodwill" of the partnership business, which was put at 10,000*l.*, being five years' purchase of the estimated annual profits of the business:—

Held, that under the circumstances no

Arundell v. Bell, App.

sum could be allowed in respect of the alleged "goodwill" of the business.

Per JESSEL, M.R.—As a general rule, and in the absence of express contract, there is not, in a partnership between solicitors, any partnership asset which is capable of being sold or valued as the "goodwill" of the partnership business.

On the 30th of November, 1877, Messrs. Bell, Steward, & Arundell, who had for some years previously thereto carried on and were then carrying on business in co-partnership as solicitors, entered into a deed by which it was agreed that the partnership should be dissolved; that Bell and Steward should continue to carry on the partnership business together, employing Arundell as their clerk at a salary of 100*l.* a month, plus a commission on profits; and that the books, papers and other property of the firm should vest in and be the property of Bell and Steward. This arrangement was carried into effect; but in April, 1878, Arundell died, and shortly afterwards his administratrix commenced this action against Bell and Steward, claiming to have the partnership accounts taken.

In January, 1879, an order was made directing an account of all the partnership dealings and transactions as from the 1st of January, 1874, and in due course the chief clerk made his certificate.

The plaintiff then took out a summons, which was adjourned into Court, claiming (amongst other things) to vary the certificate by inserting in the accounts an allowance in her favour in respect of Arundell's interest in the goodwill of the business. This was put at 10,000*l.*, being five years' purchase of an estimated annual profit of 2,000*l.* a year.

Kay, J., having disallowed the claim, the plaintiff appealed.

Sir H. Giffard, Q.C., and Chester, for the appellant.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Onslow, for the respondents.

JESSEL, M.R.—This case involves some considerations of a general character, but it also involves the construction of a particular article of agreement. As regards the first point, it is a matter of general interest; as regards the second point, it depends entirely upon the construction of the document in question.

The first point which strikes one is this, whether in the ordinary case of a partnership between solicitors there is any goodwill to sell. Now in an ordinary case, especially where, as in this case, the offices do not belong to the firm, it is difficult to see what there is to sell. The practice of resorting to a particular office is of very little use as regards solicitors, who change their offices, as we know, without detriment to their business. No one imagines that whether a solicitor is carrying on business at No. 4 New Square, or No. 5 New Square, or No. 6 New Square, it makes the slightest difference to his business; but in this case, as I said before, the offices do not belong to the firm, and therefore the habit of resorting to a particular office cannot be sold. Then you cannot sell the clients' papers, which are the most valuable things of all. A man often does get the papers of another solicitor; but it is illegal. When a solicitor is in possession of papers he must take care of them for the client who has entrusted them to his custody. Therefore they cannot be sold. It may be quite true that, if a solicitor does do so, and hands over the papers, although it is illegal, the purchaser may get something by it; but that, of course, would not justify the act. Then what is there to sell? You might sell the debts or the bills of costs due from the clients; but that would not be goodwill. Then the only other suggestion is, that you can sell the right of the firm's name. I take it you cannot. According to our practice it is wrong. I will not say whether it is absolutely illegal or not, for it is not necessary to go into that question. In the case of an unqualified man, of course it is absolutely illegal; and even in the case of a qualified solicitor, it is not allowed to him to practise in the name of another qualified solicitor—I will not say it is penal. A solicitor must not issue a writ except in his own name. He can, and may, and frequently does, associate with his own name the name of a dead partner whose name also appears; but a solicitor must not, according to our rules, writs in the name of another soli-

herefore it appears to me that there is ing analogous to the goodwill in an ary trade which you can sell in the of a partnership of living solicitors. condly, even if there were anything ll, it appears to me to be also contrary e intention of the parties in this case. ou can sell anything at all you will something which will entitle the pur- er to embarrass or prevent the re- ing partners from carrying on their ness as usual. Of course the assump- must be that the purchaser must get thing, but that is not the intention e partners here. When persons go partnership, they intend that when dissolve each shall carry on business; to say that they are to be embarrassed revented in the absence of express act is, in my opinion, to introduce a term into the partnership articles of tors. I am not going to lay down her or not by special agreement inter ou can sell something analogous to will—that of course is matter of special act; but it does appear to me that, as eral rule, there is nothing in the nature partnership asset to be sold which can be termed goodwill in an ordinary nership between solicitors. Now I assume that that is not so, and then ll examine these articles of agreement. pears to me that it is clearly contrary e meaning of these articles to say that thing called "goodwill" is to be put or sale and sold as an asset of the part- hip. The effect of such a sale would o interfere in some way or another Messrs. Bell & Steward carrying on business. Now assume for this pur- that there was something to sell, and fore something which the purchaser l get which would diminish to the t of the value of the purchase-money ight of Messrs. Bell & Steward to on the business. I am looking at the s of partnership as a whole—I do ly upon any particular words in them, look at the nature of the agreement. the nature of the agreement was this, Messrs. Bell & Steward were to carry eir business, and that Mr. Arundell, had been their partner, was to become their clerk for six months at a salary of 100*l.* a month. That shews that the old business was to be continued. Messrs. Bell & Steward would get the benefit of carrying it on as solicitors, and Mr. Arundell would get the benefit of being a managing clerk at 100*l.* a month.

Now it appears to me, quite independently of the mere wording of the agreement, that these arrangements are wholly inconsistent, as I look at the agreement, with the notion that anything was to be sold in the nature of goodwill which would interfere with the business being carried on; and, that being so, it appears to me that the agreement itself negatives the idea of anything being sold away to a stranger; and, being silent as to anything being paid by Messrs. Bell & Steward, it also negatives the idea that they are to pay anything in the shape of goodwill. Therefore on the wording, or rather on the construction of this agreement as a whole, it is plain to my mind that the goodwill, or the so-called goodwill, was not to be sold, and that Messrs. Bell & Steward were to carry on the business. I do not take quite the same view as the learned Judge took in the Court below, because, although I do not say that Mr. Arundell could not be restrained from carrying on business, it appears to me plain that it was the intention of the parties that he should not, because he is to devote his whole time to the management of the business of Messrs. Bell & Steward. For these reasons I think the appeal of the plaintiff must be dismissed.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I agree in thinking that this appeal must be dismissed. Now, I am not prepared at the present moment to say that in no case of a dissolution of partnership may there not be a something analogous to goodwill, or that which might be made the subject of contract between the parties and treated as having a certain value which might be capable of being ascertained, but as far as regards the general proposition that under all circumstances the goodwill of a business of a partnership between solicitors can be put up to auction and sold to the highest bidder, I am at the present moment not disposed to assent to that proposition, although I do not think it necessary in the view I take of this case to express any definite opinion upon it. It appears to me it would be very difficult to imagine how to describe the particular interest which you call "the goodwill" in the particulars of sale; and even assuming you did so describe it, and some man came forward and became the purchaser of the goodwill, what would he get? I cannot at all follow it, and it is not necessary to express a decided opinion upon that point. But whatever interest there might have been which under any circumstances could be treated as in the nature of goodwill and as an asset of the partnership, I am of opinion the terms of the particular deed of November, 1877, exclude it in the present case. It is impossible, I think, to look at it without coming to that conclusion. The very first clause of it provides that when the partnership is to be dissolved that all the profits of the business, whatever it might be, are to be enjoyed by the two partners other than Mr. Arundell, and arrangements are made by which Mr. Arundell is to be taken into the service of the new firm, as you may call it, at a particular salary. It is clear upon the face of this instrument that there was to be no such interest that could be considered in the nature of or analogous to the goodwill which would entitle Mr. Arundell to the profits.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I also am of opinion that, upon the construction of the articles of dissolution which are before us, this appeal ought to be dismissed. It is not necessary for the decision of this case to enter into the wider question whether it is possible that the goodwill of a solicitor's business may be a saleable asset under some deeds or not. I say nothing about that—I would rather not lay down a general law on the subject. When you come to look at the agreement between these parties, I do not think there is any difficulty at all. The first clause is that the partnership shall be dissolved as from the 30th of November, 1877, and that Mr. Arundell shall have no interest in the profits of the business which shall be earned after that date. That excludes him from the profits of a business which was to be continued by somebody else. Then it says, "and the signature of the partnership hereby dissolved shall henceforth be vested solely for all formal purposes and for winding up the said partnership in the said Alfred Bell and Frederick William Steward alone." That probably would prevent them using the partnership name except for formal purposes and for winding up. To that extent there is a limitation of the goodwill in their hands. Then, to pass on to the 2nd clause, Mr. Arundell stipulates that he will act as a clerk to manage such business as Mr. Bell shall require for six months, at a salary of 100*l.* per month. Then, again, there is another clause, which says that Mr. Arundell shall give his whole time during the next six months to the management of the business of Messrs. Bell & Steward. That of course excludes him from setting up a rival business in opposition to the one from which he has retired, during those six months at all events. That practically gives the partners the benefit or almost all the benefit that they would get if they had the goodwill in so many words. Then to pass on to the 5th clause, it is this:—"The books, papers and other property belonging to the partnership hereby dissolved, and to the partnership heretofore carried on between the said parties hereto and the late Mr. Samuel Steward (other than and except accrued profits, book debts and realised money assets in which the said Cecil Arundell, subject to all liabilities affecting the same, shall retain his present position), shall as regards the said Cecil Arundell henceforth vest in and be the property of the said Alfred Bell and Frederick William Steward, to and for their own absolute use and benefit, who will give all proper facilities to the said Cecil Arundell at all times hereafter to inspect the same"—and so forth.

Now if the question were, whether the continuing partners could obtain an injunction to restrain Mr. Arundell from practising as a solicitor in competition with the firm after a period of six months, there would, I think, be some difficulty—that is to say, there is considerable doubt in my mind whether under the word "property" the goodwill to the full extent which I have mentioned would pass.

ell v. Bell, App.

it would not; but on the other it did pass, it would pass expressly ese words. The "books, papers r property belonging to the part- whatever that may mean, clearly hem; and what we have to look is, to see whether the agreement the parties negatives a sale of a as a distinct asset, supposing it is. Now though that is not actually d in the further words, yet to sell dwill, supposing it was a saleable ould be to entirely upset the whole rrangements between the parties. d be contrary to it. What they what they expressed appears to have been this, that, subject to a doubt as to the right of Mr. ll to carry on business in his own nd to solicit the old clients of the r the expiration of six months, ntlemen were to have all the rest oodwill. The agreement certainly m the goodwill, subject, possibly, limitation. It seems to me we be setting up, not the agreement the parties, but another agree- we were to interpolate into this rovision for varying that benefit nquestionably they were to have, was the arrangement between the It seems to me that the view by the learned Judge was right, t the appeal should be dismissed th.

—

s—Miller & Miller, for appellant; Bell & Steward, for respondents.

—

F THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

M.R.
r, L.J.
83.
. 24.

HACK v. THE LONDON PROVIDENT BUILDING SOCIETY.

ding Society—Mortgage by Member n for an Account—Reference to tion—The Building Societies Act, 34.

rules of a building society established the Building Societies Act, 1874, d that disputes between the society and any of its members should be referred to the Registrar of Building Societies. A member who had borrowed money from the society on mortgage brought an action against the society for an account of the proceeds of sale of the mortgaged property (which had been sold by them under their power of sale), alleging that the property had been sold at an undervalue, and claiming that the defendants should be charged with the difference between the true value and the sale price. On an application by the defendants for a stay of proceedings, and that all matters in the action might be referred to the Registrar:—Held (affirming the decision of PEARSON, J.), that the dispute being merely as to a money demand was one which must be settled by arbitration.

Wright v. The Monarch Investment Building Society (46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 649; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 726) followed.

Mulkern v. Lord (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745; Law Rep. 4 App. Cas. 182) explained.

This was an appeal from a decision of Pearson, J., fully reported ante, p. 225.

Dunham, for the appellant, the plaintiff in the action, urged the same arguments as in the Court below.

W. King, for the society, was not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—I think the decision of Mr. Justice Pearson was quite correct. I have said very often in this Court that the duty of the Court is to find out what an Act of Parliament means, and not to embarrass itself with previous decisions on former Acts when the new Act is clear in its terms. This is an Act referring to building societies only, and very different considerations are applicable to it from those which were applicable to the Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32), which only extended to building societies the then existing Friendly Societies Acts. The 34th section of the Act of 1874 provides that arbitrators are to be named in a particular way, and adds, "Where the parties to any dispute arising in a society under this Act agree to refer the dispute to the Registrar, or where the rules of the society direct disputes to be referred to the Registrar, the award of the Registrar shall have the same effect as that of arbitrators." That is plain enough. Then do the rules of this society direct disputes to be referred to the Registrar? That is answered by the 78th of the society's rules. The rule says, "Every matter in dispute between the society and any member." Is that not to include a claim of account against the society by a member who has mortgaged property to the society? I cannot imagine anything plainer. If the words were "between the society and any member as member," it would not be any clearer. This mortgage is a transaction by the plaintiff as a member of the society. It is indeed simply a security for his subscriptions and fines, and winds up by providing that the rules of the society, so far as they are capable of applying, shall apply to this transaction. It appears to me that if you adopt, not the actual decision of the Exchequer Chamber, but the reasoning upon which the decision was based—namely, that the transaction must be one entered into as member—that is sufficient, for this was plainly a transaction between the society and its member as such. But are we at liberty to insert the words "as member"? I think not. I cannot see any reason, when the words are as plain as they are in this statute, to insert anything.

This is a dispute between a member and the society, and there is an express bargain between the parties that it shall be referred to the Registrar. And what hardship is there to complain of? Every one of the defects in the old law pointed out by the House of Lords in Mulkern v. Lord (1) has been cured by the Act of 1874. Under the old Act the arbitration was referred to a Justice of the peace, and there was no means of enforcing his decision. The new Act is a very comprehensive one, and so far from there being anything to deprecate in a reference to an arbitrator properly constituted, I think it is a very wholesome provision. As to Morrison v. Glover (2), it is not binding upon this Court. Even if it were a decision of a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, it would not be binding upon a question of construction, the words to be construed not being identically the same.

As to Mulkern v. Lord (1), we are bound by that as a decision of the House of Lords; but that is a decision under the old Act, and, as I read it, it only amounts to a decision that the old Act was not intended to apply to such a case—that is, that it was impossible that a case involving important legal questions should be referred to a Justice of the peace. The three Lords who gave judgment all put it upon that ground; so that that case is not only distinguishable from this, but the reasoning of it is an authority for deciding this case as we are now doing. In that case the Court of Appeal was affirmed, but not upon the same ground, and that shews that their Lordships did not agree with the ground upon which the decision in the Court below was based. To affirm a judgment in that way detracts greatly from its value, and makes it no longer a binding authority. In my opinion it leads to mischief, when an Act of Parliament is plain in its terms, and differently worded from an older Act upon the same subject, to refer to decisions upon the older Act. I prefer to read the new Act and find out what it means, and if I find it plain in its terms, as I do here, to act upon it. The decision is perfectly right, and must be affirmed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The case is one of considerable practical importance. The action is brought by the plaintiff as a mortgagor. He became a mortgagor by becoming a member of a building society; and the dispute is clearly one, to my mind, between the society and the plaintiff, as a member of the society. The society was formed under the Building Societies Act of 1874, and we have to decide the question upon the construction of that Act. Under that Act the whole machinery for arbitration has been altered, and provision made for such questions as are raised in this question being properly arbitrated. Under the old Acts the arbitrator was to be a Justice of the peace. And the decisions upon these Acts which have been referred to by Mr. Dunham all proceeded upon the ground that it was ridiculous to refer such ques-

(1) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745; Law Rep. 4 App. Cas. 182.

(2) 4 Exch. Rep. 430; 19 Law J. Rep. Exch. 20.

Justice of the peace. We have do to those old Acts, except as f history. We have simply to he Act of 1874, which provides) that the rules of each society orth whether disputes between and any of its members shall be reference to the Court, to the or to arbitration; and in the bitration an adequate tribunal ted—a cheap and expeditious provided. If we held otherhould be going backwards to state of affairs, and should ing the objects of the Legislapeal accordingly dismissed, with costs.

Broad & Broad, for appellant; J. D. Peard, for the Society.

THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

R. L.J. S. } WATSON v. HOLLIDAY.

ptcy—32 & 33 Vict. c. 71. ss. 12, 9—Infringement of Patent—f Profits — Account directed ustees of Bankrupt—Proof for Profits—Liability of Trustees

t of a patentee to an account of de by an infringer is not a n the nature of unliquidated within section 31 of the Bank-, 1869, and the amount of such rovable in the bankruptcy of the defendant becoming bankrupt, were added as defendants, and made that the action proceed trustees. The trustees did not ischarge the order, and on the peared and cross-examined the witnesses :—

firming KAY, J.), that they were liable to the costs of the action, but the account of profits was limited to an account of the profits received by the bankrupt.

Semble, the order making the trustees parties was improper, and should have been discharged, if an application had been made for that purpose at the proper time.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kay, J., directing an account of profits made by infringement of the plaintiff's patent against not only Holliday, the original defendant, but also against the trustees in his liquidation, and directing the trustees to pay the costs of the action. The case is reported 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 906, except upon the point as to the liability of the trustees to pay the costs.

The trustees appealed.

N. Higgins, Q.C., and H. Percival, for the trustees, argued that the order was wrong in directing the account of profits against them as well as the liquidating debtor; the pleading laid no ground for account against the trustees. The case fell within Barter v. Dubeux (1): the trustees should not have been made parties to the action, but the claim (if provable in bankruptcy) should have been proved in the Bankruptcy Court. Under the Act of 1869, the Court which should try this question is the Bankruptcy Court—sections 12 and 13. The only case in which trustees are properly made parties for the purposes of account is when other persons besides the bankrupt are parties to the action.

[JESSEL, M.R.—You submitted to have the action tried in the Court below, and there is a subsisting order of the High Court, not appealable, that the action shall proceed against you. It is no answer now to say that the order was wrong, which I think it was.]

[Rigby, Q.C., stated that the account of profits had, in fact, only been taken against Holliday, and that the trustees' names had been inserted by mistake when the order had been drawn up.]

Then the order against the trustees per-

(1) 50 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 527; Law Rep. 7 Q.B. D. 413.

Watson v. Holliday, App.

sonally to pay the costs was wrong, not justified by the pleadings nor practice. If they were there simply for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of proof, the object of the pleading would be deceptive.

Rigby, Q.C., and A. T. Watson, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—The sole question of the present appeal is now reduced to this—namely, as to the liability of the trustees to pay the costs of the action. They did indeed contend in the Court below that an account of profits was a demand in the nature of unliquidated damages within section 31 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and therefore was not provable in the bankruptcy of Holliday. The answer to that objection is, that it is not a demand for damages, and is provable; the point is simply unarguable.

It was said that this action ought not to have been allowed to go on against the trustees of Holliday. I cannot say that it ought. I think they might have stopped the action if they had taken steps at the proper time. But they were served more than a year ago with a revivor order, which was served personally on them. They did not move to discharge that order, but went on to trial, and cross-examined one of the plaintiff's witnesses. They might have applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an injunction, and that Court would have decided the question, which would be the most convenient mode of proceeding; but they have taken no steps to contest the validity of the order. Having appeared at the trial, and not having satisfied the Court below, they come here; but I think it is now too late to make any objection.

The only other point is this. These trustees have been ordered to pay the costs of the action. It is plain that the Court had a discretion. If trustees choose to contest the action ab initio, they may be made liable to the costs ab initio. It is in the discretion of the Court. I must say that we are justified here in saying that there is no reason whatever for thinking that Mr. Justice Kay exercised his discretion otherwise than properly.

As to the form of the order, that is purely formal, and we have rectified it by limiting the account to the profits received by Holliday.

LINDLEY, L.J. concurred.

Solicitors—Carr, Son & Thornton, for appellants; Shum, Crossman & Co., agents for Kidson & Co., Sunderland, for plaintiff.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL]

COTTON, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
March 20.

In re PAYNE.
RANDLE v. PAYNE.

Practice — Married Woman — Next Friend—Costs—Stay of Proceedings.

An action was commenced by a married woman suing by her next friend, and an order that the next friend should give security for the costs of the action having been complied with, was dismissed with costs. The married woman then commenced a second action by another next friend against the same defendants for the same object:—Held, that all proceedings in the second action must be stayed until the defendant's taxed costs of the first action had been paid.

Semble, Hind v. Whitmore (2 Kay & J. 458) is no longer law.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, V.C.

In 1881, Mrs. Randle, a married woman, commenced an action before Hall, V.C. by J. Rogers, as her next friend, against the executors of her father, W. Payne, for the administration of his estate. She also claimed the right to enforce her equity to a settlement, and joined her husband as a defendant. Subsequently an order was made requiring J. Rogers to give security for the costs of the action, on the ground that he was a person without any means, and the order not having been complied with, the action was dismissed with costs.

In October, 1882, Mrs. Randle commenced the present action before Bacon

Payne, App.

C. H. Stoke, as her next friend, he same defendants, and claimed ially the same relief as in the ion.

axed costs of the defendants in action amounted to 80*l.*, and had paid.

efendant executors took out a asking that all further pro- in this second action might be ntil their taxed costs of the first d been paid.

V.C., dismissed the summons, lefendants appealed.

, for the appellants.

Turner, for Mrs. Randle.

v. Whitmore (1) and Martano v.) were referred to.

, L.J., said:—I think the ap- are entitled to the order for which . Unfortunately we have not s the reasons upon which the ncellor refused this application, said that he did not think the rule of the Court applied to of a next friend. There is, no decision against the rule unless it be Hind v. Whitmore o doubt different considerations ply in the case of the next friend fant, but a married woman has er of selecting her own next nd is bound to select one who is le to pay costs, if necessary. I eason why the same rule should as where a plaintiff sues without riend. In such a case it is the to stay the second action until ndants' costs of the first action n paid. It would be very hard, to require the new next friend y to pay these costs; but that is t is asked. All that the appel- k is that further proceedings in on should be stayed until their he first action have been paid by y or other. In Hind v. Whitmore ourt did not see fit to extend the e now propose to do. That may have been perfectly reasonable at the date of that decision, but a married woman now stands in a very different position from that in which she then stood. She can now, by leave of the Court, sue without a next friend and with or without giving security for costs; so that I think we ought now to lay it down that the ordinary rule applies to such a case as this. It is said that there is nothing to shew that the next friend in the first action could not pay these costs if proceedings were taken against him to compel payment; but I think it clear that he could not, because Vice-Chancellor Hall was of opinion that he could not, and on that ground ordered him to give security, and afterwards dismissed the action because he failed to give security.

The order will be, stay all proceedings in this action until the defendants' taxed costs of the first have been paid. The costs of this application here and below to be costs in this action.

LINDLEY, L.J., said:—I am of the same opinion. The point raised by this appeal appears to be unsettled or, at any rate, new. If a married woman sues by a next friend it is her duty to select a next friend who is able to pay costs, if necessary. Here the plaintiff's first action was dismissed because her next friend could not give security. If she at once commences another action by a new next friend against the same defendants for the same object, that is vexatious litigation, and I am prepared to say that she ought not to be permitted to do so unless the practice is shewn to be to the contrary. Here it has not been shewn that the practice is to the contrary, and I think it right that the order asked for should be made.

Solicitors—W. Stocken, for appellants; Galmoye & Co., for respondent.

---

ay & J. 458; 25 Law J. Rep. Chanc.

Law J. Rep. Chanc. 510; Law Rep. 14 9.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
March 15.

Ex parte WILLEY; in re WRIGHT.

Bankruptcy—Composition — Power of Debtor to examine Creditor—Jurisdiction —Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 96, 125, 126 —Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, rules 166–171.

The object of section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is discovery and not testimony, and it only applies to cases of bankruptcy. Where, therefore, resolutions for a composition have been registered, the Court has no jurisdiction to order the examination of any one under that section.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, C.J.

In August, 1882, Messrs. M. & A. W. Wright presented a petition for liquidation.

On the 4th of October the creditors, at the first meeting, passed resolutions accepting a composition of 6*s.* in the pound, payable by six instalments extending over a period of two years, the last three instalments being secured to the satisfaction of the committee. A trustee was also appointed to receive and distribute the composition.

The resolutions were subsequently confirmed and duly registered.

On the 27th of October the appellant, J. H. Willey, tendered a proof under the composition for 3,400*l.* as the holder for value of certain bills of exchange.

On the 21st of November the debtors applied, under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to have the appellant summoned for examination. The application was granted; but when the appellant came before the Registrar he declined to be sworn, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Registrar referred the matter to the County Court Judge, who, on the 12th of December, made an order declaring J. H. Willey to have been guilty of contempt in refusing to be sworn and examined in pursuance of the summons issued for that purpose.

From this order J. H. Willey appealed to the Chief Judge.

West, for the appellant.—The Court cannot, under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, examine one of the compounding creditors at the instance of the debtor. In the case of a composition as this is, the Court has not the matter before it, and has no jurisdiction. Section 96 and rule 171 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, only apply after an adjudication, or its equivalent in a liquidation, the appointment of a trustee. The trustee is no party to this application.

Winslow, Q.C., and F. Knight, for the debtors.—Section 96 must be taken with rules 166–171. The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to determine all questions relating to the distribution of assets, and that jurisdiction extends to anything that may be fairly called a case in bankruptcy; and a composition, after all, is bankruptcy —Ex parte Rumboll (1), Megrath v. Grey (2) and In re Dixon; ex parte Shepherd (3); and Ex parte Crossley (4) shews that rule 171 largely extends the operation of section 96. This very point has been indirectly referred to and decided in Ex parte Jones (5). In Ex parte Botting (6) the trustee in a composition was held entitled to an enquiry to ascertain the amount due. Here the debtor is in the place of the trustee; if necessary, we can amend and make the trustee a party, though it is not necessary. A trustee is entitled, before paying over the composition to a creditor, to investigate the validity of his claim—Campbell v. Im Thurm (7). Why not a creditor?—the principles as to proof of a debt are the same in a composition as in bankruptcy—Ex parte Peacock (8). In a bankruptcy the debtor would clearly

(1) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 82; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 842.
(2) 43 Law J. Rep. C.P. 63; Law Rep. 9 C.P. 216.
(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 103; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 430.
(4) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 35; Law Rep. 13 Eq. 409.
(5) Law Rep. 16 Eq. 386.
(6) 44 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 47; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 261.
(7) 45 Law J. Rep. C.P. 482; Law Rep. 1 C.P. D. 167.
(8) 42 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 78; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 687.

be entitled to investigate this claim—Ex parte Austin (9). He is therefore entitled in this case.

West replied.

BACON, C.J.—The whole of Mr. West's argument has proceeded upon a critical examination of the words of the statute, but he will forgive me for saying that he has lost sight of the fact that this is a proceeding in bankruptcy. When a liquidation takes place, it is on a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, and comes within the jurisdiction of the Court and within the purview of the statute, for the statute relates to bankruptcy. A petition of a similar kind, in which the debtor declares that he is utterly insolvent, and commits an act of bankruptcy, and submits himself to the jurisdiction of the Court, is no less a proceeding in bankruptcy, and you need not pick out section 96 from the other sections in the statute when the Court is called on to administer the law in bankruptcy. All that which is the true principle of administration in bankruptcy is lost sight of in Mr. West's verbal argument. He has said very truly that I must not look at any merits; nor do I, except I find the debtor stating in his affidavit the reasons why he desires to examine a creditor. I find what he there states, if it be true, is a matter which concerns everybody engaged in this bankruptcy—for bankruptcy it is, although composition resolutions have been registered. It concerns the creditors to know what the amount of the debtor's assets are, and what are the means he has of meeting his liabilities, that they may form their own judgment as to accepting or not accepting the composition tendered. To the debtor it is of vital importance. To the creditors themselves it is of importance, because if in each statement of assets there appears such a result as makes it probable the debtor will be able to pay the composition, they are justified in accepting the composition. What do the resolutions for a composition come to? They come to this—an equitable arrangement between the creditors, the majority prevailing, that the estate of the bankrupt should be divided among the persons there expressed. One of those persons who is bound by the equitable contract between himself and the other creditors comes in with a proof of a debt which is challenged. Is that not a reasonable ground for the Court, on whom the duty of administrating the bankrupt's estate rests (for the bankrupt, I repeat, he is), directing any investigation that it thinks fit into the circumstances of that proof so tendered? The 96th section is only one section in this Bankruptcy Act. The Act itself authorises rules to be made in pursuance of the 96th section. If it had not, the general jurisdiction of the Court would be forthcoming to say that you may investigate any case in which questions arise as to the equitable rights of the debtor, of the creditors bound by the composition, and of every creditor who comes in to prove; and if there were no authority, I should say it was the plain purview of the statute, and that there was no such limited interpretation to be put on it as Mr. West has argued for. But when I find in Ex parte Jones (5) that there was authority to examine the bankrupt, when I find that rule 32 authorises the examination before proceeding to adjudication, I cannot entertain a doubt that the whole statute, in all its parts, and by the most rigorous construction that can be put on it, does accomplish the object it has in view—namely, to provide for an equitable administration of the whole of the bankrupt's estate; and in such proceedings the right to examine rigorously or otherwise any attempt that is made to share in this distribution of the estate is clear. In this case the gentleman who refuses to answer claims that he is entitled to share in the bankrupt's estate. In my opinion the objection is wholly unreasonable and unjust. I think the order appealed from was a right order to be made, and I must dismiss this appeal.

Mr. West.—I was about to ask your Lordship a suspension for some time.

THE CHIEF JUDGE.—There is no doubt a certain amount of novelty about this particular case. It is the first time that this particular point has been brought before the Court, and for that reason I think that this order ought not to be executed until you have the opportunity of taking the opinion of the Appeal Court, if you intend to do so.

(9) 46 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 1; Law Rep. 4 Ch. D. 13.

From this decision J. H. Willey appealed.

On the hearing of the appeal it was agreed that the application for the summons should be treated as made by the trustee in the composition.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and West, for the appellant, were stopped by the Court.

Winslow, Q.C., and Finlay Knight, for the debtors.—Section 96 is the only section which gives the Court jurisdiction to summon witnesses and examine them.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The Act itself which confers jurisdiction to try, necessarily gives power to examine witnesses. But section 96 is not for purposes of trial but of discovery.]

The section must be taken to be enlarged by rules 166–171.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The subpœna under those rules is for the attendance of a witness. It is not so under section 96. Rules 166–170 have nothing whatever to do with section 96.]

In Ex parte Swift (10) a creditor was held entitled to an order for the examination of the debtor, under section 96, as extended by rule 166.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That was a case of examination of the debtor. I take it that you may always examine the debtor, even without section 96.]

No; section 96 is the only section which gives the power to examine the debtor.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The head-note in the report of Ex parte Swift (10) is not justified by the judgment. There is no express extension of the Act by the rules.]

Section 72 gives the Court large general powers, and by section 78 rules made under the Act are to be of the same force as if enacted in the body of the Act.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That does not enable the rules to contradict the Act.]

No; but the Act may be extended by them.

In Ex parte Austin (9), it was held that a bankrupt was entitled to an order for examination of a creditor.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The point was not argued in that case.]

In Ex parte Crossley (4) it was held that the Court has power under section 96, on the application of a creditor, to order the examination of the trustee. The question is, there being a matter before the Court for investigation, whether the section ought not to be extended.

Ex parte Botting (6) was a composition case, as also is Campbell v. Im Thurn (7).

[JESSEL, M.R.—Section 96 is not extended by any rule to cases of composition.]

The word "bankruptcy" used in section 96 is used generally, and includes liquidation by arrangement and composition—Megrath v. Grey (2) and Ex parte Rumboll (1). See also Ex parte Peacock (8), and Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, sub-s. 7.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., in reply, referred to section 19 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and to Ex parte Lacey (11).

JESSEL, M.R.—I think this is a very plain case. I cannot see any doubt, question or ambiguity about the meaning of the Act. I never allow my construction of a plain enactment to be biased in the slightest degree by any number of judicial decisions or dicta as to its meaning, when those decisions or dicta are not actually binding upon me. I read the Act for myself. If I think it clear, I express my opinion about its meaning, as I consider I am bound to do. Of course if other Judges have expressed different views as to the construction, and their decisions are binding on this Court, this Court has simply to bow and submit, whatever its own opinion may be. But when there is no such binding decision, in my view a Judge ought not to allow himself to be biased in the construction of a plain Act of Parliament (for it appears to me to be plain) by any number of dicta or decisions which are not binding on him. The Judge ought, with all due respect, to examine into them, but he must not allow any number of dicta, or even decisions which are not binding on him, to affect his judgment, except in one peculiar case. That case is peculiar, and therefore I will mention it. Where a series of decisions of inferior Courts have put a construction on an Act of Parliament, and have thus made a law which men follow in their daily dealings, it has been held, even by the House of Lords, that it is better to adhere to the course of the decisions than to reverse it, because of the mischief which would result from such a proceeding. Of course, that requires two things, antiquity of decision, and the practice of mankind in conducting their affairs.

(10) 26 Law Times (N.S.) 226.

(11) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 207; Law Rep. 16 Ch. D. 131.

That being so, it appears to me not necessary in the present case to examine the modern dicta, for they are nothing more than dicta, of Courts of inferior jurisdiction. I think it would not be difficult to shew that not one of them really decides the point we have now to decide. I have made these preliminary observations with the view of avoiding the necessity of examining these cases in detail.

Now, what does the Act say? The 96th section is perfectly plain. It is limited in its terms to "the application of the trustee at any time after an order of adjudication has been made against a bankrupt." The Court may, on the trustee's application, summon certain persons to give discovery. It is a power, not to summon a man as a witness, but to summon a man for the purpose of discovery, and he is treated in a totally different way from a witness. You cannot ask a witness the questions you can ask a man summoned under the 96th section. There are certain cases, when a witness proves to be hostile to the person calling him, in which by permission of the Court you can cross-examine him, and ask him questions somewhat similar to those which you can ask under section 96; but, even then, you cannot go so far as you can under this section in the shape of discovery. It is framed with a different view from that of compelling a man to give testimony It is not testimony, but discovery emphatically which is its object.

Now that is a very grave power to entrust to any Court or any man—namely, power to summon any other man whom you suspect (for mere suspicion will do) to be capable of giving information, and to get any information from him, although that information may be extremely hostile to the interests of the man himself. It is a power which, so far as I know, is found nowhere except in bankruptcy and the winding up of companies (which is a kind of bankruptcy); it is a very extraordinary power indeed, and it ought to be very carefully exercised. Now, that being the nature of the power, does it, under section 96, apply to anything else than bankruptcy? To say that you can apply it by your own mere motion to a case of composition would be simply saying that you can legislate, because, if this special and inquisitorial power has been conferred by the Legislature only under special circumstances, to apply it under others would be pure and simple legislation. Is there any section applying it to compositions? First of all we must consider section 125, which relates to liquidation by arrangement, and we find that, by sub-section 7, there is an extension of the previous provisions of the Act to liquidation by arrangement. And there is a very good reason for this. Liquidation by arrangement is in many respects similar to bankruptcy. Sub-section 7 of section 125 says that "all the provisions of this Act shall, so far as the same are applicable, apply to the case of a liquidation by arrangement, in the same manner as if the word 'bankrupt' included a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation," and so on. So that we have then an express extension of section 96 to liquidation by arrangement. But when we come to section 126, which deals with compositions with creditors, which are different in many material points from both bankruptcy and liquidation by arrangement, we find no such extension of the previous provisions of the Act; and yet it has been gravely argued that, though there is no such extension, section 96 is to apply to compositions. I really am at a loss to understand the argument. There is about as plain a declaration by the Legislature as you can possibly have that this extraordinary power is only to be exercised by particular persons and in particular events, and then we are told that, without any other enactment, and without any sufficient reason, though the circumstances attending a composition are quite different from those attending either bankruptcy or liquidation by arrangement, we are to extend the power to composition. It seems to me there is no foundation for the argument. As I have already said, no number of dicta would convince me to the contrary; and, although there are some hazy observations, not relating to this particular point, to be found in some reported cases, I really do not seriously think that any Judge has ever said anything contrary to what I have said.

What I have already said is alone sufficient to conclude this case. But it has been suggested to us that there is no difference between a summons under the 96th section, and a writ of subpœna under the 166th rule. As I have already said, there is all the difference in the world. In the one case it is a summons for discovery, and in the other case it is a subpœna for the witness to give testimony. Now I do not say that you could in the present case issue a subpœna. I do not intend finally to decide that question now, because it is not necessary; but I am not satisfied that when Ex parte Botting (6) is rightly understood, it lends any countenance to such a notion. It must not be supposed that Ex parte Botting (6) does extend the 96th section, or that it can be extended to any case not within the purview of the section, unless indeed it is extended by the 171st rule as to the person who may make the application, which is a very different question, and one as to which I intend to reserve my opinion until the question actually arises. As regards the applicant, where the bankrupt or liquidating debtor is concerned, it is quite clear to my mind that the 96th section wants no extension. You can examine him to any extent upon the application of any one; but as regards the examination of other people I wish expressly to reserve my opinion, and treat the point as one still to come for decision. I do not wish to decide it now, more especially as we are promised a new Bankruptcy Act, and I hope that in that measure there will be an enactment plain enough to be our guide without requiring further consideration.

Cotton, L.J.—What we have to consider on this appeal is, whether the order made to commit the appellant was right. Now that order was made because he refused to be examined under a summons which had been issued for his examination. That summons was undoubtedly issued under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and the point to be considered is, whether the order to issue the summons was rightly made under section 96, because if that order was improperly made it is impossible that he can have been rightly committed for refusing to be examined when so summoned, even though he might by a different proceeding have been required to attend as a witness. The distinction is obvious, as has been pointed out by the Master of the Rolls. A witness must be examined in a matter pending before the Court, and as to something which is relevant to the proceeding before the Court. But, under section 96, the object of which is discovery, there is not necessarily any matter pending before the Court, and the person summoned may be examined upon any matter relating to the dealings or property or trade of the bankrupt, as to which it is supposed he can give some information. If he has no information, his answers will come to nothing. It therefore makes a most material difference whether a man is summoned under that section, or is summoned as a witness. We are to treat this application as made by the trustee, and, treating it in that way, in my opinion this summons was not justified in a proceeding like this, which is a composition, and not a bankruptcy or a liquidation by arrangement. Section 96 is clear, and I quite agree with the Master of the Rolls that no dicta of Judges when the matter was not really before them, or even if it was, unless those dicta amount to decisions of the Court which bind us, ought to lead us to go against the clear words of the statute. Here the words of the section are, in my opinion, clear, that the power is given only on the application of the trustee in a bankruptcy after an order of adjudication has been made.

at it is said that the power is not con- to bankruptcy. Why? Because n you come to liquidation by arrange- t under section 125, there is an express ision that all the provisions of this shall, so far as the same are applicable, y to the case of a liquidation by ngement in the same manner as if word "bankrupt" included a debtor se affairs are under liquidation. It is therefore, by any construction of the rt that section 96 is made to apply to idation by arrangement, but by reason he express provision of section 125, h applies to liquidations by arrange- t that which has been previously ted with reference to bankruptcies. we find nothing whatever in section which applies to compositions all the ious enactments, as we do in the case iquidations by arrangement. Moreover, section 125, there is a provision that appointment of a trustee under a idation shall, according to circum- ces, be deemed to be equivalent to and bstitute for the presentation of a peti- in bankruptcy, or the service of such ion, or an order of adjudication. e is nothing of that kind in section The proceedings which are taken r section 96 are with reference to ruptcy especially, for it is said that shall only be taken after adjudication, here is a very good reason why section ould not apply to a composition. It les discovery to be made as to the gs of the bankrupt with his estate. mposition the creditors at the meet- have to make up their minds whether will accept an offer by the debtor to a certain composition. There is no g of the debtor's estate in a trustee, there is no distribution of the estate g the creditors. All they obtain is a. if they assent to the composition, to hat which they have agreed to accept charge of their debts. That makes tinction, which shews, in my opinion, section 96 is not properly applicable omposition, and, if it had been so ied by the Act, I should have felt t difficulty in understanding why it . It is very true that, in order to ble the creditors to determine whether y shall accept the debtor's offer, they must have the fullest means of asking the debtor questions. And so they have, because the debtor is bound to present himself at the meeting, and is bound to answer any questions put to him ; and this Court has several times held that where there has not been a substantial compliance with that provision, no composition will bind dissentient creditors. That being so, it is clear that section 96 does not apply.

But it is said that rule 171 assumes that some other person than the trustee could apply for a summons under section 96. It is not necessary to decide whether that is so now, because there is nothing in the rule to indicate that section 96 applies to compositions. Still, I must say I cannot see how any rule can extend the clear terms of section 96. In my opinion this order is wrong, and the appeal must succeed.

I agree with the Master of the Rolls that it is not necessary to go through the numerous cases which have been cited; but I think it right to add, as the Master of the Rolls has done, that we simply discharge the order to commit. We give no opinion whether the trustee or the debtor could effectually, against the wish of a creditor, attempt to cross-examine him. If a creditor is proceeding to enforce the payment of the composition to him, it may be that there is such a right as was held to exist in Ex parte Botting (6). But I do not bind myself by any expression of opinion whether, if a creditor is sought to be cross-examined after the registration of the resolutions, with the view of disputing the proof which he has put in, this can be effectually done, or whether he is not at liberty to say, if you dispute my debt, I will go away and rely on my right not to be bound by the composition at all. That question has not to be decided now, and I mention it only to shew that I do not favour the view that the trustee can take proceedings against the wish of the creditor to cross-examine him.

LINDLEY, L.J. — I am of the same opinion, and will only add a few words.

When we bear in mind that the appellant has been committed for contempt, we must see what order it is which he has disobeyed. It was an order to attend and be examined under section 96. The order to commit him cannot be supported on any other ground than that. Then when we look at section 96 we find that it does not in terms apply to such proceedings as these. Its language is not applicable to compositions at all. Why then are we to hold that it does apply to such a case? It is argued that compositions, liquidations and bankruptcies are all, for this purpose, substantially the same thing. Is that so? I think it is quite plain that it is not anything like true to say that they are all substantially the same thing for this purpose. Ex parte Jones (5) shews that there is a marked difference between liquidation and composition proceedings. If section 96 does not apply to composition proceedings, this order to commit must be wrong. It must be wrong, even if the appellant is liable to be examined with reference to his debt, or cross-examined with reference to his proof. Whether he is so liable I will say nothing, except that I do not at present see any power to examine or cross-examine a creditor in composition proceedings after the registration of the resolutions, unless he comes, as the appellant did in Ex parte Botting (6), and submits himself to the jurisdiction. I say no more upon that point. In my opinion this order is wrong, and the appeal must succeed.

Solicitors—Jaques, Layton & Jaques, agents for Watson & Dickens, Bradford, for appellant; Prior, Bigg, Church & Adams, agents for Gardiner & Jeffery, Bradford, for debtor and trustee.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 7.

In re GRANT. WALKER v. MARTINEAU.

Will—Annuity—Insufficient Estate—Rights of Tenant-for-Life and Remainderman.

A testatrix, by her will, bequeathed pecuniary legacies and annuities; and, subject to the bequests thereinbefore contained, she gave the residue to A for life, with remainders over.

The estate was not sufficient to satisfy the annuities and pay the pecuniary legacies; but if Government annuities were purchased for the annuitants out of the corpus, there would be enough left to pay the pecuniary legacies and leave a small surplus:—

Held, as between the tenant-for-life and the remaindermen, that the tenant-for-life was not entitled to have Government annuities purchased to satisfy the annuitants; but that the income must be applied, so far as it would extend, in paying the annuities, recourse being had from time to time to the capital to make up the deficiency—

Further consideration.

Martha Grant, by her will dated the 27th of April, 1872, gave several pecuniary legacies, and annuities to several annuitants; and, "subject to the bequests thereinbefore contained," she bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to trustees, upon trust (in the events which had happened) for her niece Fanny Emily Walker for her life, with remainder to her children as therein mentioned, and in default of children, equally between the Baptist Missionary Society and four other charities.

This was an administration action.

It appeared from the chief clerk's certificate that the value of the personalty was about 31,500*l.*; that all the debts had been paid; that the legacies, if paid in full, would amount to about 17,500*l.*, leaving a sum of 14,000*l.* to provide for the annuitants; and that the annuities given by the will amounted to 546*l.* a year.

There was no evidence as to the ages of the annuitants.

The action now came on for further consideration.

Grant

Hardy, Q.C., and C. T. Mitchell, Baptist Missionary Society.—If the are paid in full, and the balance 4,000*l.*) is then invested in Consols, ne of the residue will be insufficient ie annuities in full.

the residue is given "subject to ests hereinbefore contained"; the s therefore are charged, first on me, and secondly on the corpus. per course will be to invest this in Consols, apply the income as far I extend, and sell out, year by year, nt amount of the corpus to keep e annuities.

more, Maidlow, J. T. Prior and re Lawrence, for the four other Karslake, Q.C., and Cecil H. for the plaintiff F. E. Walker, a an executrix, and the tenant-for- re the estate is insufficient to pay niary legacies and the annuities in ie proper course, therefore, will be the annuitants by purchasing for vernment annuities, then to pay ies in full, and then to give the r-life the income of what remains about 2,000*l.*). Thus the tenant- ould "keep down the interest of nated value of the annuities"— v. Astley (1). She ought not to to bear the whole burden of the s—Playfair v. Cooper (2) and Yates (3). They also referred to on v. Colquhoun (4).

ung, for the defendant, the other

Hardy, Q.C., in reply.

ON, J.—I am very much afraid ust decide this case in favour of rdy's view. I regret to do so, I cannot help seeing that I must, ain extent, defeat the intention of atrix, who undoubtedly intended e tenant-for-life should get some and did not intend that all the under this will should pass away from the tenant-for-life, if she died without children, and should go over to charitable bodies, to whom the residue is practically given.

The case is not an uncommon one. And there is this to be said against Mr. Karslake's argument—that there is no authority to be found, according to the statement of counsel, and there is certainly none known to myself, in which the principle on which Mr. Karslake argued the case has been adopted, and yet I believe there have been frequently limitations in wills pretty nearly to the effect of the limitations in this will—that is to say, devising property, subject to the payment of annuities and legacies, to a tenant-for-life, with remainders over. Under those circumstances the annuities so charged have been paid, in the first instance out of the income, and in the next out of the corpus; the tenant-for-life then took what remained, and if nothing remained during the tenancy-for-life, the charge in respect of the annuity has not been given to the tenant-for-life as against the remaindermen. Mr. Karslake called my attention to the case of Bulwer v. Astley (1), which he admitted to be the only case he could find supporting the principle which he laid down; but I think Mr. Hardy's construction of that case is the right one. That was not the ordinary case of a gift of real estate, charged simpliciter with annuities, where the tenant-for-life would have to keep down the annuities. But it was a gift of annuities to be raised by mortgage of the real estate. There the tenant-for-life, having, under a misapprehension, paid the annuities in full, argued that the case ought to be considered as if the annuities had been actually raised by mortgage of the real estate, in which case he would have paid the interest on the mortgage only, and he claimed simply the difference between the interest he would so have paid and the annuities which he had paid in full. I think that is the proper construction of that case; and therefore it is no authority for the proposition that I can charge, according to some fanciful rule of my own, these annuities proportionably against the tenant-for-life and the remaindermen. The annuities are manifestly pay-

Ph. 422, 435; 13 Law J. Rep. Chanc.

Beav. 187; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 343.
Beav. 637; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 872.
De Gex & S. 357.

In re Grant.

able out of the corpus as well as out of the income. Now the state of facts agreed on by all parties is this: that the estate of the testatrix is sufficient to pay all the legacies in full, and that although the income of that which remains will not be sufficient to pay the annuities, yet the income, plus the capital, will be sufficient to pay them. According to the length of the lives of the annuitants, either a small portion or a large portion or the whole of the capital will be absorbed. But, as I understand, it is reasonably to be expected that the sum now remaining to be so applied, on the principle that from time to time a portion of the capital will have to be taken, will be more than sufficient to meet the annuities. Under these circumstances, I am afraid I can only agree with the contention of those entitled in remainder, and say that the tenant-for-life can only take so much of the income as may be set free from time to time by the dropping in of the annuities, and no more. It did strike me that I might do that which I should have been very glad to do in favour of Mr. Karslake's client, on the ground that the estate was insufficient—buy Government annuities, so as to set free a certain portion of the capital; but I think that, as there is sufficient, taking both income and a portion of the capital, to pay the annuities in full, that sum ought to be set aside, and that the proper construction of the will is this: that nothing whatever—that is to say, no interest whatever—is given to the tenant-for-life in the sum so set aside until the event happens for which that sum is set aside—namely, the payment of the annuities in full, the lives on which the annuities are given having dropped.

[At the close of the judgment a discussion arose, having regard to the fact that the annuitants were not before the Court, whether there should not be some further enquiry; and ultimately his Lordship ordered the case to stand over, to be restored to the paper as soon as the chief clerk had answered the following enquiry—Whether, having regard to the fact that the annuitants will be at liberty to resort to capital, if necessary, for the payment of their respective annuities, the same will be sufficiently secured by the funds remaining in Court after payment of the legacies in full.]

Solicitors—Pattison, Wigg & Co., for the Baptist Missionary Society; Walker, Martineau & Co., for plaintiff and defendant; Norton, Rose & Co.; J. M. Chamberlain; Hollams, Son & Coward, and T. G. Woollacott, for other parties.

PEARSON, J.
1883.
April 26, 27, 28.
May 3, 8.

CHARLES v. THE FINCHLEY LOCAL BOARD.

Local Board—Powers of—Pollution of Stream by Third Party—Action to restrain Board from permitting continuance of same—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 21.

Under an agreement between A and a sanitary board, A was entitled to discharge surface-water from his land into a ditch which ran past B's house. A afterwards, without the leave or licence of the board, or of the local board which succeeded it, and contrary to the plan which had been approved by the board when the agreement was entered into, began to discharge sewage into the ditch through the same pipe by which his surface-water was discharged. B moved for an injunction to restrain the local board, as sole defendants, from allowing the sewage to pass into the ditch and so causing a nuisance:—Held, that the local board had power, both at common law and also under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to physically stop the flow of sewage through the pipe, even though in so doing they might also stop the flow of surface-water, since A was exercising his limited right in excess so as to produce a nuisance; and that it being therefore possible for the board to abate the nuisance without instituting legal proceedings, or devising a new system of drainage, or creating a greater nuisance than that which was to be abated, B was entitled to compel the board to do so.

Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board (49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 89; Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 102), The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 585; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 595) and The Attorney-General v. The Acton Local Board (ante, p. 108; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 221) explained and distinguished.

Motion for an injunction to restrain the local board "from allowing any overflow pipe or drain from the cesspool situate in the grounds of No. 21 Hendon Lane, in the district of the board, to pass through or under Hendon Lane aforesaid (which is vested in the defendants) into the surface or rain-water pipe underneath the said lane, and which drain-pipe discharges itself into the plaintiff's brook or watercourse in the same district so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff, or otherwise from discharging or causing, or permitting to be discharged, sewage or other offensive matter into the said brook or watercourse so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff."

Mr. Peter Charles, the plaintiff in the action, was the owner of a house at Finchley, called Older's Hill Lodge, with certain fields adjoining, within the Finchley Local Board district. Along the north front of the house and through the plaintiff's land ran a public footpath leading from a country road, called Hendon Lane, on the east, to a bridge crossing a brook called Dollis Brook, on the west. Along the north border of this footpath down to Dollis Brook ran a ditch, formerly open throughout its whole length, but partly covered in at the date of the events which gave rise to the action. On the east side of Hendon Lane, and therefore on the side opposite to the plaintiff's property, and slightly to the northward of the footpath leading past his house, five houses were begun to be built about two years before the date of the action, and in May or June, 1882, two of these houses were completed and occupied. Along Hendon Lane, in front of the site of these new houses, ran an open ditch, which carried off the surface-water from the east side of the lane. When the new houses were built in Hendon Lane the ditch along that lane was covered in, and, by the plaintiff's permission, piped in such a way as to discharge down the plaintiff's ditch the surface-water it received. The piping was carried out under an agreement between the then sanitary board and a Mr. Cooper, the owner and builder of the new houses in Hendon Lane, under which agreement pipes were provided by Mr. Cooper, and laid so as to conduct the surface-water from the site of the new houses, down the partly covered ditch through the plaintiff's land. The plan produced at this time to the sanitary board by Mr. Cooper shewed a covered cesspool on the premises intended to be included in the southernmost of the new houses, called No. 21 Hendon Lane, into which it was intended that the sewage of not only No. 21, but also of the other houses to be built on the spot by Mr. Cooper, should be drained. No overflow from the cesspool was shewn on the plan, it being impliedly intended that the cesspool should be emptied by hand when necessary. This plan was approved by the board.

In the month of August, 1882, the plaintiff began to suffer inconvenience from the ditch in front of his house, which then for the first time began to contain offensive sewage matter; and, after making enquiries as to the origin of the nuisance, he discovered that Mr. Cooper, who was not only the builder of the houses in Hendon Lane, but was also employed by the defendant board (which had then taken the place of the former sanitary board) to construct their connections between drains and sewers, had at first carried out his agreement with the board by directing the sewage into the cesspool, and only the surface-water into the covered ditch, but that he had subsequently, without the leave or licence of the board, departed from the agreement, and laid a connecting or overflow-pipe from the cesspool into the surface-water ditch passing through the plaintiff's land, with the result that the sewage from the two occupied houses, after filling the cesspool, overflowed down the plaintiff's previously clean ditch, causing a nuisance.

On discovering these facts the plaintiff, in September, 1882, complained to the local board, and they took proceedings in the Highgate Police Court against Mr. Cooper, and also against the owner of the house

No. 21 Hendon Lane, to compel the abatement of the nuisance; but the first summons was dismissed by reason of the lapse of time, and the second on the ground that the owner of the house was not liable for Mr. Cooper's act; and the board took no further proceedings in the matter.

The present action was commenced by the plaintiff, pending the proceedings in the Police Court, against the local board as the sole defendants, and, the nuisance not being abated, the above motion was now made.

Cozens Hardy, Q.C., and Farwell, for the motion.—In this case the local board can put a stop to the nuisance if they think fit to do so, by simply stopping up the pipe until Mr. Cooper ceases to use it for anything beyond surface-water; and if they do not do so, they are responsible to the plaintiff for the nuisance—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), sections 21, 22 and 23, and definitions of "sewer" and "drain."

Cookson, Q.C., and Fooks, for the defendants.—The defendants are doing nothing of which the plaintiff can complain; they are not putting any sewage into the ditch. Mr. Cooper is responsible for his own conduct, which has never been sanctioned by the defendants, and they cannot be compelled to proceed against him farther than they have already done. If there were any remedy at all against the defendants, it would be by mandamus—Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (1). This case is governed by that case and by The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (2), and no order can be made against the defendants.

[PEARSON, J.—If Mr. Cooper is entitled to use the pipe for his surface-water, but not for his sewage, why do you not stop him from using it for sewage?]

The board could not do that without depriving him of the lawful use of it for the surface-water, of which they cannot legally deprive him.

[PEARSON, J., referred to Goldsmid v. The Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners (3) and The Attorney-General v. The Metropolitan Board of Works (4).]

If this is a drain, a drain once opened cannot be stopped. Moreover, to stop it would be to create a greater nuisance than at present exists, by stopping the occupiers of the houses in the lane from getting rid of their sewage—The Attorney-General v. The Acton Local Board (5). But this is neither a "drain," nor a "sewer," within section 21 of the Public Health Act, and the board have not here the powers conferred upon them with respect to such cases. The section only says "may close," and those words are only permissive, and not imperative—Julius v. The Bishop of Oxford (6).

[PEARSON, J.—In this section 21 the word "may" means "may."]

Spokes v. The Banbury Board of Health (7) and The Borough of Bathurst v. Macpherson (8). If an injunction is to be granted against the board, it should be put in very precise terms—Hackett v. Baiss (9).

Cozens Hardy, Q.C., in reply.—The defendants are bound to exercise the power they possess under section 21 of the Act to stop the flow through the pipe. Till they have done that they are responsible for the nuisance which their pipes bring to the plaintiff's house. Since Mr. Cooper acted without the defendants' leave or licence, he cannot plead any authorisation by the defendants to do as he has done. This is no question of taking legal proceedings, or of laying down a scheme of drainage for an entire district; all that is required is for the defendants to physically stop the pipe up until the improper use of it is discontinued.

PEARSON, J., stated the facts and continued:—The question I have to determine is, whether or not Mr. Charles is right in

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 89; Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 102.

(2) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 585; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 595.

(3) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 382; Law Rep. Chanc. 349.

(4) 1 Hem. & M. 298.

(5) Ante, p. 108; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 221.

(6) 49 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 577; Law Rep. App. Cas. 214.

(7) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 105; Law Rep. Eq. 42.

(8) 48 Law J. Rep. P.C. 61; Law Rep. 4 App. Cas. 256.

(9) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 13; Law Rep. 20 Eq. 494.

bringing his action against the Finchley Local Board, whether this Court has any jurisdiction over the Finchley Local Board in such a matter as this, and whether or not, as has been contended, Mr. Charles's proper course would not have been to bring an action against Mr. Cooper, who is said to be the offender, instead of attempting to bring an action against the Finchley Local Board, who say "we are entirely passive in the matter—we are simply the owners of a channel which existed long ago—we are doing no wrong—if any person is doing wrong, it is Mr. Cooper, and against him you ought to proceed."

Now, first of all, this case is said to be exactly like the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board (1), which I will call for shortness Glossop's Case (1); and it is said that really and truly the object of this action is, not to restrain the defendants from allowing sewage to pass down the channel, but to compel the Finchley Local Board to exercise their powers and to make a new system of drainage for Finchley. If that were so, I should be bound by the decision in Glossop's Case (1) and the decision in the Dorking Case (2), and I should have nothing to do but simply to say that this case is exactly on all fours with those cases, and that I must refuse the motion with costs. Now let us see what Glossop's Case (1) was. It was so often read to me at the hearing of this motion that I think I need not trouble the bar with reading it again. Glossop's Case (1), as I understand it, was this:—There was an old system of drainage under which a certain river called the River Crane had been for a long time polluted and was being polluted, and there was no doubt that that system of drainage then in existence was a nuisance to the plaintiff in that action. Shortly after the Isleworth Board came into power the plaintiff complained to them of the nuisance he suffered from the existing system of drainage. They admitted the nuisance, and said they would take steps to remedy it. Mr. Glossop thought they were slow in proceeding, and he thereupon brought an action against them for the abatement of the nuisance of which he complained. The Court held that the board had done nothing, that they had merely come into existence and found a system of drainage there which was bad, that it was therefore within their powers and would be within their duty to remedy it by devising a new scheme of drainage; but that if they were to be complained of for not putting their powers in force, an injunction was not the proper remedy for that, but a mandamus was the proper course; and that, inasmuch as they could not possibly grant an injunction, and as, under the circumstances of the case, they would not have granted a mandamus, for the board had not been in existence a sufficient time to enable them to perfect a new system of drainage, there was nothing left but to dismiss the action. When the Dorking Case (2) came before the Court of Appeal, the late Master of the Rolls said they could find no distinction between that case and Glossop's Case (1); but there is a great deal said in the Dorking Case (2) which has a bearing on this case, and to which I must therefore refer. What was complained of in the Dorking Case (2) was this, that not only had the board kept alive the former system of drainage, but that they had allowed persons who had no right to drain into the old system of drainage nevertheless so to do, and to increase the nuisance which had been created before. What the Master of the Rolls said in his judgment was this—that, as far as he could see, the only right the board would have, if they had any right at all, would be to bring a series of actions against the persons who were so putting in the sewage without, as was alleged, any right, and to take their chance of succeeding or being beaten in those actions. He said that in many cases no doubt the persons proceeded against might have claimed prescriptive rights, and it was very doubtful whether, if the board had brought actions, they could have succeeded; but he said that he knew of no case in which an injunction had been granted to compel another person to bring an action for an injunction. He said this (10): "Independently of that, did any one ever hear of an action against a man because he did not bring an action against his neighbour? It is impossible to suppose that any such action could be maintained. It comes to this, if you could maintain it you would get an injunction against a man for not bringing an injunction action against his neighbour. That is the result of it. As it is the only means he has of preventing the nuisance, it comes to an order that he shall bring an action for an injunction against all his neighbours who are sending down sewage, without a prescriptive right, into the sewer. That is, he would have to fight in every case the question of prescription and acquiescence, and probably other questions which might arise. How can we tell, in the absence of the people, what the case might be? He may have lost his right by acquiescence, or in various other ways. No such action has ever been heard of at common law, and I am sure no such action has ever been heard of in equity, where a person cannot physically put an end to the nuisance, where he can only put an end to it, if at all, by bringing an action for an injunction, and I am satisfied that no action at common law lies."

(10) Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 605.

Therefore, as I gather from the Master of the Rolls, with whom the other members of the Court agreed, he says you cannot get an injunction if the person of whom you complain can only remedy the nuisance by himself bringing another action. But he does not say you cannot get an injunction if the person of whom you complain can physically put an end to the nuisance himself. Therefore, as it seems to me, the question I really have to determine in this case is, Are or are not the Finchley Local Board doing, or allowing to be done, that which is a nuisance, and which they can themselves physically put an end to without any action at all? because, if so, then I conceive the Court ought to grant an injunction to restrain them from committing a nuisance which they are committing of their own accord, seeing that they can at any time physically put an end to it. The question is, therefore, Have or have not the Finchley Local Board the right to stop the passage of this sewer from the cesspool into their channel, which up to the time when Mr. Cooper made the junction did not pass sewage down in front of Mr. Charles's house?

First of all, it is plain upon the evidence of the defendants themselves that no right whatever was given to Mr. Cooper, except the right to pass pure water down the pipe into the channel. That, I think, I may take as a fact about which there is no dispute. But then it is said that, inasmuch as that right was given him, if he has made the connection between his cesspool and the pipe bringing the surface-water from his own property into the channel, you have no right to prevent his bringing the sewage into the channel, because you cannot do so without stopping that right which he has of bringing the pure water into the channel. That right has been given him, and it is said you cannot interfere with that right, and if you want to prevent Mr. Cooper from bringing the sewage from the cesspool into the channel, you must proceed against Mr. Cooper himself, and the local board are without remedy against Mr. Cooper except by an action. Is that so? I stated my doubts as to that law when Mr. Cookson was arguing, and I am glad to find, on the authority of Baron Alderson, that my doubts are right. I am quoting from a very well known text-book, Addison on Torts, 5th ed., edited by Mr. Justice Cave, a book of so much authority that I have thought myself justified in taking the law as quoted there, without referring to the report from which it came. It is laid down in these words (p. 366):—"Where a person who is entitled to a limited right exercises it in excess so as to produce a nuisance, and the nuisance cannot be abated without obstructing the enjoyment of the right altogether, the exercise of the right may be entirely stopped until means have been taken to reduce it within its proper limits. Thus, 'if a man,' says Baron Alderson, in Cawkwell v. Russell (11), 'has a right to send clean water through my drain, and chooses to send dirty water, every particle of the water may be stopped, because it is dirty.'"

I conceive, therefore, that, inasmuch as Mr. Cooper had merely a right to send surface-water through the pipe into the channel, and is now sending that surface-water mixed with sewage, independently of statute at all, the Finchley Local Board have a perfect right to stop the communication between that surface-water pipe and their own channel until such time as Mr. Cooper shall restore things as they were, and cut off the overflow from the cesspool into that pipe. But, independently of that, I hold they have also the right under the statute, because section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, says this:—"Any person causing a drain to empty into a sewer of a local authority without complying with the provisions of this section, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*, and the local authority may close any communication between a drain and sewer made in contravention of this section, and may recover" penalties, and so forth. Therefore they may abate the nuisance so caused. Now there is an overflow-pipe made from this cesspool, and made into the pipe conveying the surface-water into the channel belonging to the Finchley Local Board. It was argued before me that this section does not apply. It was said, in the first place, that this is not a drain which communicates from a building, because the drain is cut in two by the cesspool—one part is on the one side of the cesspool, and the other part on the other side; and it is said that the drain does not communicate from the building with the channel. I hold that the severance of a drain into two parts, and putting the cesspool between them, does not alter the fact of its being a drain communicating from the building.

(11) 26 Law J. Rep. Exch. 34.

But then it is said it does not communicate with the channel, but it communicates with Mr. Cooper's own pipe. But, inasmuch as Mr. Cooper's own water-pipe communicates with the channel, I hold that this does communicate with the channel, and that they have a perfect right to say, "You have now turned your water-pipe which does communicate with the channel into that which it was not before, namely, a drain for sewage from the house; and it matters not whether you have made the communication, or altered the purpose for which it was made. You have done it without our consent, and we are entitled to abate it." That being so, I come to the conclusion that, both at common law and by statute, the Finchley Local Board are entitled to abate this nuisance without asking any leave, without bringing any action, or taking any other proceedings against Mr. Cooper; and, if that be so, I think I am justified in saying that this is a case in which the Finchley Local Board can physically, on their own premises, stop the nuisance which is complained of, and that they ought to do so.

Then it was said, and I was referred to a case before Mr. Justice Fry of The Attorney-General v. The Acton Local Board (5), that it would be very dangerous indeed to stop this, because I should be stopping the drainage from several houses; and, if I did that, I should create a far worse evil than the evil I was trying to remedy. Now what I find that Mr. Justice Fry said in that case was this. He says (12), "But in the present case, to grant the injunction asked for would involve most serious consequences. It would require the defendants to stop up all the drains or sewers which have been made from houses in Acton since November, 1876. Those houses, according to the evidence before me, are very numerous; and, on the balance of convenience and inconvenience, bearing in mind also that no substantial damage is shewn to have accrued to the plaintiffs, I think I should be doing wrong in granting such an injunction." In the present case there are at the present moment not more than two houses that are occupied. It cannot be said, therefore, that I should be doing any serious injury if I stopped up the sewage from those houses, especially if I were to give time so as to enable Mr. Cooper to provide another overflow for his cesspool. If I were not to do this the plaintiff would be without any remedy if a good many more houses should be built in Hendon Lane, and, without any express assent on the part of the Finchley Local Board, they were to allow every one of those houses to communicate with the channel, and turn the sewage into the channel, and bring it all down in front of Mr. Charles's house. I cannot think the law is so, or that I should be doing any wrong in a case of this kind in saying that the local board, inasmuch as they have power, without bringing any action, to stop the nuisance which is complained of, and which they tell me is a nuisance created without their leave or licence, must take steps to prevent Mr. Cooper, or the occupier of any other house, from sending the sewage down this channel. In addition to that it is said, and this was cited to me from Mr. Justice Fry's judgment (12):—"Moreover, I am by no means clear that the defendants have power to stop up a drain the construction of which they have once authorised or directed. I observe that the Master of the Rolls expressed that view in The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (2). Therefore, on that ground also, I should hesitate very long before I granted the mandatory injunction which is asked for." I am fortunately not at all impeded in what I propose to do by that observation, to which I attach the greatest weight, and I do not hesitate to say that if the facts here were such as they were before Mr. Justice Fry—namely, that the communication had been made with the leave and licence of the board—I should have followed the doubts expressed by the Master of the Rolls, and concurred in by Mr. Justice Fry, most readily, and should have refused to grant any injunction. The case I have before me is one in which no leave or licence has been granted, in which what is being done is being done in defiance of the board and in opposition to the plans proposed by Mr. Cooper, which shewed no connection between the cesspool and the surface-water pipe. I must grant the injunction in the terms of the latter part of the notice of motion, to restrain the defendants from discharging or causing, or permitting to be discharged, sewage or other offensive matter into the brook or watercourse, so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff.

(12) Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 232.

Charles v. Finchley Local Board.

[The injunction was suspended for two months, upon an undertaking being given by the defendants, without prejudice to any question, to clean out and keep clean the ditch in front of the plaintiff's house. Costs of the motion, costs in the action.]

Solicitors — Stokes, Saunders & Stokes, for plaintiff; Stevens & Co., for defendants.

CHITTY, J.
1883.
Jan. 27.

In re LEMANN'S TRUSTS.

Appointment of New Trustee—Personal Incapacity—Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), s. 32.

Under section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, the Court can appoint a new trustee in place of a trustee who, by age and infirmity, is incapable of acting as trustee.

In re Bignold's Trusts (41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 235; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 223) referred to.

Petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, by beneficiaries under the will of F. A. Lemann, for the appointment of a new trustee and a vesting order.

The will contained a declaration that if any of the trustees thereby appointed should die, &c., "or be incapable to act," it should be lawful for the survivor or survivors to appoint a new trustee.

The testator's widow was one of the two surviving trustees, and it appeared from the evidence that she was seventy-nine years of age, and was unable, through failure of memory and decay of mental powers, to concur in the appointment of any new trustees, or to execute or sign any deed or document for transferring the trust property to any new trustee who might be appointed, or in any way to attend to business matters.

M. Ware, for the petitioners, submitted that this was a case where it was "expedient" to appoint a new trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32.

[CHITTY, J., referred to In re Bignold's Settlement Trusts (1).]

Maidlow, and S. B. L. Druce, for other beneficiaries.

CHITTY, J.—I shall deal with this case in the same manner as the Lords Justices dealt with the difficulty in In re Bignold's Settlement Trusts (1). In that case they expressed their opinion that incapacity to act meant personal incapacity, but held here a trustee was permanently abroad, the Court had, under the ction of the Trustee Act, 1850 gives the Court jurisdiction to new trustees wherever it is ex- to do so—power to appoint a new in his place. It appears to me a trustee is in such a condition cannot act properly in his trust, fact, incapable of acting; and it ibtedly expedient for the Court to a new trustee in his place. In ent case I am satisfied, from the , that the trustee is thoroughly e of acting in the trusts, and I ke the order as prayed.

(1) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 235; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 223.

Lemann's Trusts.

—J. R. Jennings, for petitioner and f the respondents; Stocken & Jupp, remaining respondents.

N THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

PTCY.
M.R.
L.J.
L.J.
.
30.

Ex parte JACOBSON; in re PINCOFFS.

uptcy—Debtor's Summons—Bona nite as to Debt—Solvent Debtor—Proceedings — Security — Bankcy, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 7.

a debtor, against whom a debtor's s has been issued, is solvent, and a bona fide dispute as to the debt, rt will not necessarily order the gs to be stayed without security, a trial of the validity of the debt. he questions which the Court will is, whether the creditor has a proof success in an action.

as an appeal from an order of Mr. r Hazlitt, sitting as Chief Judge ruptcy, dismissing a debtor's sumued by H. Jacobson against F. A.

e had given to one Phillipart two ry notes for 500*l.* each, dated re- y the 7th of December, 1876, and made payable respectively on the 31st of December, 1879, and the 31st of December, 1880. Phillipart indorsed the notes for value to Jacobson, who presented them at maturity, when they were dishonoured. Jacobson then took out a debtor's summons, claiming payment of 1,053*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*, the amount of the notes and interest.

Pincoffs applied to have the summons dismissed, on the grounds that he was not insolvent, and that the notes had been indorsed to Jacobson as agent for Phillipart, in whose employment he had been, and that they really were the property of Phillipart. He also claimed to be entitled to set off against the amount claimed by the summons a debt due to him from Phillipart.

After hearing the evidence on behalf of Jacobson, the Registrar dismissed the summons. From this order Jacobson appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for the appellant.—The Registrar ought to have stayed proceedings on the summons, pending the trial of the validity of the debt, and ordered the debtor to give security.

Sidney Woolf, for the debtor.—The debtor's summons ought never to have been issued, Pincoffs being solvent and there being a bona fide dispute as to the validity of the debt—Ex parte Sewell (1). This is not a case for security—Ex parte Marshall (2), Ex parte Wier (3) and Ex parte Ward (4).

JESSEL, M.R.—The law on the subject is well settled. The respondent is the maker of two promissory notes, for which he received value, and they were afterwards indorsed to the appellant for value. When they became due they were duly presented for payment and were dishonoured. The notes became due in December, 1879, and December, 1880, and these proceedings were not taken till 1882. Under these circumstances, if there were

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 15; Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 266.
(2) Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 873.
(3) Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 319.
(4) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 752; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 356.

nothing more, it would be a purely undefended case. But it is said that the appellant is not a holder of the notes for value; that they were indorsed to him as agent for Phillipart, who was his employer, and that they remained the property of Phillipart; and the respondent says that he has, as against Phillipart, a defence in the nature of a set-off. The appellant answers that the notes were not indorsed to him as an agent, and he produces a letter which he says proves this. It would not be right for us to say now what is the true construction of that letter; the appellant's rights depend on it. The question is, whether there is a great probability of his success in an action; and I think there is. What, then, is the law on the subject?

It is laid down in Ex parte Sewell (1). There there was a bona fide dispute as to a debt, and the Court was of opinion that there was no reason for doubting the debtor's solvency. And Lord Justice James said: "I think the proper order to make will be to stay the proceedings on the summons, on the terms of the appellant's bringing the sum claimed into Court, to abide the result of an action." In that case only a small sum was claimed; when the sum is a large one the practice is to require security, not payment into Court. Lords Justices Baggallay and Thesiger concurred in that order. It is true Lord Justice Thesiger added: "I assent to that only because it appears to be in accordance with the previous decisions of this Court in cases in which the weight of the evidence is in favour of the creditor. But for those decisions I should have thought that the proceedings ought to be stayed unconditionally. Though the creditor may be within his strict right in issuing the summons, yet I think the provisions of the Act were not intended to apply where the debtor is solvent and has a bona fide defence to the claim." Lord Justice Thesiger, therefore, agreed in the proposed order because he thought he was bound by the previous decisions. That is the law on the subject, and I think it applies exactly to the present case. The order will therefore be to stay the proceedings on the summons, pending the result of an action, on the terms of the respondent giving security for the amount claimed.

I wish to add a word or two as to the course which the proceedings took before the Registrar. He was disposed to decide in favour of Mr. Woolf's client without hearing the evidence which he was prepared to adduce, and Mr. Woolf did not insist on his evidence being heard, but accepted the decision offered him. I do not impute any blame to him. When I was at the bar, I always, in such circumstances, accepted a decision in favour of my client, and risked the chance of an appeal; but I was perfectly well aware that I was not bound to do so. It was quite open to Mr. Woolf to ask the Registrar to hear his evidence before giving his decision, and it is equally open to this Court now either to hear the evidence itself or to send the case back to the Registrar to take the respondent's evidence. Therefore, I asked Mr. Woolf what was the nature of his evidence; and from what he says I am of opinion that, even if he could prove what he says he is prepared to prove, there would be no ground for making a different order.

COTTON, L.J.—I think the order which the Master of the Rolls has mentioned is the right order to make. I will only add that, if it appeared to us that the evidence which the respondent's counsel is prepared to adduce would alter our order, he ought, in my opinion, to have an opportunity of adducing it. But I think the proposed evidence would not affect our order. The question whether security shall be required does not depend solely on the solvency or insolvency of the debtor. If there is a probability of the creditor's success in an action, the solvency of the debtor will not deprive the Court of the power to require him to give security.

BOWEN, L.J.—I think the Registrar's order cannot be sustained. It seems to me common sense to say that the creditor ought not, by issuing a debtor's summons, to be allowed to put himself in a better position, or the debtor in a worse position, than if there had been a summons in chambers, under Order XIV., under the Judicature Act, 1875. If there had been such an application in the present case, I think the Judge would have said that the defendant might defend, on giving security. The rules under the Judicature Act do not of course afford any guide to the construction of the Bankruptcy Act. But the considerations which arise at chambers, under Order XIV., are not unlike those by which the Registrar might reasonably be guided when dealing with the debtor's summons; and I think that justice in the present instance will be done by staying the proceedings upon the summons, on the terms of the defendant's giving security.

JESSEL, M.R. — The costs, including those of the appeal, will abide the event.

Solicitors—Tibbitts & Son, for creditor; Lewis & Lewis, for debtor.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
1882.
Nov. 11.

DAWSON v. BEESON.

Practice—Short Notice of Motion—Irregularity—Order LIX. rule 1.

Where a party applies for leave to serve short notice of motion, he must distinctly state to the Court that he applies for leave to serve such notice, and the notice of motion itself when served must distinctly state that special leave of the Court has been obtained on such a day to serve short notice for the particular day.

Where a short notice of motion has been irregularly applied for and served, but the party served had not in any way been injured by the irregularity, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, under Order LIX. rule 1, disregarded the irregularity and heard the motion on its merits.

This was an appeal from an order made by North, J.

The writ in the action was issued on the 25th of July, 1882, and claimed a declaration that the partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant was dissolved as from the 22nd of July, 1882 an injunction to restrain the defendant from intermeddling with the partnership assets, and from soliciting the old customers of the firm; and other relief.

On the same 25th of July, 1882, the plaintiffs moved ex parte before Chitty, J., for an injunction in the terms of the indorsements on the writ, and for special leave to serve the defendant with notice of the injunction, and with the writ of summons for the 28th of July, 1882.

It did not appear that the counsel who made the application specially asked for leave to serve short notice of the motion for injunction with the writ; and the order as drawn up, after giving notice of the injunction, stated—"And also take notice that special leave to serve you with this notice and with the writ of summons has been obtained this day from the said Hon. Mr. Justice Chitty."

This notice was served on the defendant at Sheffield, on the 26th day of July.

The defendant did not appear on the 28th of July, and on that day the injunction was granted in the terms of the notice of motion.

On the 4th of August, the defendant moved before Chitty, J., to discharge the order of the 28th of July, on the ground that the notice of motion had not been duly served. Chitty, J., directed the motion to be brought before the vacation Judge, and at his Lordship's suggestion the defendant amended his notice of motion by striking out the words "on the ground that it has not been duly served," and made it general, so that the merits might be gone into before the vacation Judge, if necessary; and both sides filed affidavits on the merits.

On the hearing before North, J., as vacation Judge, the defendant did not go into the merits, but insisted that the plaintiffs' notice of motion had been irregular, and must be discharged. His Lordship dismissed the defendant's application with costs. The defendant appealed.

Chester, for the appellant.—The service of the notice of motion on the defendant was insufficient. The rules require in such cases two clear days' notice, unless special leave has been given to serve short notice of motion, in which case the fact must be distinctly stated in the notice of motion, or it must appear from the dates by necessary implication. Here it was not stated in the notice that special leave to serve short notice had been obtained, and it appears from the dates that two clear days' notice could have been given. The plaintiffs' notice of motion, therefore, was irregular, and the order made on it must be discharged—Hart v. Tulk (1), Newton v. Chorlton (2) and Daubney v. Shuttleworth (3).

[JESSEL, M.R., referred to Harris v. Lewis (4) and Seton on Decrees (5). COTTON, L.J.—A man is not bound to appear unless he has notice that special leave to serve short notice of motion has been given.]

Ince, Q.C., and Langworthy.—We obtained special leave to serve the notice of motion, and also, we submit, by implication to serve short notice. It was a country case, the defendant was in the country, and therefore the service must of necessity have been less than two days. Further, the instructions to counsel were to ask for leave to serve short notice of motion, but at this distance of time we cannot recollect what the order was that was made. We admit that the indorsement on counsel's brief does not state that leave was given to give short notice, although no doubt that was the intention. But assuming there was an irregularity, the defendant has not in any way been injured by it. He amended his original notice of motion and filed affidavits on the merits, and the Court has full power, under Order LIX. rule 1, to disregard the irregularity, and do full justice between the parties. We have a clear case on the merits.

Chester, in reply, on the merits.

JESSEL, M.R., said:—This motion involves an important point of practice, and it appears from the case of Harris v. Lewis (4), that Lord Justice Knight-Bruce, when Vice-Chancellor, established the practice in his Court that when a party obtained leave to serve short notice of motion, the notice must state, not only that the leave of the Court had been given to serve the notice on a given day, but that special leave had been given to serve short notice for that particular day. That was a reasonable practice, for the party served is entitled to know that the notice has been duly served upon him, and he is not bound to appear unless he has been so served. I think, therefore, that whether that practice has been usually followed or not in other Courts up to this time, it ought to be understood that that must be the practice for the future, so that there may be no mistake about it. In all cases where a party asks for leave to serve short notice of motion, he must state to the Court that he applies for that short notice, and he must get it in distinct terms. He must not leave it to be inferred. In this case, by some mistake, it was not asked for in distinct terms, although it was intended to be a short notice. That being so, the service of the notice of motion was irregular, and the order obtained upon it was also irregular. Then the question arises, what is to be done? Now, the 1st rule of Order LIX. is most valuable, and enables the Court to do justice in spite of technicalities, and it appears to me that that rule applies to this case. In the present case, if the defendant had appeared, it is clear that the same injunction would have been granted, with the exception of one point, to which I will presently advert. Therefore, no harm whatever has been done to the defendant. In substance he could not have resisted the injunction at all. Is he then now entitled to come to the Court for an order to discharge that injunction on a mere technicality? He must, I think, be taken to have had notice that the Court has power to disregard technicalities and to decide on the material question. Now on the merits he complains of the order on several grounds, only one of which appears to me of any moment, and that is, his right to solicit the customers of the firm. The partnership articles do not restrain him from doing that. To that extent, therefore, the injunction must be varied by striking out

(1) 6 Hare, 612.
(2) 10 Hare, App. 31.
(3) 15 Law J. Rep. Exch. 177; Law Rep. 1 Ex. D. 53.
(4) 8 Jur. 1063.
(5) 4th ed. p. 57.

of the order so much as restrains him from soliciting the customers.

Now as to the costs of this application, I must say I shall not encourage a party coming here on a mere technicality when he has no case on the merits. On the other hand the plaintiff ought not to gain an advantage by his own irregularity. In this case, therefore, I think justice will be done by making all the costs costs in the action.

COTTON, L.J., said:—The first point is, whether the plaintiff's notice of motion was regularly served. Now, I have always understood the practice to be this, that, inasmuch as the rules give to every party the right to a certain length of notice before he can be required to appear, where an application is made for leave to serve short notice, and the usual time is dispensed with by the Court, the notice of motion should state distinctly that the time has been shortened by the Court in order that the party served may know that he is bound to obey the order of the Court. In this case the notice was not in accordance with the practice of the Court, and therefore the defendant was entitled to disregard it. Harris v. Lewis (4) supports this view, where Lord Justice Knight-Bruce acted on that rule, and the same point was decided in Chambers v. Toynbee (6); and I have always myself understood that to be the practice. At any rate for the future this rule must be obeyed:—Where leave is given to serve short notice of motion, the notice must state, not only that the notice is by special leave, but that leave was given for service on such a day for such other day; or that leave was given for one clear day's notice, as the case may be. On this ground, therefore, the plaintiff's notice of motion was irregular; but I am not inclined to allow a party to take advantage of technical objections, when he has had every opportunity of meeting the case on the merits, and to seek to dispose of it on an irregularity. Having regard to all the circumstances of this case, I think we should treat it as if a proper notice of motion had been given in the first instance. Then comes the question whether the injunction does not go too far. Here on the partnership articles it does, and I think that the part of the order which restrains the defendant from soliciting the old customers must be struck out.

As to the costs, I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said.

(6) 12 W.R. 1100.

Solicitors — J. Chapman, for appellant; C. Butcher, agent for W. Unwin, Sheffield, for respondents.

PEARSON, J. 1883. April 13. } In re BARKER'S TRUSTS.

Will — Construction — Bequest of Personalty to A and the Heirs of his Body.

A bequest of personalty to A and the heirs of his body, or to A and the heirs of his body in equal proportions, prima facie, and in the absence of indications to the contrary in the will, gives A an absolute interest.

A will bequeathed "to W. B. and to the heirs of his body in equal proportions" the interest of the testator's residuary personal estate, "and in the event of W. B. dying during the life of S. H. without leaving heirs of his body," the interest of the residuary estate was given to S. H. for life; then "at the decease of S. H., W. B., and the heirs of his body," the residuary estate and interest were directed to be accumulated for a hospital:—

Held, that W. B. took an absolute interest in the residuary estate.

Petition.

George Barker, of the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, made his will (after directing debts and funeral expenses to be paid, and giving specific and pecuniary legacies) in the following terms:—"And I further will unto my nephew William Barker, and to the heirs of his body in equal proportions, after my debts and legacies are settled, the interest of all Consols, moneys in the funds, or any other property standing in my name or in the name of any other person for my use and benefit, subject to the following charge—namely, 10*l.* at my death and the sum of 10*l.* annually to Sarah Holloway for her life; and in the event of the aforesaid William Barker dying during the life of the aforesaid Sarah Holloway without leaving heirs of his body, I desire that the aforesaid Sarah Holloway shall receive the whole interest of any Consols, moneys in the funds, or other property I may die possessed of, for her sole use and benefit for life; and at the decease of the aforesaid Sarah Holloway, William Barker, and the heirs of his body, I desire that the aforesaid Consols, moneys in the funds, or other property belonging to me, with the interest thereon, may be allowed to accumulate until the interest thereof may be sufficient to support two persons for ever in the Royal Hospital for Incurable Diseases."

In re Barker's Trusts.

The testator died in 1863, and Sarah Holloway died in 1878. In 1883 the executrix of the surviving executor and trustee of the will transferred into Court, under the Trustee Relief Act, a sum of 1,200*l.* New Three per Cents., representing the clear residue of the testator's estate.

This was a petition by William Barker, the nephew named in the will, who had been receiving the income of the fund, and who had six children, all born since the testator's death, asking that the sum paid into Court might (after providing for the costs of all parties) be transferred out to him.

C. C. Tucker, for William Barker.—If this were a will of real estate there can be little doubt that William Barker would take an estate tail; but it is a will of personalty; and the effect of the will is to give him an absolute interest—Roddy v. Fitzgerald (1), In re Andrews' Will (2), Glover v. Strothoff (3) and Theobald on Wills, 2nd ed., p. 335.

Micklem, for W. Barker's infant children and for the trustee.—The effect of the will is to give William Barker a life estate only, and then to give an absolute interest in remainder to his children—In re Wynch's Trust (4), Knight v. Ellis (5), Jacobs v. Amyatt (6), Clough v. Wynne (7), In re Jeaffreson's Trusts (8), Herrick v. Franklin (9) and In re Owen's Trusts (10).

Everitt, Q.C., for the Royal Hospital for Incurable Diseases.—Neither William Barker nor his children take an absolute interest in the fund, but after the deaths of William Barker and Sarah Holloway, and failure of William Barker's heirs of the body—that is, his next-of-kin being lineal descendants—the property passes to the hospital—In re Jeaffreson's Trusts (8) and Crawford v. Trotter (11).

PEARSON, J.—I am by no means willing to say that this will is clear or easy to explain, or that persons may not fairly differ as to the construction of it; and if I thought that by hearing further argument upon it I could better arrive at a right conclusion I would invite a further argument; but I do not think that I should receive any further assistance. There are two or three points which are quite clear. The first is that a gift of personalty to A and the heirs of his body, or to A and the heirs of his body in equal proportions, prima facie gives an absolute interest to A. No doubt there may be some cases of gifts of personalty in which you can control a gift to A and the heirs of his body, and can say that from the rest of the will it is plain that a gift to A for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, is intended. I do not deny that. Then I find it laid down in the authorities that, when you see the testator's intention is to give to A and to the heirs of his body successively, there must be held to be a gift to A for life, with remainder to his children absolutely, because so only can there be secured to the family the interest they are to have, since you cannot tie up property so as to prevent successive generations from ac-

(1) 6 H.L. Cas. 823.
(2) 27 Beav. 608; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 291.
(3) 2 Bro. C.C. 33.
(4) 5 De Gex, M. & G. 188; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 930.
(5) 2 Bro. C.C. 569.
(6) 4 Bro. C.C. 542.
(7) 2 Madd. 188.
(8) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 622; Law Rep. 2 Eq. 276.
(9) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 908; Law Rep. 6 Eq. 593.
(10) Law Rep. 12 Eq. 316.
(11) 4 Madd. 361.

quiring an absolute interest. Accordingly, in Ex parte Wynch (4) I find that the Lord Chancellor, after referring to certain cases before Sir William Grant, says (p. 206): "In these cases the principle on which the Courts went was this, that technical words were used which indicated a clear meaning on the part of the testator that the property should go in a course of devolution till there was an exhaustion of the heirs of the body, and as that of course could not be carried into effect they gave an absolute interest." I do not understand that Vice-Chancellor Wood at all differed from this view, for this is what he said in the case before him:—"I think the use of words like these, when accompanied with a discretionary power of education for these heirs of the body, and with an express discretion for division at twenty-one, justifies me in saying that the testator did not point to heirs successivè, who are to continue proprietors of the fund in question to an extent which the law would not allow, and which the law would cut short by giving the fund to the first taker." The Vice-Chancellor, therefore, took the same view of the law as the Lord Chancellor had done; and all I have o do is to see whether the will in this se comes within the description to which e rule applies. The will here is in these rms:—"And I further will unto my phew William Barker and the heirs of body in equal proportions" [his Lordp read down to "for her sole use and efit for life"]. I stop there for one ment and say to myself, "Suppose lliam Barker died in the lifetime of h Holloway, leaving grandchildren no children, could the intention of the tor be that the grandchildren should nothing and Sarah Holloway the e?" I think not. I think that he have intended to benefit the children ot to exclude the grandchildren. The "heirs of the body" cannot, there- limited to children, and to children I go on, "And at the decease of the id Sarah Holloway ——" [His p read the remainder of the will.] p to this time the testator is deal- interest, I agree, but he is deal- interest in perpetuity; and my tion of the passage is that, so long as there are heirs of the body of William Barker, the property is not to go to Sarah Holloway or to the hospital. The case is, therefore, within those in which the testator has desired to give successivè—that is to say, that as long as the heirs of the body of William Barker are not exhausted, the property is not to go to the hospital. A bequest in those terms is unlawful, and William Barker, the first taker, must therefore take absolutely. All parties will have their costs out of the fund.

Solicitors—R. Leonard, for petitioner; H. S. Leonard, for respondents; Freshfields & Williams, for the hospital.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 9.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE VESTRY OF BERMONDSEY.

Corporation—Improper Application of Parish Rates — Injunction against Corporation — Individual Vestrymen made Parties—Costs.

Members of a vestry who had voted for an illegal application of parish funds were made co-defendants with the vestry to an action to restrain such application of parish funds, and costs were claimed against the defendants other than the vestry. The vestry submitted to a perpetual injunction: —Held, that the individual vestrymen ought not to have been made defendants inasmuch as no wrongful application had been made, and could not be ordered to pay the costs of the action.

This was an appeal from a decision of Fry, J., who dismissed the action as against the individual vestrymen made defendants, but without costs, on the ground that there was no allegation of facts to support the injunction against them, and that they could not be made parties simply to pay the costs instead of the vestry.

The Attorney-General v. Vestry of Bermondsey, App.

The case is fully reported 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 848.

S. Dickinson, for the appellants, the plaintiffs in the action.—Although there is no distinct allegation that these defendants threatened and intended to do the illegal acts, there is a clear inference from the facts that they did so threaten and intend.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That will not do. You do not allege that these gentlemen were acting illegally, and there is no statement that they did anything wrong except voting improperly.]

They were active participators in a breach of public duty because they proposed and seconded these resolutions, and but for our prompt interference the parish funds would have been paid away in accordance with the resolutions. The case is governed by The Attorney-General v. Compton (1).

[JESSEL, M.R.—In that case the illegal act had been done. The money had been paid away. Here it has not been done. Is there not a measure of liability?]

I submit not.

[JESSEL, M.R.—If the thing had been done, I agree they could not shelter themselves from their liability. But is there any case in which they have been held liable to pay the costs where there has not been an actual misapplication of funds?]

No.

[JESSEL, M.R. — Then why did you bring them here?]

They were the majority who intended to make, and voted for, an improper application of the funds. They made an improper use of their statutory powers with the view of committing an illegal act. I submit, therefore, that they are individually just as liable as if they had actually done it, otherwise there will be no remedy in such cases until the act is done, except at the expense of the ratepayers themselves. Unless the relief asked for is granted, it will throw on the persons injured the payment of the costs of the action.

Ingle Joyce and Russell Roberts, for the several respondents, were not called upon (2).

(1) 1 You. & C.C.C. 417.

(2) See also Mill v. Hawker, 43 Law J. Rep. Exch. 129; Law Rep. 10 Exch. 92.

JESSEL, M.R.—This appeal, which is brought from a decision of Mr. Justice Fry, raises an important question which he did not consider or decide, for he dismissed the action against these respondents on a technical ground—I do not say wrongly—which prevented him from discussing the larger question. Now in this case there is a sort of allegation in the statement of claim that some of these gentlemen voted for a resolution which involved a misapplication of the funds of the parish. Well, vestries have no right to give balls and dinners out of the borough rates, and they have been restrained, and very properly, from so doing. But the Attorney-General has sued, not only the vestry, but these half dozen gentlemen who, I will take it, voted for these illegal resolutions. I will also take it that they formed the majority who carried the resolutions, although that is not distinctly alleged. Now I am not going to decide the case upon the bare technicality that when it is alleged that they, or some of them, moved and seconded the resolutions there was no allegation that they had actually voted for them. Taking it, therefore, that way, which is the most favourable to the appellants, namely, that it is established that these vestrymen formed the majority which voted for and carried the resolution for this illegal application of the parish funds, it comes to this, that having done that, can the Attorney-General sue them individually at all, the funds not having been actually misapplied? In other words, are they properly made parties to this action, which is in the nature of a bill quia timet? I think not. Of course if the funds had been misapplied they would no doubt have been liable, and they would be bound, whether in their corporate capacity or not, to repay the money so misapplied. But where that has not been done, and the Attorney-General sues to prevent it being done, it appears to me that two things must be alleged—first, that the defendants actually threatened and intended to do it; and, secondly, that the act was threatened and intended by individuals who had it in their power to do it. If these defendants had had the control of the borough funds independently of their being vestrymen, it might have it; but that is not the case. lleged here is that the vestry intend to do it, and an in- asked for only against the n why should these persons ies to the action solely for the naking them pay the costs? properly liable to pay the be those who threaten to funds—that is to say, the the reason why costs were inst the vestry was that the not want the vestry to pay e they would then fall partly f, he being one of the rate- recent case before this Court made to the old rule of the it was called—that is, that an orney, or an arbitrator, might rty in order that he might be or the costs of a suit. Ever ottenham's time, however, it d that this rule ought not to and I am quite clear that it be extended to the case of rporators or vestrymen. But her ground for not entertain- eal, and that is, that if the right in saying that these re personally liable, we cannot justice as to costs, for if they it can only be by way of the vestry. That liability investigated in this action, other members of the vestry n made parties. It may be liable to indemnify the vestry costs of this action, and that inst them for indemnity may by the vestry. I do not say action can be maintained. just that these defendants hese costs, the remedy lies in ion. Upon the whole, there- to me that the true ground ought not to have been made , and that the action as against to be dismissed. Indeed, the very fortunate in getting it thout costs. The appeal will with costs.

L.J. — I am of the same is has been an interesting but an experiment that has —CHANC.

failed; and if, as an individual vestryman, I had been made one of these defendants, I should have demurred to the statement of claim. It is not said that these defendants had any control over the money de facto. The only allegation is that they voted. Can it be right to bring an action against vestrymen simply because they have voted in right of their office? I think there is no authority for such an action. So far as the action sought to restrain the proposed application by the vestry of the borough funds to an unauthorised and illegal purpose, it was right; but so far as it seeks to make these individual vestrymen liable for the costs of the action, it is wrong. On these grounds I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. It does not at all follow that there is no remedy, and that the rates are to pay these costs, or that a rate levied for the payment of them cannot be quashed.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that these individual corporators should not have been joined as defendants in this action so far as related to anything they were doing, for the best of all reasons —that they were not doing anything. They were not individually threatening to do anything, but were assenting to the vestry doing something. It has been urged that they were active participators in a breach of public duty; but the unlawful act was never actually committed, and they were only added for the purpose of making them pay costs. Concurring fully as I do in what has been said by the Master of the Rolls, although I am not personally acquainted with the rule of the three A's referred to, I am, at all events, sure that no costs ought to be given against these defendants.

Solicitors—Wilkinson & Drew, for plaintiff; R. Chapman, for defendant O. N. Swann; J. Harrison, for other defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1882.
Nov. 23.
Dec. 7, 14, 15.

Ex parte DYKE; in re MORRISH.

Bankruptcy—Liquidation—Disclaimer—Determination of Lease—Distress—Forfeiture for Breach of Covenant—Entry—Effect of Action to recover Possession—Set-off—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 23, 34 and 39.

A landlord, whose tenant had filed a liquidation petition, before trustees were appointed, distrained for a year's rent, which had accrued due before the filing of the petition; and after the appointment of the trustees he distrained for another half-year's rent, which had accrued due after the filing of the petition, but before the appointment of the trustees:—Held, that the second distress was void under section 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869.

The liquidation petition was filed on the 5*th of September*, 1881. On the 13*th of October the trustees were appointed. On the* 14*th of October the landlord issued a writ in an ejectment action, and on the* 14*th of November the trustees disclaimed the lease*:—Held, that it was immaterial whether the commencement of the action by the landlord had put an end to the lease, because it vested in the trustees on their appointment, and was put an end to by the disclaimer, so that neither the trustees nor the landlord could benefit by any clauses in the lease which were to take effect at the expiration or sooner determination of the lease.

Under a lease, dated the 4th of October, 1873, G. M. Morrish was tenant of a farm belonging to Sir William Hart-Dyke for a term of twenty-one and a half years, from the 25th of March, 1873, at a rent of 750*l.*, payable half-yearly, on the 29th of September and the 24th of March in each year. The tenant covenanted (inter alia) that he would yearly, and every year during the continuance of the demise, lay up and stack on the farm all the corn and grain and hay grown thereon, and from time to time consume upon the farm such of the hay, straw, haulm, clover or roots which should be raised thereon, and which should not have been sold by the lessee; and yearly and every year during the term spread on the farm all the manure proceeding therefrom (except that to be made in the last year, which might be left made up in proper mixings, for labour on which the lessee was to be paid according to a valuation): Provided always, that it should be lawful for the lessee to sell from time to time and to carry off and remove from the farm any hay, straw, haulm, clover or roots which should be grown thereon, on his feeding and consuming on the farm, in each and every year during the continuance of the demise, with cattle or sheep, twenty tons of linseed cake; and also that the lessee would, at the expiration or other determination of the term, leave twelve acres of the arable land stocked with good hop-plants, and in good order and condition, and would at all times during the continuance of the term cultivate the farm in a proper manner. The lessor covenanted that the lessee might erect on the farm cottages for labourers not exceeding six in number, and that the lessor would, at the end or other sooner determination of the term, pay to the lessee according to a valuation for such cottages (not exceeding six) as might have been erected by the lessee, and also for all the hay and straw grown in the last year (which should be left for the succeeding or incoming tenant) at a feed price; and for all labour on the fallows, and for all labour on manures during the last year, and for all purchased manures (except any unreasonably and unnecessarily purchased), which should be brought on the premises during the last year, and from which no benefit should have been derived; and for all seeds sown seasonably, and for all labour bestowed on stubbles after harvest, and also for the hop-poles on the twelve acres of hops covenanted to be left by the lessee; and also would permit the lessee to have the use of the barns and yards on the farm until the 1st of May next, after the expiration or other sooner determination of the term, for the convenience of threshing out the last year's crops of corn and grain. The lease also contained a proviso that if the rent should be unpaid for twenty-one days next after either of the half-yearly days of payment, or in case of any breach, default, non-performance or non-observance of any of the lessee's covenants, or in case the lessee, his executors, administrators or assigns, or any of them, should, by their or his own act, default or procurement, whether voluntary or not, or by act of law, or by virtue of or under any Act of Parliament, or by or through all or any such means, lose, be deprived of, or cease to be entitled to, the actual possession of the demised premises, or any part thereof, or the term thereby granted, either wholly or in part, without the consent in writing of the lessor for that purpose first obtained, it should be lawful for the lessor, into and upon the demised premises, or any part thereof in the name of the whole, to re-enter; and the same to have again, retain, repossess and enjoy as in his first and former estate, and the lessee thereout and thenceforth to expel: Provided always, that nothing therein contained should prejudice the right of the landlord to proceed for the recovery of the rent thereby reserved when in arrear, either by distress or otherwise.

In 1874, Morrish erected three cottages for labourers upon the farm. He failed to pay two half-year's rent, which became due on the 29th of September, 1880, and the 24th of March, 1881, respectively. On the 5th of September, 1881, he filed a liquidation petition, and on the 23rd of September a receiver was appointed, who took possession of his property.

On the 13th of September, 1881, Sir W. Hart-Dyke levied a distress on the farm for 671*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, the amount of one year's rent, less deductions, due on the 24th of March, 1881; and this amount, together with 33*l.* 10*s.*, the expenses of the distress, was paid to him by the receiver on the 10th of October. At the first meeting of the creditors, held on the 13th of October, a liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and three trustees were appointed, who at once took over possession of the farm from the receiver. On the 14th of October, a writ was issued by Sir W. Hart-Dyke against the trustees in an action to recover possession of the farm under the provisions of the lease.

The trustees entered an appearance in the action on the 24th of October, but no further proceedings were taken. On the 25th of October, another distress was levied by Sir W. Hart-Dyke for the half-year's rent due on the 29th of September, 1881. The amount of this distress (394*l.* 15*s.*) was paid into Court under an order made on the 27th of October, 1881, by the County Court; and, in pursuance of the same order, Sir W. Hart-Dyke withdrew from possession.

The trustees then applied to disclaim the lease, and an order was made on the 14th of November, 1881, giving them leave to do so on or before the 18th, upon their paying to the landlord 49*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*, for rent due from the date of the filing of the petition to the 29th of September, 1881. The trustees accordingly sent a cheque for the amount to the landlord's solicitors (who, however, returned it), and withdrew from possession, and Sir W. Hart-Dyke took possession on the 21st of November.

At the date of the appointment of the trustees, there was on the farm a quantity of hay and straw, which had been grown during the years 1880 and 1881. This was claimed by the landlord, and also by the trustees, who contended that if the landlord kept it he ought to pay for it at market price. The trustees also claimed against the landlord for labour and manures expended upon the farm during the year ending the 13th of October, 1881. When the trustees took possession, twelve acres of the arable land were stocked with hop-poles. These were sold by the trustees by auction, and bought by the landlord, who paid 119*l.* 18*s.* for them, and this sum he claimed to be repaid. He also claimed to be entitled to the tenant's fixtures on the farm and to damages for breaches of the lessee's covenants between the date of the lease and the filing of the petition.

The Registrar of the County Court, acting as Judge, decided that the 394*l.* 15*s.* which had been paid into Court belonged to the landlord, but that the money paid for the hop-poles belonged to the trustees; that the landlord must pay for the hay and straw at the market price on the day on which he took possession; that the trustees were not entitled to be paid for the cottages, nor for the labour expended on the farm, nor for the tenant's fixtures; and that the landlord was not entitled to damages for breaches of covenant.

Both parties appealed to the Chief Judge.

Winslow, Q.C., and C. Browne, for the trustees.—The relation of landlord and tenant was entirely put an end to by the disclaimer of the lease—Ex parte Glegg (sub. nom. Ex parte Gregg) (1).

Any distress, therefore, levied after the appointment of the trustees, was invalid; the hay and straw vested in the trustees, and must be paid for at market price.

Pollard, for Sir W. Hart-Dyke, cited Ex parte Hale (2), Ex parte Allen (3), Ex parte Brook (4), Ex parte Corbett (5), and Smyth v. North (6).

The lease was determined on the 14th of November by the bringing of the action to recover possession by the lessor, and the landlord was therefore entitled to the poles without paying for them—Jones v. Carter (7), Grimwood v. Moss (8), Toleman v. Portbury (9), Wilson v. Waldam (10), Silcock v. Farmer (11), Clarke v. Westrope (12), Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (13) and Ex parte Hope (14).

Winslow, Q.C., in reply, cited Ex parte Paterson (15), Lowrey v. Barker (16), Ex parte Duignan (17), and Jones v. Carter (7).

Bacon, C.J.—This is in substance merely an attempt by the landlord to get property which belongs to other people. It would be a strange kind of law if I could take the course suggested by the learned counsel. I have listened very attentively to the long and elaborate arguments which have been addressed to me, and to a number of cases cited, which have, in my opinion, nothing whatever to do with the matter before me.

The first question I have to decide is under the statute relating to the landlord's right to distrain. After the commencement of the bankruptcy a landlord may distrain for twelve months' rent, and no more. Here he has distrained for twelve months' rent, and then he comes subsequently and distrains for another six months' rent. That last distress cannot be maintained, and the order made by the learned Registrar in the Court below in favour of the landlord must therefore be discharged. With respect to the other question, I am willing, to consider, with all possible respect, the decisions that have been cited, as indeed I am bound to do. I must treat the matter as if there had never been a lease. The tenant goes in to cultivate the land, and in the course of doing so he collects hay and straw. Whose is it? It belongs to him, and to nobody else. There can be no suggestion of the landlord's paying for it at feed price, because he could only do so by having recourse to the lease, which by common consent is gone as much as if it had never existed.

On what principle of law, either in the case in which Lord Justice Brett's decision was referred to—Silcock v. Farmer (11)—or in any other decision, can it be said to belong to the landlord, and that he can take this man's property as his own? When did it ever cease to be the property of the tenant? If the lease had been subsisting at the end of the term the landlord would have had to pay for it, and if the lease comes to a prior determination it is to be paid for. The lease does come to a premature determination, but the hay and straw remain, and, in my opinion, must be

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 367; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 7.
(2) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 21; Law Rep. 1 Ch. D. 285.
(3) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 724; Law Rep. 0 Ch. D. 341.
(4) 48 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 22; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 100.
(5) 49 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 74; Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 122.
(6) 41 Law J. Rep. Exch. 103; Law Rep. 7 Exch. 242.
(7) 15 Mee. & W. 718.
(8) 41 Law J. Rep. C.P. 239; Law Rep. 7 C.P. 360.
(9) 40 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 125; Law Rep. 6 Q.B. 245.
(10) 49 Law J. Rep. Exch. 437; Law Rep. 5 Ex. D. 155.
(11) 46 Law Times (N.S.) 404.
(12) 18 Com. B. Rep. 765; 27 Law J. Rep. C.P. 287.
(13) 12th ed. 734.
(14) 27 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 40.
(15) Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 908.
(16) 49 Law J. Rep. Exch. 433; Law Rep. 5 Ex. D. 170.
(17) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 68; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 605.

paid for. That is as plain as anything can be. In the first instance it is an appeal by the trustees against the order giving the landlord half a year's rent of the land, which sum ought by law and of right to be administered among the creditors of the bankrupt. I am of opinion that that order cannot be sustained, and must be discharged.

Then the other point is an application for an order declaring that the money paid for the hop-poles belongs to the trustees, and that the hay and straw should be taken at the market price, if it is to be taken at all. Mr. Pollard almost assented to that. I do not mean to say that he admitted it; but his argument that if taken at all it should be at feed price, and not at market price, cannot be supported without having recourse to the lease, which by common consent is not in existence. I cannot assent to that argument. As to the decision of the Master of the Rolls, I am bound by it. It has been put before me in many cases before, and, at all events, there it is. The lease is gone, and I cannot read "feed price" out of it. I find that the landlord has the benefit of taking possession of the tenant's property, and I think it perfectly right that he should pay for it. The amount of that is to be ascertained. The parties will not differ about that I suppose. Then the declaration that the landlord is not to be liable to pay for the cottages, and the labour, &c., expended on the farm, nor for the tenant's fixtures, is, in my opinion, quite right.

Then there is a declaration that the landlord is not entitled to make any claim for damages in respect of breaches of covenants under the lease. It is not for breach of covenants that damages are to be claimed. If any damage has been done to anything belonging to the landlord he may be entitled to prove for that damage, but not for any breach of covenant. He may claim for wrong that has been done, because a right of action exists independently of any lease. That may be now ascertained, but it is not worth while, I suppose, to bring it forward now that the bankruptcy has occurred. There will be no set-off. There can be no mutual dealings between a man who has suffered a wrong and the man who has done the wrong.

Sir W. Hart-Dyke appealed.

Pollard and F. G. Randolph, for the appellant.—The landlord was entitled to distrain for the half-year's rent due at Michaelmas, 1881, and the sum paid into Court belongs to him. Although the lease was determined by the bringing of the action, yet the distress is made valid by the statute 8 Anne, c. 14. s. 6. Section 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, does not affect the landlord's right.

The disclaimer did not, by reason of its relation back to the appointment of the trustees, invalidate the distress, which was for rent accrued due before the filing of the petition, and was levied before the trustees were appointed. The lease was disclaimed by the trustees before it vested in them. The title of a trustee in liquidation does not relate back for all purposes as in a bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, sub-s. 4, and Ex parte Duignan (17). The disclaimer by the trustees could have no operation on the lease, because the lease was already determined by the issue of the writ in the ejectment action—Jones v. Carter (7), Grimwood v. Moss (8), Cole on Ejectment, pp. 82, 635, 636, Birch v. Wright (18), Wilson v. Wallam (10), Franklin v. Carter (19), Bridges v. Smyth (20), Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, ss. 168, 210, 212, 221, Kennedy v. Liddy (21), Lord Talbot de Malahide v. Odlum (22), Dendy v. Nicholl (23) and Doe v. Rollings (24).

[JESSEL, M.R., referred to Little v. Heaton (25).]

Duppa v. Mayo (26), Goodright v. Cator (27), Croft v. Lumley (28), Platt on Leases (29) and Scarf v. Jardine (30). The landlord is entitled to buy at feed price that part of the hay and straw which was grown in the year preceding the last year of the tenancy.

(18) 1 Term Rep. 378.
(19) 1 Com. B. Rep. 750; 14 Law J. Rep. C.P. 241.
(20) 5 Bing. 410; 1 Law J. Rep. C.P. 33.
(21) Ir. Rep. 1 C.L. 105.
(22) Ibid. 5 C.L. 302.
(23) 4 Com. B. Rep. N S. 376; 27 Law J. Rep. C.P. 220.
(24) 17 Law J. Rep. C.P. 268.
(25) 2 Lord Raym. 750.
(26) 1 Wms. Saund. (ed. 1871) 436.
(27) 2 Dougl. 477, 484.
(28) 6 H.L. Cas. 672.
(29) Vol. ii. pp. 327, 328.
(30) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 612; Law Rep. 7 App. Cas. 345.

The tenant had no right to remove the hay and straw at all until he had performed his covenant to consume a certain amount of linseed-cake upon the farm. The trustees have no higher right than the debtor—56 Geo. 3. c. 50. s. 11, and Silcock v. Farmer (11). The disclaimer operates only as a surrender as to future rights, and does not divest those which have accrued—The Attorney-General v. Cox (31).

They also referred to Ex parte Brook (4) and Lowrey v. Barker (16).

The landlord is entitled to set off his claim for damages on account of breaches of covenant as against the tenant—Peat v. Jones (32).

Winslow, Q.C., and C. Browne, for the trustees.—The landlord has distrained for a year's rent, and under section 34 cannot recover any more. The issue of the writ in the action of ejectment did not determine the lease—Toleman v. Portbury (9), Lord Talbot de Malahide v. Odlum (22) and Landlord and Tenant Act (Ireland), 23 & 24 Vict. c. 154. The lease vested in the trustees, and therefore they could disclaim it—Ex parte Paterson (15). The disclaimer destroys the lease altogether, so that neither party can claim its benefits—Ex parte Glegg (1) and Ex parte Allen (3). There was no disclaimer in Silcock v. Farmer (11). The landlord has no right of set-off. If he has suffered any injury by the disclaimer his remedy is to prove in the liquidation under section 23.

Randolph, in reply.

JESSEL, M.R. — Several points are raised by this appeal. The time of the Court has been occupied with a very interesting argument, the great bulk of which it is not necessary for us to consider at all. The first point taken was that the landlord, who had distrained for a year's rent, and who had then distrained for another half-year's rent, was entitled to distrain for the third half-year's rent, although he had already distrained for a year's rent. Well, it appears to me that that point is completely covered by the 34th section of the statute, which limits the landlord to one year's rent, and that the appellant has got, as was pointed out by the Chief Judge, all that he is entitled to. In my opinion on that point the Chief Judge's decision is clearly right.

The next point is this. It is said that the landlord having brought an ejectment action against the trustees after the commencement of the liquidation, thereby put an end to the lease, and a great deal of ancient and modern learning was examined into in order to see whether that was so or not. But the answer of the trustees is, that question is wholly immaterial, because the lease actually vested in the trustees certainly for a day, and they are entitled to disclaim, and they have disclaimed it. I do not intend to confine my observations to this particular case, and to say that it is absolutely necessary that the lease should have actually vested in the trustee on his appointment, because it is quite possible that a lease might have come to an end before his appointment, and that still it might be allowable for him to disclaim it. But in this particular case the lease actually vested in the trustees when they were appointed, and it was decided by the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Paterson (15) that a trustee may disclaim a lease although the bankrupt's interest—that is, the term—has come to an end, because the trustee might be under very serious liabilities if he was not allowed to disclaim. However, that has been decided by the Court of Appeal; consequently these trustees disclaimed. What is the effect of the disclaimer? This has been decided by the Court of Appeal twice, in Ex parte Glegg (1) and in Ex parte Allen (3). It puts an end to the lease—not merely to the term, but to the lease itself. On the one hand, therefore, it deprives the landlord of the future benefit of all those clauses of the lease which give him a benefit; and, on the other hand, it deprives the tenant of the future benefit of all those clauses of the lease which give him a benefit. The result, therefore, is that in the present case neither party can claim the benefit of those provisions of the lease which arise only at the end or other sooner determination of the lease, and that is the main point of the case. The Chief Judge there was, in my opinion, right in holding that the tenant had lost his right to be paid for the cottages and tillages; and, on the other hand, that the landlord had lost his right to take the hay and straw at feed prices, or at any other than the market price.

(31) 3 H.L. Cas. 240.

(32) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 128; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 147.

This determines all the questions between the parties, except a very small question as to some hay and straw, said by the respondents to be worth 23*l.*, and said by the appellant to be worth something more, which was cut, not in the last year of the tenancy, but in the previous year. As to that, I must say that my mind has been rather exercised by the case of Silcock v. Farmer (11). I have not been able to extract from the case any new principle, and I am not quite confident that I know exactly what was the ground of the decision. Therefore, I would rather not say anything more about it. But it appears to me quite clear that what is offered by the respondents is quite right—that is, that the landlord shall take that portion of the hay and straw at feed prices, because in that way he will get the benefit of the arrangement. That portion should have been consumed on the premises by the tenant. I am satisfied that that is a just offer. It is a very small sum, but in that respect there will be a variation in the order, which is assented to by the respondents.

In all other respects the order appears to me to be right. The only other claim made on the part of the appellant is one which certainly cannot be entertained. He says that the tenant has committed some breaches of covenant. Well, if he has, the appellant can prove for damages in respect of them. He can prove for damages; but he cannot set off his claim against the property of the trustees, because the hay and straw are now the property of the trustees. Subject to the slight variation which I have mentioned the orders appealed against will be affirmed, and the respondents will have their costs.

COTTON, L.J.—I agree. The question was argued at considerable length as to the effect of the action which was brought by the landlord to recover possession; but, in my opinion, it is unnecessary to decide what that effect was, because there was a subsequent disclaimer of the lease by the trustees; and, under section 23, that disclaimer takes effect as from the date of the appointment of the trustees. And that being so, it gets rid of the liability of the trustees, even if an end was put to the lease by the appearance of the trustees in the action. But it is urged, and certainly I was at first very much struck by that argument, that the disclaimer, executed after the lease had been put an end to, was ineffectual. But, however startling the result may be, that a man may disclaim a thing which does not exist, yet there is the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Paterson (15) to that effect. Looking at the terms of the order in that case, I think it was intended so to decide as against the landlord. But, independently of that decision, I think the case comes within the words of this extraordinary 23rd section, which orders us to imagine a number of things as done which in fact have not been done and do not exist. On the execution of the disclaimer the lease is to be deemed to have been surrendered as from the date of the adjudication, not as from the date of the disclaimer. Now here, undoubtedly, this property was for a time vested in the trustees; and, that being so, it is property of the bankrupt acquired by the trustees to which the section applies. Of course there is a reason in this provision. The section was intended to protect the trustee (and also to protect the estate of the bankrupt from the liability to indemnify the trustee) as regards any liability to which he might become subject during the period for which the lease was vested in him. In my opinion, therefore, however startling the result may be, we must come to the conclusion that, even if the lease was put an end to by the bringing of the action and the appearance of the trustee, yet the disclaimer went back behind it, and put an end to the lease as by a surrender at a previous date.

The only other question to which I think it necessary to refer is whether Silcock v. Farmer (11) applies. There there was an absolute covenant by the tenant not to remove the hay and straw, and really the only question to my mind is whether we can construe the covenant in the present case as having the same effect. Though the language is not very clear, I think it would not be right to do so. There is first a covenant as to the way in which the farm is to be dealt with as a matter of cultivation during the existence of the lease. Then there is a covenant as to what is to be done with regard to the hay and straw which is to be left at the end of the term, and is to be taken by the landlord at feed prices. But here the surrender has put an end to that covenant. As regards covenants which were only to take effect after the period at which the surrender takes effect, they are gone, although these two covenants were probably intended by the landlord and tenant to have the effect of preventing the removal of the hay and straw, unless there was an equivalent quantity of good manure put on the farm by means of feeding with oil-cake; yet there is not an absolute covenant not to remove the hay and straw, but only a covenant providing for the cultivation during the continuance of the terms, and providing for the mode in which the hay and straw which could not be used in ordinary course on the farm—namely, that grown in the last year—should be dealt with. In my opinion there is not here, as there was in Silcock v. Farmer (11), an absolute covenant not to remove the hay and straw at any time; and I think, therefore, that case does not apply.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The point which has occupied the attention of the Court during now nearly two days is one of the very greatest possible importance—namely, whether, since the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852, the issuing of a writ of ejectment, at all events after the appearance of the defendant, is equivalent to re-entry by the landlord. The Court is, however, not called upon to decide that question. A good deal has been said about it; but when it is not necessary to decide a point, it is much better not to decide it. Upon a further examination of the case, it appears that that question is irrelevant, because, although the writ of ejectment was served on the 14th of October, the trustees had been appointed on the 13th, so that the writ was not issued till after the lease had vested in the trustees. Then, what is the effect of the subsequent disclaimer? I agree with the Master of the Rolls that it is not necessary to decide whether, even if the lease had expired before the appointment of the trustees, there might not still be, having regard to the interpretation clause (section 4) of the Bankruptcy Act, something upon which the disclaimer could operate. In the present case there was at all events something which did actually vest in the trustees on their appointment. That which vested in them was a lease, and the disclaimer put an end to that lease, and the effect of the disclaimer is, beyond all controversy, set at rest by the decisions of this Court; and section 23 of the Act seems to me to have rendered it imperative on the Court to give those decisions, because section 23 says that, when there is a disclaimer of a lease, the lease is to be deemed to have determined as from the date therein mentioned, and as if it was, not forfeited, or ended, or expired, but surrendered. That is to say, the parties are put by the statute in the position of persons who have voluntarily agreed, the one to make and the other to accept a surrender of the lease, although they have really done nothing of the kind; and from that somewhat peculiar enactment all the other consequences seem to me to follow by a stern logic. If the law of bankruptcy is in future dealt with by the Legislature, it would, I think, be well that their attention should be called to this section. I agree that after a surrender of this kind—a statutory surrender—neither party can claim the benefit of those provisions of the lease which come into effect only at its expiration or other sooner determination.

As to Silcock v. Farmer (11) I entirely agree with what Lord Justice Cotton has said. It appears to me that the decision there turned upon a different covenant.

Randolph asked for leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

JESSEL, M.R.—No. We do not think we have decided anything new.

Solicitors—Meynell & Pemberton, for landlord; Makinson & Carpenter, agents for C. R. Gibson, Dartford, for trustees.

COURT OF APPEAL.]

Ex parte FOSTER; in re FOSTER.

—Debtor's Summons—Dis- or Equitable Defence to uptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 7.

t is exigible it will not sup- summons under section 7 of y Act, 1869; if the debtor y legal or equitable defence or the debt, the summons nissed.

reditor of F. & Co., who, ulties, summoned a private ir creditors. The meeting by nineteen out of twenty- , whose debts amounted to a total of 2,628*l. A resolu- l by the meeting, and signed an, that the debtors' estate ld be assigned to trustees for ie creditors. In pursuance on, the debtors gave up pos- r property to the trustees he meeting; but the deed of hough prepared, was never vas present at the meeting, the resolution:— he resolution did not consti- agreement; but that it was inary step, intended to be leed was executed by all the had not been done; and , therefore, precluded from 's summons for the amount* in this case were a firm of anufacturers, carrying on nchester under the name of it.

1882, they were in diffi- debts to the amount of to twenty-seven creditors. October a private meeting was held, at which nineteen ded, the amount of their 00*l.* Among the creditors neeting was Samuel Heilbut, of the firm of Heilbut, Symons & Co., who were creditors for 777*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* At this meeting a resolution was carried, to the effect that the debtors should assign their estate and effects to three gentlemen, who were nominated by the meeting as trustees for the creditors. Mr. Wright was to have his discharge, on payment of 200*l.* or otherwise, as the creditors should direct. The trustees were to have power to carry on the business for such time as they thought fit, and to sell the same, and a deed of assignment was to be prepared. This resolution was signed by the chairman of the meeting. The day after the meeting the debtors gave up possession of their stock-in-trade and effects, including their leasehold factory, to the trustees, who carried on the business for a few weeks, and got in the book debts. The deed of assignment was prepared, but never executed.

CHANC.

On the 27th of October a debtor's summons was taken out by Heilbut & Co. against the debtors for 189*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.*, being the amount of a dishonoured acceptance, forming part of the debt of 777*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* due from the debtors to Heilbut & Co.

On the application of the debtors, the Registrar of the County Court dismissed the summons, on the ground that by assenting to the resolution Heilbut was precluded from issuing it.

Heilbut & Co. appealed to the Chief Judge, and the appeal came on to be heard on the 15th of January, 1883.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for the appellants.—The question is, whether there was accord and satisfaction of Heilbut & Co.'s debt. The resolution was not binding until the execution of a proper deed.

The only point here is whether there was a debt of sufficient amount to support a summons—Ex parte Ellis (1) and Ex parte Mauritz (2).

Winslow, Q.C., and S. Taylor, for the debtors.—There was really accord and satisfaction. A creditor is not entitled to sue after assenting to such a resolution as

(1) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 77; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 602.

(2) 39 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 56; Law Rep. 5 Chanc. 779.

this—Good v. Cheesman (3), Tatlock v. Smith (4), Wood v. Roberts (5) and Whitmore v. Turquand (6).

BACON, C.J.—The right of the appellants under the statute is plain. That they are creditors is not disputed. That they have served the debtors is clear. But then the debtors avail themselves of a statutory provision for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the summons ought to be dismissed; and that is really the only question before me.

Something has been said about the extent to which Mr. Heilbut is bound by his assent, which is not disputed. Mr. Willis says, "At least he gave a tacit assent." A tacit assent is as good as any other assent for the purpose of the proceedings which took place upon it, namely, actual cession by the debtors of their property, possession taken by the trustees, and a deed of assignment prepared, though not executed; the debtors being willing and ready to execute the deed when settled. With all that, however, I have nothing to do. The statute prescribes the only grounds on which an application to dismiss a summons shall be heard. The words of section 7 are, "Any debtor served with a debtor's summons may apply to the Court . . . . to dismiss such summons, on the ground that he is not indebted to the creditor serving such summons, or that he is not indebted to such an amount as will justify such creditor in presenting a bankruptcy petition against him." Those words limit and prescribe the authority which the Court has in dealing with a debtor's summons.

In Ex parte Ellis (1), a creditor who had got a judgment against a debtor for some unpaid costs, of an amount sufficient to sustain proceedings in bankruptcy, took out a debtor's summons. The debtor applied to have the summons discharged, because he said the creditor was taking an unfair advantage of him. The creditor knew that the debtor was suing him in an action of ejectment, in which it was quite possible the debtor might recover a larger sum in damages than the amount of the alleged debt, and the debtor said he believed the summons was taken out to embarrass his proceedings in the action. Upon those representations, the Registrar was induced to believe that he had jurisdiction to enter into equitable or legal considerations, and that he was justified in dismissing the summons; and whether he had such jurisdiction or not was the point there decided. I cannot now dispute or go against the decision pronounced in Ex parte Ellis (1). [His Lordship read the judgment in Ex parte Ellis (1), observing that neither in that case nor in the present was there any application to suspend proceedings, and continued:] Can anything be more distinct than that decision? If there were any doubt on the words of the Act of Parliament, as I think there is not, the doubt would be removed entirely by the clear decision in that case. I do not wonder that the Court in this instance, having heard the facts, which were not disputed, was strongly adverse to the consequences of what had taken place. When the application in this case was made to the Court, it was open to the Court, under its general jurisdiction, to enter upon the consideration of the circumstances which have been stated to-day, and to have come to the conclusion that it would be unjust to permit proceedings in bankruptcy to go on at all at the instance of a man who, as I have said, admits that on the 16th of October he tacitly assented to the arrangement then made. I desire it to be understood that I pronounce no opinion upon the state of circumstances upon which the case has been most argued. The only question is one under the statute, as to the course to be taken by the Court when the debt, being of an amount sufficient to sustain an adjudication, is admitted. The Court might have suspended the proceedings on the summons. This the Registrar did not do, but, on the grounds that have been stated, he thought the proceeding an improper one, and so dismissed the summons. That, in my opinion, was wholly beyond his authority; and, following the decision in Ex parte Ellis (1), I hold that, a sufficient

(3) 2 B. & Ad. 328; 9 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) K.B. 234.

(4) 6 Bing. 639; 3 Mo. & P. 676; 8 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) C.P. 54.

(5) 2 Stark. 417.

(6) 3 De Gex, F. & J. 107; 1 Jo. & H. 444; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 345.

ing been admitted, the Registrar
t to have dismissed the summons,
. he might have stayed the pro-
All that I can do, therefore, is rge the order appealed from; but ge it without costs.

btors now appealed.
no, Q.C., and S. Taylor, for the ts.—Heilbut's assent to the resopassed at the meeting precludes issuing the summons.
was in fact a legal agreement uld not be set aside except on the of fraud, and that would have ood answer to an action by any for his debt—Tatlock v. Smith (4) l v. Cheesman (3).
Chief Judge considered himself
y the decision in Ex parte Ellis in that case the debtor's summons ed for a judgment debt, and is listinguishable from the present bmit that there was accord and on of the debts. The creditors and the debtors acted on the ns by handing over their prothe trustees—Whitmore v. Tur-

).
L, M.R.—In that case satisfaction lied from the nature of the trans-
The point here is whether there agreement at all.] anding over of their property by ors to the trustees implies an
it. Apart from the Statute of ny agreement may be oral. Here s a proposal by the debtors, the stion being whether Heilbut & Co.
. But the Statute of Frauds does ly, because there was part per-
.
L, M.R.—The part performance by the party to be charged.] part performance was by both the debtors having handed over operty to the trustees who were d by the creditors. It would be injustice if all the creditors were be entitled to issue debtor's sum-for their debts. Mr. Robson, in t on Bankruptcy, 4th ed. p. 167,
If the creditor consents to the ment of the payment, or giving security beyond the prescribed time allowed for payment, he will not be able to avail himself of the omission to pay as an act of bankruptcy. And the same consequences will follow if the creditor takes any step which prevents or imposes a legal difficulty in the way of the debtor's complying with the summons." The question therefore here is whether Heilbut & Co. have taken any step which imposes a difficulty in the way of the debtor's complying with the summons. Clearly by the cessio bonorum the debtor is deprived of his means of complying with the summons.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for Heilbut & Co., were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—The first point to be considered is the meaning of the 7th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and, with great deference to the Chief Judge, I think there are some expressions in his judgment which appear to shew that he put rather too narrow a construction on that section. It is important to consider what the true construction is, because I should be sorry to have it supposed that the Court of Bankruptcy is restricted in the manner in which he seems to have considered it is with regard to the dismissal of a debtor's summons. When we look at the words of the section we must consider the object of it. The object was to compel a man to commit an act of bankruptcy if he could not pay his debts. What kind of debts? Clearly debts for which an action could be maintained. It never could have been the meaning of the Legislature à priori that a man could be compelled to commit an act of bankruptcy under this section for a debt for which an action could not be maintained. And it must be remembered that wherever you could formerly restrain an action on equitable grounds you can now defend the action on the same grounds, and therefore the distinction between an action which can be maintained at law and which can be restrained in equity, and an action which cannot be maintained at law, has now absolutely disappeared. Now, remembering this, what is a debtor's summons to be granted for? Section 7 says that "a debtor's summons may be granted by the Court on a creditor proving to its satisfaction that a debt sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy is due to him from the person against whom the summons is sought, and that the creditor has failed to obtain payment of his debt after using reasonable efforts to do so."

Now there are two things mentioned. The debt must be sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy, and the creditor must have used reasonable efforts to obtain payment. A debt is not sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy unless it is a debt then payable. It must not only be a debt, but an exigible debt. To take a very common illustration, a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations, there is no doubt the debtor need not pay it, and if he does not it will not support a petition in bankruptcy, and it cannot be said that the creditor has failed to obtain payment of the debt after using reasonable efforts to do so. That is a debt which is barred, as we call it, by the Statute of Limitations, though it is still a debt. Such a debt will not support a debtor's summons. I will give another illustration. Suppose there is a mortgage for a term of five years—that is, the mortgage-deed contains a covenant by the mortgagee not to sue during the five years, provided that the interest is regularly paid. In such a case there would be a debt, but the covenant not to sue would be a good defence to an action for it, and a sufficient ground for restraining an action. Can it be supposed that you could have a debtor's summons for it? It would not support a petition in bankruptcy, because it would not be due in the sense of being payable; nor could it be said that the creditor had failed to obtain payment after using reasonable efforts to do so. He could not obtain payment at all if the interest was regularly paid. Now that being so, the next clause of the section is, "Any debtor served with a debtor's summons may apply to the Court in the prescribed manner and within the prescribed time to dismiss such summons, on the ground that he is not indebted to the creditor serving such summons, or that he is not indebted to such amount as will justify such creditor in presenting a bankruptcy petition against him; and the Court may dismiss the summons with or without costs, if satisfied with the allegations made by the debtor." What does "not indebted" mean? It means that he is not indebted modo et forma—that he is not indebted in a sum sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy, and of which the creditor has failed to obtain payment after using reasonable efforts to do so. That is what it must mean. It means not indebted in a sum of money which the debtor is then liable to pay, and it does not matter what is the ground of non-liability, legal or equitable. And this is shewn still more clearly by what follows as to the way in which the question of the debt is to be decided if doubtful, because it may be decided in an action. The Court "may, upon such security (if any) being given as the Court may require for payment to the creditor of the debt alleged by him to be due, and the costs of establishing such debt, stay all proceedings on the summons for such time as will be required for the trial of the question relating to such debt: provided that, when the summons shall have issued from the London Court of Bankruptcy, such trial shall be had either before such Court or before any other Court of competent jurisdiction, and when the summons shall have issued from a County Court, before such Court in all cases in which it has now jurisdiction, and in all other cases before some competent tribunal." Consequently it is to be tried in an action when it is not tried before the Bankruptcy Court. Then, if there is a verdict and judgment for the defendant, is not the debtor's summons to be dismissed? Any other construction would allow the debtor's summons to go on, though there was a good defence to the action. If there are equitable grounds which would entitle a Court of equity to restrain an action for the debt, those equitable grounds would equally prevent the creditor from proceeding in bankruptcy, and they are good grounds for dismissing the summons, because there is no debt presently payable. If the conduct of the creditor has been such as to deprive him of the right to the then payment of the debt, his summons ought to be dismissed. It would be cruel to put any other interpretation upon the section, for you could a man a bankrupt who could not d for the debt. If, then, the appel-have any equity, it can be enforced

t then the question arises whether ppellants have any equity. The lty in their way is that they must some agreement binding on the cre-which prevents him from requiring resent payment of his debt. Unately the resolution passed at the ng of the creditors was not binding absent creditors. That is admitted.
assume for the present purpose that solution was assented to by the crewho have issued the debtor's sum-
. The meeting was attended by a majority of the creditors, and it is ed that a contract was arrived at was valid at common law. It is contract binding under any statute, herefore the appellants are compelled ert that it was a contract binding at on law. But, in the absence of any d deed, the questions are—first, was any agreement at all? Secondly, it an agreement binding at common Thirdly, is there any statute which nts it being binding? Fourthly, is any means of getting over the dify which arises under the Statute of ds?

w it appears to me there never was greement at all. What happened this: [His Lordship read the reson.] The debtors were present, and it id they assented to the resolution.
I have assumed. Now what was argain? The only bargain was a re-ion, passed with the assent of all the tors present, that there should be an nment of the whole of the debtors' s to certain trustees with certain rs. How could that be unless all reditors should come in? The object no doubt that they should come in, se otherwise the creditors would not the benefit of the assets, and Mr.
ht could not get his discharge. The us meaning of it is that all the cres should come in, and then Mr. Wright d get his discharge on paying 200*l.*, then, and not till then, could the ution be carried out by the trustees ing on the business for the benefit of the creditors, that is, of all the creditors, which was obviously intended. I daresay it was supposed, as Mr. Winslow put it, that those creditors who were absent would come in, or that, if they would not, some of the creditors who were present would buy them out, and in that way get the assent of all the creditors. That was the bargain, and no doubt it was intended that they should all come in and be bound, for in no other way was it possible that the resolution should be carried into effect. As they did not all come in, it appears to me there has never been any bargain at all, that is, any final agreement. There was an attempt to come to an agreement, which has failed. That is one difficulty, and it is enough to dispose of the case.

But there are some other difficulties. Amongst the property was the leasehold factory of the debtors, which, of course, could only be made the subject of contract on compliance with the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Now there is no pretence that the creditors in question ever signed anything. Nobody signed anything except the chairman of the meeting. The directors did not sign anything, and they were not bound any more than the creditors. It was attempted to get over this difficulty in two ways. In the first place, it was said that the chairman had an implied authority to sign for all the creditors. There is no evidence of such an authority, and the mere fact of a man's being appointed chairman of a meeting of creditors certainly does not give him, by common law, or any other law, the right to sign contracts for them; and there is not a particle of evidence of any special authority. Under these circumstances it appears to me that that proposition is not made out.

Then it is said that the next day the debtors gave up their stock-in-trade, &c., and books to the trustees. They never executed any document, it is true; but the trustees took possession and sold the property, and that is part performance sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. The answer to that is, it is not a part performance. In the first place, the trustees were not trustees under the resolution until the deed of assignment was executed. There is no appointment of trustees as there is under the Bankruptcy Act. They are simply the nominees of the creditors to whom the assignment was to be made; but until the assignment was made there was no power or authority conferred on them at all. There was no power to take the property from the debtors in the way they did without any deed of assignment, and no power whatever to deal with the property. What they did was not authorised by the creditors.

Well, that being so, the acts of the trustees could not make that an agreement which was not an agreement at all, nor were those acts evidence of an agreement. But there is another point about this. The doctrine of part performance is founded upon a change of possession, which is assented to by that party to the contract who is sought to be charged. It cannot be alleged by him that he is a trespasser. You refer his possession (if you can) to a legal origin, and you can do that by implying a contract. But you cannot make a contract by the act of a third party who is no party to the contract itself. For instance, if A and B contract that A shall sell an estate to B, and B takes possession of it, that is evidence against B of a contract by him to buy the estate, for otherwise he would be a wrong-doer. But if A and B agree that an estate shall be settled on C for life, with remainder to B, and B gives possession to C, that is not evidence against A. And that is really what took place here. The bargain was that the property should be conveyed to C. But how can the fact of C being put into possession by B be evidence that A gave up his debt? It is plain that A is not a party to the taking possession, and he is not a trespasser; and consequently, as against him, the giving of possession to the persons who are to be trustees is no evidence whatever of a contract on his part, and is not part performance by him. That puts an end to the notion that there is anything to take this case out of the Statute of Frauds.

Then it is said that Heilbut knew what was done, and stood by. First of all, he did not stand by for long, because he took out this debtor's summons a few days after the transaction. But if he stood by, that does not raise any case of acquiescence which can deprive him of his legal rights. How could he prevent the debtors from giving up their property? They were masters of their own property; and how can it be said that he stood by and acquiesced in a state of things to which he was not a party and which he had no power to prevent? He did not really stand by, and there is no pretence for raising such an equity against him. No doubt what has happened is felt by the appellants to be a hardship. There are technicalities to a certain extent; and I have no doubt the thing would have gone all right, had it not been for the unfortunate accident about the debtor's books. I think that is very likely. I think the creditors who were not present at the meeting would have been bought out, and the arrangement would have been carried into effect.

Mr. Winslow argued that it is the same thing as if the deed had been executed. That, however, has not been done. I have no doubt that the trustees would never have accepted the leasehold property; for if they had accepted it, they would have been under an obligation to perform the covenants contained in the lease. I have no doubt that if it was worth having they would have got an underlease; if it was not worth having it would not have been accepted at all, and the creditors would have proved under the deed as altered. But that is not the bargain. Though I have no doubt it would have been so in fact, that was not the arrangement; and therefore I am not at all prepared to assume, no deed having been executed, that the trustees would have been willing to carry out the resolution in this form. Whatever might have been the result if other events had not intervened, I am by no means prepared to admit that the non-execution of the deed was a mere matter of form, and not a real variation from what was intended.

On the whole it appears to me that there is no contract whatever with the creditors, and nothing to prevent the respondents from issuing a debtor's summons. The appeal must be dismissed, order of the County Court dishe debtor's summons set aside.

EY, L.J.—I am of the same
The debtor's summons was taken Heilbut, Symons & Co., in which . Heilbut is a partner. It is that the summons ought to be l on several grounds, which are, educible to two: first, that the re not indebted to the firm in the ged; and, secondly, that if they bted to the firm, one of the part-it has so conducted himself as to the firm from taking these pro-
These are the two main points.
th respect to the debt, I quite the observations made by the f the Rolls on section 7 of the tcy Act, and I do not intend to iem. When it is said that "a summons may be granted on a proving that a debt sufficient to a petition in bankruptcy is due
I understand the words "is mean is enforceable against him.
tand the words in that sense; and er of the Rolls has given reasons,
I concur, why they must be so od. And when the latter part of n says that the debtor may apply urt to dismiss the summons "on nd that he is not indebted" to noning creditor, I understand the n "is not indebted" in a similar at is, as meaning that he is not in such a way that he can then to pay; and anything which to a defence in that sense to an ill prevent his being indebted he true meaning of section 7. I hink the words ought to be read stricted technical sense of similar pleadings at common law.
f we ask whether Heilbut & Co.
tors of the debtors in the sense in ey must be to establish a debt, ver must of course be "Yes," at has taken place with reference eeting of creditors justifies the n insisting that the answer ought o." Now what has taken place to me to be in substance this.
s a meeting of creditors, and at sting Mr. Heilbut, one of the partners in the respondents' firm, was present. A resolution was then come to, which was reduced into writing and signed by the chairman. There is a conflict of evidence on the question whether Mr. Heilbut assented to the resolution or not. The Registrar who heard the case came to the conclusion that he did assent. I am not at all sure that I should have come to the same conclusion. So far as I can judge from the evidence, it appears to me extremely doubtful whether he ever did assent. But, assuming that he did, what is the legal consequence of his doing so? Suppose before the Judicature Act passed Heilbut & Co. had brought an action against the debtors for their debt, could the debtors have obtained an injunction in equity to restrain the action? I think that is a fair way of testing it. Legal defence, I take it, there would have been none. That seems to me so obvious that I do not think it is worth while to pursue the question. Could the debtors have obtained an injunction to restrain the action? It appears to me, on the facts which we have before us, that they could not.

There are some technical objections arising out of the Statute of Frauds, and I feel the force of all the observations which have been made by the Master of the Rolls with reference to that part of the subject. But, looking at the case on a broader ground, it appears to me that nobody was bound by the resolution until something more had been done. It was a mere preliminary arrangement. Another step was contemplated—namely, that a deed which would have enabled the debtors to get their discharge should be prepared and executed by everybody. But things never got to that length; and it appears to me, upon the language of the resolution alone, that it was a mere preliminary step, and not a concluded agreement which precluded any creditor from bringing an action for his debt. That being so, of course nine-tenths of the difficulties disappear.

It is only necessary to allude shortly to the other argument, that Mr. Heilbut, who was present at the meeting, has so conducted himself as to render it inequitable or unjust on the part of his firm to enforce their debt. I think that argument also fails. In the first place, I should feel some little difficulty in holding the firm bound at law or in equity on the ground that one of the partners had done something which would make it unfair for him to sue for the debt if he alone were suing. I think it would be difficult to bind the firm by anything of that kind. But it appears to me that there has been no such conduct on his part, and for this reason: it is alleged (and Mr. Taylor put it in the only way in which it could be put) that the creditors have disabled the debtors from paying their debts. But the answer to that is conclusive. The creditors did nothing of the sort. The handing over by the debtors of their business and assets to the trustees was entirely premature. It was never contemplated by anybody that this should be done before the other creditors had come in. It was not anticipated. I do not doubt that everybody supposed all would go well, and the thing was done as a matter of course. But when you come to consider whether that which was done is sufficient to preclude the respondents from enforcing their debt, the legal answer must be "No." On these grounds it appears to me that the order of the Chief Judge was right, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors—Gregory & Co., agents for W. L. Welsh & Son, Manchester, for appellants; Tamplin, Tayler & Joseph, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Jan. 25.

Ex parte HUDSON; in re WALTON.

Bankruptcy — Composition — Small Amount of—Security—Registration of Resolutions—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 126—Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, rule 295.

Where a meeting of creditors resolved to accept a composition of 1*s. in the pound*, —Held, that the smallness of the sum was not of itself evidence that the resolution was not passed bona fide, that is, in the interests of the creditors and not for the benefit of the debtor; and the composition being secured by a third person, the resolution was ordered to be registered.

The true meaning of the Bankruptcy Act is that in all such cases the arrangement must be one which the creditors acting bona fide can accept.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

Edwin Walton, who filed a liquidation petition on the 5th of November, 1882, by his statement of affairs, produced at the first meeting of his creditors, stated that his unsecured debts were 504*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, his secured debts 81*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*, and his assets only 5*l.*

The creditors passed resolutions accepting a composition of 1*s.* in the pound, payable within seven days of the confirmation of the resolution, and to be secured by the guarantee of the debtor's brother, who was appointed trustee for the distribution of the composition.

A dissentient creditor opposed the registration of the resolutions, on the ground that the proceedings were an abuse of the process of the Court. The resolutions were registered by the Registrar, and the creditor now appealed.

Burleigh Muir, for the appellant.—The resolutions ought not to have been te Hudson; in re Walton (App.), Bankr.

—Ex parte Staff (1), Ex parte Ex parte Aaronson (3) and Ex liams (4).
, M.R., referred to Ex parte).] btor has not properly explained become of all his assets.
n Bankes, for the debtor, was not

, M.R.—I think that under the nces of this case we must treat gement as a bona fide one; and s. in the pound is but a small s not so small as to be of itself that the resolutions were not na fide—that is, passed in the of the creditors and not for the the debtor. With regard to the s, Ex parte Terrell (5) is in favour of this view. In that ebtor filed a liquidation petition, tatement of affairs shewed that amounted to 11,538*l.*, while his re only 75*l.*, and the creditors o accept a composition of 1*s.* in l, to be paid within a month, no eing given for its payment. The Appeal held that the resolution have been passed in the interest ditors, and that it was not bind- dissentient minority, and ought registered. Now it is important at the three Judges of the Court l said about it. It is quite plain hought that in some cases a com- of 1*s.* in the pound might be if the arrangement was made ; and that when the debtor's re not sufficient to pay that the arrangement would be valid for the payment of the com- was given by a third person. tice James said, "The facts of the ase shew that the resolution have been passed bona fide. The

aw J. Rep. Bankr. 137; Law Rep. 20

aw J. Rep. Chanc. 911; Law Rep. 20

aw J. Rep. Bankr. 60; Law Rep. 7

aw J. Rep. Chanc. 741; Law Rep. 95.

aw J. Rep. Bankr. 47; Law Rep. 4

debtor had no assets; he merely gives his promise to pay the composition, and nobody else offers to give any security for it." That observation shews that if any one else had offered to give security the opinion of the Lord Justice would have been different. He went on, "The creditors merely accept the hope that the son will in the course of a month find the money to pay it. That is not the sort of arrangement which, as it appears to me, was contemplated by the Act as one which could bind the dissentient minority of the creditors." Lord Justice Baggallay, after referring to the judgment of Lord Justice James in Ex parte Page (6), says: "It is part of the case set up that there are no assets at all, and that there is no security given for the payment of the composition; consequently the resolution, in substance, amounts to nothing more than a release of the debtor from his obligations." There, again, he relies on the fact that no security was given; and his words would have no meaning if the giving of security for the composition was not a material circumstance. In the present case security is offered. Then Lord Justice Brett, after observing that the question was whether the resolution was a bona fide one, adds: "The case here is that the debtor had practically no assets; he had no prospect of being able to pay 1*s.* in the pound; and then a resolution is passed that 1*s.* in the pound is to be paid in one month, and no security is to be given for its payment. For whose benefit could such a resolution have been passed? If you assume that he had no prospect of paying the 1*s.*, of what advantage to the creditors could that resolution be? It is plain that it could not be of any advantage to them, and that the only person who could benefit by it was the debtor." There is therefore a clear expression of opinion by all three Judges that a resolution to accept a composition of 1*s.* in the pound would not per se be held to be evidence of a want of bona fides, but that the creditors might accept such a composition as a reasonable dividend if they were acting bona fide. We know from experience that in many bankruptcies 1*s.* in the pound is a reasonable dividend. Those judgments also go to shew that if security had been offered for the composition the registration of the resolution would have been allowed in that case. And in Ex parte Aaronson (3) Lord Justice Baggallay expressly states that the resolutions in Ex parte Terrell (5) would have been registered if security for the payment of the composition had been given. It appears to me that the true meaning of the Act is, as it has been stated in all the authorities, that the arrangement must be one which the creditors can, acting bona fide, accept. If 1*s.* in the pound is more than the debtor's assets will produce, the creditors are prima facie entitled to accept a composition of that amount if they get security for its payment. This disposes of the supposed rule that a man who has no assets cannot file a liquidation petition at all; if a debtor has no assets, but some third person comes forward and offers to give security for the payment of a composition of 1*s.* in the pound, that is an arrangement which may be properly carried out, if it is made bona fide. The only question then is, whether the creditors in the present case have been acting bona fide; and I can see nothing in the world to impeach the bona fides of the transaction.

(6) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 119; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 328.

Though 1*s.* in the pound is not a large sum, I cannot say that in this case it is not a real dividend as distinguished from a sham one, like the 6*d.* in the pound which was offered in Ex parte Ball (2). As to the other objection, that the debtor has concealed some of his assets, I do not think he has. I can well understand that he may have suffered losses by depreciation of his stock-in-trade. But if the creditors thought that there were concealed assets, it was their duty to ask the debtor about them at the meetings. The mere fact that a man has not explained every shilling of his losses does not shew that he is acting fraudulently. We know that there are frequently losses in trade by depreciation in the value of goods. There is really no evidence that the debtor has concealed any assets. In my opinion the Registrar's decision was right, and ought to be affirmed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. We ought to satisfy ourselves of the real bona fides of what is proposed. There is no ground here for thinking that any of the debts said to be due to creditors had been manufactured for the purpose; and to that extent there is bona fides. In the next place the offer of 1*s.* in the pound is bona fide in this sense, that it is offered by a relative of the debtor who is able to pay it, and it is to be paid net; there is to be no deduction for costs. Though it is a small sum, still it is something. There is a great distinction between liquidation by arrangement and composition. It may well be that in some cases, like Ex parte Staff (1), when a debtor has no assets, a liquidation by arrangement may be an abuse of the process of the Court; I am not prepared to say that a composition of 1*s.* in the pound is an abuse of the process of the Court in all cases where the debtor has no assets. Of course an offer of 2*d.* in the pound would be ridiculous. The question is one of bona fides, and, in my opinion, the present is an honest case, and the creditors were entitled to accept the offer.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The real question is whether the transaction is bona fide. There is no hard and fast pecuniary line, except that the sum offered must not be so small that no reasonable man would accept it. The true test is bona fides, and I think under the circumstances of the present case the resolution was passed bona fide.

Solicitors—Sidney Chapman, for appellant; Hatton & Westcott, for respondent.

ANGUS v. MCLACHLAN.

eeper's Lien — Taking Security— —Custody of Goods detained.

mere taking by an innkeeper from nt of a security for the payment of does not necessarily destroy the lien he innkeeper has by the common law e goods of his guest; in order to the lien there must be something in e of the case, or in the nature of rity taken, which is inconsistent retention of the lien, or which is ver of it.

nnkeeper who enforces his lien upon s of his guest for the payment of is in the position of a gratuitous nd is not bound to exercise more the keeping of the goods than he o in the case of his own.

was an action brought by the , an hotel proprietor, against the de- and his wife, to recover the amount hotel bill, the defendants having t the plaintiff's hotel from Novem- 0, till the 11th of June, 1881. ills which had been delivered from time were at first paid by the nt, but nothing had been paid since 1 of December, 1880. arch, 1881, the plaintiff applied ment of his bill up to date. The nt said he could not then conve- pay, but he offered to give the a memorandum charging some n a certain ship belonging to him e payment of his account. He gly gave the plaintiff the following ated the 8th of March, 1881 :— r Sir,—I hereby charge the bill of he ship Leonidas, now in the hands rs. Phelps, Sedgwick & Biddle, of ham Street, City, with the payment ccount now due or to become due rself to you. Yours truly, "J. F. McLachlan. Angus."

vidence of what took place on the of the giving of this letter was ng. Its effect is stated in the nt.

laintiff endeavoured to raise money on this letter, but found that it was of no value as a security; he accordingly again asked for payment, and on the defendants promising to pay, he allowed them to remain at the hotel till the 11th of June, 1881, when a sum of 83*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* was due from them. The plaintiff then insisted upon being paid, and on the defendants being unable to find the money, he turned them out and detained their goods. These goods were deposited by the plaintiff in a cupboard where similar goods of his own were kept, and were left there until the 30th of September, 1881, when they were given up to the defendant.

In August, 1881, the plaintiff commenced his action for a declaration that the amount to be found due from the defendant to him was a charge on the defendant's shares in the ship Leonidas, and for payment of the amount so found due.

On the 5th of August, 1881, an order was made restraining the defendant from selling or dealing with the shares, and in September, 1881, a receiver was appointed, and an account directed of what was due from the plaintiff to the defendant.

The defendant put in a counter-claim for the damage which he alleged had been sustained by his property whilst detained by the plaintiff.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and H. Greenwood, for the plaintiff.

Yate Lee, for the defendant.—The plaintiff, by taking the security offered by the defendant, in effect gave up the lien which by the common law he had upon the goods of his guest—Cowell v. Simpson (1), Chambers v. Davidson (2) and Balch v. Symes (3).

[KAY, J.—It is not the mere taking of a security which destroys a lien. In Cowell v. Simpson (1) there was an express contract to give time.]

If there is an agreement to give credit at all, the lien is gone.

Again, the plaintiff having given up his lien, and having therefore wrongfully detained the defendant's goods, is liable for any damage they may have sustained by

(1) 16 Ves. 278 ;
(2) 36 Law J. Rep. P.C 17; Law Rep. 1 P.C. 296.
(3) Turn. & R. 87, 92.

Angus v. McLachlan.

such detention. He was bound to exercise more care in the keeping of them than a gratuitous bailee—Scarfe v. Morgan (4), 41 & 42 Vict. c. 38, and Wilcocks on Innkeepers, p. 77.

[KAY, J.—I only wish to hear you, Mr. Hastings, in reply on the question of damages.]

Graham Hastings, Q.C.—An innkeeper who detains goods belonging to his guest is only in the position of a gratuitous bailee, and as such is only bound to exercise ordinary care in the keeping of them —Cogge v. Bernard (5). In order to make him liable for damages negligence must be proved, and here any evidence there may be of negligence is disproved by the fact that the plaintiff kept the goods of the defendant in the same place as his own—Calye's Case (6) and Dawson v. Chamney (7).

KAY, J.—On the 13th of November, 1880, the defendant and his wife went to stay at the plaintiff's hotel. Bills were delivered to the defendant weekly, and he paid the first bill. Then difficulties arose, the defendant was in want of money and could not pay the bills, and a discussion took place upon the subject. The evidence as to what occurred is contradictory. The defendant alleges that he told Mrs. Gibson, the plaintiff's manager, that he was not able to pay the bills at that time; that he had difficulty in getting money, and would not be able to realise his shares in the ship for some months. She said she knew his wife's family, and was not anxious about the bills. The plaintiff states that the defendant, in March, 1881, talked about giving security for the amount due from him, and said that his lawyer had given him a letter to write and sign, which he did, and gave to him. The letter was as follows. [His Lordship read the letter, and proceeded:] The defendant says that the plaintiff at first seemed satisfied, but afterwards said that the letter was of no value. The defendant's wife tells rather a different story. She says that there was a conversation with Mrs. Gibson, and that Mrs. Gibson said she was content to wait for payment, and the plaintiff said that he wished for a letter, and that if he got the letter, he was agreeable for her and her husband to remain for six months from the date of the letter, or until a certain action, which was then pending, was settled. The husband does not, however, depose to this conversation, and the plaintiff and Mrs. Gibson both distinctly deny this version of the story. The effect of their evidence is this. They say that they were constantly pressing the defendant for payment; that in order to induce the plaintiff to allow him to stay on at all this letter was brought, but that no promise was made to allow him to do so, and that when the defendant's then solicitor refused to advance anything upon the letter, the promises of the defendant induced the plaintiff to allow him to stay on. Now in this state of things I am asked to say that the acceptance of this letter was a waiver of the plaintiff's lien, and thus a question of very considerable importance is raised. It has been said in argument that if an innkeeper, having by common law a lien upon the goods of his guest, accepts any security at all from him, that is ipso facto a waiver of the lien. That, in my opinion, is not the law. The case of Cowell v. Simpson (1) was referred to, where a solicitor was held by the acceptance of a security to have waived his lien on the papers of his client, and was relied upon as an authority in support of that contention. Now, as we all know, it was a very common course with Lord Eldon to give a preliminary judgment and afterwards a more considered judgment. In his first judgment in that case he says, "Where by the usage of trade a person has a lien on goods in his hands for work performed upon them, and further for work upon other goods not then in his possession, having been delivered over according to the usages of different trades, it is settled by modern decisions that by taking a security the lien is gone, even with regard to the goods in his possession, and cannot accompany that special security which determines the implied contract. It is necessary to see upon what principle that stands. I rather think it is not regulated by the usage of trade. It has been accounted for in this way: that the lien is

(4) 4 Mee. & W. 270; 7 Law J. Rep. Exch. 324.
(5) 1 Sm. L.C. 7th ed. 235.
(6) 8 Rep. 32*n*.
(7) 5 Q.B. Rep. 164; 13 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 33.

gone by the effect of the intention to substitute the special contract for the implied one; the necessities of mankind requiring that the goods should be delivered for consumption, it is not to be presumed that the lien was to be extended through the whole period, which would create much difficulty in the usual course of dealing between tradesmen and their customers. I have, however, heard that denied; and it has been put upon a rule of law that the special contract removes the implied one; but, if that is the ground, this case would deserve much consideration. The solicitor taking a security, which has three years to run, as the client may have occasion for his papers, there is as much reason that the lien should not accompany the security through that period as in the instance of a trade; and the conclusion is equally difficult, that the papers, if the client has occasion for them, could be withheld. I am not at present satisfied that this lien exists."

His Lordship afterwards delivered a more considered judgment, in which he said: "Looking through the general doctrine of lien, as applicable to all cases, except the purchase of an estate, with reference to which it has in a series of decisions been extended, it may be described as prima facie a right accompanying the implied contract. In the case of a factor, who has a lien both for his expenditure upon the goods in his possession and his general balance upon former transactions, entering into a special contract for a particular mode of payment, he loses the lien. In various trades the demand being for work and labour, applied in some instances upon the particular goods, and others upon other goods also, though the possession had been given up, it is universally laid down that, if that takes place under a special agreement, there is no such lien; and if it commenced under an implied contract, and afterwards a special contract is made for payment, in the nature of the thing the one contract destroys the other." And he added later in his judgment, "My opinion therefore is, that where these special agreements are taken, the lien does not remain; and whether the securities are due or not, makes no difference." But in that case the special security taken was for three years, and was in its nature such as to be entirely inconsistent with the retention of the lien, and that was the reason why Lord Eldon held the lien to have been lost. In Balch v. Symes (3) he says, "Notwithstanding the Court of King's Bench has expressed a doubt whether my decision was right in the case of Cowell v. Simpson (1), I still entertain the opinion that an attorney who takes a security abandons his lien. That doctrine, however, will not apply to sums which are not covered by the security, and as to these sums therefore the lien must be considered to remain." But I do not understand him to have meant that every security will destroy a lien; and my view of this is strengthened by the case of Hewison v. Guthrie (8), where Chief Justice Tindal says, "It is well established that if a security is taken for the debt for which the party has a lien upon the property of the debtor, such security being payable at a distant day, the lien is gone."

As I understand the law, it is not the mere taking of a security which destroys the lien, but there must be something in the facts of the case, or in the nature of the security taken, which is inconsistent with the retention of the lien and which is destructive of it. In this case the lien is within the provisions of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 38, by virtue of which the innkeeper not only has a passive lien, but also the active right to sell the goods upon giving the notice required by the Act. Was it probable that he would give up this active lien? The very contract as stated by Mrs. McLachlan, if it was proved, which I hold it was not, was inconsistent with the hypothesis. It was that if the plaintiff got the letter he was agreeable for the defendant and his wife to remain six months. That does not mean that he would have been agreeable for them to go away without paying and take their things. There is nothing in the case inconsistent with the continuance of the lien which the plaintiff undoubtedly had before the security was given.

[His Lordship then considered the question of the damage which had been sustained by the goods of the defendants, and, after referring to the case of Dawson

(8) 2 Bing. N.C. 755; 5 Law J. Rep. C.P. 283.

v. Chamney (7), and stating that the general law was that a bailee such as an innkeeper was not bound to be more careful in keeping the goods of his guest than he was as to his own, and after examining the evidence on this head, held that the defendants had failed to shew that amount of negligence which would make the innkeeper liable, and consequently that the counter-claim must be dismissed, with costs.]

Solicitors—G. H. Finch, for defendant; A. H. Holmes, for plaintiff.

BACON, V.C. 1883. May 1, 2. } YOUNG v. WALLINGFORD.

Solicitor and Client—Misrepresentation inducing Client to advance Money on Mortgage—Death of Solicitor—Personal Action—Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16), s. 3—Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4. c. 14), s. 6.

A client, in 1869, entrusted money to a solicitor to invest on mortgage of land, trusting to representations by the solicitor (who acted for both parties) that the property was of fee-simple tenure, and free from incumbrances. The mortgagor died in 1879, and the solicitor died in 1881, when the client discovered that part of the property was only leasehold for lives, and also that the solicitor held a prior mortgage on part of the lands. In an action to make the solicitor's estate liable for the deficiency of the security:—Held, that though on the evidence the solicitor would have had no defence to the action if brought in his lifetime, yet it was not maintainable against his executors. Held also, that the solicitor's mortgage must be postponed to the plaintiff's mortgage.

The object of this action was to realise a mortgage security, and to make the estate of Hamlin, a solicitor, responsible for the deficiency of the security.

The mortgage in question was created by an indenture dated the 26th of May, 1869, whereby, after reciting that Sympson was seised in fee-simple in possession of and in the messuage and hereditaments thereinafter described, in consideration of 1,000*l.*, advanced to him by the plaintiff, Sympson covenanted for repayment of principal and interest at five per cent. per annum, and charged the messuage and lands therein described, and stated to comprise 10 acres 23 perches, situate in the parish of Banwell, with the repayment of 1,000*l.* and interest; and it was thereby provided that the powers given to mortgagees by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, should apply to the security, with the variation that the power of sale conferred by the 13th section should be exerciseable at any time; and Sympson thereby covenanted for payment of interest and for further assurance.

The plaintiff alleged that he advanced the money at the request and upon the representations and under the advice of Thomas Hamlin, his solicitor, who also acted for Sympson. According to the plaintiff's evidence, Hamlin asked the plaintiff to advance the money, representing that the plaintiff would have a first-rate security, being a first charge on about eleven acres of fee-simple land, with farm buildings, of which Sympson was seised in possession, and that if the interest was not paid he would be able to sell. The plaintiff, who had no communication with Sympson, and did not inspect the property, but trusted entirely to Hamlin, on the faith of these representations, paid the money through the hands of Hamlin, and received from him the mortgage-deed and a bundle of title-deeds, which he did not examine. Hamlin prepared the mortgage-deed as solicitor for both parties, his bill being paid by the mortgagor. The plaintiff regularly received his interest on the mortgage money from Hamlin during his lifetime.

Sympson died in 1879, having made Hamlin, who was his brother-in-law, his executor and devisee in trust. Hamlin died in 1881, having made the defendants his executors and devisees in trust. After Hamlin's death the plaintiff ascertained for the first time that part of the land included in his mortgage was of leasehold tenure for lives only, and also that Hamlin held a prior mortgage on part of the land for 500*l.*, the title-deeds to which had not been handed over to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff alleged that Hamlin prepared the mortgage security, and, with full knowledge of the prior mortgage and of the nature of the property, inserted the recital that Sympson was seised in fee-simple, and omitted all mention of the prior mortgage, and claimed by way of relief:—First, a declaration that by reason of his misrepresentation and concealment Hamlin became liable to pay to the plaintiff the 1,000*l.* and interest, and that the defendants, as executors and devisees in trust of Hamlin's estate, might be ordered to admit assets, and to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of 1,000*l.*, interest and costs. Secondly, that in default of such payment being ordered and made, it might be declared that any mortgage affecting any part of the lands comprised in the plaintiff's mortgage, which was held by or in trust for Hamlin at or prior to the date of the plaintiff's mortgage, ought to be postponed to the plaintiff's mortgage, and that the defendants might be ordered to deliver up the title-deeds to any such lands in their possession. Thirdly, an account of what was due to the plaintiff under his security, and that in default of payment by the defendants as representing Hamlin, or as representing Sympson or one of them, the defendants as representing Sympson might be foreclosed from all equity of redemption in the lands mortgaged to the plaintiff, or that the same might be sold. Fourthly, that in default of payment as aforesaid, the defendants and all other proper parties might assure all the premises comprised in his mortgage to the plaintiff, subject only to prior mortgages, if any, affecting the same, other than mortgages held by or in trust for Hamlin. Fifthly, that in case the property should be sold, the defendants as representing Hamlin might be declared liable to indemnify the plaintiff against any loss in respect of his advance of 1,000*l.*, and in the event of the proceeds of sale being insufficient, they might be ordered to pay the deficiency to the plaintiff out of the estate of Hamlin, and to admit assets for that purpose. Sixthly, that in case the defendants, as executors and devisees in trust of Hamlin, should not admit assets, then that the estate of Hamlin might be administered.

The estate of Sympson was being administered by the Court, and the defendants admitted the relief claimed against his estate. As against Hamlin's estate the defendants, amongst the defences, insisted on the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, and moreover submitted that the plaintiff had shewn no right of action which was enforceable after the death of Hamlin and against his personal representatives. They also pleaded that the alleged representations were not made in writing within the meaning of Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4. c. 14), s. 6. The defendants also contended that, as a question of construction, the mortgage-deed only comprised fee-simple lands, though the quantities were incorrectly stated, which made it appear as if the leasehold lands were included, and that therefore there was in fact no misrepresentation as to the tenure of the property, and that under the circumstances Hamlin was not liable for the fee-simple land (which, according to this argument, was alone included in the mortgage) being of a less acreage than it was described to be. The Vice-Chancellor, however, held that on this question of construction, the leaseholds were clearly included in the mortgage, and were wrongly described as of fee-simple tenure.

Marten, Q.C., and Badcock, for the plaintiff.—As between Hamlin and the plaintiff the evidence establishes a case of misrepresentation and concealment by a person in a confidential position. This is not a misrepresentation as to the ability of the mortgagor within Lord Tenterden's Act—Craig v. Watson (1). Nor is the action barred by the Statute of Limitations, which in a case of this character runs, not from the date of the misrepresentation, but from the date of the discovery of it—Craig v. Watson (1) and Blair v. Bromley (2). The same rule prevails in case of mistake—Brooksbank

(1) 8 Beav. 427.

(2) 5 Hare, 542; 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 105; on app. 2 Ph. 354; 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 495.

v. Smith (3); see too Gibbs v. Guild (4). The measure of damages is the actual loss which accrues to the plaintiff—Whiteman v. Hawkins (5).

Millar, Q.C., and Theodore Ribton, for the defendants.—The plaintiff's case, so far as it seeks relief against Hamlin's estate, is based solely on his own uncorroborated statement of the misrepresentation, and such evidence at this distance of time is not sufficient to establish a claim against the estate of a dead man—Hill v. Wilson (6), Morley v. Finney (7) and Whittaker v. Whittaker (8). The claim, if established on the evidence, is a mere action of negligence, and six years having elapsed since the date of the alleged negligence, the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations—Howell v. Young (9) and Smith v. Fox (10). In Craig v. Watson (1) the operation of the statute was excluded because the defendant was treated as a trustee. Blair v. Bromley (2) was a similar case, as the money had been entrusted to the solicitors as confidential agents. Gibbs v. Guild (4) was decided on demurrer, on which the plea that the existence of the fraud was fraudulently concealed by the defendant was admitted. In the present case there was no trusteeship and no concealed fraud. It was at most a case of negligence only.

In any case an action on the misrepresentation is an action of deceit, and the cause of action cannot be maintained after the death of Hamlin—Peek v. Gurney (11) and Kirk v. Todd (12).

Marten (who was called on to reply only on the question whether the action survived).—This is a claim which survives against the executor—Williams on Executors (13), Wilson v. Tucker (14), Rawlins v. Wickham (15), Walsham v. Stainton (16) and Slim v. Croucher (17). The case of Kirk v. Todd (12) was a case of nuisance. So Peek v. Gurney (11) was a case of mere tort. In the present case the liability is one of contract arising out of a trust or confidential relation. I ask for judgment in the terms of the claim.

BACON, V.C., after stating that, as a question of construction, he had no doubt that the mortgage-deed did include the leasehold lands, which were therein described as fee-simple, continued:—There remains the other and more serious question, whether this action is now maintainable. That Hamlin was the solicitor of the plaintiff is clearly established. I do not forget that, according to the rule of this Court, a man who would establish a claim against the estate of a deceased man on his own testimony, cannot succeed unless that testimony is corroborated. But what the plaintiff says in this case is corroborated by the deed, as I construe it; by the fact that Hamlin had been his solicitor, and he had relied on him entirely, and had entrusted him with 1,000*l.* to lend to Sympson, money paid into Hamlin's hands, but which I have no reason to doubt he handed to Sympson. Whether that is so or not, it was money entrusted to Hamlin to mortgage on Sympson's land, which Hamlin stated was a good security. Have I any reason to doubt that? Unless the plaintiff had believed it, he would not have lent his money, nor could he have received that assurance unless Hamlin had told him. As I have said, in my opinion, the relation of solicitor and client is clearly established. That Hamlin charged no costs to the plaintiff is nothing. It is the ordinary practice that the solicitor should charge the borrower. That I dismiss as not being applic-

(3) 2 You. & C. 58; 6 Law J. Rep. Ex. Eq. 34.

(4) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 228; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 296; on app. 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 313; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 59.

(5) Law Rep. 4 C.P. D. 13.

(6) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 817; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 888.

(7) W.N. (1870) 50.

(8) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 737; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 657.

(9) 5 B. & C. 295; 4 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) K.B. 106.

(10) 6 Hare, 386; 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 170.

(11) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 19; Law Rep. 6 E. & Ir. App. 377.

(12) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 445; on appeal Ante, p. 224; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 484.

(13) 7th ed. p. 1722.

(14) Stark. 154.

(15) 3 De Gex & J. 304; 1 Giff. 355; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 188.

(16) 1 De Gex, J. & S. 678; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 68.

(17) 1 De Gex, F. & J. 518; 2 Giff. 37; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 273.

. Wallingford.

hold, therefore, that upon the efore me, if Hamlin were now ave no doubt he would be liable o the plaintiff the relief asked. on on which I have felt doubt after this length of time, upon ient of the plaintiff only, and to the rule of law, I can give elief as is prayed by the plaintiff estate of Hamlin in the hands esentatives, and I must say I two cases cited dispose of that The case of Peek v. Gurney complicated case; but, so far as ears on the point in question, nsford states very clearly what nt is. After stating, on page ie suit was instituted to recover om the respondents for the in- pellant had sustained by their ittations, and that it was pre- gous to the common law action he goes on, at page 393, "The nsel for the appellant was asked rse of the argument whether any case in which equity had onal representatives liable for a personal wrong which might obtained against their testa- hich no satisfactory answer was ben he examines the cases in an way, and at page 395 says, "No en produced, and I assume that e found, in which, upon a claim estator ex delicto, executors have liable in equity to answer for it . And it appears to me that it ontrary to principle to hold that hich in a Court of law would die with a testator, should be le against executors in a Court concurrent jurisdiction." That clear proposition of law, and a rity. Now what is contended before me is, that by reason of sentation made by Hamlin in he committed a delictum, by plaintiff has been injured, and entitled to the relief he prays mlin's representatives. That s. [His Lordship read the part n against Hamlin's estate, and In my opinion, whatever right inst Hamlin if alive, Hamlin and the plaintiff not having asserted his claim in Hamlin's lifetime—in my opinion, on the authority of the case in the House of Lords, no action could be maintained in a Court of law, and there is no principle in a Court of equity according to which any such claim could be entertained. All I can do is to make the ordinary foreclosure decree with costs. I cannot turn leasehold estates into freehold estates. So much of the action as claims against Hamlin's executors must be dismissed, but without costs. The plaintiff is also entitled to a declaration postponing the security of Hamlin to his security, and for delivery of the title-deeds, and he will be at liberty to prove against Sympson's estate.

Solicitors—Crowder, Anstie & Vizard, agents for Simmons & Wood, Wrington, Somerset, for plaintiff; Meredith, Roberts & Mills, agents for Hamlin & Whitty, Bristol, for defendants.

CHITTY, J.
1883.
March 5.

PENRICE v. WILLIAMS.

Practice — Arbitration — Finality of Order of Reference—Discovery—Jurisdiction—Rules of Court, 1875, Order XXXI. rule 12—Liberty to apply.

An order having been taken by consent referring the action and all matters in difference between the parties to an arbitrator, the plaintiff afterwards took out a summons, under Order XXXI. rule 12, for an affidavit and inspection of documents:—Held, that the Court had no power to make any order, the only office remaining to be discharged by the Court being that of recording judgment according to the arbitrator's award. Held also, that liberty to apply is impliedly contained in orders not of a final nature, and in those orders only.

Adjourned summons.

The parties to this action having by consent submitted to an order referring the action and all matters in difference between them to the award of an arbitrator, and the arbitration being still pending, the plaintiff took out a summons, under Order XXXI. rule 12, for an affidavit and inspection of documents in the possession of the defendants.

The order of reference provided (paragraph 5) that the costs of the action and the costs of the reference and award should abide the event; (paragraph 6) that the arbitrator might, if he thought fit, examine the parties to the action and their respective witnesses by oath or affirmation; (paragraph 7) that the parties should produce before the arbitrator the pleadings in the action, and all books, deeds, papers and writings in their or either of their custody or power relating to the matters in difference; and (paragraph 12) that unless restrained by any order of the High Court of Justice or any Judge thereof, the party or parties in whose favour the award should be made should be at liberty, within seven days after service of a copy of the award on the solicitor or agent of the other party, to apply for final judgment in accordance with the award, and for all costs which he or they might be entitled to under the order and under the award, together with the costs of the judgment.

When the summons was heard in chambers, it was objected by the defendants that the order of reference deprived the Court of any further jurisdiction in the action, and the further hearing of the summons was adjourned into Court.

W. D. Benson, for the plaintiff, in support of the summons.—The rights of parties with reference to discovery are not concluded by an order referring the action to arbitration— Street v. Rigby (1).

[CHITTY, J.—The plaintiff there filed a bill of discovery against his partner with reference to the accounts of the partnership, and Lord Eldon merely decided that although the articles of partnership contained a clause referring all disputes to arbitration, yet the plaintiff had not bargained away his right to file a bill of discovery.]

The 12th paragraph of the order shews that the Court was to have control of the action. But whether this be so or not the order cannot be said to be final. For although the order does not in express terms reserve liberty to apply, the absence of those words does not preclude the plaintiff from applying to the Court, or from asking leave to amend by adding the words—Daniell's Chancery Practice, 6th ed., 790.

Brynmor Jones, for the defendant.—The sole question is, whether there is remaining before the Court "any matter in question in the action," within the meaning of Rules of Court, 1875, Order XXXI. rule 12. In Wimshurst & Co. v. The Barrow Shipbuilding Company (2), the cause having been referred to a Master under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, Mellor, J., and Field, J., decided that the Court had no jurisdiction to give costs of proceedings subsequent to the order of reference, although the order itself was silent as to the costs, for such proceedings were not "proceedings in the High Court," within Order LV. Moreover, the order of reference itself confers on the arbitrator a jurisdiction as to discovery, and it may be assumed that the arbitrator would in his conduct of the arbitration adopt the practice of the Judicature Acts in respect to discovery, so far as it was applicable to the circumstances of the case. The plaintiff should therefore have made his application to the arbitrator, and should not now endeavour to abrogate an order to which he has given his consent.

CHITTY, J.—This is an application by the plaintiff, under Order XXXI. rule 12, asking that the defendant may be ordered to make an affidavit of the documents in his possession, and the question has been raised as to the plaintiff's right to any such order. The objection taken by the defendant is that an order has been made by consent of the parties referring the action and all matters in difference to the award of an arbitrator, and it is said that the effect of this order is that there is no longer any action or question in an action pending before the Court, and therefore that the jurisdiction of the Court is exhausted.

(1) 6 Ves. 814.

(2) 46 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 477; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. D. 335.

Penrice v. Williams.

The order relied upon is an arbitration order containing usual clauses. [His Lordship here read the 5th, 6th, 7th and 12th paragraphs of the order, and continued:] The effect of this order is, that for all practical purposes the action, so far as the Court is concerned, has disappeared in every respect except one. The exception is, that the Court has to allow judgment to be entered up according to the award. The duty of the Court in this respect is of a purely ministerial nature. There is, therefore, so far as the Court is concerned, no matter in question in the action within Order XXXI. rule 12, and the power of the Court to make the order asked for, or any other judicatory order, is gone. There is also a further objection taken by the defendant, that the parties having, as is shewn on the face of the order, themselves agreed to place the whole jurisdiction with reference to discovery in the hands of the arbitrator, it was open to the plaintiff to have made an application to the arbitrator, which he has not done. I am of opinion that this latter objection is also fatal. I therefore hold that on either of the two grounds of objection, independently of each other, the application must be refused. Authority on the question is not, however, wholly wanting. In the case of Wimshurst & Co. v. The Barrow Shipbuilding Company (2), the defendants having paid a sum into Court, it was at the trial agreed between the parties that judgment should be formally entered for the plaintiffs, subject to a reference, but there was no provision in the order of reference that the judgment for the plaintiffs might be vacated and judgment entered for the defendants if the amount paid into Court by the defendants should prove sufficient. The result of the reference was in favour of the defendants, but the Court refused to give them even their costs of the reference (which by some slip had not been provided for in the order), on the ground that the substance of the action was gone.

It is, however, said that this order cannot be said to be final, because, to use the words of Mr. Justice Fry in Fritz v. Hobson (3), all orders carry with them in gremio liberty to apply to the Court, and such liberty should therefore be implied as existing in this order. With reference to what was said there with regard to liberty to apply, it appears to me that what the Court has to consider is, whether or no the order is one which can or cannot be worked out without any further order.

There may be cases where liberty to apply would be granted, although the words had been omitted from a judgment order, the order clearly not being of a final character; and also where there is necessarily something to be done, irrespectively of that appearing on the face of the order —for instance, where a fund has been left in Court, and nothing has been said as to the disposition of the fund, or there is any other thing necessary to be done which has in no way been dealt with; in a case of that sort you could apply, without a reservation in the order of liberty to apply, and it would be no answer in such a case to say that no liberty to apply had been reserved, for if such an argument were carried a step further, a similar objection could be made in every case of an application to add the words "liberty to apply" to an order—namely, that no liberty to make such an application had been reserved. There is also no doubt that if the words "liberty to apply" had been accidentally omitted, the defect could be remedied under the slip order (Rules of Court, 1875, Order XLI*a*). I am, however, of opinion that the present arbitration order calls for no amendment in this respect, for the frame of the order shews that the Court has no right to entertain any application until after award made. The summons is dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors—Smith, Lawrence & Co., agents for Smith & Lawrence, Swansea, for plaintiff; Hacon & Turner, agents for John Donague, Swansea, for defendant.

(2) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 735; Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 452.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Jan. 11.

WALKER v. BUNKELL.

Practice — Official Referee — Report— Motion to adopt Report and for Judgment —Judicature Act, 1873, ss. 56, 57 and 58 —Rules of Court, 1875, Orders XXXIII., XXXVI. rule 34, XXXIX., rule 1*a*.

Where a preliminary account has been referred to an official referee, and the referee has made his report, the proper course is not to set the cause down for hearing, but for the party in whose favour the findings are to move for judgment on the report, and for the opposite party to move to set it aside.

Per KAY, J.—The referee is not bound, and, as a general rule, ought not, to state his reasons for his findings. His duty is to state results in as concise a form as possible, similar to that of a chief clerk's certificate.

This was a partnership action. The plaintiff and defendant had entered into a joint adventure in connection with a building speculation. Disputes had arisen, each party alleging that a partnership agreement had been entered into, but differing from one another as to the terms of such agreement.

Upon the 14th of November, 1879, on the application of the defendant, an order was made under Rules of Court, 1875, Order XXXIII., directing that an account should be taken of all dealings and transactions between the plaintiff and defendant since the 1st of January, 1877.

Subsequently, on the 3rd of March, 1882, an order was made under section 57 of the Judicature Act, 1873, whereby, in lieu of the account being taken by the chief clerk in the usual way, it was referred to the official referee in rotation to take the account.

The official referee made his report on the 9th of August, 1882, and thereby reported that he had taken the account, and that he found on taking it that a certain sum was due to the defendant from the plaintiff, and that such account was contained in certain paper writings signed by him and filed with his report, and that he had marked through in black ink the items which he had disallowed, and had inserted in red ink the amounts allowed in lieu thereof, and that he had disallowed the whole of a certain surcharge.

The defendant, shortly after the date of the report, gave to the plaintiff notice of a motion which, in effect, asked the Court to adopt the report and order payment by the plaintiff to the defendant of the amount found due by the referee; and thereupon the plaintiff gave to the defendant notice of a counter-motion asking that the report should be set aside, and the questions referred to the referee remitted to him for reconsideration, and that he should be required to state his reasons for his findings as to the several items there specified. This last notice of motion was given on the 13th of November, 1882.

The motions came on together on the 30th of November, 1882.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Lock, for the plaintiff.—The report ought to be referred back to the referee, in order that he may state his reasons for his findings. The Court has full power to do this under Order XXXVI. rule 34. Different agreements of partnership are alleged on each side, and it would be inconvenient to deal with the report without knowing whether the referee adopted the plaintiff's or the defendant's view of the case, as the allowance or disallowance of every item in the accounts depends upon that. They referred to Burrard v. Callisher (1) and to The Dunkirk Colliery Company v. Lever (2).

Kekewich, Q.C., and Oppenheim, for the defendant, were not called upon.

KAY, J. (after stating the facts of the case, and referring to the Master in Chancery Abolition Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 80), and to the Consolidated Orders, XXXV. rule 48, and to the schedule to the Act), said—It is evident from the section and order which I have read that the object of the Court was to have the certificate in the barest possible form—a statement of results, and nothing else. I am asked in this case to refer back the report to the official referee, in order that he may state his reasons. Now, that seems to me utterly contrary to the correct notion of the duty of the chief clerk or referee. The chief clerk or referee is not to give a judgment on the matters referred to him; he is not to state his reasons at all. He is not required or bound to do so, and it is very desirable that he should not do so. He is to state the result of the proceedings in the most concise form which is consistent with the matter referred to him. I am referred to a decision of my own in Burrard v. Callisher (1), where there was a reference to a referee to take an account. The referee did not take an account; he did not file an account with his report; he simply stated, in effect: "I have taken the account, and the result is so and so." That seemed to me not a proper mode of taking the account, and, on objection being made, I thought it my duty to remit it back to him, and desire him to take the account in the same way as a chief clerk would have done if the reference had been to him in the Chancery Division. But who ever heard of a reference back to a chief clerk because he had not stated his reasons for a particular finding? I must say I never heard of such a thing, and it seems to me contrary to the intention of the Legislature when passing the Master in Chancery Abolition Act, and contrary to the practice as I have known it ever since, to send back a report for the chief clerk to state his reasons.

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 223, 510; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 644.
(2) Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 20.

What the chief clerk or referee is bound to do is to find results—not to say if the plaintiff's case is right so much is due, but if the defendant's case is right then so much. That is not a proper form of report. I quite agree that in a question of difficulty which the chief clerk finds himself unable to decide, it is quite within his power to refrain from so doing and specially to state the circumstances to the Court. But it is for the convenience of every one concerned that he should do that as seldom as possible, and certainly not make it a regular course of proceeding. On the contrary, the chief clerk in making his certificate ought to decide for himself, if he possibly can. No one is left without a remedy, because, if a party is dissatisfied with the finding as to any particular item, nothing is easier than to except to the report as to that item, and then bring that on when the case comes on for further consideration on the report, and when the Court will have before it the same evidence as the referee had on the item, and can determine for itself whether the item was properly allowed or not. In my opinion, the present application is based on a complete misconception of the duty of a referee and the sort of report which he ought to make. I do not for a moment say that it is not within the power of every one who is a party to an action like this to bring any matter before the Court by way of motion or exception to the certificate or report before the hearing on further consideration. It is within his power; but I venture, with great respect, to refer to the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Upton v. Brown (3), where it was said that if that power were too largely used it would become abused and be an instrument of great oppression, but that solicitors generally had too much good sense so to use it. I refuse the motion with costs, not because the plaintiff has not power to move that the report be referred back, but because the grounds on which he asks that it may be referred back are, in my opinion, utterly insufficient.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Oppenheim, for the defendant.—The report of the referee has in effect decided the whole question involved in the action. It is right, therefore, that the report should be at once adopted, and payment of the amount found due be ordered.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Lock, for the plaintiff, were not called on.

KAY, J. — In this case, under Order XXXIII., there has been a preliminary reference which the Court very often made under the old practice. It may very well be that it really comprehended the whole matter involved in the action, and the result of that enquiry, if the report stands

(3) Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 731.

Walker v. Bunkell, App.

—I do not know whether or not it is excepted to—is not that anything is due to the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff owes upon the balance of the account a certain sum to the defendant. Then, when there has been no trial, no hearing and no judgment (for this was not a reference made at the trial—a reference, that is, to a referee instead of the verdict of a jury—but a preliminary reference under Order XXXIII.), the defendant, finding the report in his favour, comes with an interlocutory motion that the Court shall adopt the report, and immediately order payment to him of the amount found due to him, or in some way or other give him judgment for that amount. In cases where a preliminary reference did really decide all the questions in the action, that might be a very convenient course to take. But I have been asking whether any authority for the Court doing that is to be found in the Judicature Act or the Rules of Court. No authority has been pointed out, I know of no such authority, and my understanding and apprehension of the Act and Orders is that where a preliminary enquiry is directed before the hearing, and has been answered, the proper course is to set the cause down for hearing, when the Court will take the report, so far as it is not excepted to, instead of evidence—that is to say, will not allow any new evidence on any matter which has been determined by the finding of the referee, but will either adopt the report, if the Court thinks right, or, in the alternative, refuse to give effect to it and hear the case itself. But all that is provided for in the Act and Orders, and there is no short course provided, so far as I know, for having a judgment upon the finding without bringing the case to trial. Now no wrong can be done by that, because it is provided by one of the Orders (Order XXXVI. rule 4) that if the plaintiff does not properly set down the case for trial, the defendant may do so. That that is the proper course to take seems to me clear on the face of the Act and Orders, and to my mind that view is enforced by the consideration that either party must have it in his power to take exception to a report so made; and the time when that exception is to be determined would ordinarily be when the matter comes on for trial, and when the Court is asked to adopt the report. Therefore, it seems to me that a motion like this, after a report made upon a preliminary enquiry asking the Court to adopt the report and order payment by the plaintiff to the defendant of the amount found due from the plaintiff, is not a practice sanctioned by the Act and Orders, is not a practice, so far as I know, sanctioned by any decision, and, in my opinion, not a practice which I have any power to adopt. And I express my opinion distinctly, in order that, if this decision of mine be wrong, it may be brought before the Court of Appeal. I refuse the motion, and I think it will be better that I should refuse it with costs, in order to have the question thoroughly raised.

The defendant appealed.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Dibdin, for the appellant, were stopped by the Court.

Hastings, Q.C., and Lock, for the plaintiff.—The defendant's motion was altogether irregular.

[JESSEL, M.R.—No doubt it ought to have been set down, and not brought on as an ordinary motion; but that is not a sufficient reason for dismissing it with costs.]

Kay, J., thought that the action ought to come on for trial.

[JESSEL, M.R.—There was nothing to try. The finding of the official referee amounts to a verdict against you. The reference was equivalent to a decree for an account.]

By Order XXXIII. the Judge may direct a preliminary account.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That order does not apply here.]

In the Court of Kay, J., where an enquiry is directed under Order XXXIII. and no further trial is required, the practice is to insert this clause, "The Court not requiring a further trial of this action adjourn further consideration."

[JESSEL, M.R.—Such a proviso is not necessary.]

How is the question of costs to be determined?

[JESSEL, M.R.—On the motion for judgment, when the attention of the Court should be called to anything on the evidence to vary the general rule that costs follow the event.]

The order for the account was made without prejudice to the proceedings in the action being carried on.

[JESSEL, M.R.—That was an improper saving clause.]

It was obviously intended not to treat the reference as a final decree.

[JESSEL, M.R.—There has been no appeal from the refusal of your motion, and the report therefore stands.]

No appeal was lodged, because Kay, J., said that our objections to the report could be taken at the trial.

[JESSEL, M.R.—Under section 58 the report is equivalent to a verdict. You can apply for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being given by mistake or against the evidence.]

The report is like a chief clerk's certificate, to which objections can be taken.

[JESSEL, M.R.—Where an official referee has had evidence before him his finding amounts to a verdict. A report not made on evidence is quite different. The proper course is to move to set aside the report—The Dunkirk Colliery Company v. Lever (2).]

We did not appeal because Kay, J., said that we should have an opportunity of stating our objections to the report.

Kekewich, Q.C.—We admit that the plaintiff ought to have that opportunity.

JESSEL, M.R.—That admission is fair and proper. There has been a miscarriage here, and in order that justice may be done it will be best to discharge both orders and remit the case to Mr. Justice Kay, that he may hear both motions on their merits. The defendant's motion will be treated as set down on the day when it came before Mr. Justice Kay.

LINDLEY, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors — Walker & Mewburn-Walker, for plaintiff; Chorley, Crawford & Chester, for defendant.

PEARSON, J. 1883. March 4, 16, 17.

HORSFALL v. THE HALIFAX AND HUDDERSFIELD UNION BANKING COMPANY.

Equitable Mortgage—Shares in Bank—Fraud of Mortgagor—Banker's Lien—Estoppel.

In January, 1878, B. was a customer of and a shareholder in the defendant bank, and was also secretary of a club having an account there. B. fraudulently altered a cheque for 600*l., drawn by the club in favour of S. or order, by striking out the word "order," and adding the word "bearer"; and then induced the bank to place the* 600*l. to the credit of his own account.*

In November, 1878, the plaintiff lent B. 1,000*l. upon the security of the deposit of a share certificate for fifty shares in the bank. The certificate gave the holder thereof notice that the bank had a paramount lien on the shares of any shareholder for whatever might be due from him to the bank.*

On the 17*th of March,* 1880, the plaintiff gave notice to the bank of the deposit of the certificate, and was told by the bank manager, in answer to his enquiry, that the bank had no claim on the shares.

In May, 1880, the bank got notice of B.'s fraud. They then settled with the club, debited B.'s account with the 600*l., which they had paid to him on the irregular cheque; and gave the plaintiff notice that they claimed a lien on the shares for that amount.*

In an action by the plaintiff claiming a declaration that the shares were subject to his equitable mortgage,—

Held, that the bank, on discovering B.'s fraud, were entitled to set the account right as between themselves and him, by debiting him with the amount of the cheque.

Held also, that, as the plaintiff was in no way prejudiced by the statement made by the bank manager on the 17*th of March,* 1880, the bank were not estopped from setting up their lien on the shares; and action dismissed.

Action with witnesses.

This was an action by the executors of the late George Horsfall, claiming a declaration that thirty 20*l.* shares in the defendant bank were subject to an equitable mortgage, created by the deposit of the share certificate, to secure the sum of 1,000*l.* and interest.

By the deed of settlement of the bank it was provided (clause 141) that all debts, liabilities and engagements due to the company by any proprietor in respect of cash advances or balances, or on account generally, and whether in respect of his direct transactions with the company, or indirectly or otherwise, should at all times and in all cases be the first and paramount lien on all the shares and stock of such proprietor, whether such debts and engagements should be those of such proprietor solely or jointly, or in partnership with any other person; and the directors were thereby empowered to cancel or to sell and dispose of the shares of such proprietor by way of satisfaction or liquidation of all such debts, liabilities or engagements.

On each share certificate it was stated that the holder took them subject to the rules and regulations of the deed of settlement.

In the year 1878 Joseph Bentley was the customer of the bank, and he was also secretary of a club having an account at the bank. It appeared that the instructions to the bank with regard to this club were, that the bank were to honour cheques drawn by the treasurer and secretary. At this time Greenwood was the treasurer.

On the 24th of January, 1878, Bentley informed Greenwood that a person named Stoney, to whom the club owed 600*l.* wanted payment of his money. That statement was untrue. Bentley, upon that statement, induced Greenwood to sign a cheque for 600*l.* drawn in favour of James Stoney, or order. Bentley, who intended to appropriate the 600*l.*, struck out the word "order," added the word "bearer," and then signed the cheque himself. He then took the cheque in that state to the bank manager, and persuaded him to place the 600*l.* to the credit of his own account, which was overdrawn.

In November, 1878, George Horsfall lent Bentley 1,000*l.* upon the security of the deposit of a certificate of fifty 20*l.* shares, which Bentley held in the bank. Horsfall gave no notice of this deposit to the bank, and made no enquiry at the bank whether they had any claim against Bentley in respect of the shares, until March, 1880.

Early in the year 1879 the bank (for some reason) requested Bentley to close his account with them. This was done; and the only relation which then continued between him and the bank was that of shareholder.

On the 16th of March, 1880, Horsfall became aware that Bentley was selling some of his shares; and, being ill at the time, employed his solicitor, Mr. Sykes, to go to the bank and enquire about it.

On the 17th of March, 1880, Mr. Sykes learnt from the bank manager that Bentley had sold twenty of these fifty shares to one Platt a day or two before. He then enquired of the bank whether they had any claim upon the shares which Bentley held, and was told that they had no claim upon the shares. On the afternoon of that day Bentley was adjudicated bankrupt: and shortly afterwards the defendant Huddleston was appointed trustee.

In May, 1880, the bank got notice that Bentley had appropriated to his own use moneys belonging to the club, and (amongst other moneys) this sum of 600*l.* And, apparently, the club then stated to the bank that they were responsible to them for the 600*l.*, as they had paid it upon a cheque which was irregular.

In June, 1880, an action was brought by the club against the bank to recover this sum of 600*l.* and another sum of 305*l.* paid by them to Bentley under similar circumstances. In July the action was compromised: the bank settled with the club, and paid them about 900*l.*

In July, 1880, Horsfall died.

In October, 1880, the bank gave notice to the plaintiffs (his executors) that they claimed a lien on the shares in respect of the cheque for 600*l.*, which they had paid to Bentley's account.

[At the close of the first day's argument it was admitted, on the part of the bank, that the shares were not in the "order and disposition" of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, within section 15, sub-section 5, of the Bankruptcy Act,

; and that the notice of deposit given orsfall on the 17th of March, 1880, "protected transaction," within sec- 4 of the same Act. The arguments the cases cited on these points are, ore, not given.]

bank, by their statement of de- stated that they had been compelled und the amount of the cheque for to the club, and had debited the nt of Bentley therewith; and alleged this sum of 600*l.* was due to them Bentley on the 17th of March, 1880, hat they had acquired a first and ount lien therefor on the shares y Bentley.

gins, Q.C., and Eyre, for the plain- -There was no debt due from Bentley bank on the 17th of March, 1880.

ARSON, J.—On the 24th of January, in consequence of Bentley's fraud, nk gave him credit for 600*l.* Would not have had the right to strike out um from his account on the follow- ay if they had known the facts? they not the same right in May, when they discovered the fraud?]

y may have had that right in ry, 1878. But on the 17th of 1, 1880, a new right accrued to all; his position was altered by rely- n the statement then made that the "had no claim on the shares." The are, therefore, estopped from saying he 600*l.* was then due to them— ts v. Wiffen (1).

between the bank and the club, the were not justified in paying this e to Bentley; they were guilty of carelessness in doing so.

club, being an illegal association, not have successfully prosecuted their against the bank—Jennings v. nond (2). They also referred to g v. Greenwood (3), Shaw v. Dart- 4), and The Blackburn Building y v. Cunliffe, Brooks & Co. (5).

40 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 51; Law Rep. 6 0.

51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 493; Law Rep. 9 . 225.

1 B. & C. 281; 1 Car. & P. 517; 6 Dowl. 101.

5 B. & C. 56; 5 Law J. Rep. K.B. (o.s.) 35. Ante, p. 92; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 61.

Barber, Q.C., and Bunting, for the defendants.

[PEARSON, J.—I must call upon you on the question of estoppel.]

In November, 1878, the share certificate was deposited with Horsfall. He, then, had constructive notice of the paramount lien of the bank on the shares of any shareholder who became their debtor. He was very imprudent; he advanced his money without making any enquiry; and he gave no notice and made no enquiry until eighteen months afterwards.

The plaintiff was not in any way prejudiced or put in any worse position by the statement made by the bank manager on the 17th of March.

This is simply a question between Bentley and the bank. It is the ordinary practice of bankers to rectify an account where a cheque has been improperly paid to the credit of a customer.

Higgins, Q.C., in reply.

PEARSON, J.—This may be a very hard case upon Mrs. Horsfall; but nothing is plainer than that the Court is not to decide questions according to the hardness of the case either upon the plaintiff or the defendant.

[His Lordship, after stating the facts with reference to the payment of the cheque for 600*l.*, and the deposit of the share certificate, continued:]

Now the certificate of the shares in the plainest possible terms gave notice to all the world that the holder of those shares took them subject to all the rules and regulations which were to be found in the deed of settlement of the bank; and in that deed was the clause, which is to be found in almost all settlements relating to banks—namely, that every shareholder who was a customer of the bank gave to the bank a lien on his shares for whatever might be due from him to the bank.

In or about October, 1880, after settling with the club, the bank gave notice to Horsfall's executors that they claimed a lien upon the shares in respect of the cheque for 600*l.* which they had improperly paid to Bentley's account; and the question to be determined to-day is, whether the bank are entitled to have that lien or not?

It is said on the one side that the bank have done nothing by which they have lost that lien. It is said on the other side that, as the bank told Mr. Sykes on the 17th of March that they had no claim, that statement influenced Horsfall's action in the matter; and that, having had an effect of that kind upon him, it is quite impossible for the bank now to set up any lien upon the shares as against Horsfall's executors.

There has been a considerable argument before me with regard to the effect of the fraud committed by Bentley, as between Bentley and the club and the bank. It is said that as this was the club money which Bentley took, and as the club was an illegal association, if they had been bringing their action against the bank they must have failed on that ground; that the bank, therefore, have no right whatever to reduce the account of Bentley with themselves, and to set off this 600*l.* against the account which they had closed in 1879, and to claim a lien upon the shares in respect of this 600*l.* It is said, "If you choose to acknowledge that this was the club money, and to make it good as between yourselves and the club, that is an act of generosity on your part, to which you could not be compelled by law; and if you choose to be generous, you must be so with your own means, and not at Horsfall's expense." I indicated several times during the argument my opinion, to which I adhere, that the question between the club and Bentley has nothing whatever to do with the question between Bentley and the bank. I conceive that as Bentley obtained from the bank 600*l.* in January, 1878, to which he was not entitled, the bank, upon finding that out, had a perfect right to charge that money against Bentley, and to set the account right between themselves and him—and, so setting the account right, to say that there is, at the present moment, a balance due to them from Bentley on the account which he had with them during the time that he was a customer of their bank. And whether, when they get that 600*l.* back, they pay the club with it, or put it into their own pockets, or do anything else with it, is not a matter of concern for Bentley, or those who claim under him. It is simply a transaction with which they have nothing to do.

The only question is whether the bank, as between themselves and Bentley, having given him, upon a cheque which he had no right to present to them, credit for a sum of 600*l.* which they themselves were liable to pay, and did pay, they are not perfectly justified in setting the account right as between themselves and him, he having obtained from them money which he had no right to obtain. I am of opinion that they are, and that consequently there was, on the 17th of March, 1880, although the bank did not know it at that time, due from Bentley to the bank this sum of 600*l.*

But then it is said—whether there was that sum due or not, as the bank informed Horsfall on the 17th of March that they had no claim on these shares, they cannot now set up any claim. And I certainly should have been of opinion that if Horsfall, in consequence of that statement, had done anything which had altered his position, the bank would have been bound by that statement, though ignorantly and innocently made. But, in the first place, it is not alleged in the pleadings that Horsfall has suffered any loss whatever by the statement so made to him; and, in the next place, it is difficult to see how it could be possible for Horsfall to have suffered any loss. A statement of that kind certainly would not induce Horsfall not to sell the shares, but left it open to him to sell the shares at once, if he had chosen so to do—so far, I mean, as the bank were concerned, and putting out of view, for the moment, the bankruptcy of Bentley. If Horsfall were so minded, he might, immediately after the 17th of March, have got a transfer of those shares; and, on presentation of it to the bank, the bank would have passed that transfer, and he would have realised the shares. Certainly there was nothing stated by the manager of the bank to induce Horsfall not to sell, though no doubt there was a complication, arising from the bankruptcy of Bentley, which might have made it difficult for Horsfall at that time to sell the shares.

In the month of October Horsfall's representatives were told that the bank claimed a lien on the shares. At that time no dividend on the bankrupt's estate had been declared. Between October and December (when the dividend was declared) it was open to the executors to have proved the debt against the bankrupt's estate. Whether or not this debt was mentioned in the bankrupt's schedule, and whether or not any dividend was reserved in order to pay what was due upon this debt, I do not know. But, treating the matter as if the debt had not been mentioned and no dividend had been reserved, the fact remains that, between October and December, the executors could have proved the debt and received a dividend with the other creditors. I am, therefore, at a loss to see how they have incurred any injury through the statement which was made by the bank manager—a statement made perfectly innocently and in good faith, because the bank at that time had no notion whatever of the fraud which had been committed by Bentley.

Under these circumstances, I can only say that the claim of the plaintiffs fails. I have mentioned only the cheque for 600*l.* There was another cheque for, I think, 305*l.*; but it is agreed on all hands that that cheque stands upon exactly the same footing as the cheque for 600*l.*; and, therefore, my judgment with regard to that must be the same as that which I have already expressed with regard to the cheque for 600*l.*

I can only say with regret that the action fails; and that, as it fails, I must dismiss it with costs. But it is a very hard case; and one in which, in my opinion, the bank ought not to press for costs.

Solicitors—J. W. Sykes, agent for Ramsden, Sykes & Ramsden, Huddersfield, for plaintiffs; Peace & Co., agents for Learoyd & Co., Huddersfield, for defendants.

BACON, V.C.
1883.
March 20, 21.

THOMAS v. WILLIAMS.

Tenant-for-life — Power of Sale — Appointment of New Trustee — Pending Action—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3 and 53.

Real estate was settled by will on D for life, with remainders over, and the will appointed two trustees, and empowered them to sell at the request and by the direction of the person entitled to the actual freehold, with the usual provisions for re-investment in land and interim investment in other securities. The will also gave a power to appoint new trustees vested in the same person. One of the trustees was dead. D, who was over eighty years of age, proposed to sell the estate. The remaindermen brought this action for the appointment of a new trustee and to restrain the sale as improper, adducing evidence to shew that the estate would sell to better advantage at a future date, owing to the existence of minerals at present unworked, and a projected railway which would pass through the estate. D had no re-investment in land in view, and proposed to invest in Consols. After action brought, the Settled Land Act, 1882, came into operation; and shortly before the action came on for trial, D, under the power in the will, appointed a new trustee without referring the appointment to the Court. The trustees consented to the proposed sale: —Held, that D was entitled to sell the estate as well under the power in the will as under the Settled Land Act. Held also, that the new trustee was properly appointed, notwithstanding the pending action.

Henry Llewellyn died in 1836, having by his will, dated the 28th of November, 1836, devised the freehold mansion-house, farm and lands, known as the Hendrescythen Estate, situate in the county of Glamorgan, comprising about 630 acres, in strict settlement to the defendant E. T. Llewellyn for life, with remainder, in the events now existing, to the plaintiff Miss Thomas for life, with remainder to the plaintiff Mrs. Sant for life, with remainder to her first son George Sant in tail, with remainders over. The testator appointed

Thomas v. Williams.

E. Williams and the defendant H. A. Williams trustees, to preserve contingent remainders, and gave to the trustees or the survivor of them a power of sale, to be exercised "at the request and by the direction of the person or persons for the time being entitled to the actual freehold" of the estate, with the usual provisions for re-investment of the proceeds of sale in land, and for interim investment in the securities authorised by the will. The testator gave a power of appointing new trustees to the same person.

E. Williams, one of the trustees of the will, was dead.

The defendant Llewellyn, who was over eighty years of age, about the year 1879 proposed to sell the estate. After some correspondence on the subject of the proposed sale between his solicitor and the solicitors of the remaindermen, in which Mr. Llewellyn's solicitor stated that Mr. Llewellyn, having expended a large sum of money in repairs and improvements during his tenancy, would have no objection to comply with the wishes of the remaindermen, provided they would reimburse him his outlay to 1,000*l.*, and also stated that it was intended to invest the proceeds of sale in Consols, the three plaintiffs, Miss Thomas, Mrs. Sant and G. Sant, brought this action against Mr. Llewellyn and the surviving trustee, H. A. Williams, claiming the appointment of a new trustee, a declaration that the contemplated sale would be an improper exercise of the power, and an injunction to restrain the defendant Williams from selling the estate at the request and by the direction of the defendant Llewellyn, and the defendant Llewellyn from requesting or directing a sale.

After the action was brought, the Settled Land Act, 1882, came into operation, and a few days before the action was heard, on the 15th of March, 1883, the defendant Llewellyn, under the power in the will, appointed Mr. J. S. Gibbon a new trustee of the will, without notice to the plaintiffs, and without referring the appointment to the Court. It was agreed at the trial to add Mr. Gibbon as a defendant.

It appeared that there were valuable seams of coal and minerals under the estate, which would probably be developed in the future. There was also a railway in course of construction by the Taff Vale Company near one side of the estate, and a bill for the construction of a railway (known as "The Barry Dock and Railway Scheme") which, as projected, would run through the estate, had passed its second reading in Parliament. The plaintiffs also called witnesses, who stated that having regard to these facts, in their opinion, the estate would sell to much better advantage a few years hence. The house on the estate was in the occupation of a tenant.

The defendant Llewellyn stated in evidence that he should be benefited by a sale and investment in Consols. In cross-examination he admitted that he had no other re-investment in view than Consols; and in answer to a question from the Judge whether if, instead of inheriting the estate, he had bought it with his own money, he would think it a good thing to sell it, replied, "I should not sell it as times go now if I was the owner of it; but I think it is a different question where I am only tenant-for-life. I would not sell it, if it was my own. I am attached to the property, and it has been inherited from my ancestors."

The trustees consented to the proposed sale.

Hemming, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the plaintiffs.—If it rested on the power under the will, the sale would be improper, since it is admitted that it is not made for the purpose of re-investment in land. The powers of the tenant-for-life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, are wider, and under this Act he can sell to re-invest in Consols—section 21. But the enabling power given by section 3 is controlled by section 53, which enacts that "a tenant-for-life shall, in exercising any power under this Act, have regard to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement, and shall, in relation to the exercise thereof by him, be deemed to be in the position and to have the duties and liabilities of a trustee for those parties"; in other words, he must act as an impartial trustee for all parties. The proposed sale is a sale for the exclusive benefit of the tenant-for-life, and entirely neglects the interests of the remaindermen; since the value of this land is mainly prospective, and though a purchaser takes the prospective value into account, yet to sell under these circumstances has the effect of limiting the class of purchasers to a small speculative class. In the letter written by his solicitor the tenant-for-life asks for 1,000*l.* to abandon his intention.

[BACON, V.C. — I do not think it amounted to that. It came to something like this, "I choose to sell the estate; but if you wish me not to exercise my power of sale, then I will not do so; but I must ask you to pay me 1,000*l.*, and I ask you to pay that 1,000*l.*, because I have spent that amount upon the estate, and you will have the benefit of it and I shall lose it."]

If he were not tenant-for-life, but only trustee, he admits he would not sell; and by section 53 he has to act as if he were a trustee for all parties. The proposed sale, therefore, either under the terms of the will or under the statutory power, ought to be restrained. The appointment of the new trustee without submitting the matter to the Court was improper.

[BACON, V.C., referred to In re Gadd; Eastwood v. Clarke (1).]

That case only decides that the power continues after action or judgment, not that it can be exercised independently of the Court.

Marten, Q.C., and Mulligan, for the defendant Llewellyn.—The proposed sale is proper, and authorised as well by the terms of the will as by the Settled Land Act. The Act would be a dead-letter if, on the suggestion of so-called expert evidence as to the future value of the property, the Court were to restrain a bona fide sale by the tenant-for-life. The tenant-for-life is entitled to consult his own interests, and section 53 has no application in a case of good faith. Section 51, which prohibits a limitation against the exercise of his power by the tenant-for-life, and the recent case of Wheelwright v. Walker (2) shew the extent of the power of the tenant-for-life under this Act. The powers given by the Act are cumulative—sections 56 and 57. As a general principle the Court does not interfere with the exercise of discretionary powers, even after action brought—Thomas v. Dering (3), Gisborne v. Gisborne (4) and Tempest v. Lord Camoys (5). Admitting that the value of the estate is largely prospective, this, according to the ordinary rule of the Court, would be a reason in favour of selling, in order that the tenant-for-life might have his share of the reversionary value—Howe v. The Earl of Dartmouth (6), Wilkinson v. Duncan (7) and Wright v. Lambert (8).

Carew, for the trustee.

Hemming, in reply.—First, that the power under the will is improperly exercised, unless for the purpose of re-investment in land, appears from Mortlock v. Buller (9), where Lord Eldon, speaking of powers such as this, says:—"The object of the sale must be to invest the money in the purchase of another estate to be settled to the same uses; and they [the trustees] are not to be satisfied with probability upon that, but it ought to be with reference to an object at that time supposed practicable; or at least this Court would expect some strong purpose of family prudence justifying the conversion if it is likely to continue money." Secondly, as to the power of sale under the Act, it is improper, having regard to section 53; but in any case it cannot be exercised till there are two trustees properly appointed, that being the number originally appointed by the will—section 45, sub-sections 1 and 2. There must therefore be a reference to ascertain whether Mr. Gibson is a proper person. The tenant-for-life ought not to have exercised the power without coming to the Court—The Attorney-General v. Clark (10)—the rule being that the Court, after action brought, will control, though it will not take away, a discretionary power—Tempest v. Lord Camoys (5) and

(1) Ante, p. 396; Law Rep. 23 Ch. D. 134.
(2) Ante, p. 274.
(3) 1 Keen, 729, 744; 6 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 267, 271.
(4) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 556; Law Rep. 2 App. Cas. 300.
(5) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 785; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 571.
(6) 7 Ves. 137.
(7) 23 Beav. 469; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 495.
(8) Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 649.
(9) 10 Ves. 292, 308.
(10) 1 Beav. 467.

Eastwood v. Clarke (1). The plaintiffs are, therefore, in any case entitled to judgment on this part of the claim.

BACON, V.C.—It must be confessed that this is a very singular case. I do not think there ever was one like it—at least, no case that I know of has ever been reported which is at all similar. Under the will of the testator there are various limitations given, amongst others one for life to the present defendant, Mr. Llewellyn. It is an exceedingly well drawn instrument, as far as I can judge from the print, and it provides for the trustees dealing with the estate at all times, and gives to the trustees a power of sale if they should be requested to sell by the tenant-for-life; and in this case the tenant-for-life does request them to do so; and if it stood only on that ground, and if there was no subsequent Act of Parliament, I could not bring myself to doubt for a single moment that the tenant-for-life, whose right it is to have the enjoyment of what the testator has left to him in as beneficial a manner as possible, if in his honest judgment he thinks that the property ought to be sold, has a right to call upon the trustees to sell it, and the trustees have no right whatever to refuse his request. I am not considering the case of an improvident sale, or of some gross breach of trust. Here, where there is no suggestion of any breach of trust being contemplated or capable of being committed, I am asked to say, upon the evidence before me of what are called experts, that if the sale was postponed for a time a larger price could be obtained for the property than could be obtained at present. What right have I to rely on the opinion of experts on such a subject as that? They have told me on what they have formed their opinion. My opinion is as easily formed as theirs, and perhaps not worth any more. They say that there is a railway going to be made, and that that will increase the value of the property; that is to say, that there is a Bill in Parliament, which whether it will pass or not no man knows, and if it does pass no man knows whether the railway will be made in the direction proposed or not—and yet I am to speculate on that suggestion, that the passing of the Bill will increase the value of the property. Then I am also asked to speculate on the value of the mines. That matter with regard to the mines stands in this way. The one thing given by the testator is an estate containing minerals, which would become valuable if they were worked. These are not available except to those persons who have large capital; and unless there are persons with 100,000*l.* ready to be produced, and willing to spend it upon the working of these minerals, there can be no increased value to the estate in that respect. That, however, does not diminish the value of the estate at all, because if the estate is put up at all, it will be put up as one entire thing which the testator has given to the present defendant to enjoy for his life. These gentlemen who are called experts have no particular experience that I know of which should induce me to listen to what they say. They say, however, that if the estate were put up for sale with the minerals, no doubt a purchaser would take into consideration the prospective value of the minerals, and the price to be given for the estate would be regulated by their notion of the increased value by reason of the existence of the minerals. That is in the nature of things, and it must be so always where there is a tenant-for-life exercising his authority, and where there are trustees exercising their powers. This estate will be sold as an estate which contains minerals. That will at once invite and attract the special attention of men who have 100,000*l.* and are willing to work the mines. Have I any reason to suppose that that would diminish the value of the estate? Or have I any reason to suppose that if the sale of the estate was postponed for a few years that the value of it would be thereby increased? There is not a fragment of evidence, nor anything at all except the guesses and speculations of those experts as they are called. Not relying on their experience and knowledge in coming to an opinion which is necessarily vague and uncertain, and which they or I could form as easily and be just as much mistaken in—if it stood there, upon the will, I should say that there was no pretence whatever for this claim, because the claim in terms asks that the tenant-for-life may be restrained from enjoying that which the testator has given to him, namely, the right to have the property sold.

It does not, however, rest there only, because the Legislature has taken what may be called a very wise view of this subject. That must be taken to be so now, at all events, and that must be the policy of the law—that tenants-for-life are not to be hampered or interfered with in the enjoyment of their estates, but on the contrary they are not only to be further enabled, but encouraged to deal with them. They have powers given to them which they did not possess before the passing of the Act in all cases, though I think in some few cases they had the same powers before the statute as they have now. Yet the statute gives cumulative powers to those possessed before by tenants-for-life. It does more than that, however. It prohibits the trustees or anybody else interfering with or trying to fetter or contract the power which in the eye of the law a tenant-for-life ought to have of selling the estate of which he is only tenant-for-life. The clauses of that Act have been referred to in the course of the argument. They are perfectly distinct, and they do enact that where a tenant-for-life sells, and where there are no trustees, that he shall be considered as a trustee; and where there are trustees, their consent not being requisite, it shall not be asked for in any respect; and they give the most ample and abundant powers to the tenant-for-life to say that the property shall be sold. It is his right to derive any benefit he can from his tenancy-for-life, and if he is satisfied that he will derive a larger benefit from the sale of the estate than from its enjoyment in its present condition, he has a right to have it sold. That is what the testator has given him, and that is inseparable from his character of tenant-for-life. If the statute were out of the way, in my opinion the tenant-for-life has full power to do that which he proposes to do; but when we come to look at the statute we find that the matter is still more clear, and that the right of the tenant-for-life becomes more strong and his power more extensive, if a more extensive power could be required. A claim, therefore, which asks, in the interests of the persons entitled in remainder, that an injunction may be granted to restrain the trustees from selling at the request and by the direction of Mr. Edward Turberville Llewellyn, and also that Mr. Edward Turberville Llewellyn may be restrained from requesting or directing a sale of the Hendrescythen estate, cannot possibly succeed. On what principle and for what reason can I possibly do that? In point of law, I cannot do it. In point of ethics, if it was necessary, as it is not, to resort to that as a topic of complaint or demand on the part of persons who say, "If we could stop the sale of this estate, although the tenant-for-life will not have all the benefit which he thinks he can derive from the estate, yet we shall unquestionably be benefited, because our expert witnesses come forward and tell you that if the sale of the estate is postponed it will sell for a larger price than if sold now"—is that a reason I can attend to? Is that anything more than saying, "Restrain the tenant-for-life for our benefit, and let him be restricted in order that we may enjoy more than we should if he exercised the power which he asserts he possesses." That is the whole case, and upon such a case as that a number of cases dealing with trustees have been referred to, amongst others the case of Mortlock v. Buller (9) was referred to, but they have not the smallest application to the case before me, which is a question of right between the plaintiffs and the defendant; and the question is, whether the defendant is entitled under the will and under the statute to proceed to that sale which he intends to make, and as to which there is no imputation and no suggestion that the trustee is favourable to the tenant-for-life. On the contrary, by his answer, he says that he proposes to sell because he thinks it is the right thing to do in the due discharge of his duty. The tenant-for-life says, I desire to sell because I shall improve my income by the sale of the estate now. They are both of them perfectly legitimate things to do, both consistent with the devise in the will, and both of them not one step beyond the rights of the several parties. Then a complaint has been made that a trustee has been appointed since this suit was instituted. I do not hesitate to confess that I had a notion once, and a case has been referred to upon this, that an appointment of another trustee ought not to take place except at the instance of the party who had obtained the decretal order; but the Court of Appeal said I was totally wrong about that, and that the decree having been made, made no sort of difference in the power of the surviving trustee, who by the settlement or will, or whatever it was, was entitled, upon a vacancy happening, to fill it up, and therefore that he had a right to nominate the trustee, and that he possessed that right according to the regular procedure of the Court, and had always had the right. In the view which they took upon that subject I cannot doubt for a moment that the Lords Justices were right, and that the power to appoint a new trustee was vested in the person in whom by the settlement it was vested, and that he had a right to appoint the trustee. In this case there is no suggestion that he has not properly exercised that power, and therefore that contention which has been resorted to for the want of something better has now no influence upon me in this case. I take the claim brought forward by the plaintiffs to be an unreasonable and improper one. It seeks to interfere with the legal right of the trustees and with the legal and beneficial right of the tenant-for-life. It asks for that which the Court ought not to grant, and which it has no power to grant, and which if it granted, it would do a wrong and commit an injustice to the tenant-for-life. In my opinion the claim must be dismissed with costs.

Hemming, Q.C.—Will your Lordship direct that there should be no hurried sale; that is, that there should be no sale within the next three or four weeks? I am instructed to ask it, because my clients may desire to appeal.

Bacon, V.C.—Not at all. I make no such order. All I do is to dismiss the suit.

Solicitors—H. A. Stephens, agent for Francis James, Swansea, for plaintiffs; J. Neal, agent for T. L. Jenkins, Newport, for defendant.

Pollock, B. 1883. April 24, 25.

KENSIT v. THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Right to flowing Water — Riparian Owner.

An action by an inferior riparian owner, to restrain the use of water taken from and returned to a stream by a non-riparian owner, will not lie unless diminution or pollution of the water is proved.

Riparian rights considered.

The plaintiffs in this action were two, Mr. Kensit and Mr. Norman. Mr. Kensit was the owner of land at Mistley, in the county of Essex, which abuts for a small distance on a brook at a place crossed by the Great Eastern Railway. The railway company were owners of land abutting on the brook on the opposite side. Mr. Norman was Mr. Kensit's tenant, and also owner of residential property lower down the brook where he resided himself.

The defendants were the Great Eastern Railway Company and a Mr. Free, who had a sugar and saccharine manufactory on land adjoining the land of the Great Eastern Railway Company not itself abutting on the brook. The railway company constructed a tank on their own land filled from the brook. They licensed Mr. Free to take water from their tank, which he did, and returned it to the brook at an outlet on the land of the Great Eastern Railway slightly below the point where it was abstracted. The water was used by Mr. Free for condensing steam given off from saccharine, and, as was admitted at the trial, as much water was put to the brook as was abstracted, and of as pure quality as when abstracted. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain Mr. Free from abstracting any water from the brook, and to restrain the railway company from permitting him to do so.

W. Barber, Q.C., and C. P. Jones, for the plaintiffs.—Though the railway company themselves might have made this use of the water complained of as riparian owners, they could not grant any use of the water to the other defendant, a non-riparian owner. Though no damage is occasioned to the plaintiffs, they have a Great Eastern Rail. Co.

ı at law or in equity in respect ıwful use of the water by the ree, in the same way as a land-sue for trespasses which occa-mage, for one reason, because ful acts may ripen into a right be exercised injuriously, or the f which may depreciate the Wood v. Waud (1), Embrey v.
The Stockport Waterworks v.
Nuttall v. Bracewell (4), Orme- norden (5) and The Wilts and Canal Company v. The Swin- vorks (6).
, Q.C., and Smart, for the rail-ay, and Willis, Q.C., and War-
.C., for the defendant Free.—
f the right of a riparian owner to have the water come to him n quality and undiminished in ccept so far as it may be used r riparian proprietors for their purposes, and no action will ainst a stranger for any use of which does not affect the quanlity of the flow—The Swindon
v. The Wilts and Berkshire
pany (7), Lord Sandwich v.
Northern Railway Company
v. Morris (9), Orr Ewing v.
(10), Phear on Rights of Water
r v. Gilmour (12), Harrop v.
, Sedgwick on Damages (14)
on v. Hoddinott (15).
r, Q.C., replied.

1. Rep. 748; 18 Law J. Rep. Exch.

1. Rep. 353; 20 Law J. Rep. Exch.

l. & C. 300.
w J. Rep. Exch. 1; Law Rep. 2

w J. Rep. Q.B. 445.
w J. Rep. Chanc. 393; Law Rep. 9
in H.L. see note (7).
w J. Rep. Chanc. 638; Law Rep. 7
. 697.
w J. Rep. Chanc. 225; Law Rep. 10

lep. 1 Sc. App. 447.
Rep. 2 App. Cas. 839.

oore P.C. 131.
aw J. Rep. Exch. 1; Law Rep. 4 rican ed., pp. 49, 137.

m. B. Rep. N.S. 590; 26 Law J.
8.

POLLOCK, B. (after stating the facts).—Upon those facts and with those admissions the judgment of the Court must be based. Now I propose very shortly to state the way in which it occurs to me in point of principle. I believe at present no case has gone before which has actually decided the very point in question in the present case; that point being whether, when a riparian proprietor grants to a non-riparian proprietor certain rights which, if exercised, he has no right to grant, though at the same time they do not interfere substantially with the plaintiffs' rights as to his flow of water, in such a case as that any action can be brought, or any action, either for damages or for injunction, can be brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant. It is essential, no doubt, to consider what is the right to flowing water in these cases especially, because it was sought to establish an analogy between the infringement of a right of that kind and the infringement of a possessory right which a landowner has in his land; and for this purpose I may simply state that the law of England, and, as far as I am aware, that of every other country, never acknowledged the same right to flowing water in a person by whose land it flows in the same sense and manner as the possessory right to land has been acknowledged. It has been spoken of in different ways—as a thing that is a right publici juris, a thing that is a natural right, and by other expressions of that kind; but in the result it comes to this, that it is a right of the same character as the right to the pure flow of air—as a right of such a nature that the person who enjoys it cannot at any time fix upon a particular portion of water to which he is entitled; he cannot say of a single pint or globule of water that that pint or globule is his; he can only say that he is entitled to the flow of that water in its accustomed manner both as to quantity and as to purity. Well, that being so, the cases which clearly shew, as they do, that a person who has the possessory right of land may bring successfully an action either for damages or for an injunction, not merely where some damage is done to his property, but where some right is infringed whereby his title may be put in danger, are not, in my judgment, at all analogous to the present case; because in the case of land a person has the absolute property in that land, and a great many acts that may be done, although not actually injuring the land, still may be of such a character that they may imperil his future title, and in particular may perhaps, if undisturbed, grow into a right by reason of a long user and by the Statute of Limitations. The only further question then that remains is this: one of the defendants having admitted that as a riparian owner he has no right to grant to a non-riparian owner the use of the water, a question arises whether by that user, although no present damage is done, any right could accrue by effluxion of time; and, in my opinion, that is not so. I think that matter, as I will shew presently, is tolerably well established by authority, although there has been no express decision upon the subject. Now, with regard to the authorities, it is unnecessary—although it is quite right that I should be furnished, as I was very fully, with all the authorities upon the subject—for me to follow them now at any great length, because the proposition that I have shortly laid down with regard to the right to water is very clearly and fully expressed in many judgments of our Courts, and in one in particular, which would not be binding upon me in this Court as a judgment, but is one to which we always pay the very highest respect as the judgment of Lord Kingsdown, which has been quoted again and again with approbation in our Courts, in the case of Miner v. Gilmour (12). A very similar proposition was laid down by Chief Baron Pollock in the case of Wood v. Waud (1), which has been cited on numerous occasions. In that case, what Chief Baron Pollock took as a proper description of the right is taken from Kent's Commentaries (16), and the proposition is this: "Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a river has naturally an equal right to the use of the water which flows in the stream adjacent to his lands, as it was wont to run (currere solebat), without diminution or alteration. No proprietor has a right to use the water, to the prejudice of other proprietors above or below him, unless he has a prior right to divert it, or a title to some exclusive enjoyment. He has no property in the water itself, but a simple usufruct while it passes along. 'Aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat,' is the language of the law." That seems to me to be perfectly clear, and to be quite sufficient to express what are the rights of the parties in the present case. Well then, taking that judgment of the Court in Wood v. Waud (1) and again in Embrey v. Owen (2), you find that doctrine very clearly established, and you certainly find nothing in any of the judgments by any of the learned Judges in those cases, or in the dicta of the learned Judges, which at all shews that an action will lie by a riparian proprietor if there has been no diminution in quantity or purity of the water. Then there are two other cases; one is the case of The Stockport Waterworks Company v. Potter (3), and the other is Nuttall v. Bracewell (4), in which that which the defendants have admitted in this case is very clearly established, namely, that a non-riparian proprietor can obtain no right through a riparian proprietor. To both of those judgments the present Lord Bramwell dissented; but it is quite clear that the judgment of the majority of the Court is that which has been upheld since, and which must be now acted upon. There is one other case bearing upon this part of the case that requires some little examination, and that is the case of Sampson v. Hoddinott (15). At first sight it might appear there that some countenance was given to the proposition asserted by the plaintiff in this action. In that case an upper riparian proprietor, for the purposes of irrigation, retained some water, and there no actual damage was proved, but the water was delayed; and although there was no actual damage proved, it was not clear, or rather one might say, perhaps, it was shewn to be probable, that if the plaintiff had exercised his full right to the water, then that full right would have been affected, and consequently he would have suffered damage. The same doctrine that was laid down in Sampson v. Hoddinott (15) is to be found in some of the other cases, and is common to a good many other instances in which this branch of law has been administered; that is to say, you are to measure the plaintiff's right, not according to the actual amount he uses of water, but you are to measure it according to the amount of water which he is entitled to use; and therefore, if a millowner should stop his mill for two or three months, during which wrongful acts were done by riparian owners above, it would be no answer in such a case to say, "You suffered no damage." The reason why he suffered no damage was simply because he did not choose to work his mill during that period of time. I think it is to that extent only that that case affects the present case. Then there are two cases—one not by any means a modern case—which distinctly shew that no cause of action arises unless there is a real injury to the plaintiff. One is the case of Williams v. Morland (17), and there is a very careful judgment in that case both by Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Holroyd, in which the right of a plaintiff and defendant in such a case is very clearly stated. Mr. Justice Bayley states, at p. 913: "Flowing water is originally publici juris. So soon as it is appropriated by an individual his right is co-extensive with the beneficial use to which he appropriates it. Subject to that right all the rest of the water remains publici juris. The party who obtains a right to the exclusive enjoyment of the water does so in derogation of the primitive right of the public. Now if this be the true character of the right to water, a party complaining of the breach of such a right ought to shew that he is prevented from having water which he has acquired a right to use for some beneficial purpose;" and he goes on to point out in that case there was no deprivation of the water which had affected the plaintiff. Then Mr. Justice Holroyd, whose judgments are always particularly short and to the point, says this: "Running water is not in its nature private property; at least it is private property no longer than it remains on the soil of the person claiming it. Before it came there it clearly was not his property. It may perhaps become quasi the property of another before it comes upon his premises, by reason of his having appropriated to himself the use of the water accustomed to flow through his lands before any other person had acquired a prior right to it." Then he cites one of the other cases, and says: "The gravamen of the complaint is not that the water was prevented by the act of the defendant from coming down to the plaintiff's premises and that he was injured by the want of water, but that it, in fact, flowed in a more impetuous manner, and thereby damaged the plaintiff's banks; but the jury have found that no damage has been done to the plaintiff's banks by the manner in which the water was caused to flow by the act of the defendant. The jury have, therefore, found against the plaintiff in respect of the right of action which he claims. The mere obstruction of the water which had been used to flow through his lands does not of itself give any right of action. In order to entitle himself to recover, he should shew the loss of some benefit or the deterioration of the value of the premises." That is as far back as the year 1824, and I need not say if no damage is shewn, so that the plaintiff cannot maintain an action, neither would the Court of equity grant an injunction to restrain the defendants from doing the act complained of. That very point did come before a Court of equity in Elmhirst v. Spencer (18), in which Lord Cottenham gives a very clear judgment to the same effect. He says, "Now the plaintiff, before he can ask for an injunction, must prove that he has sustained such a substantial injury by the acts of the defendants as would have entitled him to a verdict at law in an action for damages. In the manufacturing districts, where there are as many mills along a stream as the water will supply, it would be extremely hard that a proprietor of one of such mills might not divert the stream within his own land, restoring it to its ancient channel before it entered into the lands of his neighbour without a diminution of the usual quantity. In such cases, and in the similar case of alleged obstruction to the use of light, in order to sustain an injunction

(16) Vol. 3, p. 439.

(17) 2 B. & C. 910; 4 Dowl. & Ry. 583 2 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) K.B. 191.

(18) 2 Mac. & G. 45.

there must be both an unwarrantable use and an injury resulting from such use. In the present instance, however, the defendant's admission is quite consistent with the fact that the plaintiff has sustained no injury; and this Court will not take upon itself to adjudicate upon the question of whether this is a nuisance or not." That seems to be a very clear expression of opinion in the same direction as that expressed in Williams v. Morland (17), and by Lord Blackburn in the case of Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun (10). Then the only remaining proposition is one which I wish to consider very carefully, namely, whether possibly it could be said, as has been said in cases relating to land, that if this act which is now done by the defendants, by diversion of the water, is not interfered with by the plaintiffs, any right could be gained by the defendants? This is an extremely important question when you remember what presents a difficulty in regard to the enjoyment of water in this sense, that the right to the use of flowing water is measured according to law, not by the amount, which may prevent a lower riparian proprietor from having enough, but it is measured by the rights of the higher riparian proprietors who are entitled to use such quantities as they may want for ordinary purposes, and what those purposes may be it is not necessary now to enter into. So that it may occur, if houses are built along the bank of a stream, and each person uses water merely for domestic purposes, that in a dry season those lower down, especially if the stream is some miles long, might not get enough, and therefore in weighing this part of the case it is extremely essential to see that we do not put any further burden upon the lower riparian proprietors by letting persons extract water for a purpose which is not per se legal. But I myself have no doubt upon that subject: I think the time from which any right would begin to accrue would not be the time at which such a diversion as was made in the present case arises, but it would be the time from which the plaintiff could say that his water right was disturbed in quantity or purity; and there is an authority which bears upon that, namely, Sampson v. Hoddinott (15). In the considered judgment of the Court delivered by Mr. Justice Cresswell, this is said: "On the part of the plaintiffs it was denied generally that a riparian proprietor has any such right; and it was also contended that, at all events in this case, the plaintiff had gained a title to the uninterrupted flow of the stream by immemorial enjoyment. As to the latter proposition it appears to us that all persons having lands on the margin of a flowing stream have, by nature, certain rights to use the water of that stream, whether they exercise those rights or not, and that they may begin to exercise them whenever they will. By usage they may acquire a right to use the water in a manner not justified by their natural rights; but such acquired right has no operation against the natural rights of a landowner higher up the stream, unless the user by which it was acquired affects the use that he himself has made of the stream, or his power to use it, so as to raise the presumption of a grant and so render the tenement above a servient tenement. If the user of the stream by the plaintiff for irrigation was merely an exercise of his natural right, such user, however long continued, would not render the defendant's tenement a servient tenement, or in any way affect the natural rights of the defendant to use the water. If the user by the plaintiff was larger than his natural rights would justify, still there is no evidence of its affecting the defendant's tenement, or the natural use of the water by the defendant, so as to render it a servient tenement." That seems to me to be on all fours with this present case, and there the riparian proprietor who complained was above, as indeed he is in this case, for some purposes, though he is both above and below. It seems to me that that is a judgment by which I am bound, even if I did not concur in it for other reasons. That, therefore, leads me to the result, that although if this stream were being regulated, say, by an Act of Parliament—although if there were a public officer whose duty it was to interfere with any improper user of the water, it might be a very proper case for his interference—it leads me to say, as the law of England does not give impersonal rights, but only gives rights to a party to come to a Court of law or equity when he is damaged in his interest, in this case no action would lie for damage, and therefore, also, no action for an injunction can be maintained. There is only one other case, which might seem at the first blush to be a little contrary to this view, and that is the case of Northam v. Hurley (19). In that case it was held that an action would lie for the diversion of the channel of a stream contrary to a grant, although there was no diversion of water or actual damage to the plaintiff; and looking at the judgment in that case delivered by Mr. Justice Coleridge, it is quite clear that what the Court were dealing with there was, not the natural right to the flow of water, but they treated the matter as a grant by the defendant, and they held that what he had done in altering the actual channel of the stream was in derogation of that grant, and that therefore an action would lie. In no other case have I been able to find anything militating against the view I have taken, and in the result, therefore, I give judgment for both defendants.

Solicitors—Doyle & Sons, agents for Jones & Son, Colchester, for plaintiff; Philbrick & Free, for defendants.

BACON, V.C. 1883. May 2, 3, 8, 9.

TEEBAY v. THE MANCHESTER AND SHEFFIELD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway Company — Agreement not under Seal—Reservation of Easement—Subsequent Conveyance under Seal—Abandonment—Companies Clauses Consolidation Act*, 1847 (8 Vict. c. 16), s. 97—Local Board—Public Road—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 147 and 149.

By an agreement in* 1870 between the vendor and a railway company by their secretary, the vendor agreed to sell and the company to purchase a piece of land, with a provision that the vendor should have a right of access to other lands belonging to him by and over any of the slopes which the promoters might arrange in their intended works. In 1871 *the vendor executed a conveyance of the land to the company without the reservation of any easement. The land was needed for raising a road over the railway, which road was raised accordingly, the slope of the approach of the road being separated from the vendor's neighbouring lands by a rail fence only. Recently the urban authority of the district had agreed with the company to repair and maintain the road and slopes, and had raised the level of the road, steepened the slope, and built retaining walls at the foot of the slope, cutting off the access to the slope from the adjoining lands of the vendor. The successors in title of the vendor claimed an injunction. There was no claim for rectification of the conveyance or specific performance of the agreement:— Held, that whatever right of access was reserved to the vendor under the agreement of 1870, *it was abandoned on the execution of the conveyance. Action dismissed with costs.

The Cheshire Lines Committee were incorporated by the Cheshire Lines Act, 1867, with a common seal, and power to purchase and hold lands for the purpose of constructing a railway authorised by the Liverpool Extension Act, 1865, and other Acts.

The railway ran nearly at right angles to a high road, repairable by the inhabitants at large, leading from Farnworth to Appleton and Widnes, in the county of Lancaster, and it was originally intended that the road should be lowered at this point and carried under the railway; but in the course of constructing the railway it was determined to carry the road over the railway instead. For this purpose it became necessary for the Cheshire Lines Committee to acquire certain lands vested in Richard Teebay, the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs, which lay in the angle formed by the north side of the projected railway and the east side of the then existing road.

Accordingly, by an agreement dated the 16th of June, 1870, and expressed to be made between Richard Teebay (the vendor) of the one part and the Cheshire Lines

(19) 1 E. & B. 665; 22 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 183.

Teebay v. Manchester and Sheffield Rail. Co.

Committee of the other part, the vendor agreed to sell and the committee agreed to purchase for 1,430*l.*, and upon the terms and conditions thereinafter mentioned, the pieces of land therein described; and it was thereby agreed that the said purchase-money comprised compensation for the entire value of the land, and for all mines of coal, ironstone and slate, and other minerals within and under the same, and for all rights of pre-emption of the said lands and hereditaments, and for all compensation for the damage that had been or might be sustained by the vendor or occasioned to his remaining lands by reason of the execution of the works for which the said purchased lands and hereditaments, or any part thereof, were required by the exercise of the powers of the Acts of Parliament referred to, or of the exercise as regards the said purchased premises of the powers vested in the committee by those Acts, and the vendor agreed to make all legal compensation for tenant rights, and the agreement continued: "Provided always that the said vendor, his heirs and assigns, or his or their under-tenants, shall have a right of access to other lands belonging to the said vendor by and over any of the slopes which the promoters may arrange in their intended works, and through, over and upon any occupation road or roads which they may form adjacent to the said lands."

This agreement was signed by Edward Ross, described as "the secretary of the committee," but was not otherwise executed by the committee.

The lands were of copyhold tenure, and vested in Richard Teebay, as trustee of the will of J. Smith deceased. The agreement was followed by two deeds, dated respectively the 25th of April, 1871, one being a deed of covenant for title, the other a statutory conveyance by deed-poll. The deed of covenant made between Richard Teebay of the first part, Ellen Smith of the second part, and the committee of the third part, recited the will of J. Smith, containing a power of sale vested in Richard Teebay as surviving trustee, and exerciseable with the consent of Ellen Smith, and that the committee under their statutory powers had contracted for the absolute purchase of the hereditaments for 1,430*l.*, and that the purchase-money included all compensation for the damage that had been or might be sustained by the said Richard Teebay, or occasioned to his remaining lands by reason of the execution of the works for which the hereditaments conveyed by him, or any part thereof, were required, or by otherwise injuriously affecting such other lands by the exercise of the powers of the said Acts or any of them.

The second deed was a deed-poll under the hand and seal of Richard Teebay, whereby, in consideration of 1,430*l.* paid to him by the committee, he conveyed to the committee, their successors and assigns, the said pieces of land, together with all mines of coal and ironstone, slate and other minerals, within and under the same, and all ways, rights of pre-emption, and other rights, members, easements and appurtenances thereto belonging, and all such estate, right, title and interest in and to the same, as he was or should become seized or possessed of, or was by the said Acts or otherwise empowered to convey, to hold the premises to the committee, their successors and assigns, for ever, according to the true intent and meaning of the said Acts. There were no recitals in this deed.

The defendants in 1871 entered into possession of the land comprised in the agreement and deed-poll, and carried the road over the railway, the northern approach to the bridge over the railway and the embankment of the same being built partly on a portion of the site of the old road, and partly (on the eastern side of the road) on part of the land so purchased from Richard Teebay. The eastern slope of the said embankment adjoined other lands belonging to Richard Teebay, which, as the statement of claim alleged, together with the benefit of the proviso in the agreement of the 16th of June, 1870, were now vested in the plaintiffs.

The statement of claim stated that Richard Teebay agreed to sell the land for 1,430*l.* on the representations by the committee, and on the understanding that the level of the road would be built and maintained according to a certain section submitted to Richard Teebay at the time, and that the said eastern slope would be are much more stringent than those of section 97 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act.

Then the proviso in the agreement is not lost or merged because omitted from the subsequent deeds. The proviso could not have been inserted in the deed-poll, since there could be no reservation to the grantor of a newly created easement except by a deed executed by the grantee—Gale on Easements (4). The agreement contains several stipulations, one of which is the agreement to grant the land, and the performance by the vendor of that stipulation does not preclude him from insisting on the other party performing his part of the agreement—Piggott v. Stratton (5), Bos v. Helsham (6) and Davidson on Conveyancing, Releases (7).

Marten, Q.C., and Phipson Beale, for the committee.—The committee have not widened the road or built the walls. These alterations have been made by the local board, acting in the discharge of their duties to the public. The only part of the case which concerns the committee, therefore, is as to the barrier of sleepers, in respect of which an injunction is claimed. The representations alleged to have been made to Richard Teebay by the committee are not supported by evidence, and the whole case, therefore, depends on the proviso in the agreement. That agreement is not binding on the committee, since by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 97, it ought to have been signed by the "committee or any two of them, or any two of the directors." The case of Wilson v. The West Hartlepool Railway Company (1) is distinguishable, as there there was possession by the company, which could only be referred to the agreement. The possession here is referable to the conveyance in which the agreement is merged.

The deeds shew that the terms of the agreement were considered as abandoned, except so far as they were embodied in the deeds. The deed of covenant is not between the same parties as the agreement, Ellen Smith not being a party to the agreement; and it recites that the purchase-money is in compensation for all damage. Then by the deed-poll of even date R. Teebay grants the lands, and all ways and rights over it. The proviso in the agreement and the deeds are inconsistent, and on this ground cases like Piggott v. Stratton (5) and Bos v. Helsham (6) are distinguishable.

A railway company has no power to grant an easement of this kind—the Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), s. 50; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55. s. 10, and Mulliner v. The Midland Railway Company (8). The time for making additional accommodation works—five years from the opening of the railway—has long since expired—8 Vict. c. 20. s. 73.

The soil of the road is vested in the local board—Rolls v. The Vestry of St. George's, Southwark (9); and the committee could not grant the easement in derogation of the rights of the local board—Mulliner v. The Midland Railway Company (8) and In re The Metropolitan Railway Company and Cosh (10).

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Medd, for the local board. — That the agreement is merged in the conveyance is shewn by Wheeldon v. Burrows (11) and White v. Bass (12).

As urban authority we have power to widen the road and build the necessary supporting walls — Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 4, 144, 147, 149, and Coverdale v. Charlton (13). The case, therefore, can only be one for compensation pursuant to section 308—Roderick v. The Aston Local Board (14); and that compensation cannot be claimed till our work is finished—

(4) 5th ed. 1876, p. 85*n*.

(5) 1 De Gex, F. & J. 33; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1.

(6) 4 Hurl. & C. 645; 36 Law J. Rep. Exch. 20; Law Rep. 2 Exch. 72.

(7) Vol. v. part ii. p. 147.

(8) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 258; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 611.

(9) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 691; Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 785.

(10) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 277; Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 607.

(11) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 853, 861; Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 31, 59.

(12) 7 Hurl. & N. 722; 31 Law J. Rep. Exch. 283.

(13) 48 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 128; Law Rep. 4 Q.B. D. 104.

(14) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 802; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 328.

Clark v. The School Board for London (15) and The Duke of Bedford v. Dawson (16).

Hemming, Q.C., in reply.—Even if this were a public road, the board have no power to take our easement either under section 147 or section 149.

[Horton Smith, Q.C.—I rely on section 147.]

But the approach is not a public road, and is repairable by the committee—The North Staffordshire Railway Company v. Dale (17). The board are acting merely as contractors on behalf of the committee. The agreement between the board and committee is not a concluded agreement by which the board take over the approach as a public road.

BACON, V.C.—This case has occupied a considerable length of time before me, owing to the discussion of matters not set up by the statement of claim. The plaintiff says, in order to construct the piece of road, and to form the embankment for the raised approach on the north side of the bridge, and so on, an agreement was entered into between Teebay, on the 16th of June, 1870, and the Cheshire Lines Committee, whereby Teebay agreed to sell and the defendants the Cheshire Lines Committee agreed to purchase, at the price of 1,430*l.*, and upon the terms and conditions thereinafter mentioned, three several pieces of land, coloured red on the plan annexed to the agreement now in statement; and the agreement now in statement contained a proviso that the said Richard Teebay, his heirs or assigns, and his or their under-tenants, should have a right of access to other lands belonging to the said Richard Teebay by and over any of the slopes which the promoters (meaning the defendants the Cheshire Lines Committee) might arrange on their intended works, and through, over and upon any occupation road or roads, which they might form adjacent to the said lands.

(15) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 421; Law Rep. 9 Chanc. 120.

(16) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 549; Law Rep. 20 Eq. 353.

(17) 8 E. & B. 836; 27 Law J. Rep. M.C. 147.

Now that is, in the main, the substance of the claim of this case. The statement of claim complains of what the railway company have done in the way of heightening the road; but the principal case, as it was opened to me, was that that proviso remained in its full force, notwithstanding all that had taken place between the parties.

Now it is convenient to keep in mind what the real subject of this contention is. The railway company intended to carry their railway across this district—that is to say, the Widnes district—and they intended first of all to carry it over the existing road; they afterwards changed their plans, and carried it through a cutting through the existing roads, one of which is called the Birchfield road. In order to do that effectually, they did as the law requires them, and set about making the Birchfield road; and in order to support that road, and for no other purpose, they bought as much of the plaintiff's land as was necessary in order to make slopes to support the road, which they were bound to make for themselves. That was the state of things when this agreement was entered into before the slopes were made.

The company entered into possession of the land under that agreement, and they proceeded to effect these works; and by the deed which they afterwards executed—it is unnecessary to refer to the covenants—that agreement having been come to in June, 1870, on the 25th of April, 1871, that is to say, in the next year—this conveyance was executed, by which the trustee, Mr. Teebay, conveyed the several pieces of land, and so on—the description of which I need not read—"together with all mines of coal and ironstone, slate and other minerals within and under the same, and all ways, rights of pre-emption and other rights, members, casements and appurtenances thereto belonging, and all such estate, right, title and interest in or to the same as I am or shall become seised or possessed of, or am by the said Act or otherwise empowered to convey." That document refers to a deed of even date which was executed by Teebay under the will of John Smith with the consent of Ellen Smith, who was the party interested. That deed relates only to the production of the title-deeds in order to protect the title to these lands. Now, what took place between the month of June, 1870, and that deed which I have just read, which in its terms passes all rights as well as all estate that the grantor could possibly be said to possess? Reference was made to several cases, one of them in the Privy Council, on the strength of which it was alleged that the terms of the agreement are still in all their force and validity, and that they are as much binding upon the defendants the railway company as if no conveyance whatever had been made. I do not think that either of the cases referred to bear out any such proposition. In the one case (18) there had been a bargaining for the sale of an equity of redemption of an insolvent's estate. The mortgagee in that case bought the equity of redemption, and he claimed in the insolvency any balance that might be due to him. But it was wholly inconsistent with the nature of the bargain, and the terms of the bargain for the equity of redemption, that he should assert any such right. In that case it was therefore held, having regard to the facts and the circumstances of the case and the rights of the parties, that the mortgagee who had kept the pledge for the whole of his debt, and who had paid another sum of money to buy out the equity of redemption, could not after that have a right to prove for his debt in the insolvency. I cannot see that that has any sort of bearing upon the case before me. The other case (19) was a case in which there had been an agreement which was informal in this respect, that it had not, as the law required, the seal of the company. In that case there was an agreement which had been partly performed—almost wholly performed. Possession was taken, rights and acts of ownership were exercised, and then a conveyance was executed which did not refer to the terms of the agreement. In that case it was held, with the most perfect reason and justice, that the rights conferred by the agreement still remained in the parties interested under the agreement, and that, although a conveyance had been made afterwards which did not refer to those rights, the rights were in no degree impaired. Nobody could find fault with the law or justice of that case. In this case, if there had been a bill filed alleging that the deed of April, 1871, had been executed by mistake or inadvertence, or without properly attending to the rights of parties then existing, I might have listened to such a case. In such a case it is not necessary for me to say there might be a question as to specific performance of the agreement, or as to the rectification of the deed of conveyance; but no such case is presented to me. Mr. Teebay, the man who contracted for the sale in June, 1870, was a practitioner in the law. He must be taken, therefore, to have known very well what he was doing; and when he and his cestui que trust afterwards joined in perfecting the conveyance which had been made, he, in the exercise of his legal right, conveyed all ways, rights, easements, estate and everything else. At law, nobody would dispute that that is an absolute extinguishment of any rights which could be asserted under the agreement. Are there any equitable circumstances which would induce me to hold otherwise? Certainly not. There is no such case before me. Mr. Teebay does not say that he was mistaken; he does not say that anything took place in the way of correspondence or communication or anything else; but there is a vague reservation contained in the agreement of the rights of access over the slope, and that is all that the present claim rests upon. The claim to the right of occupation roads there is now no foundation for. If any occupation roads should be made, then no doubt, either under the agreement or without the agreement probably, the plaintiff would have a right to avail himself of those occupation roads. But the simple case presented upon the opening of the case, was that that stipulation, that the plaintiff was entitled now to have rights of access over the slopes, still exists. What does a right of access over the slopes mean? Do they say they have ever asked for liberty to traverse these slopes, or by what means they could traverse them, or to what end they could make any use of them? It might be that in the construction of the railway, or other circumstances which might have happened, there might be some meaning in those words "right of access." Right of access over a steep bank or slope, the inclination of which is one in two, is a matter which I cannot feel there is any foundation or pretence for discussing. If the case stood only on that, and it must mainly depend on that, I should say that the plaintiff has failed to establish any case whatever against the railway company; but so many other things have been discussed that it is worth while to look a little closer into the case and see what has been the conduct of the parties from the year 1870 until the year 1882, when the quarrel broke out. Upon looking into the matter I find this. I should have said also that the statement of claim complains that the road has been raised, and that by the raising of the road the plaintiff's property has been damaged.

(18) The Melbourne Banking Corporation v. Brougham (3).

(19) It is presumed that his Lordship refers to Wilson v. The West Hartlepool Railway Company (1), but from the report of that case it would appear that no conveyance was there executed.

The railway company took possession, and they raised the road, as it was a matter almost of necessity they should do—for the section shews that from the bridge, of necessity, if it went over the railway, the inclination was very steep, and it went down into a sort of hollow. To make a road, therefore, was necessary, and to make it at a greater elevation was also necessary; and that it was necessary to add something to it is shewn by the fact that at the time it was made, Mr. Teebay's predecessor, who was in possession at that date, was paid a considerable sum of money for the right to make these slopes. Then the slopes are made, and there is no claim of access. There is no possibility of using any access, and no suggestion that the right of it, if it existed, was of any use whatever to these plaintiffs. For years this matter goes on, and then the railway company, having discharged what was plainly their duty, and as clearly their interest, in making this road to the point where it went into the dip, agreed with the Local Board of Widnes that the Local Board of Widnes should take upon themselves the further formation and the further care of these roads. The agreement which has been referred to is very explicit on the subject. It is not, as Mr. Hemming suggested, an agreement in prospective, or an agreement which is to have no effect until the works are done and the money is paid. The agreement which was made between the railway company and the Widnes Local Board is this:—"The said local board, in consideration of the agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the said committee, do hereby agree with the said committee, and the said committee, in consideration of the agreements hereinafter contained on the part of the said local board, do hereby agree with the said local board as follows:—The said local board will forthwith pave . . . . the approaches to the bridge over the railway of the said committee at Moss Brook in Widnes, and take up and re-lay the present pavement on the surface of the said bridge, kerb and channel the footwalk on either side of the said approaches, and flag the westerly footwalk, lengthen the retaining wall on the easterly side of the northern approach, and cope and rake the existing retaining wall, and execute the several other works shewn and described on the plan hereto annexed." The plan describes those works which have been since carried into execution. The stipulation to which Mr. Hemming refers is that "the committee will forthwith, after the completion of these works shewn and described on the said plan, pay to the said local board the sum of 944*l.* 2*s.* The said local board agree to indemnify and hold harmless the said committee from and against all claims," and so on. Where both parties are at liberty to enter into the arrangement, was it not the plain duty of the local board to provide as good a road as circumstances would enable them to provide? Was there anything unlawful in the way they did it? They made the company pay part of the cost—perhaps the whole of the cost—and, that being done, they take to the road, and make a public road of it, and a public road it is, whether the works have been completed and the money has been paid or not. [His Lordship stated what had been done by the board in widening and raising the road, and that it was necessary that the retaining walls should be built, and continued:] That is the state of things in which the plaintiff approaches the Court, and asks, first of all, that "the railway company may be restrained by injunction from further proceeding with the construction of the said pieces of wall coloured dark brown and yellow respectively on the plans annexed hereto, and of permitting to remain any such part of the said pieces of wall as has been already constructed, and also from permitting the said barrier of sleepers or any part thereof to remain, and from otherwise obstructing or interfering with the plaintiffs' access from their said lands by and over the said eastern slope of the said northern approach, and every part thereof, to the said road on the top of the said northern approach." Now what ground, I ask, is there for asking that the defendants the railway company may be restrained from erecting anything there? The road must be raised if the necessities of the case require it, or if in the judgment of the local board of health, who have positive power and dominion over the road, they think it convenient for the public use that it should be raised. It was said, when the road was entered upon, the defendant company sent a tracing of the section to the plaintiff, or to the person then representing the interest which the plaintiff sues upon, in which they shewed that the raising of the road was not to be so great as it afterwards became. There is no contract whatever in that. There is nothing binding in that. It is simply an intimation that the road is to be raised. By what law or on what principle can a man restrain the owner of a road from raising it to any height he thinks fit? [His Lordship further examined the evidence at length, and came to the conclusion that the land of the plaintiffs was not injured for building purposes or otherwise, and continued:] That is the whole of the case. What have the Widnes Local Board to do with it? The Widnes Local Board have to discharge a public duty. They have no interest in it. They found a road made in their parish or within their district which they were not bound to take to, but which for the public benefit they thought they should properly take to. They contracted, therefore, with the man bound to make the road, and contracted with him on terms which, being performed, make the road a public road, and make them the supreme owners of the road for the purposes of the Act, and enable them, among other things, to widen the road. Upon what ground can these proceedings be justified? In my opinion they cannot be justified upon the authority referred to, because I find that in the year 1871 that conveyance was executed by a man who was cognisant of his rights, recognising his rights, specifying in wide general terms all the rights he had or was supposed to possess, and conveying by law these pieces of land unfettered by any restriction to the defendants the railway company. But supposing there was anything wrong in that, which I do not know, if there were no Widnes Board, the defendants would, in my opinion, be perfectly entitled to build a retaining wall so as to prevent the slope slipping and becoming damaged, because the slope is the support of the road which the defendants are bound to make. The Widnes Local Board have positively done nothing of which the plaintiff could complain. What has been done has been done with the perfect knowledge of the plaintiff, and it has been done long enough to prevent his getting any remedy in the shape of an injunction. If he has any other remedy he can assert it; but in this Court, upon this record, and upon this evidence which I have toiled through all these days, in my opinion, first in point of law he cannot set up the stipulation in the agreement given him as a right of access, which he has never attempted to exercise, and which there is no possibility of his exercising, unless the railway company should choose to open a door for him to clamber up the slope, if he should ever take it in his head to do that. That is not within the scope of this record. In my opinion the plaintiff's case entirely fails, and his claim must be dismissed, and with costs against both the defendants.

Solicitors—Crowder, Anstie & Vizard, agents for Lynch & Teebay, Liverpool, for plaintiffs; Cunliffe, Beaumont & Davenport, agents for Lingards & Newby, Manchester, for defendants the Cheshire Lines Committee; Maples, Teesdale & Co., agents for Henry Samuel Oppenheim, for defendants the Widnes Local Board.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Jan. 11.

In re THE MUTUAL SOCIETY.

Company — Winding-up — Misfeasance by Directors—Affidavit by Official Liquidator embracing Distinct Cases against Different Directors—Right to compel Official Liquidator to make Affidavit of Documents—Companies Act, 1862, s. 165.

In the winding up of a company the official liquidator took out a summons, under section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, against a number of persons who were or had been directors, seeking to make them responsible for certain alleged acts of misfeasance, which were 107 in number. In support of his application he filed a long affidavit embracing the cases of all the directors. E. had been a director for a short period only, and the liquidator only sought to make him liable for 11 out of the 107 acts of misfeasance. E. appeared by a separate solicitor, and applied for an order upon the liquidator to state the particular paragraphs of the affidavit on which he intended to rely as against him:—Held (affirming the decision of CHITTY, J.), that the application must be refused, on the ground that there were no special circumstances to take the case out of the general rule that a defendant must ascertain for himself what part of his opponent's evidence relates to him.

An official liquidator is not in the position of an ordinary litigant; he is an officer of the Court, and will not, except under special circumstances, be ordered to make the usual affidavit as to documents, although he is bound to shew a hostile litigant all the documents in his possession on which he relies or which the litigant desires to see.

W. Emmens had been a director of the above company, but had ceased to be a director on the 21st of November, 1871. The company being in the course of winding up, the official liquidator, on the 3rd of August, 1882, served Emmens and seventeen other persons, who were or had been directors, with notice of motion under the Companies Act, 1862, that they might be ordered to pay damages in respect of 107 acts of misfeasance alleged to have been committed by them between the 14th of February, 1871, and the 10th of January, 1879. It was only sought to charge Emmens with eleven of the alleged acts of misfeasance. The evidence in support of the motion consisted of four very long affidavits filed by the liquidator, and containing nearly 1,200 folios.

Emmens appeared by a separate solicitor, and moved that the liquidator might be ordered to state what paragraphs of the affidavits he intended to read against him, and that as against Emmens all the other paragraphs of the affidavits might be struck out as tending to embarrass him. His solicitor made an affidavit in support, stating that the greater part of the affidavits filed by the liquidator had nothing to do with his client's case, and submitting that the liquidator should be compelled to state on what paragraphs he intended to rely.

Emmens had also taken out a summons to compel the liquidator to make the usual affidavit of documents, and on the 16th of November, 1882, an order was made in chambers directing the liquidator to give Emmens access to all the books and documents of the society in his possession, and to give him all reasonable assistance in finding any of the documents specified by him.

Emmens moved to discharge this order and to have the usual affidavit of documents, and that the liquidator might be ordered to state on what paragraphs of the affidavits filed by him he intended to rely.

In re The Mutual Society, App.

This motion was refused by Chitty, J., on the 5th of December, 1882.

Emmens appealed.

Ince, Q.C., and Stirling, for the appellant.—The liquidator has chosen in his application against the appellant to mix up the cases of seventeen other persons. With nine-tenths of the mass of affidavits which have been filed by the liquidator the appellant has nothing to do. The liquidator ought to have filed a series of separate affidavits. We ask that he may be ordered to give us particulars as to the paragraphs of the affidavits on which he intends to rely as against us, in order that we may not be obliged to go to the great expense of taking a copy of the whole.

In questions between contributories the liquidator no doubt stands in the position of an officer of the Court, and favours neither party; but in cases under the misfeasance section he stands in the position of an ordinary litigant, and the Court has sometimes ordered him to file an affidavit of documents—Gooch's Case (1).

Romer, Q.C., and Buckley, for the liquidator, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from an order made by Mr. Justice Chitty upon what is in fact two applications, although in form only one. I will deal with the applications separately.

The first is a question of novelty and of considerable importance. The case may be stated shortly thus. The applicant, Mr. Emmens, was one of the directors of the Mutual Society, which is now being wound up. The official liquidator has taken out a summons under the 165th section of the Companies Act, 1862, to make Mr. Emmens and the other directors of that society liable for certain alleged misfeasances in their conduct of the business of the society. There are 107 cases of misfeasance alleged against the directors, but Mr. Emmens, having retired many years ago from the direction, is only charged with participation in eleven of them. Other directors, however, who also are alleged to have participated in those eleven acts of misfeasance, or some of them, continued to be directors for a long time after Mr. Emmens retired, and are charged with participation in many of the subsequent acts of misfeasance. As I understand it, the substance of the case against all the directors is much the same: they are charged with lending money improperly and not in accordance with the rules of the society. The official liquidator has filed a very long affidavit containing a statement of the case against all the directors—that is, it contains the 107 charges of misfeasance against the various groups of directors who are sought to be affected by those charges. What Mr. Emmens complains of is this: He says, in substance, "I am only concerned with eleven of those charges. I do not complain that they are included in the same notice of motion with the others, for it is convenient that the whole of the cases which arise in the affairs of one society, and all depend more or less upon similar principles, should be tried together; but what I do complain of is, that when I am concerned only in eleven of the charges, I am burdened with the expense of taking an office copy of a very long affidavit, nine-tenths of which does not relate at all to my case, and I ask that the official liquidator should state what portions of the affidavit relate to my case, so that I may take a copy of those portions only." Now, that is not unreasonable ex facie, but it is novel, because when an action is brought against several defendants, all of whom are not concerned in the whole subject of the action, which is a very common case indeed in the Chancery Division, the plaintiff is never called upon to tell the defendant what portion of the evidence affects him, he has to find that out for himself. When the evidence is taken orally, it is not till the conclusion of the plaintiff's case that the defendant can find out how much of the evidence affects his own particular case. When the evidence is given by affidavit, of course the defendants have an opportunity of finding out at an early period how much of the evidence relates to their respective cases. But as a general rule the defendants have no right or pretence of right to call on the plaintiff to point out what portions of the evidence affect them respectively. I do not mean to say that the Court would not interfere in a case of great oppression or impropriety on the part of the plaintiff. In a gross case the Court probably would order the affidavit to be taken off the file, as having been improperly filed, or it might compel the plaintiff to state how much of his affidavit affects the particular defendant who complains. But in this particular case I am not persuaded that there is any hardship inflicted on the present applicant, or that there is any ground whatever for this application.

(1) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 338; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 207.

In the first place, we must recollect that the appellant appears alone. That is not the usual course. Before laying down any new rule we should be careful to consider whether it would increase the expense of proceedings of this kind. As a general rule the directors appear together, their solicitor takes a copy of the evidence for all, and, for the purpose of making out his briefs, he ascertains how much applies to one defendant's case and how much applies to another, and there is no difficulty in apportioning the costs of the copy accordingly. Where a solicitor does not appear for several defendants or several respondents, it is usual for him to obtain copies from the solicitor or solicitors who appear for those who are concerned in the whole case. This is what actually occurred in the present case; the solicitor of Mr. Emmens, through the courtesy of the solicitor concerned for other directors who were connected with the whole case, obtained a sight of a copy of the affidavits, without himself taking an office copy, so that he actually knew what the contents of the affidavits were.

There is another point in the case. When he saw that copy, was he embarrassed by it? Did he find any difficulty in ascertaining how much of it related to the case of Mr. Emmens? Not at all. He has told us in his affidavit that he could ascertain, and has ascertained, how much is wholly irrelevant to the case of Mr. Emmens, and how much relates to it. What then was his proper course? He should have written a letter to the solicitor on the other side asking him to point out what portion of the affidavit he intended to rely on as against Mr. Emmens. He did not take that course, but served the official liquidator with this summons, which was afterwards adjourned into Court, at an expense far exceeding the whole expense of taking an office copy of the entire affidavit. It appears to me, therefore, that in this particular instance the applicant has no merits. There being a very ample discretion vested in the Judge as to what he should do in reference to matters of this kind, I think the Judge in the Court below rightly exercised that discretion, and it is well known that the Court of Appeal does not, except in extreme cases, interfere with the exercise of such discretion.

I now go to the second point, which is by no means without importance. It is an application that the official liquidator shall make an affidavit as to documents. The expense and delay occasioned by requiring such an affidavit would be very great. An official liquidator is not in the same position as an ordinary litigant; he is an officer of the Court and is under the control of the Court. If he will not do what the Court requires him to do, the Court will remove him; and if he does anything which the Court thinks he ought not to do, the Court will compel him to act otherwise. The ordinary course pursued in my chambers when I presided at the Rolls Court—and I believe the practice to be the same in the chambers of other Judges—was this, that whenever a hostile litigant, as Mr. Emmens is in this case, wanted documents, he applied to the official liquidator to see them, and the official liquidator was bound to shew him all the documents on which he relied, and any other documents which the litigant desired to see. In the present case the appellant never applied to the liquidator as he ought to have done for liberty to inspect the documents. If he had done so, and the official liquidator had refused to shew them, then the Court would have ordered the liquidator to produce them. He has already offered to shew all his documents, and he has repeated that offer before the Court. It appears to me that, under those circumstances, the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Taking the second point first, it appears to me, as a matter of practice, that an official liquidator ought not to be compelled to make an affidavit of documents unless there is some special reason for it. The official liquidator, by letter of the 3rd of November, offered to produce all the documents in his possession. If there had been any special ground for distrusting him, or for supposing he was trying to avoid the production of any particular document, there would be reason for some special application, whatever the form might be. But it must be understood that the liquidator is an officer of the Court, who is not in the same position as an ordinary litigant. He is not called upon to make an affidavit of documents as a matter of course, and there are no special grounds shewn in this case for ordering him to do so.

In re The Mutual Society, App.

The other point is new and important. The official liquidator has taken out a summons against a number of gentlemen who had been directors, seeking to make them responsible for breaches of trust under section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, and in support of that application he has filed an affidavit which runs over something like 250 foolscap pages. There are some of the directors to whom some parts of the affidavit do not relate. The present application on the part of one of the directors who has appeared alone, is that the official liquidator may be obliged to say which of the paragraphs in that very long affidavit are going to be relied on against this particular director. That, I need hardly say, is a very novel application, and the question is, whether it is right, and if so, upon what grounds?

It certainly strikes me as possible that a long affidavit like this may be so framed as to be oppressive and an abuse of the practice of the Court. The person filing it may have a short case against one person, and may mix it up with long statements relating only to the case against other persons in such a way that it would be difficult for the advisers of the first-mentioned person to say that there were any parts of the affidavit with which he had nothing to do. If any such case had been made out here we should have found out how to deal with it, either by taking the affidavit off the file or in some other way. But this application is not made on the ground of oppression, nor upon the ground that the appellant is embarrassed and cannot find out how much of the affidavit concerns him and how much does not. On the contrary, his solicitor's affidavit shews that he has found out and knows perfectly well what parts of the affidavit he needs to consider. The application is said to be made with a view to save expense, and it was urged that it would be much less expensive if the liquidator would point out now what paragraphs in this affidavit he relies on, so that the appellant need not copy anything more. The appellant seeks to have an assurance that nothing will be used against him except the particular passages in the affidavit which may be now selected by the official liquidator. It appears to me that this is wrong in principle. This gentleman knows his own case, and must judge for himself what parts of the affidavit concern him. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors—C. & S. Harrison & Co., for appellant; Linklater & Co., for respondent.

PEARSON, J. 1883. April 4, 5, 6.

THE SHEFFIELD WATERWORKS COMPANY v. BINGHAM.

Water Company—Supply of Water for Bath—Measurement of Water consumed—Consumer to Provide and Pay for Means of Measurement.

The plaintiff company supplied water for various purposes, including domestic baths. The baths were supplied by the company keeping the water in their mains at high pressure, and the consumer making a connection between the main and his bath, and drawing off the water into his bath as required. The water used in the bath was paid for according to the quantity consumed:—Held, that the consumer was

! to measure the water drawn off by or the purposes of his bath; that a of measurement by placing a line ! the bath, so that, if filled up to that the bath would contain a certain ity of water, and then causing to be d in a calendar the number of times g the year on which the bath was so was imperfect and unsatisfactory; hat the consumer must, at his own se, supply or hire an automatic self- ering meter, or accurately measure the taken by some other equally accurate ument, or in some other equally accu- ay.

e Sheffield Waterworks Company v. r (51 Law J. Rep. M.C. 97; Law 8 Q.B. D. 632) distinguished.

tion.

the Sheffield Waterworks Act, 1853, , the plaintiff company (whose full was "The Company of Proprietors e Sheffield Waterworks") was re- d to furnish a sufficient supply of to every inhabitant occupying a te dwelling-house within the limits e company's district, where the com- s pipes should be laid for the use of mily, at certain specified annual rates lated upon the rent of the dwelling- . By section 81 of the same Act, it provided that in case of persons re- ng a supply of water for baths, such y should be furnished by the com- at a rate not exceeding tenpence for 1,000 gallons so supplied; and by n 105 of the Sheffield Waterworks 1864, that rate was for a period of ty-five years increased by twenty-five ent., making one shilling and one enny for every 1,000 gallons.

the 12th section of the Sheffield rworks Act, 1860, it was enacted if the company should use or require used any meter for ascertaining the tity of water to be supplied to any n for any purpose under the Acts of and 1860, or either of them, the ield Town Council might appoint an ctor of meters. And by the 16th sec- f the same Act it was provided that, in any meter certified by the inspector e incorrect should belong to the n for whose supply of water the same should be used, such person should rectify it within twenty-one days after the inspector's certificate, and if he should neglect to rectify it within that time, the company might cut off his supply of water till rectification. By the 6th section of the same Act the company was empowered to make reasonable regulations for preventing the waste of water, and regulations were accordingly made, one of which was applicable to cases in which meters were used.

Under the Acts affecting the company, water supplied for a domestic bath was not paid for as part of the domestic supply under section 79 of the Act of 1853, but was paid for in accordance with the provisions of section 81 of that Act.

The company disputed the existence of any power to compel them to supply water for baths; but it was admitted for the purposes of the action that there was a legal obligation on them to supply water for that purpose. In point of fact the company did supply water for baths when required, and they drew up and circulated a scale of composition rates for water supplied for baths, the scale varying with the rent or annual value of the house; so that, if the customer preferred it, he might exercise an option of paying for the water for his bath at a fixed annual rate irrespective of the quantity consumed, instead of paying for it by measurement.

The defendant became the occupier of a house within the company's district, which was supplied with water by the company, the connecting pipes and other apparatus for the supply of the house being the property of the defendant, and he elected to pay for the water by measurement, and not by the company's composition scale. He, however, declined to provide at his own expense, or to hire from the company, though he was willing to use, if supplied free of charge by the company, a meter or other automatic self-registering instrument for the measurement of the water, and insisted on his right to measure the water consumed by a method first adopted by a Mr. Carter, which consisted in painting a water-line round the sides of the bath in his house at such a height from the bottom that when the bath was filled up to the bottom of the line it contained just under thirty-one gallons, and when filled up to the top of the line it contained just under thirty-two gallons. He then had a calendar for the year hung up in the bath-room, and required all persons using the bath not to fill it higher than the water-line, and to mark the calendar on each occasion on which the bath was used. The total quantity consumed in a given period was arrived at by reckoning thirty-two gallons for each time the bath appeared from the calendar to have been used, and then making an additional allowance for waste, cleansing and other such purposes.

The company alleged that this mode of measurement was one-sided and unfair, inasmuch as the householder could not exercise an efficient control over the persons using the bath, and the company had no independent means of verifying the accuracy of the estimate of consumption, and they commenced the present action, by which they claimed, among other things, a declaration that the defendant was entitled to a supply of water only upon the terms of his using a meter or other automatic and self-registering instrument to measure such water, and that he was bound to provide and fix such meter or instrument at his own cost, or to hire the same from the company.

This was the hearing of the action, and evidence was given on behalf of the company to the effect that an automatic self-registering meter was the only trustworthy means of measuring the water consumed.

Davey, Q.C., J. E. Barker and G. C. Price, for the company.—It is absolutely necessary in the interests of the company that its customers who pay by quantity should use some kind of measure of the water they take. The company does not deliver the water in such a way that it can measure it; a constant supply is maintained, and the meters by which alone the quantity taken can be efficiently measured must be placed where they are out of the company's control. It is therefore evident, and the provisions of the Acts as to inspection shew it to be the intention of the Legislature, that those who choose to have connections made for the special purpose of a bath should have them made at their own charge—The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Wilkinson (1). The company's obligation ends at the main, but it is willing to provide meters for hire, though not compellable to do so. If the company were to go to the expense of fitting up pipes and meters for the supply of a bath, all the expense would be thrown away if the consumer chose to leave off using a bath or to quit the house. It is reasonable, and it is contemplated by the Acts, that the consumer should supply means of efficient measurement, and the decision in The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter (2) is erroneous, and not binding upon this Court. The method of measurement known as Carter's system is entirely untrustworthy, and, since the only efficient means of measurement is an automatic self-registering meter, the consumer is bound to supply one.

They also referred to Redpath v. Allan (3).

Cyril Dodd and R. F. Norton, for the defendant.—It is for the company which supplies the water to measure the quantity which it supplies, just as a shopkeeper weighs or measures goods which he is delivering to a purchaser, and there is nothing in the Acts to the contrary. The Court is bound by the decision in The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter (2). The Master of the Rolls and the Court of Appeal in a previous case—The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bingham (unreported)—in which the defendant was the present defendant's brother, were of opinion that a meter was unnecessary.

PEARSON, J.—I have formed so strong an opinion on this case that it is unnecessary for me to call upon counsel to reply.

The action is brought by the Company of Proprietors of the Sheffield Waterworks against Mr. Charles Henry Bingham, and the cause of litigation is a question which has been raised in various Courts as to what are the rights of the Sheffield Proprietors under their Acts with regard to water which they may supply for baths in

(1) 48 Law J. Rep. M.C. 145; Law Rep. 4 C.P. D. 410.

(2) 51 Law J. Rep. M.C. 97; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 632.

(3) 42 Law J. Rep. Adm. 8; Law Rep. 4 P.C. 511.

the town of Sheffield. It appears that Mr. Bingham has required the Sheffield Waterworks Company to supply him with water for a bath, and the question which really and truly alone remains at the present moment to be decided between them is this: whether, inasmuch as the water so supplied to the bath is to be paid for by measurement, Mr. Bingham is bound to pay the expenses of measuring that water so taken, or whether, according to his contention, the waterworks company are liable to pay those expenses. The main Act of the Sheffield Waterworks Company is an Act which was passed in 1853. It was not the earliest of their Acts, but it is at the present moment the substantial Act in question, and under that Act the Sheffield Waterworks Company are bound to supply, in the first place, water for domestic purposes, exclusive of baths. Then by section 81 they are bound to supply water for baths to persons who may require it, and the persons who require water to be supplied for baths are to pay for the water so supplied by measurement at the rate of 10*d.* per 1,000 gallons. Then, after the accident which happened to the Sheffield reservoir, the company got a subsequent Act, which enabled them to increase that 10*d.* by twenty-five per cent. for a number of years which will come to an end in the year 1889, so that the sum which has to be paid now is not 10*d.* but 1*s.* 0½*d.* The first question material to this case that was raised between the occupiers of houses in Sheffield and the waterworks company was, so far as I know, the question whether or not the company were absolutely bound to supply water when required for baths, whether they could be compelled against their will to supply water for baths, or whether they were only allowed to supply water for baths, and could only be asked to supply it, their consent being necessary to that supply. That identical question seems to me to be raised by the pleadings here. But Mr. Davey, who opened the case for the waterworks company, very fairly admitted that that case had been decided against the waterworks company by a decision of the late Master of the Rolls, and affirmed by the Court of Appeal. So that there is now, as I understand, no dispute on behalf of the waterworks company that there is a compulsory obligation on them to supply water to any persons who choose to require it for the purpose of their baths.

[Barker.—We admit it for the purposes of this action, but not farther than that.]

PEARSON, J.—Then, that being so, it is not contested that Mr. Bingham has a right to require the Sheffield Waterworks Company to supply water to his bath, and they have supplied water to his bath. They having supplied water to his bath, he has, to a certain extent, and according to his own fashion, measured the water which has been so supplied to his bath. He has not stated in his pleadings exactly what he has done, but I gather from his defence that in substance he has adopted the same mode which was adopted by Mr. Carter, and that is this:—He has in his bath a certain line drawn, which line shews that when the bath is filled up to that line there is a certain quantity of water in the bath. Then he has directed all members of his household using the bath not to go beyond that line, and to enter upon a calendar, which is suspended in the bath-room, a note of every occasion upon which the bath is so used. I do not think it needs any observations from me to shew that that must be a most unsatisfactory mode of measuring the water taken and used for the bath. I will put only one instance—and an instance which may occur every day in the week—which will shew how impossible it is to measure at all accurately the quantity of water used upon any occasion. Suppose a nurse wishes to bathe a child in the bath, and having filled the bath up to that line, she finds that the water is a good deal too hot to put the child into; I want to know what she will do? Certainly she will not wait half an hour till the water has got cool. She will either put some more cold water in, and so transgress the rule of not going beyond the line, or else she will allow some water to go out through the waste-pipe and then fill it up with cold water, for which there will be no mark at all to identify how much water has been used. A number of cases may be suggested which will shew that this is a most imperfect and incorrect way of measuring the quantity of water used; and, at all events, it leaves the whole thing to depend upon what I may call the infallibility of all the members of the household, so that they shall never transgress the rule with regard to the use of the bath, and always remember accurately to note what they have done when they have been using the bath.

That being so, the proprietors of the waterworks were naturally dissatisfied with what Mr. Bingham was doing, and they have required Mr. Bingham to use a meter. They say the only possible way of accurately measuring the water that is taken, is by the use of an automatic meter, which will register for itself and register for everybody the quantity of water that has been taken. Mr. Bingham, who, I must say, has acted very fairly and in a very proper manner in this case, subject of course to what his rights may be, says: "I am perfectly willing that the water shall be measured in any way you like, and if you choose to put one of your meters to measure the water, I am perfectly willing you shall put one of those meters; but I say that I can never be compelled to put a meter myself, nor can I be compelled to rent a meter from you. I say there is nothing in the Act of Parliament which requires me to put a meter, and all that I have to pay is rent for the water, and not rent for the meter." Accordingly, the question I have to determine really and truly is this—whether or not Mr. Bingham is right in his contention, whether it is Mr. Bingham's duty to measure at his own expense the water which is taken, or whether he is accurate when he says that it rests with the waterworks company alone to measure the water which they supply.

Now, the argument of the learned counsel has been this: "You, the waterworks company, supply the water, and it is to be paid for by measurement; you are, therefore, the persons who ought to know exactly what you supply; you are, therefore, the persons who ought to measure the water that you supply, and to charge me with the exact quantity of water which you so supply;" and the defendant's counsel said it was exactly similar to this: that if, instead of water, it had been tea, and they had been bound to supply tea at so much a pound, they would have had to weigh the tea themselves and deliver so many pounds of tea, and then they would have charged for the pounds of tea which they had delivered, and the purchaser would not have been put to the expense of weighing the tea.

Now, in order that I may put as shortly and as clearly as I can the grounds of my decision, and shew what I conceive to be the fallacy of this argument, I must just state exactly how this water is supplied.

The Sheffield company are bound to put mains down the streets. They are bound to keep those mains charged with water at high pressure; and they having done that, every householder in Sheffield is free either to make use of the water in that main, or to decline to make use of the water in that main, as he pleases. If he desires to make use of it, he himself makes the communications between his own house and the main, subject, of course, to all proper provisions for taking care that he does no injury to the waterworks company in making the connection, and subject also to this—that the connections must be properly made, so as not to abstract more water than he is entitled to take, and not to do any injury of any sort or description to the waterworks company. For water for domestic purposes he pays a rent about which there is no dispute. If he chooses to say that he wishes to have a bath supply, he is at liberty then to have his bath (giving notice to the company to make such a connection between the service-pipe and the bath as will bring the water to the bath), and to draw off from the service-pipe such water as he requires for the bath. It is plain, therefore, that the whole fallacy of the argument of the counsel for Mr. Bingham lies in this—that they treat the company as supplying the water, whereas the proper thing would be to say that he is at liberty to draw off himself the water for the bath. He takes the water—it is not the company that supply it; and if he takes the water and gives it to himself, he is the only person who can, and he is the person who must, measure the water that he so takes, and tell the company how much water he has taken. On that simple ground I come to nclusion that Mr. Bingham is the , and the consumer is the person, ust measure the water. He is, in- he only person who can measure it, e the company do not know either t time, or under what circumstances, hat quantity, he may be minded at oment to take the water for the use bath; and upon that ground, and ound alone, I should come to the sion, if I had to deal with this mat- res integra, that Mr. Bingham and ther consumer is bound himself to e the water he takes, and to keep a of it, and to inform the company nuch he has taken, and for how he is liable to pay.

only question I have to consider his part of the case is, Is there, or e not, anything in the Act of Par- t which militates against what I re to be both the common sense of tter and the necessity of the case? so far from that, what little I do the Acts is decidedly in favour of nstruction, because, turning to the 1860, and looking at the 12th and ctions, I find that the Legislature nder the impression that meters be used; that the meters would be- the consumers rather than to the ay; that inspectors of meters were appointed by the council of the h, to act impartially between the ers and the waterworks company, at whenever the meter belonged to nsumer, and the inspector found e meter was defective, the inspector give notice of that to the consumer, e consumer was bound to repair the re meter or to replace it by a new t seems to me that these provisions ot have found their place in the Parliament unless it had been that gislature treated the consumer, as I he consumer, as the person who was the water for his own use, and the who was therefore bound to measure hich he took, in order that he pay honestly for it.

, that being so, if the matter rested I should come, without any doubt own mind, to the conclusion that as the proper construction of the d that I must so determine. But Mr. Dodd says the case is really not open for me to consider, because he says, and says with great force, that this very point has already been determined by a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, for it came before the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division in two cases which were brought up from the magistrate at Sheffield—the case of The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter (2) and the same company against Brooks. Mr. Justice Cave, giving in that case the decision of himself and Mr. Justice Mathew, says this: "These considerations enable us to answer the question put to us in Carter's Case (2), which is, whether the company are entitled to insist on meters, and meters only, being used by their customers to measure the supply of water to their baths; and we are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative, and consequently that the conviction must stand, and the appeal be dismissed with costs."

Now I have two or three observations to make upon that case. I need hardly say that if it had been a case in which this question before me had been raised simpliciter in the manner in which this question has been raised before me here, I should have felt myself bound to have followed the decision of the Divisional Court, and, without exercising any judgment of my own, I should not have heard the case through. But the first observation I desire to make is this—that the case came before the Divisional Court under very different circumstances from those under which it is presented to me. The question presented to me is, whether the waterworks company are to measure, or whether the consumer is to measure. Now the passage that I have read from the judgment of the Divisional Court does not answer that question. What Mr. Justice Cave says here is this—that the question he answers is, whether the company are entitled to insist on meters, and meters only, being used by their customers to measure the supply of water to their baths. That is not the question before me: the question before me is, who is to measure the water? That is not the question which Mr. Justice Cave decides here. The second observation that I desire to make upon that is this—The question there was, whether or not the company were entitled to cut off the supply of water entirely from the house for domestic purposes, as well as for baths, because the consumer did not measure his water by a meter. Now it may well be that that case may be decided against the company, on the ground that, whether he measured by a meter or whether he did not measure by a meter, they nevertheless had no right to cut off the water for ordinary purposes simply because something was done that was not correct with regard to the supply of water to the bath. The third observation I desire to make is this—that I think the judgment of any Court ought to be taken most carefully with reference to the matter which is before it at the time. No one knows better than I do, even after the short experience which I have had, how exceedingly difficult it is to express oneself so as to be perfectly sure that when the judgment comes to be read afterwards the words that one uses shall not seem to be very much larger than one thought them at the time when one used them. At the time when a Judge is addressing the Court, he knows that those before him know exactly to what point it is that he is addressing himself, and they will understand the words in the restricted sense in which he is using them; but when they come to be printed apart from all that has taken place in Court, they very often seem to be capable of a larger construction, which neither the Judge nor the counsel who heard them have for one moment thought of putting upon them. I can only say, having given a good deal of attention to that case, that I believe the learned Judges who decided that case would think I was erring very greatly indeed, and charging them with something they never intended to do, if I were to come to the conclusion that they had any notion of deciding the question which is before me to-day. I do not therefore feel myself at all bound by the judgment in the case of The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter (2). I assume that that judgment was perfectly accurate at the time when it was delivered with reference to the circumstances under which it was delivered, but I do not think it touches the case which is before me and which I have to decide. Then it was said that there were observations in the Master of the Rolls' judgment in the case of Mr. Bingham's brother before him which shewed that a meter was not necessary, and I admit that there are observations in the Master of the Rolls' judgment which go to shew that he thought that the water taken need not be measured very accurately, because, as he says, the unit is 1,000 gallons, and which go also to shew that he thought a meter was not necessary. I am not going to decide that a meter is necessary. I do not think that the decision I shall give to-day will really militate against any decision of the Master of the Rolls, although I say frankly that I am unable to follow him to the full extent of the observations which he seems to have made when speaking upon that subject; because when he says that extreme accuracy is not required, extreme accuracy really is necessary to shew whether you have got up to the first limit of 1,000 gallons or not. According to his opinion, and according to what I assume to be the right construction of the Act of Parliament, if less than 1,000 gallons were taken there is no payment at all to be made to the company. It therefore becomes very material to know whether you have taken 1,000 gallons, or whether you have taken 1,001 gallons, and therefore, upon one point at all events, accuracy is necessary. At all events, what I mean to decide, and what I do decide upon the present occasion, is this, that the consumer who takes the water is the person who is bound at his own expense to measure the water and to record that measurement. That, I think, disposes of the whole case that is before me, and the only question is as to the form in which my judgment should go. Of course I am not going to decide that any particular meter ought to be used. There is no evidence before me to shew that any one particular meter is the only meter by which you can measure the water. All I am going to decide is, that Mr. Bingham must at his own expense measure the water and record that measurement, and that he must give of course all facilities to the company to know that he has measured the water, and that he has

effield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham.

ired it in some way or other which accurate way of taking the measure-. I may further decide that the which has been adopted up to the nt time by Mr. Bingham, and which, ay, I take to be substantially Carter's of measurement, is a very insuffi- and improper mode of measuring ater.

me discussion then took place as to orm of the order, which was ulti- y settled in the following terms :— he plaintiffs admitting, for the pur- of this action only, that the supply ter for the bath in the defendant's is compulsory on the company, Declare that defendant is bound at wn expense to measure accurately by sufficient automatic or self-register- eter, or by some other equally accurate ument, or in some other equally ate way, and to record the amount water taken from time to time and by him in such bath, and to permit ompany at all reasonable times to t his mode of measuring the amount ter so taken.

Let the defendant Charles Henry am be restrained by injunction from g or using the water of the company said bath except in accordance with foresaid declaration.

Suspend the operation of the said ction for one calendar month."

e company offering to pay the de- nt's costs as well as their own, if he l rest content with the decision, the ion of costs stood over for the defen- to consider the offer.]

---

ors—Pattison, Wigg & Co., agents for ombead, Wightman & Moore, Sheffield, for ntiffs; Pitman & Son, agents for Cham- & Son, Sheffield, for defendant.

PEARSON, J. 1883. April 21. } WILLIAMS v. MURRELL.

Will—Gift of Real and Personal Estate by different clauses—Interim Income of Real Estate—Mixed Fund—Suspense of Vesting.

Testator devised the residue of his real estate to trustees in trust for A for life; and, after her death, upon trust to apply such part of the rents as should be necessary for the maintenance of B until she should attain twenty-one; and, upon her attaining that age, in trust for her for life; and, after her death, in trust for her child and children who should attain twenty-one; but if no child should attain twenty-one, upon trust to convey to such persons as she should by deed or will appoint.

And the testator gave the residue of his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust to convert and invest, and to pay the income to A for life; and, after her death, to B for life; and, after her death, upon trust for her child and children who should attain twenty-one; but if no child should attain twenty-one, as she should by deed or will appoint.

B attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A, survived her, and died leaving the plaintiff, her only child, who was still an infant:—

Held, that the testator had really mixed up the whole of his real and personal estate in one mass; and that, therefore, the intermediate rents of the real estate, until the same should vest in some person absolutely, must be accumulated, and did not go to the heir-at-law.

Further consideration.

George Dumble, by his will dated the 16th of December, 1844, after giving certain specific and pecuniary devises and bequests, proceeded as follows :—

"I give and devise all other my freehold and real estates whatsoever and wheresoever unto and to the use of my wife Betsey Dumble and James Horniblow, their heirs and assigns, upon trust, however, to pay the net rents and profits thereof unto, or permit the same to be received by, my said wife during the term of her natural life, for her separate use, exclusively of any husband with whom she may happen hereafter to intermarry, and her receipts alone, notwithstanding coverture, shall be good and effectual discharges to my said trustees for the same; and after the decease of my said wife, upon trust to pay and apply the same net rents and profits, or such part thereof as shall be necessary for that purpose in the discretion of my said trustees, towards the maintenance and education of my daughter, Elizabeth Dumble, and accumulate the remainder thereof for her benefit until she shall attain the age of twenty-one years; and, upon her attaining that age, upon trust to pay the aforesaid accumulations to my said daughter, and thenceforth to pay the said rents and profits unto, or permit the same to be received by her during the term of her natural life, for her separate use, independently of any husband she may intermarry with, and without being in anywise subject to the control, debts and engagements of her husband; and, after the decease of my daughter, upon trust to convey the same real estates and every part thereof unto and equally between all and every the child and children of my daughter who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, and their respective heirs, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. But in case my daughter shall depart this life without leaving any child or children who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to convey and assure the same real estates unto such person or persons, for such estate or estates, and in such parts, shares and proportions, manner and form, in all respects as my daughter, whether covert or sole, and notwithstanding coverture, shall by any deed or deeds, or by her last will duly executed, direct or appoint, give or devise the same."

And the testator, after directing his executrix and executor thereinafter named, with all convenient speed after his decease, to collect, get in, and convert into money all his personal estate not thereinbefore disposed of, and to invest the same as therein mentioned, proceeded as follows:

"I do hereby direct and declare that my wife and James Horniblow shall stand possessed of my personal estate, and the stocks, funds and securities in or upon which the same shall from time to time be invested, in trust to pay to or allow my wife to receive the interest and annual produce thereof during the term of her natural life for her separate use, and her receipts alone, notwithstanding coverture, shall be good and sufficient discharges for the same; and, after the decease of my wife, upon further trust to pay the interest and annual produce of the trust moneys to my daughter, Elizabeth Dumble, during the term of her natural life, for her separate use, and her receipts alone, notwithstanding coverture, shall be good and sufficient discharges for the same; and, after the decease of my daughter, upon further trust to pay and divide the trust moneys, and the stocks, funds and securities in and upon which the same may be invested, unto and equally between all and every the child and children of my daughter who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years; but in case my daughter shall depart this life without leaving any child or children who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, upon trust to pay the same trust moneys and securities unto such person or persons in such parts, shares and proportions, manner and form, in all respects, as my daughter, whether covert or sole, and notwithstanding coverture, shall by any deed or deeds, or by her last will, direct or appoint, give or devise the same."

And the testator appointed Betsey Dumble and James Horniblow executrix and executor of his will.

The testator died on the 16th of November, 1848. His widow, Betsey Dumble, died in January, 1864. Elizabeth Dumble, the only child of the testator, in June, 1863, married the defendant Charles N. Williams; attained the age of twenty-one years in December, 1863, and died in February, 1866.

The plaintiff Gertrude E. Williams, the only child of Elizabeth Williams and the defendant Charles N. Williams, was born in May, 1864.

The will did not contain any provisions disposing of the rents and income of the residuary real and personal estate after the death of Elizabeth Williams and during the minority of her child or children.

Elizabeth Dumble, by her will made in January, 1865, in the event of her leaving no child who should live to attain a vested interest under the trusts of her father's will, exercised the power of appointment given to her by that will in favour of other persons.

The action was brought for the administration of the testator's estate, and now came on to be heard on further consideration.

The main question was, whether the intermediate rents of the residuary real estate, during the period between the death of Elizabeth Williams and the absolute vesting of the real estate, were to be accumulated for the benefit of the person ultimately entitled; or whether these rents belonged to the plaintiff in any event as the heiress-at-law.

It was admitted that the intermediate income of the personal estate, during this period, must be accumulated.

Gaselee (Higgins, Q.C., with him), for the plaintiff the heir-at-law.—Here the testator has disposed of his real estate in one clause, and his personal estate in a distinct clause. The limitations of the two properties (especially as to the daughter's life interest) are not identical. The testator has not "mixed up the whole of his property in one mass"—Hodgson v. Earl of Bective (1). The interim rents of the residuary real estate are therefore undisposed of, and go to the heir-at-law.

Cookson, Q.C., and Blakesley, for the defendant Charles N. Williams, adopted the same contention.—The rule laid down in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2), which was a clear case of a blended fund, will not be extended to a case like the present, where the real estate and the personal estate are made the subject of separate gifts, and the dispositions of the two properties are different (3).

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Stallard, for the other defendant, Edward Murrell, and one of the appointees under the daughter's will.—The question is, Has the testator sufficiently indicated an intention that the two funds shall be blended? If so, the rule laid down in Genery v. Fitzjerald (2) applies. That rule applies, not merely to a true mixed fund, but also to "a simple gift of realty and personalty to the same object"—per the Master of the Rolls in Bellairs v. Bellairs (4). The property is none the less "in one mass" because you find it given in two separate clauses. The intermediate rents of the real estate must, therefore, be accumulated.

PEARSON, J.—To my mind this is a new question, and I should have been much better pleased if I could have found some distinct authority which would direct me how to decide it. With regard to general principles there is no doubt, and there is no dispute between the counsel who have argued the case. If you find in one clause a gift of realty and personalty to go together to the same object; then, if there are intermediate rents and intermediate income of the personalty which are undisposed of, the rule with regard to personalty is followed, and the rents of the real estate must be accumulated in the same way as the income of the personal estate, so as to go to the same object in the event of his becoming entitled to the two funds. Also, if there be a gift of mixed realty and personalty, a blended fund, composed partly of the proceeds of sale of realty and partly of personalty, again in that case there is no dispute that the rule with regard to personalty must be followed, and that the intermediate rents must be accumulated in the same way as the intermediate income of the personal estate. But I have here a case which is neither one nor the other entirely—I have a will in which the real estate is given to trustees, and under one set of limitations the real estate is disposed of; I have another set of limitations, under which the personal estate is given to the same trustees. But the limitations of the personal estate are substantially the same—almost the same in words; and, substantially, I hold them the same. It so happens that in this case there is an interval during which there is no person taking under the will; and inasmuch as they are both residuary gifts, the question

(1) 1 Hem. & M. 376; 10 H.L. Cas. 656; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 489; 33 ibid. 601.
(2) Jac. 468.
(3) Jarman on Wills, 4th ed. vol. 1, p. 653.
(4) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 669; Law Rep. 18 Eq. 510.

arises as to what is to be done with the intermediate rents of the real estate. There is no dispute that the intermediate income of the personalty must be accumulated. The question is, whether the rule laid down in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2) is to be followed, or whether the heir-at-law is not deprived by that rule, and can take the intermediate rents. Now the only authorities which have been cited to me (and I have no doubt they are the only authorities which really bear upon the case) are the three cases of Genery v. Fitzgerald (2), Hodgson v. Earl of Bective (1) and Bellairs v. Bellairs (4). Now in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2) the residuary realty and personalty were given in one clause to the same object; and in that case Lord Eldon says, "When personal estate is given to A at twenty-one, that will carry the intermediate interest. If a testator gives his estate Blackacre at a future period, that will not carry the intermediate rents and profits. But when he mixes up real and personal estate in the same clause, the question must be, whether he does not shew an intention that the same rule shall operate on both. Here the property was partly real, partly personal, and partly of such a description that the testator does not seem to have known whether it was real or personal. He does not, by his will, create any trust, but makes a legal devise and bequest of the whole together: then is not the weight of authority in favour of the proposition, that when real and personal estate are given in this way, the intermediate profits of both must go together?" That was followed by the case of Hodgson v. Earl of Bective (1), in which there were gifts of realty and personalty by different clauses; and it must be said that on the whole the clauses were not identical; that the personal estate did not entirely go in the same way as the real estate; and I think that must be what the Vice-Chancellor is referring to in the passage which I shall presently read from his judgment. He says, "It is said, and no doubt there is much weight in the observation, that as you find it held that a general gift of all real and personal estate to certain intents, uses and purposes, is to be read as manifesting the intention that the rents and profits are to pass exactly in the same manner as the income of the personal estate passes, and that the heir is thereby to be deprived of the benefit of the rule laid down in the cases I have referred to, it would seem singular to say that the mere circumstance of the testator dividing the will into two parts, and disposing of the real estate in one clause, and of the personal estate in another, should be held to lead to a different conclusion. But I do not think that this reasoning is sound." If I were to stop there, and there was no more in the judgment, I should come to the conclusion that I had certainly, if I may call it so, something more than an obiter dictum of Vice-Chancellor Wood against applying the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2) to two clauses of the will, whereas in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2) it had been applied to one clause only. But I think the Vice-Chancellor explains what he means when he goes on and says this: "The rule which gives intermediate rents to the heir is the artificial result of our peculiar doctrines in this country in favour of the heir's position; and though the Courts have considered that where a testator has distinctly and clearly in his will mixed up realty and personalty in one fund, he must be taken thereby to have indicated an intention that they should go in the same way, that reasoning does not apply to a case where he has carefully and deliberately isolated the two properties, giving precise limitations as to the one in one portion of the will, and precise limitations as to the other in another portion of his will; and where, as in this case, he was plainly not contemplating any such complete mixture at all, because the first operation which he directs as to the personalty is to divide it into three several parts, and give two-thirds to the one class of objects of his bounty, and one-third to the other. There is nothing, on the face of the will, which in the least can justify me in saying that the testator has mixed up the whole of his property in one mass, so as to bring the case within the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2)." I think, therefore, when he says the reasoning is not sound, he is applying himself, as most Judges would do when they are delivering judgments in a particular case, to the circumstances of the case before him, and not meaning to lay down any general rule, where there are trusts of the realty and trusts of the personalty, on two different pages of the will, but nevertheless identically the same, giving the property in all events to the same persons. He says then that, in the case before him, the testator has not made a mixture of his realty and his personalty. When you come to the case of Bellairs v. Bellairs (4) before the late Master of the Rolls, if I were to take his words literally, they appear to decide this case in favour of Mr. Cozens-Hardy's contention; for he says this: "The general rule in modern times has been to govern this mixed fund by the rules of personalty, and in some cases it has been carried so far that even where the only mixture, so to say, was giving the funds to the same objects, that has been carried out." If I were to stop there, I should say the words are large enough to cover this case completely; and that, inasmuch as the same objects are to take both the realty and the personalty, the rule with regard to personalty must apply. Then he cites the case of Genery v. Fitzgerald (2). Then he ends that part of his judgment by saying, "Therefore if it depended simply on this consideration, I should be bound to hold that, having a mixed fund, you are not to sever it into two, and say it is valid as to so much as arises from realty, and invalid as to so much as arises from personalty, but to hold that the two funds are to be kept together, and that the rules as to personal estate apply." That sentence seems to me to shew that the Master of the Rolls was thinking of a case in which there really and truly is a gift contained in one clause, and in one clause only.

Williams v Murrell.

Now I come to deal with this case; and have to consider what is the rule to be gathered from these three cases. I think the rule must, really and truly, be taken from Vice-Chancellor Wood's judgment, in which he says this: "There is nothing on the face of the will which in the least can justify me in saying that the testator has mixed up the whole of his property in one mass." The question I have to determine is, Has he or not mixed up the whole of his property in one mass? No doubt there are two trusts. But the trusts are the same; the objects are the same; there is nothing whatever to distinguish them from being one trust except that in words they are two trusts: one on one page of the will, and the other on the other. No one can read this will and doubt that the testator intended the whole of his realty and the whole of his residuary personalty to go together to the same objects of his bounty, and in no other way. I must come, therefore, to the conclusion that this is really and truly a case in which the testator, although under two trusts, has mixed up the whole of his property in one mass; and that under those circumstances the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (2) applies; and that therefore the intermediate rents of the real estate must follow the rule with regard to the intermediate income of personal estate.

Solicitors—G. Beetham Batchelor, agent for W. M. Armstrong, Hertford, for plaintiff and for defendant Williams; Petgrave & Hodgkinson, agents for H. G. Goldingham, Worcester, for defendant Murrell.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 1.

Ex parte NICHOLS; in re JONES.

Bankruptcy—Assignment by Trader of Future Receipts of Business—Bankruptcy of Trader—Title of Trustee—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 11.

Where a trader assigned for value the future receipts of his business, and afterwards became bankrupt,—Held, that the assignment was invalid as against the trustee in bankruptcy as regarded the receipts which had accrued since the commencement of the bankruptcy.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Brougham sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

The debtors in this case were a firm who carried on business under the name of Jones & Barber. They were lessees of the Alexandra Palace. By an arrangement with the Great Northern Railway Company, that company agreed to charge all passengers over their line to the palace, in addition to the railway fare, a sum representing the charge for admission to the palace, and to pay to Jones & Barber a proportion of the gross sums so received, and render monthly accounts.

On the 21st of March, 1882, Jones & Barber executed an assignment to Younger & Co. of "all and every the sums and sum of money now due and owing, and hereafter to become due and owing, from the Great Northern Railway Company to Jones & Barber," on trust, after paying expenses, to apply the moneys so received in payment of a debt due by Jones & Barber to Younger & Co., and to pay any surplus there might be to Jones & Barber.

On the 22nd of March, Younger & Co. gave notice to the railway company of this assignment. On the 10th of August Jones & Barber filed a liquidation petition, and Nichols was appointed receiver. On the 12th of August the receiver gave the railway company notice to pay to him Jones & Barber's share of the fares to the palace as from the date of the liquidation. On the 8th of September a resolution was passed by the creditors for a liquidation, and Nichols was appointed trustee. He then carried on the business until the 31st of August, 1882, when the Alexandra Palace was closed. The proportion of the fares received by the railway company payable to Jones & Barber up to the date of the filing of the petition was, with the consent of the trustee, paid to Younger & Co., who claimed to be paid in addition the sum of 587*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*, which was the amount due to Jones & Barber from the railway company under the contract between them from the 10th of August down to the time when the palace was closed. This sum was also claimed by the trustee in the liquidation. The Registrar decided in favour of Younger & Co., and the trustee appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and J. C. Earle, for the appellant.—The benefit of the contract vested in the trustee as from the date of the filing of the petition, and therefore his title overrides that of the mortgagees as to the sums which became due from the railway company under the contract since the filing of the petition.—Collyer v. Isaacs (1).

[JESSEL, M.R.—A trader cannot mortgage the profits of his business arising after his bankruptcy as against his trustee in bankruptcy.]

No; and moreover the business ought not properly to have been carried on after the petition was filed—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, sections 4, 11, 15 and 17.

[They were stopped by the Court.]

Winslow, Q.C., and B. Houghton, for the mortgagees.—A man can validly assign for value a debt to become due at a future time.

[JESSEL, M.R.—If his bankruptcy intervenes, the debt never becomes due to him; it is as if it never had been due to him. The relation back of the trustee's title destroys the debt ab initio.]

If the trustee takes the benefit of the contract, he takes it subject to any legal or equitable claims to which it may be subject—Brice v. Bannister (2).

[JESSEL, M.R.—Supposing there had been no bankruptcy, that case would have been an authority for saying that you have a perfectly good equitable charge. But it will not stand against the title of the trustee.]

The assignment by operation of the bankruptcy law has not so high an effect as an actual assignment for valuable consideration. The relation back does not destroy the contract; if the trustee takes it, he must take it subject to all existing equities. The receiver elected to treat the contract as subsisting. There was not an assignment of profits in a strict sense, but of part of the gross receipts of the business; and the trustee can only take the receipts subject to the outgoings.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is a total misapprehension of the nature of the bankruptcy law. Let us consider what the contract with the railway company was. The

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 14; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 342.

(2) 47 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 722; Law Rep. 3 Q.B. D. 569.

debtors carried on the business of the Alexandra Palace, and they made an arrangement with the railway company to this effect, that the fees paid by the public for conveyance to the palace and admission into it should be received in one gross sum by the railway company, and that this sum should be divided in certain specified proportions between the debtors and the company. For this lump sum the railway company were to convey the public to the palace, and the debtors were to admit them into it. What is the meaning of this contract? It makes the railway company the agents of the debtors to receive their share of the gross charge. Strictly speaking, there ought to have been two charges, one for the conveyance, and the other for the admission; but this arrangement was made for the convenience of the public, and probably also for the convenience of the debtors. Of course the railway company became debtors to Jones & Barber for their share of the gross sums which they received from the public under the arrangement. The arrangement was nothing more than an agreement for the division of the gross sum paid by the public for conveyance to the palace and admission into it. There is simply a receipt by the railway company of the charge paid by the public for admission into the palace, and it makes no difference that they received it under an express contract instead of an implied contract. It only became a debt due to Jones & Barber from the company after they had received it. It is really the same thing as if the money had been paid by the public at the doors of the palace. It represents the gross earnings of the persons who are carrying on the trade. When a man becomes a bankrupt, the bankruptcy relates back to the act of bankruptcy on which it is founded; and the receipts from his business after the date of the act of bankruptcy, though they are in the hands of an agent who has received them, pass to the trustee in the bankruptcy — the income derived from the business after the act of bankruptcy passes to the trustee. The business of the palace being carried on, these sums are payments made by the customers to the man who was carrying it on. They stand in the same position as payments made by the public for admission to a theatre, or payments made by the customers of a man who keeps a cheesemonger's shop. That being so, it is clear that the title of the trustee relates back to the act of bankruptcy, that is, to the filing of the petition. But it is said that the payments were received by the railway company under a contract which the trustee affirms. That is a fallacy. The trustee would have had a right to the debtor's share of the gross sums received by the company even if he had annulled the contract. His affirmance of the contract was only an assent to the division of the gross sums in the proportion there laid down; he did not adopt the contract in any other sense. That being so, his title is quite unaffected by any assent to the contract. Then it is said that the respondents are claiming under a mortgage or assignment made to them by the bankrupts before the bankruptcy. The answer to that is, that by no assignment or charge can a bankrupt give a good title as against his trustee to profits of his business accruing after the commencement of the bankruptcy. The bankrupt cannot, as against the trustee, assign these profits; they are not his property. It was an accident in the present case that the business was carried on at all after the filing of the petition; but being so carried on, it was carried on ex relatione by the trustee for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate. The case bears no analogy to cases in which the property of a bankrupt has been validly charged by him before his bankruptcy. This sum of money was not the property of the bankrupts, and they could not validly assign it as against the trustee.

LINDLEY, L.J. — I am of the same opinion. The argument has been founded upon some little confusion between an equitable assignment of after-acquired chattels, such as was held valid in Holroyd v. Marshall (3), and an assignment like that which is now in question. I do not think anything turns upon the exact language of the assignment. It is in terms an assignment to Younger & Co. of moneys due and to become due from the railway company to Jones & Barber; I think it would be in substance the same thing if it had been an assignment of moneys due and to become due from the railway company under the prior arrangement. It is an agreement to assign to Younger & Co., not property of Jones & Barber, but money which would become due to them under the arrangement between them and the railway company. Is that an equitable assignment which can prevail against the title of the trustee in the bankruptcy? It is a mere agreement, for the breach of which no doubt an action would lie, but which cannot prevail against the title of the trustee so far as regards payments received by the railway company under it after his title accrued. Those payments became due to the trustee. The decision in Brice v. Bannister (2) was founded on the principle that the right of an equitable assignee of a debt cannot be defeated by a voluntary payment by the debtor to the assignor.

(3) 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 193; 10 H.L. Cas. 191.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. These payments in futuro were not property of the bankrupts which they could assign as against the title of the trustee in their bankruptcy.

[Leave to appeal to the House of Lords was refused.]

Solicitors—W. Sturt, for the trustee; C. Sawbridge, for the mortgagees.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 23, 24. } In re THE RIVER SWALE BRICK AND TILE WORKS (LIMITED).

Landlord and Tenant—Right of Distress—Common Law Distress—Distress under Deed—Concurrent Rights—Marshalling Goods seized.

The common law right of distress, exerciseable immediately on default being made in payment of rent, is not destroyed by the insertion in a lease of an express right of distress, extending to articles which would not be affected by the common law right, but exerciseable only after the lapse of a certain time from default, if the lease contains no negative words; and, notwithstanding the existence of such an express limited right, the common law right may be exercised immediately on default, but only as to goods to which that right extends.

If in such a case the lessor distrains for two half-years' rent at once, before the expiration of the period after the second half-year's rent becoming in arrear which is fixed by the lease for the exercise of the power therein contained, and some of the goods seized under the entire distress are not seizable at common law, but only under the express power in the lease, the goods seized will be marshalled so as to set against the second half-year's rent in the first instance such of them as are seizable at common law, leaving the remainder of the seized goods to answer the first half-year's rent under the provision in the lease.

Adjourned summons.

By deed of the 28th of February, 1882, Isaac Dan and Sampson Dan and their mortgagees demised to the River Swale Brick and Tile Works (Limited) fifty-five acres of land at Faversham and Oare, Kent, for brick-making purposes, for twenty-one years, from the 6th of January, 1882, at the annual rent of 165*l.*, and certain additional rents or royalties on bricks and tiles made during the term, which were to amount to not less than 600*l.* in any year—such rents and royalties to be paid by equal half-yearly payments, on the 6th of January and the 6th of July in each year, during the term. The lease contained a proviso that, if and when any part of the several rents and royalties should be in arrear for twenty-one days, and whether the same should have been lawfully demanded or not, the lessors might enter on the demised premises, put a stop to the operations, and seize and dispose of the bricks and brick materials, horses and other animals, carts, waggons, engines, implements, utensils and materials belonging to the works, for payment and satisfaction of all rents and royalties due, together with costs and expenses. And there was also a proviso that, in case of the lessees' bankruptcy or liquidation, the lessors might re-enter and determine the term.

The company failed to pay the rents and royalties due under the lease, and on the 13th of January, 1883, the lessors levied a distress upon the demised premises for 344*l.* 10*s.*, rents and royalties due on the 6th of July, 1882; and on the 15th of January, 1883, they levied another distress for 473*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, rents and royalties due on the 6th of January, 1883, making together 817*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, by instructing the broker in possession to distrain and remain in possession for that amount.

On the 2nd of February, 1883, Albert Edey was appointed by Bacon, V.C., in an action of Bowser v. McGrath, receiver of the rents and profits of the demised property, and of the plant, machinery, property and effects of the company included in the lease of the 28th of February, 1882.

On the 9th of March, 1883, the company was ordered by Fry, J., to be wound up on the petition (presented on the 16th of January) of the lessors, and the same person who was receiver was appointed by him official liquidator.

On the 13th of March, 1883, the lessors took out the present summons, which was afterwards adjourned into Court, by which they asked that they might be at liberty to sell the goods and chattels seized by them under their distress for rent, and also that they might be at liberty to re-enter on the demised premises.

Everitt, Q.C., and Beddall, for the summons.—With respect to the distress for rent due on the 6th of July, 1882, it does not appear that any question can be raised; but with respect to the second distress, for rent due on the 6th of January, 1883, it will probably be contended that the distress, having been levied on the 15th of January for rent due on the 6th, and having, therefore, been levied within less than the twenty-one days allowed by the claim in the lease, was wrongful and void. That claim in the lease did not, however, oust the common law right of distress, which was exercisable without any delay; and the distress is good, and enforceable at common law.

McClymont, for the official liquidator.—The common law distress is not so inseparable an incident of rent that it cannot be ousted by express contract. If an express power of distress on the rent being in arrear a certain number of days is inserted in a lease, then, unless there are negative words saying that no distress is to be put in sooner, the provision goes for nothing, because it is merely the expression of what is implied by the common law—the express power falls to the ground, and the common law rule prevails; but if, as here, more is given by the express power than by the common law, then there is a bargain which prevails—the lessor gets an enlarged right under the agreement—and it does not follow that the lessee would have consented to give him this enlarged right if it had not been for the counterbalancing limitation in point of time. Any substantial variation from "what the law speaketh" is binding, and there is nothing in the nature of the common law right of distress to prevent a landlord from bargaining it away altogether. The Court has latterly considered it to be contrary to good faith to seek to enforce a right of this kind after it has been tacitly abandoned. The lessors have seized under their distress various articles which were not distrainable at common law, which shews that they never thought they were enforcing the common law right, but that they were solely acting under the power in the lease—Co. Litt. 204*b*, Giles v. Spencer (1), Browne v. Dunnery (2) and Horseford v. Webster (3).

PEARSON, J.—I need not trouble you, Mr. Everitt. The only point upon which I desired further argument has been most satisfactorily argued by counsel for the liquidator, who has also particularly referred me to the dictum of Lord Coke in Coke upon Littleton. The question here was simply whether, seeing that there is a power in this lease to distrain, the second

(1) 3 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 244, 253; 26 Law J. Rep. C.P. 237.
(2) Hob. 208.
(3) 1 Cr., M. & R. 696; 4 Law J. Rep. Exch. 100.

In re River Swale Brick and Tile Works.

distress to which reference has been made is or is not referable to the common law right of distress—whether, in other words, it is or is not void unless the lessors complied with the conditions of the distress clause in the deed; but it has been shewn that, in the opinion of Lord Coke, the common law power continues to exist, notwithstanding the insertion in a deed of a similar power with limitations, and that that opinion has been adopted as law in 1857, in the case cited to me of Giles v. Spencer (1); so that where there is in the deed a power of distress which is in the same terms, practically, as would be used if you put into writing the common law power, then, notwithstanding that the power of distress in the deed does not arise until a month, or twenty-one days, or any other time, after the rent has become due, the lessor may distrain immediately the rent has become due, that being in cases where there are only affirmative words in the deed. There are only affirmative words here; there are no negative words restraining the lessors from distraining until the twenty-one days have expired. But it is said that the powers of distress were so much larger than the common law power that the common law power of distress is avoided. I cannot follow that reasoning. It seems to me to be reasonable that the lessors should have the larger power of distress given them, which larger power of distress they might use, if necessary, in order to get that which was due to them. Now the original distress was issued on the 13th of January. That was for rent due in July, 1882; but on the 15th of January the broker had authority to distrain for rent that was due in January. It was properly argued before me that, inasmuch as the extraordinary powers of distress did not arise until the twenty-one days had expired, there was no power to distrain until the 27th of January. I hold that the lessors had power to distrain on the 7th of January, and therefore that they were within their rights in distraining on the 15th; and if they have seized anything which they could not seize under the common law power of distress, they must restore it. There is a question whether the goods seized are sufficient to pay the rent, but I presume that they have the right to retain that which they could seize under the extraordinary powers of distress to pay the rent due in July. Having seized the whole, they may, if I may use the term, marshal the articles distrained on, and retain those which they could only seize under the common law power of distress for rent due on the 6th of January.

I cannot make any order upon Mr. Edey in his character of receiver, but I must order him, as official liquidator, to deliver up possession to the applicants. I shall declare that the applicants are entitled to sell such goods as they have seized and are entitled to sell under the power of distress given by the lease for the 344*l.* 10*s.* rent due on the 6th of July, 1882, with their costs of distress and possession money, and costs of this application; and that they are also entitled to sell such goods as they have seized and are entitled at common law to sell for the 473*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* rent due on the 6th of January, 1883, with their costs of distress and possession money. The applicants must give notice to the liquidator before sale of the goods intended to be sold under the several distresses for rent, and there will be liberty to apply in chambers if any dispute arises as to the applicants' right to sell any of the goods which they may be intending to sell.

Solicitors—J. Myers, for applicants; Morten & Cutler, for liquidator.

PEARSON, J. 1883. April 14. } THE LYDNEY AND WIGPOOL IRON ORE COMPANY (LIMITED) v. BIRD.

Security for Costs—Time to Apply—Limited Company Plaintiff—Companies Act, 1862, s. 69—Rules of Court, 1875, Order LV. rule 2.

Under Rules of Court, 1875, Order LV. rule 2, the Court has a judicial discretion to direct security for costs to be given at any time:—Held, therefore, that in a proper case, the Court will order security for costs to be given on an application made by a defendant, even after notice of trial.

Lydney and Wigpool Iron Ore Co. v. Bird.

Adjourned summons.

On the 7th of July, 1882, the action was commenced, claiming a declaration that the defendants, James Bird and another, were jointly and severally liable to pay over to the plaintiff company a sum of 10,800*l.*, which they were alleged to have received at a time when they held a fiduciary relation to the company.

On the 31st of October, 1882, the plaintiffs delivered their amended statement of claim.

On the 27th of November, 1882, the defendant James Bird delivered his amended statement of defence; and on the 15th of December, 1882, the plaintiffs delivered an amended reply.

On the 29th of December, 1882, the plaintiffs gave notice of trial.

On the 12th of February, 1883, the defendant James Bird took out a summons, asking that the plaintiffs might be ordered to give security for the costs of the action. The summons came on for hearing before the chief clerk on the 8th of March, who thought that the plaintiffs should give security to the amount of 200*l.* The summons was now adjourned into Court.

Swinfen Eady, for the summons.—The defendant James Bird is a large shareholder in the company, and the expenses of this action are likely to be heavy.

The new rules have superseded the old practice, that an application for security for costs must be made at the earliest possible time. "The discretion as to time is unlimited by the new rules"—Martano v. Mann (1).

The evidence shews there is good reason to believe that if the defendant is "successful in his defence the assets of the company will be insufficient to pay his costs" (2).

This application is within the words of Order LV. rule 2, which expressly provides that the security shall be given "at such time or times" as the Judge shall direct.

Bunting, for the plaintiffs.—This application is made too late. A defendant waives his right to security for costs who does not come soon. Here notice of trial was given in December, 1882, and the defendant does not make his application until two months afterwards.

[PEARSON, J.—The old practice is gone. The simple question is, whether the person who asks for security is entitled to it at the time he makes his application.]

The application must be made in due time.

[PEARSON, J.—How can it affect the later application that he has not made a previous application?]

Our evidence shews that the defendant has ample security for his costs. There was therefore no necessity for this application.

Swinfen Eady was not called upon to reply.

PEARSON, J.—I think that the conclusion arrived at by the chief clerk was a very reasonable one.

It is shewn by the balance-sheet of the company that they have lost 20,000*l.* by their trading; and their own witness does not venture to swear that the property, which is put down in the balance-sheet as having cost 75,000*l.*, is worth more than 20,000*l.* Then there is the fact that their law bills remain unpaid, or are only paid by acceptances. Putting these things together, I think I am justified in saying that if the company is not absolutely insolvent, Mr. Bird, if successful in his defence, will have a long time to wait for his costs, if he ever gets them at all.

I think that this is just the case intended to be met by the section (2) of the Act of Parliament; and I confirm the conclusion arrived at by the chief clerk, that the company do give security to the amount of 200*l.*

The company must pay the costs of the adjournment into Court.

Solicitors—Munton & Morris, for the summons; Learoyd & Co., for the company; Freeman & Bothamley, for defendant Wm. Bird.

---

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 510; Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 419.

(2) The Companies Act, 1862, s. 69.

CHITTY, J.
1883.
April 23.
In re ADAM'S POLICY TRUSTS.

Husband and Wife—Life Assurance—Policy effected by Husband "for the benefit of his Wife and Children"—Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), s. 10—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 11—"Separate Use"—Form of Order.

A husband having, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, effected a policy of assurance on his own life, "for the benefit of his wife and the children of their marriage," died insolvent. The wife and one of the children of the assured predeceased him. A petition under the Act having been presented by the surviving children for the appointment of a trustee to receive the moneys payable under the policy, and for a declaration of the children's rights and interests,—Held, that the Court had under the Act no jurisdiction to make the declaration asked for.

In re Mellor's Trusts (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 246; Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 127; ibid. 7 Ch. D. 200) dissented from.

Semble, the words "for her separate use" in the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, indicate an intention that the wife is to take a life estate; and therefore the effect of the policy, when read together with the Act, was to constitute a trust for the wife for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants.

Under the circumstances above mentioned, the Court being of opinion that the trust was either for the wife for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants, or for the wife and children as joint tenants, did not require the legal personal representatives of the deceased wife and child to be served with the petition, but made an order for the appointment of a trustee, prefaced with the opinion of the Court that the wife took no interest and that the children took as joint tenants.

By a policy of life assurance, dated the 5th of April, 1874, and effected by D. Adam in the Scottish Provident Institution, after reciting that D. Adam, being desirous of assuring his life under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, for the benefit of his wife A. Adam and the children of their marriage, had applied to be admitted a member of the said institution, and to become a contributor to its funds for the benefit thereinafter mentioned, and that the said D. Adam had paid to the manager of the said institution the sum of 65*l.* 15*s.*, being his first annual contribution to its funds in respect of the benefit thereinafter mentioned, it was certified that in consideration of the premises the said D. Adam had been duly admitted a member; and that, under the provisions of the said Married Women's Property Act, such trustee as might be appointed, as provided in the said Act, for the benefit of his said wife A. Adam and of the children of their marriage, and in the event of there being no children of the marriage surviving, then the heirs, executors, administrators or assigns of the said D. Adam, should be entitled to receive out of the funds of the said institution, at the end of six months after his decease, the sum of 2,000*l.* sterling.

The sum receivable under the policy was, by a memorandum subsequently made and annexed to the policy, restricted to the sum of 205*l.*

In July, 1882, D. Adam died insolvent and intestate. By his wife A. Adam he had eight children. His wife and one child predeceased him.

A petition was presented under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, by the surviving children, of whom three were infants, that W. Butter might be appointed trustee of the moneys payable under the policy, that the rights and interests of the petitioners in the said moneys might be declared, and that the trustee might be ordered to hold the moneys when received in trust for the children equally. It was stated by the petition that it was not intended to take out administration to D. Adam's estate.

Questions arose as to the interests of the wife and children under the policy, and also as to whether the Court had jurisdiction under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, to make the declaration prayed for.

In re Adam's Policy Trusts.

J. W. Baines, for the petitioners, referred to In re Mellor's Policy Trusts (1), where Malins, V.C., made a declaration upon a petition similar to the present; and submitted that the proper construction to be put upon the policy was that the wife took for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants. The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, must be read into the policy. That section says that a policy effected by a married man on his own life shall enure and be deemed to be a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use, and of his children or any of them, according to the interests so expressed. The presence of the words "separate use" in the section should be taken as an indication of an intention to distinguish the gift to the mother from that to the children, and that she was to have a life interest only—Jeffery v. De Vitre (2), Newill v. Newill (3), Audsley v. Horn (4) and Theobald on Wills (5). Ward v. Grey (6) was also referred to.

CHITTY, J.—This is an application under section 10 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, which, so far as the case before me is concerned, has not been repealed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. The Court is asked in the first place to appoint a trustee, and also, although the section does not in terms empower the Court to declare the rights of the parties, I am asked to express my opinion for the benefit of the children, as the fund is not large, being only 205*l*. At any rate I can go as far as this—I can state that I do not require either the legal personal representatives of the wife, or the legal personal representatives of the deceased child, to be served with the petition.

The view I take of the policy is this—it is a declaration of trust operating inter vivos, and is a good declaration of trust. To avoid any question of this kind the section says, "A policy of insurance effected by any married man on his own life, and expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children or any of them, shall enure and be deemed a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use, and of his children or any of them, according to the interest so expressed, and shall not, so long as any object of the trust remains, be subject to the control of the husband or to his creditors, or form part of his estate." It appears to me that the effect of the policy and the Act taken together is to constitute a declaration of an executed trust, and that all the Court has to do is to express its view of the construction of the two instruments taken together. Upon the policy being effected, the settlor does not reserve to himself any power of appointment; therefore this is not an executory trust, but a trust declared on the face of the instrument. The question then is, what is the true construction of the instrument? In my opinion there are only two possible constructions. One is that the wife took for life with remainder to the children; and the other is that the wife and children took as joint tenants. So far as the wife is concerned, there is nothing to shew that there is to be a division among the objects of the trust; there is therefore a joint tenancy, and if I had to decide according to the ordinary rules of construction, I should be compelled to hold that all the objects took as joint tenants. In that case I should not require to have the representatives of the wife before the Court, or the representatives of the deceased child. But I may express my opinion that, upon a fair construction of the policy, reading it with the Act, the wife took a life interest, and that she did so for two reasons. In the first place, the Act says that the policy expressed upon the face of it to be for the benefit of the man's wife, or of his wife and children, shall be deemed "a trust for the benefit of his wife for her separate use, and of his children or any of them, according to the interest so expressed." If the wife takes as a joint tenant, the words of the Act, so far as they give her an interest "for her separate use," would have no meaning at all. If there be a joint tenancy, the wife has a right of severance immediately upon

(1) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 246; Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 127; ibid. 7 Ch. D. 200.
(2) 24 Beav. 296.
(3) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 432; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 253.
(4) 1 De Gex, F. & J. 226; 26 Beav. 195; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 293; 29 ibid. 201.
(5) 2nd ed. pp. 315-16.
(6) 26 Beav. 485; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 74.

In re Adam's Policy Trusts.

the fund falling in, or before the money is received—and the money is usually payable by the insurance office six months after the death of the assured; but it could scarcely be said that the Legislature contemplated the re-marriage of the wife within that period of six months, and that therefore the words "separate use" were intended to apply to so short a period. In my opinion, the Act here supposes an interest in the nature of a continuing interest in the wife, and that she is not to take over a share of the money in a lump sum, but that she is to have an interest in the fund such as a life interest would be. Therefore the fair inference is, that she is to take an interest for her separate use for her life.

In the 11th section of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the words "separate use" are omitted, probably because the Act previously defines the manner in which a married woman is to hold all property belonging to her at the time of marriage—that is to say, she is to hold it for her separate use; consequently the insertion of those words in the 11th section would have been unnecessary. There is another difference between the words of that section and the corresponding part of the 10th section of the Act of 1870. The new section speaks of a policy effected by a man "for the benefit of his wife or of his children, or of his wife and children or any of them." There it treats the interest of the wife and the interest of the children as two distinct things. That is an indication, though a slight one, that the Legislature never intended the wife and children to take concurrently, but that they should take separate interests.

By analogy also to the construction put upon wills raising a similar question, it may be said that the words "separate use" indicate an intention that the interests of the wife and children are distinct, and that they do not take concurrently. In Audsley v. Horn (4), where there was a bequest to the testator's unmarried granddaughter and to her children, with a gift over "if they should die without issue," it was held by Lord Romilly that the word "they" could not be meant by the testator to include both the mother and her children, but that the mother took a life interest with remainder to her children.

In Jeffrey v. De Vitre (2), also before Lord Romilly, a similar construction was put upon a bequest to a married woman, "for the benefit of herself and such children as she then had, or might thereafter have, by her then husband, free from the control of her husband." And in Newill v. Newill (3) Lord Chancellor Hatherley, as I understand, intended to lay down a rule of construction in such cases; for he says, "I must assume that the rule is such, that although the ordinary construction of a gift to a wife and children would give a joint tenancy, if I find anything in this will which can indicate a different intention, it must be followed. There are several authorities which establish such a rule, but in almost all of them reliance has been placed on some special circumstances." And he appears not to dissent from Lord Romilly's decision in Jeffery v. De Vitre (2).

Therefore, without absolutely deciding that in the case before me the wife took for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants, I state that as being my view. Whether that view is correct, or whether the wife and children take as joint tenants, the result, so far as concerns the wife and child who are dead, since both predeceased the assured, is in either case the same; and it will be quite sufficient for the present purpose to preface the order with an expression of opinion that the representatives of the wife and deceased child are not necessary parties to this petition, and that the surviving children take jointly.

I confess I am unable to discover on what ground Vice-Chancellor Malins proceeded in In re Mellor's Policy Trusts (1), when the case came before him the second time, and he held that the fund ought to be distributed as in the case of an intestacy. The Vice-Chancellor was too good a lawyer to hold that a fund held on trust for a wife and children should go as on an intestacy; and the only ground for his reference to the Statute of Distributions seems to have been that the widow was in poor circumstances. Of course, that would not be a sufficient ground to proceed upon judicially. There is no reference to the statute in the policy or in the Act of 1870, and therefore I cannot find any ground for directing a distribution in accordance with that decision to do more than appoint a trustee. I may by the way observe that if the wife did take an interest in accordance with the view of Vice-Chancellor Malins, the result would in the present case be disastrous, because she would then have taken a share as under an intestacy, and having died in the lifetime of her husband he would have been entitled to the representation of her estate; and her share would accordingly go, not to the children, but to the husband's creditors.

I therefore make the order for the appointment of the trustee, prefacing it with the expression of opinion I have indicated.

[The order as drawn up was as follows: Upon the petition, &c., this Court being of opinion that A. Adam, deceased, in the petition named, took no interest in the sum of 205*l.* hereinafter mentioned, and that the petitioners, as the surviving children of the said D. Adam and A. Adam, are entitled thereto as joint tenants, doth hereby appoint W. Butter, of, &c., a trustee, for the purpose of receiving from the Scottish Provident Institution the sum of 205*l.* secured by the policy, &c., in the petition mentioned, and purporting to be effected for the benefit of the said A. Adam and the children of her marriage with the said D. Adam under the provisions of the above-mentioned Act. The residue of such sum, after the payment of the costs of this application, to be taxed by the Taxing Master as between solicitor and client, to be held by the said W. Butter in trust for the petitioners.]

Solicitors—M. A. Orgill, agents for Anderson, Gardner & Hepburn, Dundee, for petitioners.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 11, 23. June 20.

In re THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE'S SETTLED ESTATES.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 3, 6, 17, 33, 56, 58 and 60—Minority of Tenant-for-Life—Powers of Leasing and Sale—Conflicting Powers—In whom vested—Consents necessary — Tenant-for-Life — Trustees—Guardians.

The effect of section 56, sub-section 1, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to reserve to the trustees of a settlement the right to exercise the powers conferred on them by the settlement, and to give them in addition the right to exercise, in accordance with the Act, the powers conferred on them by the Act, so far as such powers are larger than the powers conferred on them by the settlement.

The effect of section 56, sub-section 2, of the same Act is, in any case in which the powers conferred on a tenant-for-life by the Act are larger than the powers for the same purposes conferred on him by the settlement, to authorise him to exercise, in accordance with the Act, the larger powers conferred on him by the Act; and also to render his consent necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement of the powers conferred on them by the settlement, whether that consent is or is not required by the settlement.

The right of the tenant-for-life to give or withhold such consent is a power which, under section 60, may be exercised on his behalf during his minority by the trustees of the settlement.

In cases in which trustees are exercising powers not conferred upon them by the settlement, but only by the statute, they may do so without complying with the conditions imposed by the settlement on their exercise of analogous, but different, powers conferred by the settlement.

By a settlement of land power was given to the testamentary guardians of an infant tenant-in-tail in possession (who was tenant-for-life for the purposes of the Act under section 58), during the minority, to grant ordinary leases for twenty-one years, building leases for ninety-nine years, and mining leases for sixty years; and power was given to the trustees of a term, at the request and by the direction of the guardians, during the minority, to sell or exchange or enfranchise parts of the settled estate; but this power did not extend to sales of surface, with a reservation of minerals:—

In re Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates.

Held, that, during the minority, the power of leasing must be exercised by the guardians, with the consent of the trustees; and the powers of sale, exchange and enfranchisement must be exercised by the trustees, at the request and by the direction of the guardians, except in the case of sales of surface, reserving minerals, in which case, as the power so to sell was entirely statutory, no request or direction was necessary.

Semble, a difference between the provisions of a settlement and those of the Act, with respect to the person who is to exercise a particular power, is not a "conflict relative to any matter" within section 56, subsection 2.

Adjourned summons.

By the deed of resettlement of the 17th of June, 1856, of the Newcastle Estates, those estates, situate in the counties of Nottingham and Lincoln, were settled, after the death of the then Duke of Newcastle, to the use of trustees for the term of 120 years from the duke's death, without impeachment of waste, upon certain trusts, and, subject to that term and its trusts, to the use of the Earl of Lincoln (the eldest son of the Duke of Newcastle) and his sons in tail male, with remainders over.

The deed contained a provision that it should be lawful, after the death of the survivor of the then Duke of Newcastle and Earl of Lincoln, for the guardian or guardians for the time being of any son of the Earl of Lincoln who should, or if of full age would, by virtue of the limitations in the deed, be entitled to the settled estates, during the minority of any such son, to demise or lease by deed all or any of the settled estates for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to commence and take effect in possession, for the best rents that could reasonably be obtained; and also to demise or lease by deed all or any of the settled estates, for the purpose of building, improving or repairing, for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years, to commence and take effect in possession, for the best rents that could reasonably be obtained; and also to demise or lease by deed all or any of the mines or minerals and quarries in or upon the settled estates, or any of them, for any term not exceeding sixty years, to commence and take effect in possession, for the best rents that could reasonably be obtained.

The deed also contained a provision that it should be lawful for the trustees of the 120 years term, and they were thereby authorised and empowered (after the death of the survivor of the then duke and earl, and in the event of the person for the time being entitled under the deed to an estate for life or in tail male by purchase not having attained the full age of twenty-one, at the request and by the direction in writing of the guardian or guardians of such person for the time being entitled, or who, if of full age, would be entitled as aforesaid), to make sale, alienate and dispose of, or to convey in exchange or by way of partition for or in lieu of other messuages, lands and hereditaments in England or Wales, all or any part of the settled estates, and also to enfranchise any copyhold or customary lands and hereditaments holden of the manors included in the settled estates, with necessary accompanying powers. And it was provided that any sums of money received on a sale, or for equality of exchange or partition, or for enfranchisement, should (after the death of the survivor of the said duke and earl, and in the event of the person for the time being entitled under the deed to the receipt of the rents and profits of the hereditaments to be purchased as hereinafter mentioned not having attained full age), with the consent in writing of the guardian or guardians for the time being of such person, be invested by the trustees of the 120 years term in the purchase of other estates in Great Britain; and power was given to the said trustees, with the like consent, to make interim investments of such sums in securities therein mentioned. The power of sale did not authorise sales of surface, reserving minerals.

At the date of the coming into operation of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the

In re Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates.

Duke of Newcastle, party to the deed of re-settlement, was dead; his son, the Earl of Lincoln, party thereto, had succeeded to the dukedom, and was also dead, leaving his son, the present Duke of Newcastle, an infant, born in 1864, the tenant in tail in possession of the settled estates, and having by his will appointed testamentary guardians of such present duke.

Previous to the coming into operation of the above Act, the trustees of the term of 120 years had carried out all sales and enfranchisements of the settled estates under the powers given them by the deed, the guardians joining in the conveyances, &c., to testify their consent thereto. Leases of the settled estates had been granted by the guardians alone, the trustees not being made parties thereto. It became, however, doubtful whether the same course could still be pursued in these matters, having regard to the provisions of the Act; and on the 21st of March, 1883, the present summons was taken out by the trustees for the time being of the term of 120 years, in pursuance of the power for the purpose given by section 56, sub-section 3, of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

The summons asked, among other hings, for the opinion, advice and direc- ion of the Judge—first, whether the con- ent of the guardians of an infant tenant- or-life was necessary to enable the trustees o exercise the powers to make sale, aliene r dispose of, or to convey in exchange or y way of partition, the hereditaments mprised in the settlement, and to en- nchise any copyhold or customary lands f hereditaments comprised in the settle- nt; secondly, whether the power for tenants-for-life of the settled estates to t leases for twenty-one years, building s for ninety-nine years, and mining for sixty years, was exercisеable g their minority by the trustees or eir guardians, or by some other and persons. The material provisions of ettled Land Act, 1882, are given (1).

Section 3: "A tenant-for-life—(i.) May settled land, or any part thereof, or any nt, right or privilege of any kind, over ation to the same; . . . (iii.) May make ange of the settled land, or any part thereof, for other land, including an exchange in consideration of money paid for equality of exchange."

Section 6: "A tenant-for-life may lease the settled land, or any part thereof, or any easement, right or privilege of any kind, over or in relation to the same, for any purpose whatever, whether involving waste or not, for any term not exceeding—(i.) In case of a building lease, ninety-nine years; (ii.) In case of a mining lease, sixty years; (iii.) In case of any other lease, twenty-one years."

Section 17 (1): "A sale, exchange, partition or mining lease may be made either of land, with or without an exception or reservation of all or any of the mines and minerals therein, or of any mines and minerals, and in any such case with or without a grant or reservation of powers of working, wayleaves or rights of way, rights of water and drainage, and other powers, easements, rights and privileges for or incident to or connected with mining purposes in relation to the settled land or any part thereof, or any other land."

Section 33: "Where, under a settlement, money is in the hands of trustees, and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, then, in addition to such powers of dealing therewith as the trustees have independently of this Act, they may, at the option of the tenant-for-life, invest or apply the same as capital money arising under this Act."

Section 56 (1): "Nothing in this Act shall take away, abridge or prejudicially affect any power for the time being subsisting under a settlement, or by statute or otherwise, exercise- able by a tenant-for-life, or by trustees with his consent, or on his request, or by his direction, or otherwise; and the powers given by this Act are cumulative. (2) But, in case of conflict between the provisions of a settlement and the provisions of this Act, relative to any matter in respect whereof the tenant-for-life exercises or contracts or intends to exercise any power under this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail; and, accordingly, notwith- standing anything in the settlement, the con- sent of the tenant-for-life shall, by virtue of this Act, be necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement or other person of any power conferred by the settlement exercise- able for any purpose provided for in this Act. (3) If a question arises, or a doubt is enter- tained, respecting any matter within this section, the Court may, on the application of the trustees of the settlement, or of the tenant- for-life, or of any other person interested, give its decision, opinion, advice or direction thereon."

Section 58 (1): "Each person as follows shall, when the estate or interest of each of them is in possession, have the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act, as if each of them

Cookson, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the summons.—With respect to the powers of granting leases during infancy, the question is, whether the trustees of the settlement or the testamentary guardians are the persons in whom they are vested. Under section 58 of the Act, the infant duke, who is tenant-in-tail, is tenant-for-life within the Act, and by section 60 the powers of infant tenants-for-life, including the leasing powers, are vested in the trustees of the settlement. By the terms of the settlement the leasing powers are vested in the guardians; but that cannot prevail against section 60, which gives them to the trustees, for the same section (56) which reserves certain powers under existing settlements provides (sub-section 2) that in any case of conflict between the settlement and the Act, the Act is to prevail. The conflict here is with respect to the persons who are to exercise the leasing powers.

In re Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates.

[PEARSON, J.—I do not see that there is any conflict. The terms for which leases may be granted under the settlement and under the Act are the same, and section 56, sub-section 1, reserves the powers of the testamentary guardians, who are practically the trustees under the settlement for this purpose.]

We submit that they are mere donees of a power, and not trustees at all within the Act.

[PEARSON, J.—The guardians have to exercise the power in a fiduciary way for the benefit of the persons entitled beneficially; it seems, therefore, to me that they are trustees of the power. It is not as if a power were given them which they might exercise for their own benefit, or according to their own caprice.]

If it had been intended that "trustees" in section 56, sub-section 1, should include testamentary guardians, the two classes of persons would not have been contrasted in section 60.

[PEARSON, J.—Section 56, sub-section 2, says that the consent of the tenant-for-life is to be necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement "or other person" of any power conferred by the settlement, so that all donees of powers usually given to trustees are intended to be included.]

Next, with respect to the powers of sale, exchange, partition and enfranchisement. Those powers are by the settlement to be exercised by the trustees, but at the request and by the direction of the guardians where there is an infant in the position of tenant-for-life; and the question is, whether the necessity for such request and direction is not removed by section 3 of the Act, which gives absolute powers to tenants-for-life, among whom are included (section 58) tenants-in-tail, and whose powers are conferred during infancy (section 60) on trustees. So that here again, as with regard to the leasing powers, there is a conflict within section 56, sub-section 2; and the Act, giving unfettered powers to the trustees, must prevail.

[PEARSON, J.—Suppose a settlement gave the power of sale to the trustees, then you would say that there was a conflict between the settlement and the Act, which gives the power to the adult tenant-for-life; but in such cases section 56, sub-section 1, reserves the power to the trustees, and says that they are to sell, with the consent of the tenant-for-life. Does not that shew that the conflict contemplated by section 56, sub-section 2, is not a conflict with respect to who is to sell, but a conflict with respect to the mode of sale, mode of dealing with the proceeds, and such matters?]

There is a difference in this respect, that under the Act the powers of investment of the proceeds are much wider than they are under the settlement. We submit that, with regard to both the power to lease and the power to sell, section 60 points out that the persons who are to supplement the disability of the minor are the trustees. Section 60, which gives so many greater powers to the trustees, appears to imply, at least, that they are to represent the tenant-for-life in this respect also. The were a tenant-for-life as defined in this Act (namely)—(i) A tenant in tail. . . ."

Section 60: "Where a tenant-for-life, or a person having the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act, is an infant, or an infant would, if he were of full age, be a tenant-for-life, or have the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act, the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act may be exercised on his behalf by the trustees of the settlement, and if there are none, then by such person and in such manner as the Court, on the application of a testamentary or other guardian or next friend of the infant, either generally or in a particular instance, orders."

guardians, who are ignored for the one purpose, would apparently be ignored for the other purpose also.

[PEARSON, J.—Do you say that the requirement by section 56, sub-section 2, for the consent of the tenant-for-life to be given to a sale by the persons authorised by the settlement to sell, coupled with the absence of any express authority to any one to consent on behalf of an infant tenant-for-life, renders it impossible to sell under the power in the settlement, and leaves only the power of sale given by the Act, which makes no reference to any consent by testamentary guardians?]

Yes; and the same observation applies to the leasing powers, since section 56, sub-section 2, requires the consent of the tenant-for-life to the exercise of "any power."

Cozens Hardy, Q.C., and H. J. Lake, for the testamentary guardians.—We submit that, taking sections 56 and 60 together, it is reasonably plain that the intention of the Act is not to destroy powers contained in settlements for purposes identical with the purposes of the powers contained in the Act. That appears from the illustration in section 56, sub-section 2. In this case there is nothing to prevent the powers given by the settlement from being exercised by the persons to whom they are thereby given, and those powers therefore remain vested in them. Where, as here, a power of leasing or selling is given to trustees or testamentary guardians by the settlement, the tenant-for-life has no power under the Act to lease or sell, but the trustees or guardians must lease or sell with his consent. That is borne out by section 56, sub-section 1. Sub-section 2 shews that the tenant-for-life there contemplated is presupposed to be capable of exercising his power of consent, and willing to do so; he must be "exercising or contracting or intending to exercise" statutory powers; so that that has no application in cases where the tenant-for-life is doing nothing of the kind—where, for instance, he is an infant, and therefore incapable of contracting. That sub-section does not take away or interfere with powers of leasing or selling given by the settlement to trustees or guardians, except by requiring the consent when there is some one who can give it, and is exercising or contracting or intending to exercise his powers. The "cases of conflict" contemplated by that sub-section are such cases as where the power of leasing in the Act is for longer terms than the power in the settlement. But, assuming for the moment that the section is applicable, there is nothing to prevent the tenant-for-life from consenting, though under age—In re Cardross's Settlement (2).

[PEARSON, J.—That case was not altogether approved of by Cotton, L.J., in In re D'Angibau (3).]

The Act shews an intention that minors who are tenants-for-life shall be capable of consenting, in that it requires consent in all cases without excluding cases of minors. Again, assuming that section 56 is applicable, still there is no difficulty, because the trustees of the settlement can consent on behalf of the infant to a lease or sale by the guardians. Section 60, taken with section 56, sub-section 2, leaves the guardians to exercise the powers conferred upon them by the settlement, but with the consent of the infant, which the trustees of the settlement are empowered by section 60 to give on his behalf. The power of consenting must be a power within section 60, since it is a power given to the tenant-for-life to veto the lease or sale by refusing his consent. The point that was raised with respect to the different provisions of the Act and of the settlement with respect to the destination of sale-moneys is precisely met by section 33. The only conflict intended by sub-section 2 of section 56, is a conflict in respect to the matter as to which the power is to be exercised, not with respect to the persons who are to exercise it.

[PEARSON, J.—There I agree with you.]

Section 56, sub-section 2, requiring the consent of a tenant-for-life, is not applicable to this case at all; but, if it is, then the necessary consent may be given by the tenant-for-life, though a minor, or else by the trustees of the settlement on his behalf.

Cookson, Q.C., in reply.—The answer to

(2) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 327; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 728.

(3) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 182, 756; Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 240.

the argument that section 56, sub-section 2, is not applicable, because there must be a tenant-for-life able and willing to exercise his powers, is, that by section 60 the trustees are appointed to exercise those powers in case of incapacity, so that there is no impossibility. The consent cannot be given by a minor tenant-for-life, for there is no power to do so given by this Act or elsewhere. The power of consenting is not a power given to the trustees by section 60. In section 56, sub-section 1, the two expressions "consent" and "power" are contrasted.

PEARSON, J.—It is necessary for me in this case to give my opinion upon this Act with the greatest possible clearness. The Act is a new Act, which we shall have to interpret for the first time, because it has only just come into operation, and no one feels more than I do the great difficulty of interpreting this Act correctly, and avoiding making mistakes which may affect titles hereafter. I have endeavoured, however, to understand the Act as well as I can, and I now come to the conclusion that the purport and object of this Act is to grant to a tenant-for-life very large powers for his own benefit; and I desire to construe the Act in that spirit. In the present case the tenant-for-life is tenant-in-tail and an infant. There are large powers of leasing and sale, which are the only powers with which I have to deal on the present occasion. The powers of leasing are substantially the same as the powers under the Act. It is not wished to grant a lease contrary to the provisions of the settlement, or in extension of the powers given by the provisions of the settlement. It is not necessary, therefore, to refer to the powers of the Act in order to enable the lease which it is desired to grant to be granted. The lease could be granted under the powers of the settlement if this Act had never passed. The difficulty is, upon referring to the Act, to know exactly who are the persons who ought now to grant a lease, and what, if any, consent is necessary to the exercise of the power. The power to grant a lease given by the settlement is a power given to the guardian or guardians for the time being of any person under the age of twenty-one years. If, therefore, the Act had not passed, the guardian or guardians for the time being of the present duke would be the persons entitled to grant the lease. The question is, whether or not there is anything in this Act which prevents them from granting a lease, and renders it necessary that the lease should be granted by other persons—that is to say, by the trustees of the settlement under the Act.

Now the only two sections which have any very important bearing upon this case with regard to that, are the 56th and 60th. I will take the 60th first. "Where a tenant-for-life, or a person having the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act, is an infant, or an infant would, if he were of full age, be a tenant-for-life, or have the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act, the powers of a tenant-for-life under this Act may be exercised on his behalf by the trustees of the settlement." If, therefore, this lease were to be granted under the provisions of this Act, and entirely independently of the provisions of the settlement, the trustees of the settlement would, under section 60, be the proper persons to grant leases; but, as I have already stated, it has been proposed to grant leases under the powers of the settlement, assuming that the powers of the settlement still exist. Do they or do they not exist, and have the persons who have powers under the settlement still the authority given to them by the settlement to grant this lease? Now, the first clause of section 56 seems to me to be very plain. It is this—"Nothing in this Act shall take away, abridge or prejudicially affect any power for the time being subsisting under a settlement, or by statute or otherwise, exerciseable by a tenant-for-life, or by trustees with his consent, or on his request, or by his direction or otherwise; and the powers given by this Act are cumulative." I read that, I say again with diffidence, to mean this—that it is not intended to take away from the trustees named in any settlement powers given to them by that settlement; and that if all parties are contented to exercise those powers, those powers may still be exercised; but, if the powers in the settlement are more restricted than the powers in the Act, the Act says that the provisions of the Act, or the powers given by the Act, are cumulative—that is to say, that the powers in the Act, so far as they give larger authority than is given by the trusts of the settlement, may be exercised in the manner prescribed by the Act. That, as it seems to me, makes that clause intelligible, and makes both parts of it perfectly harmonious. The second sub-section, I confess, raises some difficulty. I do not think there is much difficulty with regard to the first part of it. The first part of it says this—"But, in case of conflict between the provisions of a settlement and the provisions of this Act, relative to any matter in respect whereof the tenant-for-life exercises or contracts or intends to exercise any power under this Act, the provisions of this Act shall prevail." That, as I read it, means that in any case where the tenant-for-life is desirous of exercising the powers given to him under the settlement, or given to him under the Act, if the powers under the settlement are less beneficial to him—are less extensive than the powers given to him by the Act—he is entitled to exercise the power under the Act, notwithstanding any restrictions contained in the settlement. But then the latter part of that goes, as it seems to me, altogether away from the case of a tenant-for-life who is exercising the power, and it deals with the case where trustees are exercising the power; and it seems to me that it is meant to be an illustration of what is intended by the whole spirit and scope of the Act, which was, as I have said, to give larger powers to the tenant-for-life than he had before; and it prescribes this, that in all cases, "notwithstanding anything in the settlement, the consent of the tenant-for-life shall, by virtue of this Act, be necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement or other person of any power conferred by the settlement exerciseable for any purpose provided in this Act." I read that, therefore, to mean that, amongst other things that are cumulative, the consent of the tenant-for-life must now be added to the exercise of any power for leasing or sale by the trustees of the settlement, although not required by the settlement. I should come, therefore, to the conclusion that the trustees of the settlement cannot henceforth exercise the power of sale or the power of leasing, vested in them absolutely at their own discretion by the terms of the settlement, without the consent of the tenant-for-life.

Now, in this case, the tenant-for-life is an infant. The question is, first of all, can the infant give that consent? The second one is, if he cannot give that consent, is there any person, or are there any persons, who can give consent for the tenant-for-life? Now I cannot help thinking that, in the construction of this Act, I ought to give the terms of the Act the widest construction I can give consistently with the English language, so as to render all the clauses in the Act operative; and under section 60 I find that the trustees of the settlement are to have the powers of the tenant-for-life under this Act. Now this, which you may call a fetter upon the exercise of the discretion of the trustees, is also, as it seems to me, a power given to the tenant-for-life to consent or refuse his consent to the exercise of the discretion vested in the trustees. I think, therefore, that under the 60th section, the trustees of the settlement can consent on behalf of the tenant-for-life, and it enables the trustees to exercise the trusts under the settlement with that consent. I am confirmed in that by the section to which Mr. Hardy drew my attention, the 33rd section, which is an exceedingly beneficial one, and which directs that, "Where, under a settlement, money is in the hands of trustees, and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, then, in addition to such powers of dealing therewith as the trustees have independently of this Act, they may, at the option of the tenant-for-life, invest or apply the same as capital money arising under this Act." Either there is some person who can exercise that option, or the power is not capable of being exercised during the minority of the tenant-for-life. I think it is impossible to hold that it was the intention of this Act to say that such a beneficial power as that might be exercised only where there was an adult tenant-for-life, and I think that it gave an option whether it should be exercised or not during the minority of the tenant-for-life. I am again obliged to fall back upon the 60th section, and I read the 60th section as giving the trustees of the settlement, who are able to exercise the powers of the infant tenant-for-life under the Act, a power to exercise the option for the tenant-for-life. I think, in either case, it was intended that where there was an infant the trustees of the settlement should be able to do whatever the infant was authorised to do under this Act; and so deciding, I think that I harmonise the sections of the Act, at all events sufficiently to make the Act reasonable and intelligible. I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the power for leasing under this settlement may still be exercised by the guardians, but with the consent of the trustees of the settlement.

In re Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates.

The same observations, of course, will apply to the power of sale, which in this case is vested in the trustees named in the settlement, and is to be exercised by them with the consent of the testamentary guardians. It is said in argument, and not unfairly, that, inasmuch as the testamentary guardians must consent under the settlement, to make the trustees under the settlement also consent would be to give two guards for the infant. I agree that that is so. All I can say is that the Act has said, as has been justly observed, that the powers are not to be excised from the settlement, that the powers of the trustees are not to be abridged or restricted; and I hold, therefore, that the power of sale still remains to be exercised in the same way in which it is directed to be exercised by the terms of the settlement itself, but with this additional provision, that the trustees of the settlement must now consent to the exercise of it under section 60.

The power of leasing must, therefore, be exercised during the minority by the guardians with the consent of the trustees, and the powers of sale and enfranchisement by the trustees as before, but at the request and by the direction of the guardians. The costs of all parties of this application as between solicitor and client will be paid out of any capital moneys in the hands of trustees.

June 20.—The case was now mentioned again.

Cookson, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the trustees.—The question has arisen whether your Lordship's decision, that the exercise by the trustees of the power of sale must be at the request and by the direction of the guardians, is applicable to cases in which the sale is a sale of surface, reserving minerals. The settlement contains no power of sale authorising sales of this description, and the trustees therefore sell entirely by virtue of their statutory powers under section 17 of the Act of Parliament. We ask leave to amend the summons by adding a question whether the request and direction of the guardians are necessary to the exercise by the trustees of their statutory powers under the Act of selling surface apart from minerals; and we submit that the answer should be in the negative. To require request and direction in these cases because the testator required them in other cases is to impose on the exercise of a purely statutory power a fetter not to be found in the statute.

Cozens Hardy, Q.C., and H. J. Lake, for the guardians.

PEARSON, J.—In my opinion, in cases in which the trustees desire to exercise powers not conferred upon them by the settlement, but conferred entirely by the statute, it is competent for them to do so without the concurrence of the testamentary guardians, and I shall therefore give leave to amend the summons in the way suggested, and answer the question in the negative.

Solicitors—Rickards & Son, for the trustees; Lake, Beaumont & Lake, for the guardians.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 22.

Ex parte WALKER; in re MC HENRY.

Bankruptcy—Liquidation — Adjudication—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 125. sub-s. 12.

The Court has power, under section 125, sub-section 12, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to make an adjudication against a debtor who has filed a petition for liquidation, even though the creditors have passed no resolutions for liquidation by arrangement or composition.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Hazlitt sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

On the 15th of August, 1879, McHenry filed a liquidation petition. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 20th of October, when it was resolved that the meeting be adjourned to the 15th of December, 1879, the meeting being of opinion that it was inexpedient that the statement of affairs produced by the debtor should be then read. At this time an appeal was pending against a decision of Jessel, M.R., in an action of Jewitt v. McHenry, in which judgment had been given against McHenry. On the 15th of December the adjourned meeting was held, and again adjourned to the 12th of January, 1880. After this there were several more such adjournments from time to time, and on the 15th of November, 1882, the meeting was adjourned to the 28th of March, 1883. Meanwhile the appeal in Jewitt v. McHenry had been heard by the Court of Appeal and dismissed; and at the time the present appeal came on, McHenry had presented an appeal to the House of Lords in Jewitt v. McHenry, and that appeal was still pending.

At none of the adjourned meetings had any resolutions been passed for a liquidation or composition. On the 30th of January, 1883, three creditors applied to the Registrar, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125. sub-s. 12, to have the debtor adjudicated a bankrupt.

The Registrar refused the application, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate under sub-section 12, where no resolutions for liquidation or composition had been passed. The creditors appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and Sidney Woolf, for the appellants.—The only object of the course which has been taken was to delay the creditors. The Court has power under the sub-section to adjudicate, although no resolutions for liquidation or composition have been passed. Reasonable adjournments may be made—Ex parte Till; in re Ratcliffe (1)—but these are beyond all reason.

[They were stopped by the Court.]

Edward Clarke, Q.C., and Finlay Knight, for the debtor.—The sub-section does not apply, although rules 266 and 267 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, may do so.

JESSEL, M.R.—We all think that the construction put on sub-section 12 by the Registrar is incorrect. We think it applies, although no resolutions for liquidation by arrangement or composition have been passed. We therefore discharge the Registrar's order, and remit the case to him to deal with the application on its merits. We reserve the costs here and in the Court below.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., and LINDLEY, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Munns & Longden, for appellants; G. A. Sedgwick, for debtor.

---

(1) 44 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 103; Law Rep. 10 Chanc. 631.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
1883.
April 3.

In re THE PHOTOGRAPHIC ARTISTS' CO-OPERATIVE COMPANY (LIMITED).

Company—Winding-up Order—Appeal—Security for Costs.

Where a company, which has been ordered to be wound up on the ground that it is unable to pay its debts, is the sole appellant from the winding-up order, security for the costs of the appeal must be given.

On the 15th of February, 1883, the above-named company was ordered to be wound up by Chitty J., on the ground that it was unable to pay its debts.

The company appealed against the order.

The respondent to the appeal now applied that the company might be ordered to give security for the costs of the appeal.

Davey, Q.C., Romer, Q.C., and Boome, for the motion, relied on the dictum of James, L.J., in In re The Diamond Fuel Company (1), that whenever an order absolute for winding up a company has been made, and that order is appealed from by the company itself, without any one else being made responsible for costs, the Court will entertain an application for security for costs.

Ince, Q.C., and Bramwell Davis, for the company, contra, contended that there was no necessity for directing security to be given. The costs of a petitioning creditor who obtains a winding-up order are made by the Companies Acts a first charge on the assets. Therefore, if the appeal fails, the respondent will, according to the usual practice, get his costs out of the assets of the company, which are more than sufficient for the purpose.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., said:—I am of opinion that security for costs must be given by the company. It has been suggested that the proper mode of dealing with this application will be to direct the costs of the respondent, in the event of the appeal being unsuccessful, to be paid out of the assets; but the effect of that would be to pay them out of the assets which ought to go to the creditors. The general principle, as stated by Lord Justice James in the case of In re The Diamond Fuel Company, (1) is, in my opinion, quite correct. As a general rule, where a company is ordered to be wound up, and is itself the sole appellant from that order, security for the costs of the appeal must be given.

COTTON, L.J., said:—I also am of the same opinion. The company has been ordered to be wound up because it is unable to pay its debts. In such a case it is only reasonable that the company who put the Court of Appeal in motion, in order, if possible, to obtain a reversal of the winding-up order, should give some security for the costs of the appeal in order to relieve the assets from the burden of bearing those costs in case the appeal should be unsuccessful. In future, as a general rule, where a company which has been ordered to be wound up on the ground that it is unable to pay its debts is the sole appellant from that winding-up order, security for the costs of the appeal must be given.

Solicitors—Barnard & Co., for applicant; A. R. & H. Steele, for the company.

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 301; Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 400.

FRY, J.
1883.
April 7.

In re GLOAG AND MILLER'S CONTRACT.

Vendor and Purchaser—Title—Restrictive Covenants—Waiver.

A purchaser by making structural alterations after notice of restrictive covenants was held to have waived his right to object to the title on the ground of the restrictions.

This was a summons under the Vendors and Purchasers Act, 1874, taken out by F. S. Miller, the purchaser of a freehold house, to have it declared that a good title had not been shewn, and to obtain the return of 1,500*l.* he had paid by way of deposit or part payment.

A written agreement for sale, dated the 23rd of November, 1882, had been signed by the vendor in the following terms:—"I, Joseph Richardson Gloag, hereby agree to sell Athole Lodge, Enfield, with all outhouses thereto belonging, also the ground included in my titles thereto, freehold, for twenty-four hundred pounds, subject to delivery of valid title to him," and the purchaser had signed an acceptance of the contract.

The vendor was registered as proprietor of the property in fee with an absolute title, subject to certain conditions annexed—namely, that "Not more than one house, with suitable offices, shall be built upon any part of the land transferred to Joseph Richardson Gloag, until the expiration of thirty years from the 20th day of November, 1882, and such house to be used only as a private dwelling-house. The trees on the said land shall not be cut down, except so far as may be necessary for the erection of such house. The plans for such house, and all requisite fences, shall be approved by the surveyor for the time being of Henry Graves and J. Taylor Smith, or the survivor of them, or his heirs, their or his assigns. No earth or gravel shall be taken from the said land, except for the building to be erected thereon."

The purchaser at once took possession of the property, and on the 27th of October, 1882, paid 1,500*l.*, part of the purchase-money, to the vendor. And (as the Judge held on the evidence), with notice of some, at least, of the restrictive conditions, made structural alterations of the premises, which had not been completed.

Everitt, Q.C., and Maidlow, for the summons.—The existence of the restrictive conditions is good ground for rejecting the title—Andrew v. Aitken (1) and In re Higgins and Hickman's Contract (2). The purchaser had no notice, when he took possession and made the alterations, of the conditions; even if he had, his doing so was no waiver of his right to reject the title, unless the objection were removed—Cato v. Thompson (3), Bown v. Stenson (4) and Knatchbull v. Rupert (5).

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C. (Methold with him), for the vendor, referred to Burnell v. Brown (6).

FRY, J. (without calling on counsel for the vendor).—Two questions have been argued before me. The first is whether the purchaser's right to a good title was repelled by communications or notice given before contract. The other is whether, to any extent, there has been a waiver of the purchaser's right to a good title by any subsequent acts of his.

In my view, the law relating to the first point stands in this way. Where the contract is silent as to a good title, and the right to a good title is merely a term of the contract implied by law, that implied term may be rebutted by notice, and if the vendor has said he could not make out a perfectly good title to the freehold, such notice will repel the right to a clear title; but if the contract expressly provides for a good title, inasmuch as such notice would be inconsistent with the contract, the notice is unavailing, and whatever notice was previously given, the purchaser would be entitled to reject the contract on failure to make out a good title. In the present case it appears to me that the words, "subject to delivery of valid title to him," are an express reservation of the right to have a good title, and no notice which might have been given would enure so as to enable the vendor to exonerate himself from his liability under the contract to shew a good title.

So far I agree with the contention of the applicant. Then arises this question, Has he waived his right by any acts subsequent to the contract? And before considering the facts of the case, I take the opportunity of observing that, in my judgment, there is a broad distinction in cases where the contract provides for the title, and also possession before title is shewn, and cases in which possession is taken

(1) Ante, p. 294; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 219.
(2) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 772; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 95.
(3) Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 616.
(4) 24 Beav. 631.
(5) 3 Mer. 140.
(6) 1 J. & W. 168.

In re Gloag and Miller's Contract.

without express stipulation. And again, there is a distinction between acts done, with knowledge of defects of title which can be removed, and such acts done with knowledge of defects which cannot be removed, which will amount to a waiver of the right to object. For example, supposing the purchaser knows of the existence of a mortgage, and notwithstanding takes possession, so doing would not be a waiver of his right to have the mortgage paid off. On the other hand, if there were a right of sporting over the property bought, and the purchaser went into possession, notwithstanding that he knew of the right and that it was incapable of being got rid of by the vendor, there would be sufficient to shew waiver.

[After weighing the evidence, his Lordship continued :] The acts of the purchaser appear to me very strong acts on the part of the purchaser knowing, I repeat, the conditions, and I think that he has brought the case within the principle of the earlier cases, where the purchaser knows of conditions or defects of title over which the vendor has no control, and notwithstanding that thinks fit to take possession and make structural alterations, he has waived his right to object to the particular conditions of which he had notice.

The summons was dismissed with costs.

Solicitors—Travers, Smith & Braithwaite, for the summons; H. Tayler, for the vendor.

PEARSON, J. } BALLARD v. TOMLINSON.
1883. }
May 4. }

Practice—Order at Chambers—Entry—Enforcement—Consolidated Order XXXV. rule 32.

An order made by the chief clerk in chambers cannot be enforced by writ of attachment until after entry.

Motion by the plaintiff for liberty to issue a writ of attachment against the defendants for their contempt in not answering interrogatories delivered by the plaintiff under an order of the 9th of February, 1883, by which order the defendants were ordered to answer the same within a certain time after delivery. The time allowed for answering had been extended, but the extended time had expired.

The order of the 9th of February, 1883, was an order made by the chief clerk in chambers, and had not been entered or served as entered.

De Castro, for the motion.

Vaughan Hawkins, contra.—Since the order was not served as entered, and has, in fact, never been entered at all, and since entry and service of the order as entered are required before an order can be enforced, even if made by the chief clerk in chambers, the motion cannot succeed—Consolidated Order XXXV. rule 32, Daniell's Practice (1), Seton on Decrees (2) and Tolson v. Jervis (3).

De Castro, in reply.—It is not the practice to enter chamber orders.

PEARSON, J.—Although it is a common thing in ordinary cases not to take the trouble of entering orders made by the chief clerk at chambers, which is thought to occasion unnecessary expense, yet in face of the express rule to which I have been referred, I cannot hold that such an order can be enforced unless it has been entered; and I must therefore refuse this motion, with costs.

Solicitors—G. H. K. & G. A. Fisher, for plaintiff; Wright & Pilley, agents for Ruston, Clark & Ruston, Brentford, for defendants.

(1) 6th ed. p. 810.
(2) 4th ed. p. 1560.
(3) 8 Beav. 364.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 1.

Ex parte WILKINSON; in re BERRY.

Bankruptcy—Assignment by Debtor of all his Property to secure Existing Debt—Agreement to make Further Advances—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 6, sub-s. 2.

Where a debtor assigns the whole of his property as security for an existing debt, and the assignee makes a bona fide promise to make further advances, the deed will not necessarily be fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 6, sub-s. 2, although the agreement to make further advances be not technically binding at law or in equity.

If there is a bona fide arrangement to enable the debtor to continue his business the deed will not be declared void as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the debtor.

Ex parte Dann (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 290; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 26) distinguished.

Joseph Berry, the debtor in this case, carried on business as a cotton-spinner. In June, 1882, he was in difficulties—that is, he wanted a supply of cotton for his business and had not the money to pay for it. At this time he owed 885*l.* to Seville & Co., his brokers, for cotton supplied, and they declined to let him have any more on credit. In order to induce them to continue the supply, Berry gave them a bill of sale, dated the 7th of June, 1882, by which he assigned to them all the engines, trade machinery, plant, stock, utensils, articles, personal chattels and things belonging to him and used by him in his mill by way of mortgage to secure the payment of the 885*l.* then due, and further advances, not exceeding in the whole 1,250*l.* The deed was registered as a bill of sale, and after its execution Seville & Co. supplied Berry with cotton nearly to the specified amount.

On the 4th of August, 1882, Berry filed a liquidation petition, a balance of 1,186*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* being then due from him to Seville & Co.

On the application of the trustee in the liquidation the Judge of the Oldham County Court made an order declaring that the bill of sale was fraudulent and void as against the trustee, and an act of bankruptcy, as being an assignment of substantially the whole of the debtor's property to secure an existing debt without a sufficient present advance. Seville & Co. appealed to the Chief Judge.

Winslow, Q.C., and French, for the appellants, relied on Ex parte Threlfall (1), Ex parte Winder; in re Winstanley (2) and Ex parte King (3).

Horton Smith, Q.C., and S. Taylor, for the trustee, cited Smith v. Cannan (4), Ex parte Hawker (5), Ex parte Foxley (6) and Ex parte Dann (7).

BACON, C.J., being of opinion that there was a bona fide engagement entered into to enable the debtor to carry on his business, and that such engagement was duly performed by the appellants, declared the bill of sale good.

The trustee appealed.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and S. Taylor, for the appellant.—A promise or understanding to make further advances is not of itself sufficient to support an assignment of the whole of a debtor's property as security for an existing debt and further advances, even if the advances are afterwards actually made—Ex parte Dann (7).

[JESSEL, M.R.—That case does not decide that there must be a binding agreement. The principle is laid down in Robson on Bankruptcy (8).]

There is no ground for reversing the decision of the County Court Judge, who

(1) 46 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 8.
(2) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 89; Law Rep. 1 Ch. D. 560.
(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 109; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 256.
(4) 2 E. & B. 35.
(5) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 34; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 214.
(6) Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 515.
(7) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 290; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 26.
(8) 4th ed. 133.

had the witnesses before him. See also Ex parte King (3), Ex parte Ellis(9), Ex parte Greener (10) and Ex parte Foxley (6).

Winslow, Q.C., and Bigham, for the respondents.—There was a bona fide present advance to enable the debtor to carry on his business; the bill of sale was therefore not fraudulent as against the trustee—Ex parte Fisher (11), Ex parte King (3) and Ex parte Winder (2).

JESSEL, M.R.—I am satisfied that the debtor did by this deed assign the bulk of his property. He did it no doubt under great pressure; he could not go on without further supplies of cotton. The mortgagees were the persons to supply the cotton if any one did, and they agreed to continue the supply up to a total amount of 1,250*l.*, including the debt then owing to them, which appears by the recital in the deed to have amounted to nearly 900*l.* There was therefore to be an advance to the extent of 350*l.* over and above the amount which was then owing. The deed recites an agreement to that effect on the part of the mortgagees, on condition that security should be given to them for the amount then owing, and also for any further advance up to the total amount of 1,250*l.* If there was really a bona fide agreement on the part of the mortgagees to give the further supply of cotton with the view of enabling the debtor to carry on his business, it appears to me that the transaction would not be an act of bankruptcy, even assuming that the deed included the whole of the debtor's assets. Was this then such a bona fide agreement, or was it a mere pretence to secure payment of the existing debt? I should like to be able to say that the evidence was more satisfactory than it is. But there are two answers to be made. In the first place this is an appeal from the Chief Judge, and he has come to the conclusion on the evidence that the transaction was a bona fide one; and before we can reverse his decision we must be satisfied that he was wrong. In the second place, the obligation was on the trustee to shew that the transaction was not a bona fide one, and we must be satisfied that he has discharged his obligation. In both these points of view I think the evidence is deficient. I by no means adopt the view that the contract by the mortgagee to make further advances must be a binding contract in this sense, that the specific performance of it could be enforced in equity, or damages for the breach of it recovered at law. The meaning of the law on this subject is that the validity of the deed depends upon the question whether it was a fraudulent deed —that is, executed in order to defeat or delay creditors. Every one who is engaged in or acquainted with business matters knows that business men are in the habit of acting on what I may call "honour contracts," contracts which are not binding in law, contracts of a vague and indefinite character the specific performance of which could not be enforced in equity, nor could damages for the breach of them be recovered at law. But business men act upon such contracts every day. If a debtor says to his creditor, "Will you continue supplying me with goods on credit," and the creditor says, "I will, if you give me such a security," and no definite time is fixed during which the supply is to last (the creditor may even say "I will go on supplying you as long as you are doing well in your business"), the debtor may be able to rely on the character of the creditor, and may be content with his mere promise. And it appears to me that, if it is a bona fide promise, made not for the mere purpose of securing the existing debt, but to enable the debtor to carry on his business as before, if it is a bona fide arrangement on both sides, the mere fact that there is not a technically binding contract to make further advances is not sufficient to lay the arrangement open to the objection that it was made to defeat or delay creditors, and therefore fraudulent and void as an act of bankruptcy. In the present case, indeed, I think that contract was much more definite than that. I can see nothing on the face of it to lead to the conclusion that it was a fiction. One of the parties has sworn that it was not, and he was not cross-examined. The debtor says that he was in such a state of embarrassment that he could not go on. He did not, however, communicate to the creditors in what a melancholy state his affairs were, and it does not appear that they knew it. After the arrangement in question was made they actually supplied him with goods to very nearly the amount mentioned in the deed. That is evidence of their bona fides, evidence that they always intended to supply the goods. Looking at the arrangement as a whole, and that is the proper way to look at it, I think the evidence falls short of shewing that it was a mere scheme to obtain payment of the pre-existing debt.

(9) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 159; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 797.

(10) 46 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 769.

(11) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 62; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 636.

On the whole, though it is a case of some suspicion, I do not, as a Judge of Appeal, feel that I am in a position to differ from the conclusion of the Chief Judge. The appeal must be dismissed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The question is, whether the security which was given to the respondents amounted to an act of bankruptcy within sub-section 2 of section 6 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Let us see what sort of conveyances or dispositions are fraudulent within that sub-section. It would, I think, be dangerous to lose sight of the statutory enactment in considering the tests of its application. The first thing which suggests itself as coming within the words is a fraudulent preference, and I think the County Court Judge regarded the transaction rather as a fraudulent preference. I do not, however, think that the evidence supports that view; nor has the appeal been argued on that footing. It is suggested that the deed is an act of bankruptcy, because it is an assignment of the whole of the debtor's property in consideration of an existing debt. No doubt that is one of the tests for determining whether a deed is fraudulent; but in applying that test we must not lose sight of the words of the statutory enactment, and we must have regard to the deed itself and to all the circumstances of the case. The deed contains a recital that the mortgagees had agreed to supply the debtor with cotton up to a certain amount. They did not execute the deed, but still the recital is evidence of an agreement on their part to supply him with that which he needed in order to carry on his business, and they did in fact supply him with it. It appears to me that the case is one of some difficulty and suspicion; but, having listened to the argument, I am of opinion that the burden of proof being on the trustee, the materials are insufficient for upsetting the deed. It is too doubtful a case to justify us in coming to the conclusion that the transaction was fraudulent.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I agree in what has been said as to the facts, as well as in the view of the law which has been expressed by the Master of the Rolls.

Solicitors—Hamlin & Grammer, agents for Joseph Whitaker, Oldham, for trustee; W. W. Wynne & Son, agents for Simpson & North, Liverpool, for the mortgagees.

POLLOCK, B., for PEARSON, J. 1883. Feb. 17. April 19.

GREEN v. HUMPHREYS.

Statute of Limitations—Absolute Acknowledgment of Debt.

The defendant, whose debt to the plaintiff was barred by the Statute of Limitations, on the 18th of October, 1879, wrote to him the following letter: "At that time (next Christmas) both principal and interest will have been paid in full":—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute.

Action with witnesses.

This was an action by the executors of the will of the late John Humphreys, claiming an account of what was due by the defendant to the plaintiffs for principal moneys advanced by John Humphreys to the defendant, together with interest on the amount of such principal moneys for the time being remaining unpaid. No payment, on account of principal or interest, had been made since the year 1859.

The defendant by his statement of defence relied on the Statute of Limitations.

In answer to this defence the plaintiffs gave in evidence a letter, dated the 18th of October, 1879, written by the defendant to John Humphreys, containing this passage, "I thank you for your very kind intentions to give up the rent of Tyn-y-Burwydd next Christmas, but I am happy to say at that time both principal and interest will have been paid in full."

In the opinion of the Court the evidence shewed that the words "principal and interest" referred to the particular debt due from the defendant to John Humphreys.

The main question in argument was whether this letter was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations.

Higgins, Q.C., and George Henderson, for the plaintiffs.—The letter of October, 1879, is an absolute acknowledgment in writing sufficient to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Such an acknowledgment is sufficient although the debt was barred at the date of the letter—Chasemore v. Turner (1). They also referred to Quincey v. Sharpe (2) and Skeat v. Lindsay (3).

Crossley, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, for the defendant.—The letter is not a sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. "The new promise, and not the old debt, is the measure of the creditor's right"—Philips v. Philips (4). They also referred to Kennett v. Milbank (5).

Judgment reserved.

POLLOCK, B. (on April 9).—In this case the plaintiffs, who are the executors of John Humphreys deceased, claimed against the defendant payment of 328*l.* At the trial it was proved to my satisfaction that this amount was due in account from the defendant to the plaintiffs' testator. It also appeared, however, that the amount had been due for more than six years, and that no payment for principal or interest had been made to the said John Humphreys or the plaintiffs, or to any other person on their behalf, for upwards of six years before the commencement of the action.

The defendant having pleaded the Statute of Limitations, the only question between the parties was whether the debt was barred. In answer to this defence, the plaintiffs gave in evidence a letter dated the 18th of October, 1879, as to which the defendant contended that there was no evidence to shew that it related to the debt in question; and, secondly, that assuming that it did relate to the debt in question, it did not contain any acknowledgment sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Upon the first point I was satisfied at the hearing, upon the whole of the evidence, that the letter related to the debt in question.

With regard to the second point, I took time to consider my judgment. The words of the letter in question relied upon by the plaintiffs are as follows, "I thank you for your very kind intentions to give up the rent of Tyn-y-Burwydd next Christmas, but I am happy to say at that time both principal and interest will have been paid in full."

The conclusion at which I arrive is, that the mention of "both principal and interest" with their context is a sufficient acknowledgment of the existence of a debt from which to imply a promise to pay; and if this is so, the case is taken out of the statute, unless there be any expressions in the residue of the letter which shew that the promise is limited or made conditional upon the happening of some particular event. Now the words "will have been paid," so far from imposing any condition express or implied, almost amount to a promise to pay. They do not merely convey a hope, which has been thought to be insufficient, but denote

(1) 45 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 66; Law Rep. 10 Q.B. 500.
(2) 45 Law J. Rep. Exch. 347; Law Rep. 1 Ex. D. 72.
(3) 46 Law J. Rep. Exch. 249; Law Rep. 2 Ex. D. 314.
(4) 3 Hare, 300.
(5) 8 Bing. 38; 1 Law J. Rep. C.P. 8.

rather an intention to pay, with the power of doing so.

I was referred during the argument to several cases in support of the plaintiffs' contention; but as each decided case turns so much upon the particular language used in the document relied upon to take the debt out of the statute, but little would be gained by noticing them. There is one, however, Chasemore v. Turner (1), decided by the Exchequer Chamber, of which I may say that it appears to me to do more than cover the present case. The words used there were these, "The old account between us, which has been standing over so long, has not escaped our memory; and as soon as we can get our affairs arranged, we will see you are paid. Perhaps in the meantime you will let your clerk send me an account of how it stands." Some of the Judges, both in the Queen's Bench and on appeal, thought that the expression "as soon as we can get our affairs arranged" implied a condition; but the majority in the Exchequer Chamber held the letter to be sufficient.

There will be judgment therefore for the plaintiffs, in accordance with paragraph 1 of the statement of claim.

Solicitors—Hunters, Gwatkin & Haynes, for plaintiffs; Davidson & Morriss, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
March 16.

DUTTON v. THOMPSON.

Voluntary Settlement—Costs of Trustee—Contract for—Appeal for Costs only—Materiality of Provisions in Settlement.

Where the Court is asked to set aside a voluntary settlement, the question to be considered is whether the settlor really understood what he was about in making the settlement, and the particular provisions in the settlement are immaterial, except in so far as their character shews that the settlor could not have understood the effect of the settlement.

When a settlement has been set aside, the contract of trusteeship under which a trustee is held to contract for payment of his costs, charges and expenses, cannot be treated as existing, and an appeal against the order of a Judge directing the trustee to pay the costs is an appeal for costs within section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and is not within the decision of Turner v. Hancock (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 517; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 303).

This was an appeal from a decision of Bristowe, V.C., setting aside a voluntary settlement and making the appellant, the trustee of the settlement, pay the costs of the action.

The nephew of the appellant, the plaintiff, was a young man whom, upon the evidence, the Court held to be a man of somewhat below the ordinary average of intellect, and he was entitled absolutely under a will to a legacy of no great amount. The young man being improvident, a settlement was prepared, at the suggestion of his stepmother, by the appellant, whereby the legacy was assigned by the plaintiff to the appellant upon trust as the plaintiff should, with the consent of the trustee, appoint, such consent to be in the absolute discretion of the trustee; in default of appointment, to the plaintiff for life, then to his children, with remainder to his stepmother absolutely, if then living, and with an ultimate remainder to the settlor's next-of-kin. The settlement was read over to the plaintiff by the appellant, and the settlor expressed his approval; but the Court came to the conclusion upon the evidence that he did not really understand the true effect of the settlement upon his position and his interest in the legacy, the Court holding at the same time that there was no suspicion of any mala fides on the part of the appellant and the stepmother, but that the settlement had been made with the honest intention of benefiting the settlor.

The settlor subsequently brought the present action against the trustee to set aside the deed, and Bristowe, V.C., gave the judgment above mentioned. It appeared that the Vice-Chancellor was considerably influenced by the clause in the deed making the consent of the trustee requisite to any appointment by the settlor, as shewing an unworthy desire on the trustee's part to obtain control over the fund.

The father and stepmother appeared in the Court below and disclaimed all interest under the settlement.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Clare, for the appellant.—The Vice-Chancellor has set aside the deed, and not only deprived the defendant of his costs, but has further ordered him to pay the whole costs of the action. The appeal is against the whole judgment, but it is immaterial to the appellant whether the settlement be upheld or set aside; he only wants his costs, and costs, charges and expenses to which he is entitled as trustee.

[JESSEL, M.R.—You must maintain the settlement—otherwise it is an appeal for costs only. If the settlement is set aside, the costs are not trustee's costs. A trustee of a settlement which turns out to be void gets no costs.]

Turner v. Hancock (1) was the case of a voluntary settlement where the trustee was held entitled to appeal for his costs.

[COTTON, L.J.—There the action was to carry out the trusts of the settlement; here it is against the trusts.]

Then we submit that the deed should be allowed to stand.

The Vice-Chancellor appears to have discovered in the provision in the settlement requiring the consent of the trustee to any appointment by the settlor an unworthy motive in the trustee to acquire power over the settlor's actions; but the consent of the trustee to the exercise of a power of appointment is a reasonable requisition and has met with judicial approval. In Everitt v. Everitt (2), although a voluntary settlement was set aside on the ground of improvidence—still the trustees were allowed their costs, charges and expenses properly incurred; and there Vice-Chancellor James said that he thought that if the settlor had put herself under the control of trustees the settlement might have stood if she had reserved herself a power of revocation, with the consent of the trustees, so as to meet the exigencies of life; and in Phillips v. Mullings (3) a voluntary settlement was upheld, although the settlor had no power of revocation, no power of appointment in default of issue, and no power to appoint new trustees.

Rigby, Q.C., and Dr. Pankhurst, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—There are two points in this case—the first, whether the deed can stand or not; and on that question the trustee, although he has no interest in upholding the deed, can appeal, because he has been ordered by the Judge below to pay the costs of the action. The second point is, whether, assuming that the deed is set aside, the trustee can appeal as to that part of the decision which orders him to pay costs.

On the first point I think that the deed cannot stand, because to my mind it is clear that the plaintiff did not understand what he was doing when he executed it.

I emphatically disagree with many of the decisions which are to be found reported, in accordance with which deeds of settlement have been set aside, upon the ground that they have contained provisions which the Court thought were not such as should have been inserted in the deed, having regard to the benefit of the settlor. It is not, in my opinion, the duty of the Court to set aside deeds because the provisions contained in them are not such as the Court may think should properly have been inserted.

If the person making the settlement really understands what he is about, and intends to make the settlement in the form in which he does in fact make it, it is not the duty of the Court to set that settlement aside because it turns out to be prejudicial to the interest of the settlor.

It may be, of course, that the provisions contained in the settlement are so absurd and so improvident that no reasonable person could possibly have inserted them, or that such provisions were omitted as no

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 517; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 303.

(2) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 777; Law Rep. 10 Eq. 405.

(3) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 211; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 244.

reasonable person would have omitted, and that may be a reason for shewing that the settlor did not understand the deed he executed—but that is the only way in which the particular provisions in the settlement can be used.

In the present case, I do not think that the plaintiff understood what he was doing, although I am not imputing any blame to the defendant or any one else; and if I had been the Judge of first instance I should not have ordered the defendant to pay the costs. [His Lordship went through the evidence, from which he concluded that the plaintiff had not had the effect of the settlement upon his position fully explained to him, and that he was a person of less than the ordinary average of intellect, and proceeded:]

A person who prepares a settlement in this way must be able to shew clearly that the settlor did in fact fully understand what he was doing. In my opinion, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, so far as regards the question of setting aside this settlement, is right. As regards the costs, I myself should not have made this uncle, who acted entirely with a view to the benefit of his nephew, pay the costs; but I fear that it was a question for the discretion of the Vice-Chancellor, and the Vice-Chancellor has exercised that discretion.

There is no appeal from the discretion of the Judge below, and the appeal cannot be maintained simply by saying that it is an appeal upon the whole of the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, unless that judgment be varied in some essential particular. The appellant says that he is a trustee, and, as such, entitled to his costs, but that is only so when he comes into Court under the trusts of a settlement; but here the Court has set aside the deed on which the trustee bases the contract under which he is entitled to his costs.

I regret to say that the appeal must be dismissed, and with costs.

COTTON, L.J.—The Vice-Chancellor has set aside the settlement and directed the trustee to pay the costs, and the avowed intention of the trustee is to get rid of the decree so far as regards the question of costs, it being immaterial to him whether the rest of the decree stands or is reversed. It has been contended by the appellant that even if we do not reverse that part of the decision which sets aside the deed, we could entertain the question whether he ought to pay the costs; but, in my opinion, we cannot.

A trustee is entitled to his costs when the trust of which he is made trustee is administered, and as against the persons who come in under the trust he is entitled to his costs out of the trust fund; but here the claim is adverse to the trust, and the plaintiff comes in as against the settlement and as against the trustee, and therefore the right of the trustee no longer exists. I must say myself that the Vice-Chancellor was apparently influenced by the idea that the defendant was actuated by an unworthy motive; but I see no ground whatever for imputing to him any such motive. I think he intended to do that which he thought would be a benefit to his nephew; but still I do not think we can interfere with the decision of the Vice-Chancellor as to costs.

Can the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor setting aside the deed be disturbed? In my opinion it cannot. Many cases, undoubtedly, have gone to this, that the Court has considered whether, having regard to the position of the party, the provisions in the deed are those which the Court would think fit to be introduced. When the claim is between the settlor and the persons claiming (under the settlement) adversely against him, then I think the provisions of the deed are material; but where, as here, the question is whether the trustee is entitled to retain the money as against the settlor, we should not then enter into the provisions of the settlement. In such a case the question is whether the settlor understood what he was doing—and by that I do not mean merely was the document read over to him so that if he were a person of average abilities he would be able to follow the limitations—but did he (to take the present case) know his position under the will, how his position under the will and his future prospects would be affected by the settlement; and if the proper conclusion is that he did not, the Court ought to relieve him from that instrument.

[His Lordship went through the facts of Dutton v. Thompson, App.

the case, and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not understand the effect of the deed upon his position.]

LINDLEY, L.J., concurred on both points.

Solicitors—Gregory, Rowcliffes & Rawle, agents for Parkinson, Thompson & Co., Liverpool, for appellant; Chester & Co., agents for Woodall & Marriott, Manchester, for respondent.

CHITTY, J.
1882.
Nov. 21, 25.
Dec. 6, 7, 14.
1883.
Jan. 23.
April 4.

In re TOOTAL'S TRUSTS.

Domicile — "Anglo-Chinese" — Extra-Territorial Jurisdiction—Legacy Duty.

Notwithstanding the constitution of the Supreme Court of China and Japan, and the jurisdiction conferred on that Court by the Order in Council of China and Japan, 1865, over British subjects having a "fixed place of residence in China," a native of this country cannot acquire by residence in the empire of China an Anglo-Chinese domicile analogous to that known as Anglo-Indian, and the estate of a British subject whose fixed place of residence is in the Empire of China is, on death, within the operation of the Legacy Duty Acts.

A person cannot become domiciled as a member of a community which is not a community possessing supreme or sovereign territorial power.

Petition, under the Trustee Relief Act, by the legatees under the will of J. B. Tootal, who died, in 1878, at Shanghai in the Empire of China, for the distribution of a fund paid into Court by the trustees and executors of the will.

The question raised by the petition was whether a native of this country can acquire by residence in China a new domicile, so as to exempt his personal estate on death from the operation of the Legacy Duty Acts; the contention of the petitioners being that the testator was at the date of his death domiciled in Shanghai, having acquired by residence in China a domicile analogous to that called Anglo-Indian, and which might be called Anglo-Chinese.

The testator was born in England of English parents, and left England in 1852 for Australia, where he resided until 1858, when he returned to England for a few months. In 1859 he again left England, and went to reside permanently in China. From 1859 to 1862 he lived in the colony of Hong Kong, and afterwards, until the date of his death, at Shanghai in the Empire of China. In 1864 and 1873 he paid two short visits to England. After 1859 he never had any home or residence in Great Britain, and the evidence went to shew that for some years before his death he had determined to reside permanently at Shanghai, and had relinquished all intention of ever returning to England. At the time of his death, and for some years previously, he was the manager and part proprietor of several newspapers and periodicals published at Shanghai, including the North China Herald and North China Daily News, and he was also a partner in a printer's business carried on at the same place. The testator's will was proved by the executors, in Her Majesty's Supreme Court of China and Japan, at Shanghai, and had not been proved in England. By it legacies were bequeathed both to persons residing in England and persons residing in China, and of the latter class of legatees one at least was a native Chinese subject. The executors, having realised the estate in China, partly distributed it amongst the legatees there resident, and transmitted to England for distribution amongst the legatees residing in this country the remainder of the assets available for that purpose. The Commissioners of the Inland Revenue, having received a communication from the solicitors to whom the fund was transmitted, claimed legacy duty on the whole of the testator's personal estate. It was stated that the testator also died possessed of real estate in Shanghai; but it did not appear that any claim for succession or other duty had been made in respect of the real estate or its proceeds.

At the commencement of the hearing the petitioners contended that the testator might have acquired a Chinese domicile; but this contention was abandoned.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and Method, for the petitioners.—No duty is payable, for the testator's domicile cannot be said to be English. It is submitted that he has acquired what may be called an Anglo-Chinese domicile, analogous to that called Anglo-Indian, and established by the decisions in Bruce v. Bruce (1), The Attorney General v. Forbes (2), and cases cited Williams on Executors (3). Legacy duty was not payable in this country on legacies bequeathed by British subjects domiciled in India, the reason being that in India there was a separate legal jurisdiction, the constitution of which gave rise to a new domicile, which was outside the limits of the Legacy Duty Acts—Arnold v. Arnold (4), Forbes v. Jackson (5) and Thomson v. The Advocate-General (6). The Supreme Court at Shanghai owes its jurisdiction to the establishment of the Supreme Court of China and Japan. This Court was constituted under an Order in Council of the 9th of March, 1865, known as the China and Japan Order in Council, 1865—12 Hertslett's Commercial Treaties, 281—by section 57 of which Order (p. 293) it is ordered that "The Supreme Court shall be a Court of probate, and as such shall, as far as circumstances admit, have for and within China and Japan, with respect to the property of British subjects having at the time of death their fixed place of abode in China and Japan, all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to Her Majesty's Court of Probate in England." There is therefore in China a distinct jurisdiction for English residents, and therefore a distinct domicile for such English subjects as have their permanent residence or fixed abode in that country. If the testator had left his property to persons resident in China, instead of to persons resident in England, no question as to the payment of legacy duty would have arisen, for the Inland Revenue Commissioners would have had no means of enforcing their claims. Nor, indeed, have they any means of obtaining any information, for the Supreme Court of China is not, like the English Court of Probate, under an obligation to furnish Somerset House with copies of probate. In determining a question of domicile, birth is the weakest circumstance, fixed abode the strongest. The onus of proving that the testator had an English domicile is with the Crown.

Hood, for the executors and trustees of the will, referred to Westlake on Private International Law, pp. 262-3-5, to shew that in the case of Oriental settlements a change of domicile could be effected by a British subject becoming a member of a civil society which was not necessarily territorial.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.—It being admitted that the testator's domicile of origin was in England, the onus of proving that he acquired a new domicile rests with the petitioners. The liability to duty depends upon whether the person succeeding to the property becomes entitled by virtue of the law of this country, and therefore the only thing necessary for the Crown is to shew that the testator had an English domicile—Wallace v. The Attorney-General (7) and Thomson v. The Advocate-General (6).

The petitioners at first maintained that it was possible for the testator to have acquired a Chinese domicile. Having abandoned such contention, they have argued that there can be an Anglo-Chinese domicile, by analogy to that called Anglo-Indian. The first case which decided that a man's domicile can be changed by residence in India was Bruce v. Bruce (1), in which case the intestate died in 1783, at a time when this country had acquired a territorial jurisdiction in India, and the decision proceeded upon the footing that the deceased was domiciled in a country

(1) 2 Bos. & P. 229*n*.
(2) 2 Cl. & F. 48.
(3) 8th ed. pp. 1642 et. seq.
(4) 2 Myl. & Cr. 256; 6 Law J. Rep. Chanc.
(5) 2 Cr. & J. 382; 1 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 9; S.C. affirmed by H.L. sub. nom. The Attorney-General v. Jackson, 8 Bligh, N.S. 15.
(6) 12 Cl. & F. 1; 13 Sim. 153.
(7) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 124; Law Rep. 1 Chanc. 1.

subject to the laws of England. In the much later case of The Attorney-General v. Forbes (2) the intestate was domiciled in Bombay, where this country has exercised a territorial jurisdiction for some two hundred years. The analogy, therefore, between what has been termed Anglo-Chinese domicile and that known as Anglo-Indian fails. Domicile of origin, moreover, could not be lost by residence in a factory in a foreign country belonging to the countrymen of the domiciled—Phillimore on Domicile, 150, and Maltass v. Maltass (8).

The only question that remains is, Was the domicile of the testator non-territorial? The jurisdiction of Her Majesty at Shanghai, in China, is not a territorial jurisdiction, but a consular jurisdiction, established under treaties; and it cannot be shewn how a non-territorial jurisdiction confers a civil status, ascribing to the testator the character of a citizen of a so-called Anglo-Chinese community with personal rights of a particular kind. The determination of personal rights by the domicile of the person is derived from the universally binding character of territorial law. This being so, how can the establishment by treaty of an extra-territorial Court be said to create a distinct domicile, travelling with a person who has lived within its jurisdiction, and altering his relations with all persons outside such jurisdiction, and theirs with him? Unless there be a territorial jurisdiction effected by a cession of territory, the only power which a sovereign of one country can get within the dominions of another, by treaty or consular usage, or the like, is a jurisdiction between its own subjects; or, in other words, a treaty cannot, in the absence of a cession of territory, affect the relations of the subjects of other countries in their dealings with the subjects of the countries parties to the treaty. That the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Shanghai is of a non-territorial character can be seen from the fact that it has been created and lives by means of Acts of Parliament extending consular jurisdiction, and Orders in Council made in pursuance of those Acts, and by means of treaties between this country and China. If the Court of Probate at Shanghai were said to be not merely an auxiliary Court, having the power which exists in consuls of taking possession of the effects of deceased subjects, but also a Court having the power of distributing those assets against the rights of persons not subjects, it would have to be admitted that that Court, notwithstanding the peculiarity of its establishment, could decide upon the rights of Chinese subjects—for instance, what person, according to Chinese marriage law or Chinese custom, answered to the legatee in a bequest by an English-born testator, domiciled at Shanghai, of a legacy "to the wife of Sing Sing," a Chinaman?

With respect to the constitution of the Supreme Court at Shanghai, the learned counsel referred to the treaty of Nanking, 29th of August, 1842, art. 2, the General Regulations thereunder of July, 1843, Reg. 13, and the Supplementary Treaty of the 8th of October, 1843 (6 Hertslett's Com. Treaties, 121, 243 and 262); the Treaty of Tientsin, the 26th of June, 1858, art. 7, 15, 17 and 18 (11 Hertslett's Com. Treaties, 86); 6 & 7 Vict. c. 80, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94 (the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843), and the China and Japan Order in Council, 1865, made under those two Acts, s. 4 (12 Hertslett's Com. Treaties, 281, p. 284). For the history of the consular jurisdiction of the Court, and its extra-territorial jurisdiction, he referred to 4 Lawrence Commentaire sur Wheaton (Leipzig, F. A. Brockhaus, 1880), pp. 259–62.

Macnaghten, Q.C., in reply.—Anglo-Indian domicile is not Indian domicile, but English domicile with a qualification. The authorities shew that European communities can be established in an Oriental country with laws peculiar to themselves, and that persons can change their domicile by affiliation to such communities. Thus Lord Stowell in The Indian Chief (9), "With respect to establishments in Turkey, it was declared in the case of Mr. Fremeaux, in the last war, that a merchant carrying on trade at Smyrna, under the protection of the Dutch consul at Smyrna, was to be considered as a Dutchman; and in that case the ship and goods belonging to Mr. Fremeaux, being taken after the order of reprisals against Holland, were condemned as Dutch property. The same in China, and I may say generally throughout the East, persons admitted into a factory are not known in their own peculiar national character; and being not admitted to assume the character of the country, they are considered only in the character of that association or factory. The case alluded to . . . . was this. A Jew, living in a Dutch establishment under the sovereignty of the Rajah of Cochin on the coast of Malabar, claimed under the character of a subject of the Rajah of Old Cochin, but he was held by the Lords of Appeal to be a Dutchman; and I remember perfectly well in the later case of M. Constant de Rebecque, it was the opinion of the Lords, that although he was a Swiss by birth, and no Frenchman, yet if he had continued to trade in the French factory in China, which he had fortunately quitted before the time of capture, he would have been liable to be considered as a Frenchman." It was submitted that the testator had by residence and choice become a member of a community lawfully established in a foreign country and not amenable to the ordinary tribunals of this country, but bound together by law, which was English law no doubt, but English law with a difference, and which law did not incorporate the revenue laws of this country—that being the difference for the purposes of the present case. By the China and Japan Order in Council, 1865, s. 35 (12 Hertslett's Com. Treaties, 290), "All Her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, exercisable in China," is, "for and within the district of the consulate of Shanghai, vested exclusively in the Supreme Court as its ordinary jurisdiction." The Legacy Duty Acts are co-extensive with the United Kingdom only, and duty is only payable where the deceased dies domiciled within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts of this country, and where the person taking upon himself the burden of the executorship of the will, or of the administration of the effects of the deceased, has obtained probate or letters of administration in the Court of Probate in this country. If this country had not established a proper Court for the community to which the testator belonged, or if those who wished to make a title to his estate were compelled to come here and prove the will, the testator's estate might possibly be subject to duty; but the absence of this necessity, and the establishment of a distinct jurisdiction, entirely alter the case.

(8) 1 Robert. Ecc. Rep. 67.

(9) 3 Robin. 29–31.

The Legacy Duty Act (36 Geo. 3. c. 52), sections 4, 5, 6, 25, 27, 28, 29 and 30, The Attorney-General v. Napier (10), Bell v. Kennedy (11), Udny v. Udny (12), In re Wallop's Trusts (13). Maclaren on Wills and Successions (14) and 1 Jarman on Wills (15) were also referred to.

B. B. Rogers, and Bissill, for legatees, respondents to the petition.

CHITTY, J.—The question raised by this petition is, whether the personal estate of the testator J. B. Tootal is liable to legacy duty. [His Lordship stated the facts, and continued:] The liability of the personal estate of a testator or intestate to legacy duty under the Legacy Duty Act depends on his domicile at the date of his death. If such domicile is in Great Britain the duty is payable, if his domicile is out of Great Britain no duty is payable; and the facts of personal estate happening to be locally situate in Great Britain, or of the funds having been transmitted to Great Britain for the purpose of being paid to the legatees, are immaterial circumstances. The broad principle that the liability depends on domicile was established by the House of Lords in Thomson v. The Advocate-General (6), overruling the earlier decisions in conflict with that principle. The previous decision of the House of Lords in The Advocate-General v. Forbes (2) does not when explained conflict with Thomson v. The Attorney-General (6). As was pointed out by Lord Wensleydale in The Attorney-General v. Napier

(10) 6 Exch. Rep. 217; 20 Law J. Rep. Exch. 193.
(11) Law Rep. 1 Sc. App. 307.
(12) Ibid. 441.
(13) 1 De Gex, J. & S. 656; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 351.
(14) 4, par. 8.
(15) 4th ed. p. 3.

(10), the case of The Attorney-General v. Forbes (2) proceeded upon the assumption, which, so far as the facts are stated in the reports, was erroneous, that the domicile was in India, and it must be treated therefore as a case of domicile in India. The first and principal question therefore is, Where was the testator domiciled at the time of his death? It is admitted that the domicile of origin was in England. Therefore the burden of proof that he had acquired a new domicile of choice rests on the petitioners. The facts are not in dispute, and it is in these circumstances admitted by the petitioners that they cannot contend that the testator's domicile was Chinese. This admission is rightly made. The difference between the religion, laws, manners and customs of the Chinese and of Englishmen is so great as to raise every presumption against such a domicile, and brings the case within the principles laid down by Lord Stowell in his celebrated judgment in The Indian Chief (9), and by Dr. Lushington in Maltass v. Maltass (16), to the effect that the natural immiscibility of the Eastern and Western nations raises every presumption against the intention of British Christian subjects voluntarily becoming domiciled in the dominions of an Asiatic sovereign. It is, however, contended that the testator's domicile is what their counsel has termed "Anglo-Chinese," a term ingeniously invented by the counsel for the petitioners in analogy to the term Anglo-Indian. To make this contention intelligible it is necessary to state some further facts. Under the treaties between Her Majesty and the Emperor of China of 1842, 1843 and 1858, British subjects with their families and their establishments are allowed to reside, for the purpose of carrying on their mercantile pursuits without molestation, at Shanghai and certain other cities, and to establish warehouses, churches, hospitals and burial grounds. By the 15th clause of the treaty of 1858 it is stipulated that all questions in regard to the rights, whether of property or person, arising between British subjects shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the British authorities. By the same treaty provision is made for the settlement of disputes between British subjects and Chinese by the joint action of the British consul and the Chinese authorities, and also for the Chinese authorities themselves to afford protection to the persons and property of British subjects. The treaties do not contain any cession of territory so far as relates to Shanghai, and the effect of them is to confer in favour of British subjects special exemptions from the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the Emperor of China, and to permit them to enjoy their own law at the specified places. Similar treaties exist in favour of other European Governments and the United States. By virtue of these treaties, and of the statutes 6 & 7 Vict. c. 80 and c. 94, the Crown has, by an Order in Council of the 9th of March, 1865, constituted the Supreme Court at Shanghai. The first of these statutes, which is entitled, "An Act for the better government of Her Majesty's subjects resorting to China," enables Her Majesty by Order in Council to ordain, "for the government of her subjects within the dominions of the Emperor of China, or being within any ship or vessel at a distance of not more than 100 miles from the coast of China," any law or ordinance as effectually as "any such law or ordinance can be made by Her Majesty in Council for the government of her subjects within Hong Kong, which has been ceded to Her Majesty." The second of the statutes, commonly known as the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, after reciting that, by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance and other lawful means, Her Majesty has power or jurisdiction within divers countries and places out of her dominions, and that doubts have arisen how far the exercise of such power and jurisdiction is controlled by and dependent on the laws and customs of the realm, enacts that Her Majesty "may exercise any power or jurisdiction which she then has or at any time thereafter may have within any country or place out of her dominions in as ample a manner as if she had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory." The Order in Council by which the Supreme Court is established provides that all Her Majesty's jurisdiction exerciseable in China for the judicial hearing and determination of re Tootal's Trusts.

(16) 1 Robert. Ecc. Rep. pp. 79–81.

ns in difference between British sub- or between foreigners and British ts, or for the administration or con- f the property or possessions of h subjects, shall be exercised under ording to the provisions of the Order, ıot otherwise. It further provides ubject to the provisions of the Order, vil jurisdiction shall, as far as cir- ances admit, be exercised upon the ples of and in conformity with the on law, the rules of equity, the e law and other law for the time in force in and for England. The me Court so established is a Court r and equity, and a Court for matri- l causes, but without jurisdiction as olution or nullity or jactitation of age. It is a Court of probate, and h, "as far as circumstances admit," r and within China, with respect to operty of British subjects having at me of death "their fixed places of in China," all such jurisdiction the time being belongs to the of Probate in England. It has urisdiction for the safe custody of property of British subjects not g at the time of death their fixed in China or Japan. The exceptions the jurisdiction of the Court as a monial Court in regard to dissolution, y and jactitation of marriage are tant, and the effect of them is appa- to leave Englishmen subject to the iction of the Court for matrimonial in England in respect of the ex- l matters. Upon these facts it is ıded for the petitioners that there at the foreign port of Shanghai an ised community of British subjects endent of Chinese law and exempt Chinese jurisdiction, and not amen- to the ordinary tribunals of this ry, but bound together by law, which nglish law no doubt, but English ith this difference, that the English ue laws do not form part of it; and aid that by residence and choice the or becomes a member of this com- y, and as such acquires an Anglo- se domicile. The authorities cited pport of this contention for an Anglo- se domicile relate to the Anglo-Indian ile of persons in the covenanted ser- vice of the East India Company. These authorities are generally admitted to be anomalous. [See Dicey on Domicile (17).] They are explained by Lord Hatherley in his judgment in Forbes v. Forbes (18), and by Lord Justice Turner in Jopp v. Wood (19). The point that the animus manendi was inferred in law from the obligation to serve in India, as stated by Lord Hatherley, has no bearing on a case like the present, where the evidence is sufficient for general purposes to establish the animus manendi. But the observations of Lord Justice Turner that the East India Company was regarded as a foreign Government are material. That learned Judge said in Jopp v. Wood (19) (at p. 623), "At the time when those cases (that is, the cases on Anglo-Indian domicile) were decided, the Government of the East India Company was in a great degree, if not wholly, a separate and independent Government, foreign to the Government of this country, and it may well have been thought that persons who had contracted obligations with such Government for service abroad could not reasonably be considered to have intended to retain their domicile here. They, in fact, became as much estranged from this country as if they had become servants of a foreign Government." Lord Stowell, in his judgment in the case of The Indian Chief (9), shewed that in his time the sovereignty of the Great Mogul over the British territories in India was merely nominal, being, as he said, occasionally brought forward for purposes of policy; and that the actual authority of Government over those territories was exercised with full effect by this country, and the East India Company, a creature of this country. His observation as to the authority of the Government being exercised by this country was not really inconsistent with the passage above cited from Lord Justice Turner's judgment, for Lord Stowell was not addressing himself to the particular point for which I have cited Lord Justice Turner's judgment; and although the Government of British India was English, being carried on principally by the agency of the chartered company, it was for all

(17) Pp. 140, 141, and 337.
(18) Kay, 341; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 724.
(19) 4 De Gex, J. & S. 616.

In re Tootal's Trusts.

practical purposes a distinct Government from that of Great Britain, and in that sense it is, as Lord Justice Turner said, regarded as a foreign Government. At Shanghai there is a British consul, residing there by virtue of the treaties, but there is no Government by British authority existing there, and there is nothing which can be regarded as a separate or independent Government, and the analogy which the petitioners seek to establish with an Anglo-Indian domicile is not made out. There is no principle upon which such a domicile can be established. The British community at Shanghai, such as it is, resides on foreign territory; it is not a British colony, nor even a Crown colony, although by the statutes above referred to the Crown has, as between itself and its own subjects there, a jurisdiction similar to that exercised in conquered or ceded territory. Residence in a territory or country is an essential part of the legal idea of domicile. Domicile of choice, says Lord Westbury in Udny v. Udny (12), is a conclusion or inference which the law derives from the fact of a man fixing voluntarily his sole or chief residence in a particular place with the intention of continuing to reside there for an unlimited time. Lord Westbury speaks of residence in a particular place, and not of a man attaching himself to a particular community resident in the place. In Bell v. Kennedy (11), a similar expression is used by Lord Westbury—"Domicile is an idea of the law. It is the relation which the law creates between an individual and a particular locality or country." Lord Westbury therefore refers to locality or country, and not to a particular society subsisting in the locality or country. The difference of law, religion, habits and custom of the governing community may, as has already been pointed out, be such as to raise a strong presumption against the individual becoming domiciled in a particular country. But there is no authority in English law that a person can become domiciled as a member of a community which is not a community possessing supreme or sovereign territorial power. There may be, and indeed are, numerous examples of particular sects or communities residing within a territory governed by particular laws especially applicable to them. British India affords a familiar illustration of this. But the special laws applicable to such sects or communities are not laws of their own enactment. They are merely parts of the law of the governing community or supreme power. It may well be that a Hindoo or Mussulman settling in British India and attaching himself to his own religious sect there would acquire an Anglo-Indian domicile, and by virtue of such domicile would enjoy the civil status as to marriage, inheritance and the like accorded by the laws of British India to Hindoos or Mussulmans; and such civil status would differ materially from that of a European settling there and attaching himself to the British community. But the civil status of the Hindoo, the Mussulman and the European would in each case be regulated by the law of the supreme territorial power. In the present case the contention is for a domicile which may not improperly be termed extra-territorial. The sovereignty over the soil at Shanghai remains vested in the Emperor of China, with the exception that he has, by treaty, bound himself to permit British subjects to reside at the place for the purposes of commerce only, without interference on his part, and to permit the British Crown to exercise jurisdiction there over its own subjects, but over no other persons. According to the petitioners' argument the subjects or citizens of all the sovereign States who enjoy similar treaty privileges may acquire, under circumstances similar to those in the present case, a new domicile of choice. If, for instance, a citizen of the United States were to reside at Shanghai with the intention of remaining there permanently, and were to attach himself, as far as he could, to one of the European communities there, say, for instance, to the British community, he would, according to the petitioners' contention, have lost his domicile of origin and have acquired an Anglo-Chinese domicile, which, for most practical purposes, would be equivalent to an English domicile. In my opinion he would not acquire such a domicile. It appears to me that, upon the present question, there is no substantial difference between the residence of a British subject at Shanghai or at any factory in Turkey, or elsewhere in the East, whether by virtue of special treaties, capitulation, sufferance or the like. But such factories are not regarded as colonies or foreign countries for the purpose of domicile. There may be commercial domicile there in times of war with reference to the law of capture, but that is altogether a different matter. No authorities except those relating to Anglo-Indian domicile have been cited in support of the petitioners' contention as to domicile. In Maltass v. Maltass (16) Dr. Lushington admitted to probate the will, valid according to the law of England, of an English merchant resident at a British factory at Smyrna. He held that if the treaty between England and the Porte was applicable to British merchants resident or domiciled, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, in Smyrna, the provisions of the treaty decided what was to be done in the case of succession to personal estate—namely, that it was to follow the law of England (16). But he considered that the deceased was domiciled, not in a colony, but in England. In the argument for the petitioners, great reliance has been placed on the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the Court at Shanghai, and the fact that the will has not been proved in England. The law administered by the Court at Shanghai being, for most practical purposes, the same as that administered in England, the question of domicile is likely to arise only in exceptional cases like the present. The jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court at Shanghai is merely the jurisdiction of Her Majesty exerciseable in China and confined to British subjects. It is non-exclusive, and does not oust the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts in England. No solid reason exists for holding that the will of an Englishman whose "fixed place of abode" was at his death in China cannot be admitted to probate by the Court of Probate of England. It is also to be observed that the term "fixed place of abode" is not equivalent to "domicile," and, as appears to me, the use in the Order in Council of the technical term "domicile" was intentionally avoided. The only distinction between this case and Maltass v. Maltass (16) was the existence at Shanghai of an English Court of Probate. Similar Courts now exist in the Ottoman Dominion and in Egypt—see 4 Lawrence Commentaire sur Wheaton, part 2, ch. 2, and particularly pp. 137, 139. In fact all these Courts are Consular Courts, or constituted on the same model, with more or less jurisdiction.

In the case of the Attorney-General v. Napier (10) letters of administration had been granted by the Courts established in India, where nearly the whole of the intestate's personal property was locally situate at the date of his death. In order to recover a small debt, administration was taken out in this country also. The intestate's domicile was in England. The Court of Exchequer decided that legacy duty was payable on the whole of the intestate's personal estate, and its judgment was based solely on the fact of domicile, and the grant of administration in England was not even adverted to by the Court. It is evident that that fact, as well as the fact that the Indian Court had jurisdiction to grant and had granted administration, were considered immaterial. If an Englishman domiciled in England dies resident abroad, and no part of his assets are in England, and no probate or letters of administration are taken out in England, there may be great difficulty in asserting the Crown's right to duty; and inasmuch as foreign Courts would not enforce the revenue laws of this country, the difficulty might in some cases be insuperable. But the Crown's right cannot depend on the greater or less difficulty in pursuing the remedy. In the present case there is no difficulty in giving the remedy, since the fund is in Court; and, under the Legacy Duty Act, the Court, or its officers, are bound to see that the legacy duty, if payable, is paid before the fund is parted with. The circumstance that the will has not been proved in this country is also immaterial. It has been proved in a duly constituted British Court of competent jurisdiction; and it being admitted that further probate here is not required, it follows that the Court must look at the Shanghai probate before distributing the fund. That disposes of any argument that the Court cannot take notice of an alleged will of personal estate unless it has been proved in this country. The argument which was addressed to me with reference to the provisions of the Legacy Duty Acts, for the purposes of shewing that they did not apply in the circumstances of this case, is substantially the same as that urged before the House of Lords in the Attorney-General v. Forbes (2), and is disposed of by the decision in Thomson v. The Advocate-General (6) and in The Attorney-General v. Forbes (2), as explained by the Court of Exchequer in The Attorney-General v. Napier (10). For these reasons, I hold that there is no such thing known to the law as an Anglo-Chinese domicile; that the testator's domicile remained English; and that the circumstances are not sufficient to create any exception from the broad principle that legacy duty is payable where the domicile is British. Consequently I think that the duty is payable.

In re Tootal's Trusts.

Solicitors—The Solicitor to the Inland Revenue, for the Crown; Johnson & Master, for petitioners; Clayton, Sons & Fargus, and Frankish & Buchanan, agents for Roberts, Denbigh, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 13.

BLIGHT v. HARTNOLL.

Will—Residuary Gift—Lapsed and Void Legacy.

A testatrix bequeathed all her personal estate, except a certain wharf, to C., and devised to C. an annuity charged on the rental of the wharf, such annuity after C.'s death to be paid to other annuitants in succession, and the surplus income of the wharf, after payment of the annuities, to be accumulated for payment of two mortgages on the wharf; and directed her executors, after payment of the annuities and payment and discharge of the two mortgages, to sell the wharf and divide the proceeds among such of her grandchildren as might be then surviving, as C. should appoint.

An appointment by C., by her will, of the proceeds of sale of the wharf was, under the circumstances of the case, held void for remoteness:—

Held, that the proceeds of sale were a void legacy, and passed to C. under the residuary gift.

A gift is not the less a residuary gift because it is in form a gift with an exception of certain legacies.

This was an appeal from a decision of Fry, J., holding—first, that a power contained under the will of Mrs. Blight of appointment over the proceeds of sale of a wharf, and the execution of it by Christina Hartnoll, the donee of the power, were void for remoteness; and, secondly, that the proceeds of sale of the wharf, the gift of which had so failed, passed to Christina Hartnoll under the residuary gift in Mrs. Blight's will.

The next-of-kin of Mrs. Blight appealed from the second part of the judgment.

The facts of the case are reported 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 162, where the will of Mrs. Blight is set out sufficiently at length; but the point involved in the present appeal is not there noticed.

Cookson, Q.C., and Grosvenor Woods, for the appellant.—The wharf was excepted out of the residuary gift, and therefore the gift of the proceeds of sale having failed on the ground of remoteness, as Fry, J., has held, it cannot now revert into the residue.

If the words of the will are sufficient to shew that the testator intended the residuary bequest to have a limited effect, the presumption in favour of the residuary legatee will be effectually rebutted—see Jarman, vol. i. p. 652, 2nd ed., where he examines the cases of Davers v. Dewes (1) and Wainman v. Field (2).

In this case we submit that sufficient intention is shewn to exclude the lapsed gift of the proceeds of sale from the residue. If a testator were to give all his leaseholds to A, and all other his personal estate to B, can it be said that if the gift of leaseholds failed by the death of the legatee they would fall into the other personal estate? The words of the gift are, "all the property except," &c. The testatrix has onerated the wharf with the mortgage debt.

(1) 3 P. Wms. 40.
(2) Kay, 507.

Blight v. Hartnoll, App.

The gift to Christina Hartnoll is not a true residuary gift.

Marten, Q.C., and Oswald, contra, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—It is well to see what the law is before construing this particular will. The law as regards personal estate, so far as what falls into the residue, is substantially the same now as that relating to real estate—that is to say, that lapsed and void bequests fall into the residuary bequest, if any, contained in the will, unless a contrary intention shall appear in the will.

The first point to consider is, whether there is any residuary bequest at all—for if there is not, nothing can fall into it under the rule. You may have a residuary bequest in various forms. In effect it must be a gift of all the personal estate not otherwise disposed of by the will. It may not be a true residue even then, for there may be property not disposed of by the will. That is a different question; and there may be a question whether it has been undisposed of, in the sense of being not intended to be disposed of, or in the sense of being unduly disposed of. When I speak of residue, I mean the residue of the estate not professed to be otherwise disposed of by the will. The wording of the residuary gift is not material in shewing the intention of the testator. A gift of all my personal estate, except my gold watch, which I give to A, is a gift of residue. It does not matter that the gift is in form an exception. It is, in fact, just the same as a gift of the watch in the first instance, followed by a gift of everything else. The common form is this—a gift of a watch to A, Consols to B, and leaseholds to C, and of the rest of the personal estate to B; but there is no difference between the gifts. The case of Evans v. Jones (3) is an authority in point, if an authority is needed. If I give all my personal estate to A, except my gold watch and Consols—and the gold watch and Consols are not given at all—they are not lapsed and void legacies within the rule, but go to the next-of-kin as not having been disposed of, and there is no true residue. But when we have a true residue, the law is, that the legacies failing for any reason, the residue is increased by them. The present case is quite simple. There is a gift of all the personal estate except a leasehold wharf, and then the wharf is given by the will. It turns out that this gift fails, because it is void for remoteness. Why should not it fall into the residue?

It is suggested that there is some contrary intention shewn by the will, because a provision is made as to the incidence of the debts of the testatrix upon this excepted thing; but this provision was made with a view to the legacies taking effect.

It appears to me almost impossible to find in any will an intention that a legacy which fails to take effect because it is void should not go into the residue. A testator would not make a void legacy if he knew it, and therefore it is impossible that he should have contemplated its being void. It is very different from the case of lapse—for every testator knows that his legatees are mortal and may die before him, although the presumption is against it. A testator giving a legacy expects the legatee to survive; but it is easier to imagine that he contemplated the death of a legatee than the event of a legacy being void. The only case in which it is possible to suppose that the testator contemplated the possibility of the latter event is where you see that he entertained some doubt—as, for instance, when he has made several charitable gifts, and he has a doubt whether all the charities, or some of them, can take the property. But when a legacy fails on the ground of remoteness you cannot suppose that the testator would provide for the event of its being illegal. It is almost impossible to imply a direction in a will to the effect that if any legacies should fail, say on the ground of remoteness, they shall not fall into the residue. As to the case before us, there is nothing whatever in it to lead one to suppose that there was any intention at all that this gift should not on failure fall into the residue. I am of opinion that the decision on this point is right.

In the case of Wainman v. Field (2), which has been cited, the Vice-Chancellor, as I read the case, came to the conclusion that the gift was not a true residuary gift, and that therefore the legacies would not fall into it. For myself, if I were to give an opinion upon that gift, I think that I should concur with the Vice-Chancellor in his conclusion. No principle was decided in that case; it was a case of construction merely, and cannot be a guide to us in construing the present gift. There was no evidence there that there was any residue at all.

(3) 2 Coll. C.C. 516.

Blight v. Hartnoll, App.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I also think that the construction put upon the will by Mr. Justice Fry is correct. The first thing to do is to see what is the true meaning of the clause in which the testatrix gives to her sister Christina all her personal property, with the exception of a certain wharf.

Is that the gift of a residue? Is there any difference in substance between such a gift, and a gift of a wharf to one person and all the residue to another? I see none. What is given by the testatrix to her sister is a gift of residue.

The next thing to consider is, is there any intention expressed by the testatrix to exclude from the residue that which under ordinary circumstances would fall into it, on the theory that, prima facie, it was the intention of the testatrix to give to her residuary legatee everything which she had not given elsewhere. Is there, then, any intention shewn in the will to exclude the proceeds of the wharf, the gift of which has failed, from the residue?

Our choice must lie between testacy and intestacy as regards the wharf; we cannot suppose that she intended to die intestate. I confess that, having read the will and heard the argument as to the disposition of the debts, I am unable to concur with the view put forward by the appellant. I have looked at the cases of Davers v. Dewes (1) and Wainman v. Field (2), and I do not see that the Court is compelled by either of these cases to come to the conclusion desired by the appellant. The ratio decidendi in the former case is to be found at pages 42 and 43, where the Court came to the conclusion that the intention of the testator there was to keep out of the residue what he meant to dispose of by his codicil.

Wainman v. Field (1) does not conflict with that case. The Vice-Chancellor h the will before him, and came to the co clusion upon its language that the testat did not intend the property to fall into t residue. It is a mere case of study each particular will.

BOWEN, L.J.—I agree.

Solicitors—Owles & Collinson, for plaintiff Thos. Sisney, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
May 5.

In re PINK.

Insolvent Lunatic — Maintenance — Rights of Creditors—Preferential Payment —Practice.

It is the settled practice of the Court even although a lunatic is insolvent, to consider—first, what is for the benefit of the lunatic; and next, the interests of the creditors.

In such a case the Court will, after setting aside a sufficient fund for the reasonable maintenance of the lunatic, direct the rest due (if any) of his estate to be divided rateably amongst his creditors, with liberty to the creditors to apply on the death of the lunatic for the further distribution of the fund so set apart; and,—

Semble, as a general rule, moneys properly expended by the committee of the lunatic, both before and after inquisition found, in the maintenance of the lunatic and of his wife and family, will be paid in priority to the claims of other creditors.

In December, 1878, C. Pink, an estate agent, became insane.

On the 5th of March, 1880, he was found lunatic by inquisition; and on the 9th of July, 1880, his son C. R. Pink was appointed his committee.

On the 15th of March, 1883, the Master made his certificate as to the fortune

Pink, App.

ance and debts of the lunatic, y be found (inter alia)— at the lunatic had resided and maintained at a private lunatic from the 24th of December, 1878, 8th of April, 1881, at a cost of 3*s.*, but that the proprietors of lum, Messrs. Finch & Lush, were to accept 500*l.* in settlement of ebt; and that from the 8th of 1881, to the 25th of March, 1883, been maintained at another asylum t of a guinea a week.
at the sum of 109*l.* 4*s.* a year, ; the rate of two guineas a week, proper sum to be allowed for the ance of the lunatic from the 25th h, 1883.
so appeared from the certificate e committee had advanced 374*l.* is own moneys towards the main- and support of the wife and chil- the lunatic from the commence- the lunacy down to the 31st of er, 1882; that the lunatic's estate olvent; and that a proposal had, e approval of the Master, been ed to the creditors of the lunatic, residue of his fortune, after pay- full of the claim of the committee, e creditors whose claims amounted nd under, and setting aside a fund t to produce 100*l.* a year for the ance of the lunatic, should be ap- payment, pro rata, of those credi- ose claims exceeded 50*l.*, without e to their ultimate rights in the posed to be set aside; but that editors had attended before the and had disapproved of the pro-e 15th of March the certificate roved, with liberty to the com- to take out a summons for pay- the 500*l.* to Messrs. Finch & nd 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* to the committee, payment of the allowance of two a week; notice of the application ven to the creditors, and the sum- be adjourned into Court.

summons, as taken out, provided ment of the 500*l.* and 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* for the investment of a capital ficient to produce 100*l.* per annum lunatic's maintenance, and for the immediate distribution, pro rata, of the balance of his estate amongst his creditors.

S. Dickinson, for the summons, submitted that, under the circumstances, the payment of the 500*l.* and 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* was reasonable and proper, and that in other respects the order asked for was in accordance with the usual practice of the Court in such cases.

W. Barber, Q.C., and Russell Roberts, for the largest creditors of the lunatic.—We object to the payment of these two sums in full. We also submit that there should be an immediate distribution of the whole of the assets of the lunatic amongst his creditors, without making any provision for his maintenance. The rights of his creditors for his acts and contracts before his lunacy remain unaffected by his lunacy. He was insolvent at the time he became lunatic, and his assets ought to be realised for the benefit of his creditors. In fact, the greater part of his present estate consists of the property which was purchased with the moneys we advanced him for that purpose, under an arrangement for a mortgage, which failed to be executed by reason of his sudden lunacy. If there is no surplus after the creditors have been paid, and there is no one bound by law to maintain him, he will become a pauper lunatic and will be chargeable to his parish, and can be well and comfortably maintained in the county lunatic asylum at the expense of the ratepayers of his district. The money of the creditors ought not to be applied to relieve the ratepayers of his district. They referred to Ex parte Dikes (1) and Pope on Lunacy (2).

[Dickinson referred to In re Adey (3).]

Vaughan Hawkins, for other creditors, supported the same contention, and also objected to the payment of the 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* in full, and cited In re Sitwell (4).

No reply was called for.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This case was adjourned into Court by my direction; and I may

(1) 8 Ves. 79.
(2) p. 403.
(3) 1 Coop. t. Cott. 225.
(4) W.N. 1881, p. 124.

In re Pink, App.

state at once why I did it, because certainly I have invited the controversy which has taken place on this occasion, but which I did not at all anticipate. I never intended, when I suggested that this summons should be served on the creditors, to lay myself or the Court open to the argument that the creditors had a right, or something equivalent to a right, to be paid in full, which would result in the lunatic being placed in a pauper lunatic asylum. I never dreamt of raising such a controversy as that. However, as the controversy has been raised, I wish most emphatically to protest against it. It appears to me that the practice of the Court for the last 150 years has been to protect the lunatic, and to consider what is most for his benefit, of course having regard to the interest of the creditors as far as possible. That is the duty imposed upon us by statute, and that has been settled by the long-established practice of the Court.

The reason I adjourned this matter into Court was this, that there was a proposition to pay two creditors in full, and to pay a dividend to the others. It appeared to me that that was a proposition which deserved consideration, and for that reason I directed the creditors to be served, in order that I might hear what they had to say upon the point. It was upon that ground alone that I adjourned the matter into Court.

Now the matter stands in this way. The creditors of the lunatic are creditors to a very large amount. If we were to pay them in full the result would be that there would be nothing, or next to nothing, left for the lunatic, and he would have to go to a pauper lunatic asylum. It has been urged on behalf of the creditors that that is what ought to be done, and it is said that a pauper lunatic asylum is now a much more comfortable place than it was some time ago. The effect of sending him to a pauper lunatic asylum would be to throw him upon the rates. I protest against that. That is not my view of what would be for the benefit of the lunatic, nor is it the duty of the Court to do it.

The two sums which it is proposed to pay in full are these: there is first of all a debt of 500*l.* which is due to the keepers of an asylum where this gentleman was placed for some time—the payment of that is not very seriously opposed; and there is a sum of 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.*, which the committee, who is a son of the lunatic, has expended in the maintenance of the lunatic's wife and family between the dates that have been mentioned both prior and subsequent to the 5th of March, 1880. Now in dealing with that we must have regard to what is the ordinary practice, and that is stated in the 34th of the Lunacy Orders of this year, which states, "Immediately after inquisition found the party having the conduct of the proceedings shall take out a summons before the Master to enquire into the matters following—The lunatic's situation, the nature of his lunacy, who are his next-of-kin and heir-at-law, who ought to be appointed committee of his person and of his estate, of what his fortune consists and the particulars thereof, the amount of his income, in what manner, at what expense and by whom and where he has been maintained, what should be allowed for his past maintenance, what, if anything, is due, and to whom in respect thereof, and to whom and out of what fund the same ought to be paid." Now the expression there used is "past maintenance," and for the purpose of making that enquiry it has always been construed to include the maintenance of his wife and children. That is a matter of practice: it is not limited to his personal maintenance. The real question comes to this, whether, supposing the Master had certified this 374*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* ought to have been allowed for the past maintenance of the lunatic, in the sense in which the expression is used in the rule, it ought to be paid in full or not. We all agree that the certificate being in that form we should allow the payment in full. The rule which I have been referring to does not even allude to creditors, that is disposed of by another rule. The point of my observations is this, that the first thing to ascertain is what is for the benefit of the lunatic; and when you have provided for that, to see what you can do for the creditors. In point of form the Master has not absolutely certified that this ought to be allowed for past maintenance, or that it ought to be paid in priority to other claims; but upon a fair construction of the certificate it appears to us to be unnecessary to send it back to him to apportion the sum or to amend the certificate. We must read it fairly, and perhaps a little liberally. In our opinion the sum ought to be paid, and therefore we propose to allow it in full. As regards the allowance for the lunatic of 2*l.* per week, that is absolutely right. He has been maintained at an expense of 1*l.* per week in an asylum at St. Andrew's, Northampton; but that was a temporary arrangement, and it cannot go on. He cannot be supported properly at that scale. Therefore it appears to us we should make an order in the terms of the summons. Of course the creditors will have their costs, because they have been invited by me to come here in order to relieve the Court from the difficulty of dealing with preferential payments, and that difficulty has been got over. The order will be according to the summons, with liberty to the creditors to apply for payment when the time comes for them to do so.

In re Pink, App.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have a very few words to add. The practice of this Court in lunacy has been uniform for a period certainly as long as I can recollect, both in practising as counsel and sitting as Judge, and proper provisions for payment of past maintenance and payment of future maintenance are always the first matters to be considered and enquired into. The 34th of the Lunacy Orders of 1883 is really to the same effect as what was provided before. [His Lordship read the rule, and continued:] And there is a provision that after the Master has enquired what sums have been expended, he shall take an account of the debts. I think that further rule was very properly added, for this reason, that though provision, in the first instance, must be made for the maintenance of the lunatic, the amount must depend on the amount of his property, of course taking into consideration the amount of debts which he owes. But the fact that the amount of debts which he owes may be sufficient to exhaust the whole of his estate affords no ground whatever for applying the whole of the estate for and towards the immediate payment of his debts, and so sending him to a pauper lunatic asylum. I do not think that course has really been seriously pressed upon us either by Mr. Barber and Mr. Russell Roberts, or by Mr. Vaughan Hawkins, who appears for another creditor. It would be utterly contrary to all I have known of the practice of the Court; and certainly I would not interfere with the discretion of the Judges sitting in Lunacy as regards the mode in which they would deal with a lunatic's estate. They are certainly bound by the various provisions of the Acts of Parliament which have been passed. The 116th section of the Act of 1853, as extended by the Act of 1862, shews that, though other application of the proceeds of the estate may be made, it is within the jurisdiction of the Judge to apply them to all or any of the several subject-matters which came before him.

I will only add this, that I think the present case illustrates the policy of the practice which does not allow creditors to appear upon all applications of this kind, though I think this a proper case, having regard to what has taken place in the Master's office, for them to appear. I think the Judge exercised a very wise discretion by allowing creditors to be served with this summons; but I think the arguments should only have been addressed to the question whether these two particular creditors should be paid in full or pari passu with the other creditors. I must say that various topics have been gone into which are entirely beside the question we had to decide.

FRY, L.J.—I concur.

Solicitors—Lambert, Petch & Shakspeare, for the lunatic; Harries, Wilkinson & Raikes, for creditors.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
March 1.

Ex parte IZARD; in re BUSHELL.

Bankruptcy—Receiver and Manager—Charges—Taxation—Bankruptcy Rules, 1871, rules 5, 6 and 7.

Under rule 5 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871, the charges of a receiver for disbursements out of pocket, such as travelling expenses and salaries paid to assistants, are liable to taxation.

A receiver and manager of a business should not advance money out of his own pocket for the purposes of the business without first obtaining the authority of the Court to do so. If he applies for such authority, the Court will, as a rule, allow him interest at five per cent. on the amount authorised to be advanced, and give him a charge on the assets for the advance and interest.

If he advances money without such authority, he can only look to the estate for indemnity.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Hazlitt sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

The debtor was a tea and coffee merchant, named Bushell, carrying on business in London and other towns in England and Scotland. He filed a liquidation petition on the 8th of September, 1882, and one Foster was appointed receiver and manager, and was ordered to carry on the debtor's business. For this purpose he ordered goods, but neglected to obtain any authority from the Court to pay for them out of his own money.

On the 5th of October, 1882, a liquidation was resolved upon by the creditors, and Izard was appointed trustee.

In pursuance of an order of the Court, Foster delivered up the leases of the debtor's shops to the trustee, and presented an account of his dealings during the receivership, shewing a balance of 206*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* due to him. Of this sum 178*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* consisted of salaries and travelling expenses paid to two persons employed by the receiver to travel about and inspect the various shops, and the travelling expenses of the receiver himself.

The trustee objected to pay the 178*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* until the items had been taxed by the Taxing Master under rule 5 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871.

Besides the 206*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, Foster claimed from the trustee payment of 558*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*, which was due from him to persons who had supplied goods to his order for the business.

On the application of Foster, the Registrar ordered the trustee to pay to him the 206*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*, and to pay the 558*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* to the persons who had supplied the goods, and to pay Foster's costs of his application.

At this time the trustee, who had had assets in his hands, had paid most of them away in order to avoid distresses for rent being put in.

The trustee appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for the appellant, referred to rules 5, 6 and 7 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871.

Winslow, Q.C., and Sidney Woolf, for the receiver.—These are only payments out of pocket by the receiver, and do not come within the 5th rule.

[JESSEL, M.R.—How can you get over the words? Is not this the receiver's bill?]

It is part of the receiver's account.

[JESSEL, M.R.—If these items are charges of the receiver, they ought to be taxed.]

It is no part of the Taxing Master's duty to tax the salaries paid to the shopmen. The receiver had a lien upon the leases for his expenses out of pocket.

[JESSEL, M.R.—I am sure that is not so. The receiver is an officer of the Court, and looks to the Court to be repaid.]

These items are no more subject to taxation than payment made for goods supplied.

[JESSEL, M.R.—They are certainly charges of the receiver, just as a solicitor's travelling expenses would be part of his charges.]

The Registrar has power to tax, and he has done so—Ex parte Ditton (1).

(1) Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 318.

Ex parte Izard; in re Bushell (App.), Bankr.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The Court cannot dispense with the general orders. Ex parte Ditton (1) does not apply. The ground of that decision was that the solicitor had not sent in a signed bill.]

The rules are only directory.

[JESSEL, M.R.—What do you say comes under rule 5?]

The receiver's remuneration.

Then with regard to the other part of the order.

[JESSEL, M.R.—You must support it. At present it appears to be wrong. It is an order upon the trustee to pay out of his own pocket.]

The trustee on his appointment received the takings of the shops and took possession of the stock-in-trade; he has thus had the benefit of the goods in question which were ordered in the last week of the receivership.

JESSEL, M.R.—The Registrar's order is complained of upon two grounds. First, it is said that it ought not to have ordered the 178*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* to be paid without a previous taxation. That sum consists of the travelling expenses of the receiver himself, and of the salaries and travelling expenses of the persons whom he specially engaged to travel about and inspect the mode of carrying on the business at the different shops of the debtor. I cannot imagine any more proper description of these payments than "charges of the receiver." They are charges made by him partly for himself personally and partly for persons specially employed by him for the purpose which I have mentioned. The words of rule 5 are quite plain, and yet it is boldly put forward in argument that as regards a receiver and manager the rule is to be limited to his charge for his own remuneration. But in the rule there is no distinction between the charges of a receiver and manager, and those of solicitors, accountants, auctioneers and brokers. We know that the bills of solicitors are liable to taxation as regards their charges for disbursements out of pocket, and it often happens that sums actually paid by them are disallowed on taxation. There is no reason for making any distinction between the charges of a solicitor and the charges of any of the other persons mentioned in rule 5. In order to shew that the argument is absolutely without foundation, it is only necessary to refer to rules 6 and 7, which clearly shew that rule 5 does not apply to a receiver's remuneration, it being specially provided for by rules 6 and 7.

As to the second part of the Registrar's order, which directs the trustee to pay the price of the goods which the receiver ordered on his own credit, it is a personal order on the trustee to pay the amount. The goods were supplied to the receiver and manager to enable him to carry on the business. No doubt he is entitled to be indemnified out of the debtor's estate; but that is no reason for making a personal order against the trustee. If a receiver and manager, either in Chancery or Bankruptcy, chooses to advance money of his own without the previous authority of the Court, he can only look to the estate for indemnity. The practice in the Chancery Division is for a receiver and manager, before he advances money, to apply to the Court for authority to do so; and when the Court gives him authority, it generally allows him interest at five per cent. on the sum which it authorises him to advance, and gives him a charge on the assets for that sum and the interest. Rule 299 of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870 provides that "the Court shall have the same power and discretion as to the appointment, remuneration and removal of the receiver and manager, and in the settlement of his accounts and in directing the appropriation of moneys or property in his hands, as is exercised by the Court of Chancery, or as near thereto as may be." Therefore the Court of Bankruptcy can do that which the Chancery Division could do. If the receiver and manager makes an advance of money for the purpose of the business without the previous authority of the Court, he is still entitled to an indemnity out of the estate, but it is impossible to give him a personal order for payment by the trustee. The only order which could be made would be that the trustee should pay him out of the assets, if he had available assets in his hands. In the present case there is no evidence that when the order appealed from was made, the trustee had any assets in his hands; the only evidence is, that he had previously had assets in his hands and that he had paid them away. It is said that the undertaking which the trustee gave by the order of the 13th of October applied to the 558*l.* But that undertaking was to pay sums which might be found due to the receiver; and when the order of the 19th of December was made, the 558*l.* was not due to the receiver, because he had not paid it. Therefore it was not within the undertaking. The Registrar's order must be discharged, and there must be a direction to tax the 178*l.*

As to the costs of the application, there appears to have been great laxity in the practice of the Bankruptcy Court, and this may have misled the receiver. Therefore no costs will be given against him either in this Court or in the Court below. The trustee will take his costs out of the estate.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., and LINDLEY, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Piesse & Son, for the trustee; Hindson, Miller & Vernon, for the receiver.

CHITTY, J. 1883. June 18. } In re FANNY ELIZABETH MARCH (deceased). MANDER v. HARRIS.

Will—Husband and Wife—Gift to a Man and his Wife and to a Third Person—Moieties or Thirds—Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

A testatrix, who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by her will, dated 1880, gave all her property both real and personal to A and B, and E the wife of B, "to and for their own use and benefit absolutely." She appointed the same persons by name her executors and executrix:—Held, that by the operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, husband and wife are no longer in the eye of the law one person as regards property, and that they each took one-third of the estate, and not, as under the old law, half between them. Held also, according to the doctrine laid down in Hasluck v. Pedley (44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 143; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 271), that the Act applied to the will, although the will was made before the Act came into operation.

Demurrer.

Fanny Elizabeth March, who died on the 26th of April, 1883, made her will, dated the 8th of December, 1880, by which, after directing payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, she gave, devised and bequeathed all her household furniture, linen, wearing apparel, books, or plate, moneys, stocks and securities, "and all and every other my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, both real and personal, whether in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy, unto my residual legatee, Charles James Mander, Esq., No. 9 New Square, Lincoln's Inn, London, and James Harris, Esq., and Eliza Maria his wife, of Knowle Green, Staines, Middlesex, to and for their own use and benefit absolutely; and I nominate, constitute and appoint Charles James Mander, Esq., 9 New Square, Lincoln's Inn, London, and James Harris, Esq., and Eliza Maria Harris his wife, of Knowle Green, Staines, Middlesex, to be executors of this my last will."

The plaintiff C. J. Mander claimed that the property was divisible into moieties, of which he took one and the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Harris took the other. The defendants demurred, and claimed that the estate was divisible into thirds, of which they each took one, the other going to the plaintiff.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and Bardswell, for the demurrer.—Though the will was made before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, yet, as it came into operation after the commencement of the Act, the Act applies. That was decided in Hasluck v. Pedley (1), which was a case on the Apportionment Act. The late Master of the Rolls there says: "A testator who knows of an alteration in the law, ... and does not choose to alter his will, must be taken to mean that his will shall take effect according to the new law." The old law that a husband and wife would only take one moiety is founded on the doctrine that they are "one person in the law"—Co. Lit. 187 A; Blackstone, bk. i. ch. 15, s. 15. But wherever there was a means of avoiding that result the Court availed itself of it. Bischer v. Whatley (2) was decided against the double share on account of a peculiarity of expression. In Warrington v. Warrington (3) the gift was, like the present, to A, B, C, and D his wife; and C and D were held to take two shares and not one only. In In re Wylde's Estate (4) it is said that, although the presumption is that husband and wife take as one person only, the question is one of "context of the instrument." In Marchant v. Cragg (5), where the words are almost identical with the words in this case, husband and wife took as two persons. But it is not necessary to rely on those cases, as the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, puts a married woman on the same footing as a man as regards property. The principles now to be applied are those which are laid down in Dias v. De Livera (6), as being those of the Roman-Dutch law, which assumes husband and wife to be two persons. In this respect the new Act has been assimilated to the Roman-Dutch law, and makes husband and wife two persons for all purposes connected with property.

(1) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 143; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 271.

Ince, Q.C., and R. F. Norton, for the plaintiff.—The gift is here to husband and wife and the third person, which shews that husband and wife take as one person only. The appointment of Mrs. Harris as executrix stands on a different footing, as she is not described, as in the gift, as "the wife of Harris." In the case of Wylde's Estate (4) the rule is clearly laid down in our favour. The question is one of the status of the wife, and in that respect the new Act makes no change: it is not one of property. The Act does not say that whereas husband and wife have heretofore been one person they shall henceforward be two. There may be a gift to a man's wife, or a gift to husband and wife, who are a sort of compound person. The new law affects the former case, but does not touch a gift to the composite person "husband and wife"; it alters the relations of husband and wife to each other, but it does not affect their position as regards third persons.

Macnaghten was not called upon to reply.

CHITTY, J.—In this case the testatrix, who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, but who made her will before the Act came into operation, in December, 1880, as to her residuary personal estate (it is admitted there was no real estate), gave the same "unto my residual legatee C. J. Mander, Esq., and J. Harris, Esq., and Eliza Maria his wife, to and for their own use and benefit absolutely." By the same will she appoints Mr. Mander, again giving his address, and Mr. and Mrs. Harris, again giving their address, executors and executrix of her will. The question is, whether Mr. and Mrs. Harris take one share between them, or whether they take each a separate share so that the residuary personalty is now divisible into thirds. It has been admitted at the Bar that if this will had come into operation before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, Mr. Mander would have taken one moiety and Mr. and Mrs. Harris the other moiety only as joint tenants. The question is, what is the effect of the Married Women's Property Act? The reason of the rule of construction which prevailed, and which, subject to the Act, still prevails—namely, that where a gift is made to husband and wife and a third party, husband and wife only take one share between them—is thus stated in Littleton: "The husband and wife are all one person in law."—Co. Lit. s. 187. That was not quite correct even in Littleton's time, because they were, according to the more accurate language of the Privy Council, only one person in law for most purposes. That being so on the question of construction, it was held that being but one person they could take but one share. Whether that was or was

(2) 1 Vern. 232.
(3) 2 Hare, 54.
(4) 2 De Gex, M. & G. 724; 22 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 87.
(5) 31 Beav. 398.
(6) 49 Law J. Rep. P.C. 26; Law Rep. 5 App. Cas. 123.

In re March.

not a refinement, I am not in a position to consider. To some minds it would appear to be a refinement.

But now I come at once to the case in the Privy Council. Although that decision is not absolutely binding upon the High Court, the judgments of the Privy Council have always been regarded with great respect. In Dias v. De Livera (6) the Privy Council had before it the question of the construction of an instrument, whether, so far as the particular matter before me is concerned, Dias and his wife took one share or two. Their Lordships agreed with the Supreme Court of Ceylon, and the judgment of the Supreme Court, which is stated on p. 125, dealt with the question at some length. It begins thus: "At English common law, as Littleton lays it down, because husband and wife are one person only, if a joint estate in land be conveyed to husband and wife and a third person, the husband and wife shall take one moiety and the third person the other, and that although at English common law the wife's freeholds are not the husband's absolute property. Are the husband and wife under the Roman-Dutch law to be similarly considered one person for the purposes of this gift? The wife's position as regards property is very different under the two systems. It may perhaps be argued that this difference as to property should not prevent the husband and wife under Roman-Dutch law from being regarded as one person, inasmuch as the English husband can have no more than a life estate at most in his wife's freeholds, and yet that does not prevent their being one person in law for the purpose of sharing a gift even of a freehold. The fact is that at English common law, although the wife has distinguishable rights as to her realty, her person is merged in that of her husband—her 'personal property,' that which attends the person, becomes her husband's property absolutely—even her choses in action become his if he reduces these into possession while she lives. The English distinction between real and personal property is unknown to the Roman-Dutch law, but none of the wife's property becomes the absolute property of the husband; on the contrary the joint properties of both are thrown into a common stock administered by the husband during the marriage, and divisible afterwards in moieties. The personality of the wife cannot be said to be merged in that of the husband under Roman-Dutch law." Then there are other matters, which being matters of difference between the English and the Roman-Dutch law the judgment proceeds to point out. I have said that the Privy Council agreed with the Supreme Court. The judgment of the Privy Council on page 135 proceeds in this way: "The rule of English law that a gift to a man and his wife and to a third person is to be construed as a gift of a moiety to the husband and wife and a moiety to a third person, is founded on the doctrine of English law that husband and wife are, for most purposes, one person. And yet any indication, however slight, of an intention that each shall take separately has been held to defeat the application of this doctrine." Then they refer to certain well known cases as illustrating the peculiar position of husband and wife under our law, and proceed as follows:—

"Under the Roman-Dutch law the personal property of the wife is ordinarily, in the absence of special ante-nuptial agreement, held by the spouses as partners, each on the death of the other being entitled to his or her share; while in this country the whole personal property of the wife, including even such choses in action as he may reduce into possession, becomes the absolute property of the husband. It would not be difficult to point out many other important differences in the relations of husband and wife under the two systems of law; indeed, so many are these differences, that it would not be incorrect to state as a general proposition that whereas the English law assumes a husband and wife to be, for most purposes, one person, the Roman-Dutch law assumes them to be, for most purposes, two. Their Lordships are of opinion that the reason of the rule which applies in England fails in its application to Ceylon, and they construe the words of the will, which direct a division of property between three persons, according to what seems their natural meaning—namely, as directing its division into three parts."

v March.

ave cited that at length, because I it shews the principle upon which ivy Council proceeded. It is this— cording to English law, husband and re, for most purposes, taken to be rson, particularly in respect of their l relations with regard to property. s the matter which appears to me st important one for me to consider present case.

, under the Married Women's Pro- Act, 1882, is it true to say that hus- nd wife are one person, or one person st purposes, with reference to pro-

It appears to me there has been nsive an alteration made by this at it would be wrong to apply any to a question of the construction of he principle upon which the Courts y acted—namely, that for most or oses the husband and wife are to be d as one person. The alterations h as to bind the Court to adopt nich, in the language of the Privy , is the more natural construction of . I will read one or two of the sec- the Act to shew upon what my judg- founded. The 1st section enacts that ried woman shall . . . . be capable iring, holding and disposing by will rwise of any real or personal pro- s her separate property, in the same as if she were a feme sole, without rvention of any trustee." It ap- me that this section enlarges her . The capacity of a married woman h that she could not take the pro- hich went to her husband. There ceptions made in equity with re- her right to a settlement; but by she is made capable of acquiring property in the same manner as if e a feme sole. Sub-section 2, sec- enlarges her capacity, because it upon her the capacity of entering tracts, of suing and being sued. sub-section gives effect to the same s. The 4th sub-section is similar which have gone before. The 5th ion enables her to carry on a trade ly from her husband, and makes ject to the bankruptcy laws in the y as if she were a feme sole. The ction confers upon her, whether before or after the Act, as against all persons, including her husband, "the same civil remedies, and also the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own separate property as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole." There is an exception which I need not state. The 16th section renders her liable to be proceeded against criminally at the prosecution of her husband to the same extent as he might be prosecuted by her. It seems to me that this Act has made such an alteration in the relations of husband and wife to each other as to sever that unity of persons which the law attributed to them, and which Mr. Ince has described by the term "compound person," to such an extent as to render it wrong to apply the old principle which was founded upon that unity of person. For these reasons, shortly, I think the property is divisible into thirds, subject to the joint tenancies being severed. The demurrer will therefore be allowed.

There is another point, and that is that the plaintiff's counsel felt that they could not contend that there would be any distinction in the case if the will had been made after the date fixed for the commencement of the Act. The result would be the same in either case, subject to this—that the will comes into operation after the date fixed for the commencement of the Act. They could not have avoided making that admission after the judgment of the late Master of the Rolls in Hasluck v. Pedley (1). It was also admitted that the appointment of the wife operates so as to make her a separate and independent executrix, that matter being provided for separately by the Act of Parliament.

Solicitors—F. F. Payne, for plaintiff; Burton, Yeates, Hart & Burton, agents for Horne & Engall, Staines, for defendants.

BACON, V.C. 1883. June 1. } FRASER v. COOPER, HALL AND COMPANY.

Practice—Counter-claim—Person named as Defendant but not served—Appearance gratis—Rules of Court, 1875, Order XXII. rules 5, 6 and 7.

A person, not a party to the action, named as a defendant to a counter-claim, but not served with a copy, has no right to appear gratis. He cannot appear till after service pursuant to Order XXII. rule 6.

Motion.

This was an action by Messrs. Fraser & Gordon against Cooper, Hall & Co., who had since gone into liquidation (and were now represented by J. Waddell, their liquidator), the Quebec Central Railway Company and other defendants. The liquidator set up a counter-claim with his defence, making E. C. Bowen, who was not a party to the action, a defendant thereto, as well as Messrs. Fraser & Gordon. The liquidator delivered his defence to Messrs. Fraser & Gordon, but had not served a copy on Mr. Bowen. The solicitors of the latter, however, ascertained that he was named as a defendant to the counter-claim under the following circumstances stated in the affidavit of the clerk to Messrs. Bircham & Co., the solicitors for Mr. Waddell. He stated "that in the print of the counter-claim of the liquidator, E. C. Bowen was made a party, and being under urgency as to the time of its delivery to Messrs. Fraser & Gordon, and whilst debating whether or not it was advisable to proceed against E. C. Bowen upon it, or reserve the claim for an independent proceeding, Messrs. Wainwright & Baillie, the solicitors for the defendants the Quebec Central Railway Company, called upon me on the 9th of March, 1883, and requested me to supply them with a copy of the defence and counter-claim of the liquidator. I knew that Messrs. Wainwright & Baillie were the solicitors employed by E. C. Bowen's firm (Messrs. Reed Brothers & Co.). I explained the circumstances above stated, and informed them that they must not consider the counter-claim against E. C. Bowen as having been delivered to them as representing E. C. Bowen."

On the 9th of March, 1883, Messrs. Wainwright & Baillie wrote to Messrs. Bircham & Co., asking for an explanation of Mr. Bowen's being named and not served; and on the 21st of March entered an appearance on his behalf, and wrote a letter giving notice to Messrs. Bircham & Co. On the same day they received a letter from Messrs. Bircham & Co., stating that they were reserving final consideration of the question of proceeding against Mr. Bowen till they saw what shape certain other proceedings took. Further correspondence ensued, and Messrs. Wainwright & Baillie put in a statement of defence on behalf of Mr. Bowen to the counter-claim, service of which Messrs. Bircham & Co. refused to accept. The liquidator now moved that it might be ordered that the appearance entered on behalf of E. C. Bowen, as if a defendant to the counter-claim, might be discharged or taken off the file, and that such other order might be made as under the circumstances should be necessary and proper in order to determine that the said E. C. Bowen was not a party to the counter-claim, and to stay all proceedings on his part as pretending to be a party, and for the costs of the motion.

J. Beaumont, for the motion.—A person named as defendant to a counter-claim, but not served, has no right to appear gratis. A counter-claim differs from a writ or bill under the old practice, and no one is a party to a counter-claim till he has been served—Order XXII. rule 6. He also cited The Attorney-General v. Gibbs (1).

Hemming, Q.C., and Maidlow, for E. C. Bowen.—We admit the counter-claim has never been served; but, according to the old practice both in Chancery and at common law, a defendant not served with writ or bill could appear gratis—Fell v. Christ's College, Cambridge (2), and Lush's Practice (3). That practice is not interfered with by the Judicature Acts or

(1) 2 Ph. 327.
(2) 2 Bro. C.C. 279.
(3) 3rd ed. 1865, p. 392.

Fraser v. Cooper.

Rules—Daniell's Chancery Practice (4). By Order XXII. rule 7, a defendant to a counter-claim is in the same position as a defendant to an action. A counter-claim is in all respects an independent action—McGowan v. Middleton (5).

BACON, V.C.—I have listened to a very learned and elaborate argument which does not really affect the question before me. Counter-claims, though—adopting the judgment which has been referred to—they are to be treated as separate independent actions, are, notwithstanding, the creation of the Act of Parliament. They did not exist, their name was not known, their object was not recognised before. The Judicature Act introduces them as a new feature, and they must be considered according to the words used; and in this Act, providing for a new course of procedure, counter-claims are introduced in Order XXII., of which it is only necessary to read rules 6 and 7; the preceding rule, rule 5, may also be referred to, which describes the title of a counter-claim, giving the defendant power to sue the plaintiff along with any other person. Then the 6th rule says, "Where any such person as in the last preceding rule mentioned is not a party to the action, he shall be summoned to appear by being served with a copy of the defence, and such service shall be regulated by the same rules as are hereinbefore contained with respect to the service of a writ of summons, and every defence so served shall be indorsed in the form" prescribed. Then rule 7 provides, "Any person not a defendant to the action who is served with a defence and counter-claim as aforesaid, must appear thereto as if he had been served with a writ of summons to appear in an action." What right, what authority have I to recur to any practice under another course of procedure when dealing only with what is down here? Until service of the defence under the 6th rule no man has a right to be treated as a defendant, or to treat himself as a defendant; and because his name is there, he has no right to enter an appearance. In my opinion, therefore, the appearance was wrongly entered, and must be discharged. That is the only order I can make now, and that the liquidator amend his counter-claim by omitting the name of Mr. Bowen, and all statements made in reference to him. I make no order as to costs.

(4) 6th ed. 1882, vol. i. p. 350.
(5) 52 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 355.

Solicitors—Bircham, Drake & Co., for Mr. Waddell; Wainwright & Baillie, for Mr. Bowen.

KAY, J. 1883. March 8.

In re KNOWLES. DOODSON v. TURNER.

Attachment—Defaulting Trustee—Inability to Pay, when not a Ground for Refusing Attachment—Debtors Act, 1869, s. 4, sub-s. 3—Debtors Act, 1878, s. 1.

The exception contained in section 4, sub-section 3, of the Debtors Act, 1869, was intended for the punishment of fraudulent trustees, not merely in order to inflict personal inconvenience on the defaulters, but to deter other trustees from committing fraudulent breaches of trust.

Where, therefore, a trustee has committed a fraudulent breach of trust, the fact that he is unable to pay the moneys in respect of which he is in default, is not a sufficient ground to induce the Court, in the exercise of its discretion under the Debtors Act, 1878, to refuse to allow an attachment to issue against him.

This was a motion by the plaintiff for leave to issue a writ of attachment against one of the defendants, a defaulting trustee, who had been ordered to pay into Court a sum of money found to be due from him, and had not complied with such order.

The defendant had improperly advanced certain trust money to a firm in which he was a partner. The firm had become bankrupt and paid a composition, and the greater part of the money had been lost to the trust estate. The defendant had since obtained his discharge.

The only defence to the motion was that the defendant had no means wherewith to pay. The facts are stated in the judgment.

In re Knowles.

O. L. Clare, for the motion.—There is no sufficient evidence of the inability of the defendant to pay; but even if there were, that circumstance would be immaterial. The Debtors Act, 1869, as pointed out by Jessel, M.R., in Marris v. Ingram (1), is intended for the punishment of fraudulent or dishonest debtors, and is in that sense vindictive. Want of means, therefore, is no excuse.

He referred also to Cobham v. Dalton (2).

Dunning, for the defendant, the trustee. —In Marris v. Ingram (1) Jessel, M.R., said that the defaulting trustee ought to be sent to prison "unless he had no means," as to which his Lordship said he was not satisfied, because the trustee did not say what he had done with a sum of money which he had received. This defendant swears positively that he has no means wherewith to pay.

[KAY, J.—I do not understand the meaning of that dictum of Jessel, M.R., if the Act is intended for a punishment.]

In Holroyde v. Garnett (3) Bacon, V.C., said that the jurisdiction was only vindictive so far as it was intended to punish fraudulent misapplications.

O. L. Clare, in reply.

KAY, J.—From the Debtors Act, 1869, (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), which provides, with certain exceptions, that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money, there is excepted—by section 4, sub-section 3—"default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity, and ordered to pay by a Court of equity any sum in his possession or under his control." In this case a trustee, who had trust moneys in his possession or under his control, concurred in lending those moneys to a firm in which he was partner—in fact, lending them to himself—and by that lending, which was entirely unauthorised by the instrument under which he was trustee, the moneys were lost through the insolvency of the firm—that is, in fact, the insolvency of himself; and therefore he is a trustee who has put trust moneys into his own pocket, has spent them, and lost them. That seems to me to come within the term, as used in this Court, of fraudulent misappropriation of trust moneys—a thing which this defendant had no right to do, and which a trustee, of all persons in the world, ought to be careful not to do. He may improperly invest moneys—that is a comparatively lenient offence; but to put them into his own pocket and mix them with his own moneys, whereby they are lost, is one of the most improper acts a trustee can possibly commit. It seems that an order was made in this case that this person should pay into Court a certain sum, the amount of the trust money which, by his own admission, was due from him. He disobeyed that order, and there was a difficulty in enforcing it, because, at the time when it was made, he was an uncertificated bankrupt. He has since obtained his certificate; the debt has not been proved in the bankruptcy, and undoubtedly it is a debt which was not discharged by the bankruptcy, and therefore he is now liable to the penalty of not obeying that order which was made upon him during the bankruptcy.

The question I have to consider is, whether or not in this case the penalty should be enforced against him by issuing a writ of attachment, and the defence is that he says he has not means of payment. He is living in a house for which he pays 70*l.* a year rent, living on the remnant of his wife's fortune, and on the assistance he derives from the kindness of friends, and he says he is not in a position to pay. The question is, whether, under those circumstances, the Court is at liberty to allow an attachment to issue. I find that it was held under the Act of 1869 that the Court has no discretion in such a case, but is bound to let the writ issue; but afterwards the Act of 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54) was passed, giving the Court a discretion. The question is, now that discretion is to be exercised. I see that in the case of Marris v. Ingram (1) it was held distinctly, differing from a decision in another branch of the Court, that in one sense the Act was vindictive

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 123; Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 338.

(2) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 702; Law Rep. 10 Chanc. 655.

(3) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 663; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 532.

In re Knowles.

—that is to say, that it was meant to punish fraudulent debtors. As I hold very strongly that the object of punishment is not merely to inflict personal inconvenience on the offender, but to deter others in like cases from committing similar acts, it seems to me that this is a case in which the punishment ought to be inflicted. It is said that he is not able to pay. I am not clear about that. I have only his own word for it. On the other hand, I have the fact that he is living in this house under circumstances which make it not improbable that he could find the money, or some part of it, if pressed, and I am not disposed to trust the unsupported testimony of a man who, being a trustee, puts the trust fund into his own pocket. But if it were clear that he had not the means to pay, the present case does not seem to me to be one in which the Court ought not to make the order. If the exception in this Act was intended for the punishment of trustees who do such things as these, the present is clearly a case in which the attachment ought to issue. Taking that view, which I am justified in doing by the case of Marris v. Ingram (1), I think that this is a case in which the punishment ought to be inflicted for the purpose of teaching this man that a dishonest act of this kind will not be passed over with impunity, even though he is unable to pay, and for the purpose of teaching other trustees the same lesson—a very salutary one in many cases.

Solicitors—Cole & Jackson, agents for Banks & Kendall, Liverpool, for plaintiff; Torr & Co., agents for Arson & Morton, Liverpool; and Walker, Son & Field, agents for Peacock, Cooper & Co., Liverpool, for defendants.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 15.

In re HANBURY.

Petition—Money in Court—Interim Investment in Railway Debenture Stock—Costs—The Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 32.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 32, provides that, where, under any special Act, money is in Court liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled, that money may be invested as capital money arising under the Act, on the like terms, if any, "respecting costs," as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act:—Held, that the costs of an interim investment in debenture stock of such money, paid into Court by the Commissioners of Sewers under their special Act (which did not authorise an investment in debenture stock), must be paid by them in like manner as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act.

Petition.

O. R. Hanbury, by his will dated the 24th of November, 1874, devised all his real estate situate in the city of London to trustees, upon trust to pay the net annual income to his wife Sarah Hanbury, until his daughter Mary Hanbury should attain the age of nineteen years; and upon her attaining that age he devised the same unto her absolutely. And in case his daughter should die under the age of nineteen years, he devised the said freehold estate unto his wife absolutely.

The testator died in August, 1875.

In January, 1883, the Commissioners of Sewers of the city of London, under the powers conferred upon them by their Act, 57 Geo. 3. c. xxix., took certain freehold houses, forming part of the said real estate, and paid the purchase-money, 9,780*l.*, into Court.

Mary Hanbury, the daughter of the testator, would attain the age of nineteen on the 20th of November, 1889.

This petition was presented by the trustees of the will, praying that the money in Court might be invested—as to 5,000*l.*, in debenture stock of the Great Northern Railway Company, and as to the remainder, in New Three per Cents.; and that the dividends thereon might be paid to the petitioners until the 20th of November, 1889, or further order.

In re Hanbury.

The Act 57 Geo. 3. c. xxix. provided (section 84) that money so paid into Court should, until its re-investment in land, be invested, by the order of the Court of Chancery, in Consols or Reduced Annuities.

Section 89 provided that where purchase-money should be required to be paid into Court and applied in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the like uses as the land purchased, it should be lawful for the Court of Chancery to order the expenses of all purchases from time to time to be made in pursuance of the Act, or so much of such expenses as the Court should deem reasonable, to be paid by the Commissioners.

The Act contained no express provision for the payment of the costs of a petition for re-investment.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 32, provides that, where under any Act, public local personal or private, money is in Court liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to a settlement, then, in addition to any mode of dealing therewith authorised by the Act under which the money is in Court, that money may be invested as capital money arising under this Act, "on the like terms, if any, respecting costs and other things, as nearly as circumstances admit, and (notwithstanding anything in this Act) according to the same procedure, as if" the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act.

Waggett, for the petitioners, submitted that the respondents must pay the costs of the petition and the proposed investments in the usual way.

John Henderson, for the respondents.—The costs of an investment in debenture stock is greater than that of an investment in Consols. We ought not to pay any more costs than if the whole fund in Court were invested in Three per Cents. The special Act (section 84) only authorises an investment in Consols or Reduced Three per Cents.

[PEARSON, J.—Section 32 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, says that the fund may be invested "on the like terms, if any, respecting costs and other things, as nearly as circumstances admit, and according to the same procedure, as if" the mode of investment were authorised by the Special Act.]

The latter part of the section, beginning with the words "as if," applies only to the mode of procedure, and not to costs.

Here, under section 32, an interim investment is being made in debenture stock for the special benefit of the tenant-for-life. It is not therefore right to throw any further costs upon the respondents.

PEARSON, J.—The respondents must pay the costs of the petition and the proposed investments in the usual way. I think that I should, in great measure, be defeating the object of the Settled Land Act, 1882, were I to hold otherwise.

Solicitors—Reyroux, Phillips & Golding, for the petitioners; E. A. Baylis, for the respondents.

BACON, V.C. 1883. Jan. 12. } In re THE TAURINE COMPANY (LIMITED).

Company — Resolution for Voluntary Liquidation—Compulsory Order—B Contributories—Commencement of Winding-up —Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 38, 84 and 130.

A company passed a special resolution for voluntary liquidation, and was afterwards ordered to be wound up under a compulsory order. Shareholders transferred their shares less than a year before the passing of the special resolution, but more than a year before the presentation of the petition on which the compulsory order was made:—Held, that they could not be placed on the list of B contributories.

This was a summons taken out in the winding-up of the company by certain creditors (who were authorised by the Court to settle a supplementary list of contributories, and for that purpose to use the

e The Taurine Co.

f the official liquidator) to place the of three shareholders, who purported e transferred their shares, on the A contributories, or, in the alterna- place them on the list of B con- ries. The transfers in question were red on the 24th of December, 1874, ter on the same day the company a special resolution for a voluntary tion for the purpose of selling their to a new company. The new com- as duly incorporated and the sale out. The new company was ordered wound up on the 8th of January, A petition was afterwards presented ding up the old company, on which ulsory order was made on the 17th rch, 1877. The Court held, on the e, that the transfers in question ly executed, and that there was no for placing the respondents on the A contributories. The other ques- as whether they should be placed on of B contributories.

he Companies Act, s. 38, sub-s. 1, ast member shall be liable to con- to the assets of the company if ceased to be a member for a period year or upwards prior to the com- ment of the winding-up." By s. 130, luntary winding-up shall be deemed mence at the time of the passing of solution authorising such winding- By s. 84, "A winding-up of a com- y the Court shall be deemed to nce at the time of the presentation petition for the winding-up."

ming, Q.C. (with him Buckley), for mmons.—Where there has been a ary liquidation, followed by a com- y order, the commencement of the g-up is for all retrospective purposes fixed by the date of the resolution untary liquidation—Thomas v. The Lionite Company (1). The com- ment of the winding-up, therefore, case was the confirmation of the ion of the 24th of December, 1874, e respondents must in any case be as B contributories.

ton, Q.C. (with him A. A. Terrell), e respondents.—The case cited only decides that a compulsory order does not supersede what has been already done under a voluntary liquidation. It is no authority as to the commencement of the compulsory winding-up which is fixed by section 84.

Hemming replied.

BACON, V.C.—I have no doubt about the point. The observations of the Master of the Rolls in the case referred to do not affect it. All he says is, that the voluntary liquidation is not an invalid thing—that what has been previously done under the voluntary winding-up is not invalidated by a compulsory order. In my opinion there is as little foundation for asking to place these gentlemen on the list of B contributories as for asking to place them on the list of A contributories. The summons must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors—Ingle, Cooper & Holmes, for applicants; G. A. Sedgwick, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
May 29.

HUTTON v. THE WEST CORK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Company—Directors—General Meeting—Powers of—Remuneration for Past Services—Compensation to Dismissed Officials—Gratuitous Payments—Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), ss. 90 and 91—Regulation of Railways Act, 1868.

Directors of a trading company have, as incidental to their office, the power of doing that which is ordinarily and reasonably done with a view to getting either better work from their servants or to attract customers.

The test whether a majority can bind the minority in voting the company's money must be whether the proposed payment is reasonably incidental to and within the scope of carrying on the business of the company for the company's benefit.

(1) Law J. Rep. Chanc. 544; Law Rep. D. 250.

Remuneration of directors for past services, and compensation to meritorious officials on dismissal (both of which are gratuitous payments), are justifiable, provided that they are likely to conduce to the advantage of a company in the future. Therefore, to justify any such payments, the company must be a going concern.

Where, therefore, a company had ceased to exist as a profit-making company, and only continued for the purpose of regulating their internal affairs, of winding up the same, and distributing when received the sums which had been fixed by arbitration as the purchase-money for its undertaking:—

Held (by COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J.; dissentiente BAGGALLAY, L.J.), that it was not within the power of the directors themselves, or of a general meeting of the company, to pass a resolution voting remuneration to the directors for their past services prior to the transfer of the undertaking, and compensation to officials who had been discharged in consequence of such transfer.

But held by the Court, that the company could in general meeting vote a reasonable sum for remuneration for services during the winding-up.

Semble, a resolution voting the distribution of a sum of money, first in paying certain expenses properly payable thereout, the amount of which can only be estimated, and the balance among the directors by way of remuneration, even though remuneration is properly payable, is bad.

The resolution should take the form of a vote of a sum not exceeding an ascertained amount to be paid out of the balance—per COTTON, L.J.

The winding-up of a company is as much a part of the business of a company as is its formation—per BAGGALLAY, L.J.

This was an appeal from a decision of Fry, J. The case is reported at length ante, p. 377, but the following further information is added.

Section 5 of the Act of 1879 was as follows:—

"For the purposes of this Act and of the West Cork transfer, the undertaking of the West Cork Company shall consist of and be deemed to include their railway, stations, sidings, approaches, buildings . . . and all other works, whether complete or incomplete, and conveniences, and all the land, and all other the property, estate, moneys and assets, whether real or personal, rights, powers, authorities, privileges, obligations, contracts and liabilities, which, on the 1st of January, 1880, belong or attach to or are vested in the West Cork Company (except cash in hand or with the bankers, book debts, credits and sums received or due on credit or revenue account, and except any profits then to be divided, and except the amount of the West Cork purchase-money hereinafter mentioned) . . . . Provided always, that the Bandon Company shall not, nor shall the undertaking of the West Cork Company, after the West Cork transfer, be or continue in any way subject or liable to any claims or demands whatsoever on the part of any of the mortgagees or other creditors of the West Cork Company, or of any other persons or person, in respect of any bond, mortgage, debenture stock, share, or other security or debt whatsoever of the West Cork Company; but the same shall be paid and discharged in each case by the West Cork Company prior to the dissolution of that company, as hereinafter provided."

In consequence of the decision of Fry, J., holding that the meeting at which the resolutions complained of had been passed was irregular, an extraordinary general meeting was called for the 12th of April, 1883. Special notice was given in the advertisement convening the meeting, as follows:—

"That this meeting, having considered the estimated amounts required for law costs chargeable against the general account of the purchase of the undertaking (other than Parliamentary and arbitration expenses, as stated in the account appended to the directors' report of the 17th of February, 1883), and establishment expenses of the company until dissolution, and the proposed compensations to be paid to the managing director, secretary and other officials, hereby approve the same, and authorise the directors to apply such part as they find necessary of the sum of 4,000*l.*

ained by them out of the purchase-ney for the undertaking, to payment of h costs (other than aforesaid), expenses l compensation, and that the balance of said sum of 4,000*l.*, after providing reout for such costs, expenses and com-sation aforesaid (whether the establish-nt or proposed amounts, or such other ounts as the directors may in their dis-ion arrange), be the remuneration of directors, and be retained by them distributed amongst them as the board r determine.

5. Your directors have reason to bee that some misapprehension has arisen o the amount which will probably be for distribution amongst themselves, r payment of the charges proposed to ade out of the 4,000*l.*; and they desire, refore, to state that the following is the mate upon which they arrive at that unt—

aw costs (estimates as rendered to board)	£1,200
urther establishment expenses in the winding-up, estimated at .	250
ompensation to officials in London and Cork, including managing director	1,050
	£2,500
aving an estimate balance available for distribution amongst the directors (other than managing director) as the board may determine	1,500
	£4,000

Assuming the resolution to be passed ne meeting, your directors propose to ribute at once the ultimate balance of 56*l.* 11*s.*, and close the account."
he resolutions were passed, and in con-ence the limited injunction granted by , J., dropped.
he plaintiff accordingly appealed, ask-that the injunction might be made etual.

ookson, Q.C., and Seward Brice.—The l out of which the proposed remuneraand compensation are to be paid by resolution only comes into existence bee the company is wound up and another pany has taken its assets in pursuance Act of Parliament. Directors have no l claim to remuneration as servants of the company—Dunston v. The Imperial Gaslight and Coke Company, Limited (1); and it never was the practice to grant remuneration to them when the company was a going concern, and they never raised any such claim; and it cannot be that now, when the company has ceased to be a revenue-making concern, that compensation and remuneration for past services can be held to be a revenue debt or charge.

In none of the returns which have been sent in, in accordance with the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), ss. 3, 4 and 5, is there any mention of remuneration of directors; which should have been inserted in the revenue account for each half-year (see Form 9 in Schedule to the Act).

Then section 91 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on which Fry, J., relied, is not an enabling, but rather a restrictive, section, which cut down the powers previously conferred on directors as representing the company, and making it incumbent upon them that certain powers, e.g., of determining the directors' remuneration, shall only be exerciseable by a general meeting; and all the limitations in that section point to a going concern.

Even if the claim for remuneration should be held good, the compensation to discharged officials is clearly bad. That is nothing but a gratuity; and it is to be observed that this is one vote—and if all the vote were valid except the compensation, the vote is vitiated, because the minds of the members were not addressed to the consideration. Members might possibly not think it worth while to oppose the distribution of a small sum among the directors, while they might have thought it worth while when, by the failure of the vote for compensation, the fund for distribution was increased.

It cannot be said that granting compensation or remuneration for past services can be an internal affair of the company, in the sense in which the company is by the Act to continue, or as necessarily incidental to the winding-up.

In the case of Lambert v. The Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres (2) there was a (1) 3 B. & Ad. 125; 1 Law J. Rep. K.B. 49.

(2) 18 W. R. 180.

valid contract under the articles giving the directors remuneration at a fixed rate; and an agreement by them to defer their claim for a certain time was held not to be a release of their rights. Here the directors have no such contract.

Cozens Hardy, Q.C. (Beale with him), for the respondents.—Sections 90 and 91 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, indicate what is meant by the expression "regulating the internal affairs of a company." The clauses are a code which shews what may be done by any company which incorporates them. It may be that section 91 is, in one sense, restrictive—that is, as to the exercise of the power—but it implies the existence of the power.

[COTTON, L.J.—Do you suggest that there was any resolution of the directors to waive any claim for remuneration for a certain time?]

No; but their not having, in fact, claimed before must not be taken as a representation that they will not rely on the powers of section 91. Treating it now as if the company were a going concern, the fact of directors not claiming remuneration for some years cannot prevent a general meeting voting remuneration.

In any company under the Companies Clauses Act, the directors, during their first year, have no fixed salary; they must act with the hope of receiving a salary to be voted to them by the general meeting at the end of the year.

In Hampson v. Price's Patent Candle Company (3), Jessel, M.R., held that payment by directors of a week's extra pay to workpeople was a proper and reasonable exercise of the powers of management conferred on them by section 90, and one that did not require the assent of the shareholders. The true test seems to be whether the proposed application is made bona fide. So, too, in the case of Taunton v. The Royal Insurance Company (4), Wood, V.C., held that it was a beneficial exercise of the directors' powers of management to make a payment although it was not legally exigible.

If this had been a going concern, and apart from the Act of 1879, the company could have voted remuneration to the directors and compensation, and they would have been revenue charges—see Form in schedule of Act of 1868. There is nothing in the Act of 1879 to take away any power which the company had before. Section 5 of that Act does not transfer to the Bandon Company a single debt or liability of the West Cork Railway to anybody, but only debts due to the company.

The company is not yet dissolved; a good deal has still to be done, for which purpose the company is a going concern. Meetings must be held, the directors must still act, and auditors still be employed, and their charges must, by the Railways Regulation Act, be included in the revenue account—see Form No. 9 and No. 12 E; Browne and Theobald on Railways, 599, 600. It may be that it has no revenue to meet these charges; but it is a revenue charge for which the Act of 1875 has provided. Then the remuneration is not in the notice expressed to be for past services.

Brice, in reply.—Neither Hampson v. Price's Candle Company (3) nor Taunton v. The Royal Insurance Company (4) applies here; the directors in both cases were acting with a view to future profits—both were going concerns. The company has ceased, except for the mere distribution of the purchase-money.

COTTON, L.J.—This is an application by way of appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Fry, and asks in effect for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from dealing with a sum of 4,000*l.* in accordance with a resolution passed at a general meeting of the company on the 19th of April last.

Mr. Justice Fry had in fact, in the state of things before him, granted an injunction, because at that time no meeting had been called at which such a resolution could be passed in accordance with what he thought were the powers of the company in general meeting assembled, but intimated an opinion adverse to the appellant, that if a meeting of the company were duly called and a resolution duly passed, that meeting would have power to deal with the 4,000*l.* as proposed by the resolution; and therefore the plaintiff applies by way of appeal for an extended injunction, the injunction granted by Mr. Justice Fry simply being until a resolution was passed by a general meeting authorising the application of the money.

(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 437.

(4) 2 Hem. & M. 130; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 406.

The West Cork Railway Company, the defendants, were a company which, under an Act of Parliament passed in 1879, had sold their undertaking to the Bandon Company, and received as the purchase-money from that company a sum of about 141,000*l.*; and section 12 of that Act, upon which the question mainly turns, provided how that sum was to be dealt with when paid by the Bandon Company; and the real question is this—whether, having regard to that section, it was within the powers of a general meeting to direct how that 4,000*l.* should be applied—if it should be applied in the way in which it is proposed to apply it.

It is not necessary to go in detail into the different sections of the Act. Section 5 refers to what is to be transferred by the defendant company, as its undertaking, to the purchasing company, and I think the meaning of that section is this—that the first part (there is a proviso which I call the second part) provides what the undertaking shall be which is to be transferred, and includes in that certain obligations, contracts and liabilities which on the 1st of January, 1880, belonged or attached to or were vested in the defendant company. But there is an exception, which includes cash in hand, book debts and sums received or due on credit or revenue account, &c.

Then there is a proviso, which I think most material [reads the proviso:] That proviso clearly contemplates that there shall be some money debts which are not to be undertaken by the Bandon Company, not coming under the obligations, contracts and liabilities which are to be transferred, but which shall be paid by the defendant company prior to its dissolution. That must be that they must be paid out of that property excepted from the undertaking to be transferred to the Bandon Company, or out of the purchase-money to be paid by the Bandon Company. There had been a previous scheme for getting rid of the debts and liabilities of the defendant company, and I think both parties agree that that scheme provided for all debts existing up to the time of that scheme; and though there might be some other liabilities, such as, for instance, if there had been an accident, and then an action which had not been settled by a judgment before the time of transfer on the 1st of January, 1880, and which would be simply an action for damages, and the claim would not have ripened into a debt, yet where there was a claim which had at that time ripened into a money demand fixed by a judgment, that would have to be provided for by the defendant company; but in the former case the claim would be a matter which the Bandon Company would have to undertake.

Then we come to section 12 of the Act, and before reading that we had better read section 14. I need not read it in detail, but after the completion of the transfer by the purchasing company, the defendant company shall be dissolved, "except for the purpose of regulating their internal affairs and winding up the same, and applying the said purchase-money in accordance with the provisions of the Act." That clearly continues the corporation with such powers as are incidental to and necessary for the winding-up, and in that way regulating their internal affairs. Then we have section 12. [Reads it.] What is now proposed to be done is this. 4,000*l.* was set apart, and it was proposed that out of that certain costs should be paid, and then out of the balance it was estimated that there would be enough to give 1,050*l.* as compensation to officials and the managing director of the defendant company, and then that there should be a sum paid to the directors, which was estimated to amount to 1,500*l.* The question before us is whether that can be lawfully done under this resolution.

As I understand, the state of things in this company has been this—the officials were paid so long as they were in the service of the company, and there is no evidence before the Court that they made any claim in respect of being discharged from its service without due notice, or that they have any legal claim against the company. Therefore as regards the 1,050*l.* voted for them, it must, in my opinion, be treated simply as a gratuity—not as a sum or payment in respect of any legal claim against the defendant company, but a gratuity in consideration of their not being continued in receipt of that remuneration which, had the company lasted and they had continued in its service, they would have received.

As regards the directors' remuneration, the matter stands on a different footing. The present directors apparently have never received any remuneration at all for their services while the company was a concern carrying on the railway and before the Bandon Company took possession of the railway. The evidence goes only to the present directors; but it seems to be conceded that none of the directors of the company ever have had remuneration, and it is conceded that no resolution has been passed while the company was a going concern fixing the remuneration to be paid to the directors. It is not that they have not been paid a remuneration which had been fixed as proper to be paid to them by a general meeting, but that there has been no such resolution, and the directors have gone on—the present and the past—never getting any remuneration at all. Under these circumstances two matters are to be considered. Of course there is no objection to so much of the resolution as provides for the payment of costs and expenses to be provided out of the 4,000*l.* But can the resolution be considered as intra vires as regards the two other matters? I will take first that which provides for compensation. It was said that it is within the powers of the directors of a trading or business company to grant gratuities to its servants, and that the present case comes within that principle—for the directors of this company retain such powers as are incidental to a company of this kind, notwithstanding that its railway has been handed over to the Bandon Company. I think that the directors did continue to be such, and to retain their powers so far as they were necessary for or incidental to the winding-up of the company, but not such powers as only are impliedly given to general meetings or to directors because they are carrying on a business company for the purpose of carrying on its business and for the purpose of making a profit from it. Cases have been referred to in which the late Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor Wood had determined that matters which were not within the powers expressly given to directors or the general meeting were within the powers impliedly given to them as directors of a going concern—in one case before Vice-Chancellor Wood, of an insurance company, that they might pay losses which were not within the risk which they professed to insure against, and in the other case before the Master of the Rolls, that the directors were at liberty to make, and could not be restrained from making, a gratuity to their servants when there had been a very good year, by giving each of them who was in their service a year, and was of good character, a gratuity equal to a week's wages.

But, in my opinion, those cases went on a principle not applicable to the existing state of this company from the time when it handed over its railway and existed only for the purposes of the winding-up. The principle of those cases, as I understand, is, that directors of a trading company necessarily have incidentally the power of doing that which is ordinarily and reasonably done with a view to getting either better work from their servants or with a view to attract customers to them. In the case before the Master of the Rolls he refers to this, that although it is said that nothing of the kind is to be expected again, yet when such a gratuity is given to servants in a good year, the servants then in the service of the company whom the directors may reasonably expect to stay naturally look forward, not as a matter of right, but of liberality, to this, that they will probably be dealt with in a similar way if by their exertions they get a good profit; and that therefore it was a reasonable mode of carrying on the business of a company for the purpose of making it most profitable. But that assumes that the company is a going concern and continuing business, and it is with reference to the effect upon the continuing business and the going concern that the directors are said to have these powers incidentally.

So in the case of Taunton v. The Royal Insurance Company (4) it was shewn that other insurance companies were in the habit of doing that which was complained of there, and that it was a reasonable way of conducting the business of an insurance office in order to attract customers—to pay losses which were not strictly within the terms of the policy, and which therefore could not be said to be legally enforceable against the company. But here the company is gone as a company carrying on business for the purpose of making profits, and therefore the sums proposed to be paid to the officials and managing director could not be held to be an inducement to them to exert themselves in the future, or to be an act done reasonably for the purpose of getting the greatest profit from the business of the company, but must be looked upon simply as a gratuity, perhaps reasonable, for I do not say that it was not reasonable to pay the servants for past services, even without any prospect of such payment in any way conducing to the benefit of the company. In my opinion, therefore, neither the directors nor the general meeting had any power, in the state of circumstances which are before us, as I understand them to be, of granting that compensation to the officials and other servants.

Then comes the question as to the directors. I was not quite satisfied that this invalid provision for compensation alone would not prevent this resolution from being acted upon, because I have some doubt as to how far the 1,050*l.* is a sum set apart for compensation, or whether the whole thing is a sort of estimate which they made. There is a good deal in Mr. Cookson's argument that if the 1,050*l.* was a sum which the persons invited to the meeting had to look upon as one which could lawfully be granted, they might not have thought it worth while to come and oppose the grant to the directors. But I do not deal with it on that footing. I propose to consider whether under this Act of Parliament it would be within the powers of the general meeting to make a grant of the 1,500*l.* to the directors. I am not at all satisfied that a resolution could be sanctioned which voted a sum, e.g., of 4,000*l.*, in this way:—Let out of that sum be paid certain expenses, the amount of which can only be estimated, and then let the remainder be distributed amongst the directors by way of remuneration. In a case where remuneration could be granted to them of an amount reasonably suitable for the services which they had rendered, it might be quite right of course to say that if the services were estimated at 1,500*l.* they should have any sum not exceeding 1,500*l.* out of the balance of the sum which was first to provide for other sums; but that is not the case here, they might get a little more than 1,500*l.* or they might not. I do not think that if it ever comes to be considered, a resolution in that form would be approved.

I do not propose to lay down a general rule how far a general meeting could, under section 91 of the Companies Clauses Act, in a going concern, and when not bound by any special clause as to the application of its funds, give remuneration, not only for the then current year, or for the first year, but also the past years during which they have acted apparently without intending to receive any remuneration at all.

Now here, during the whole of the company's existence, the directors have not received any remuneration at all, and there has been no resolution saying what they shall have. I agree with Mr. Hardy that during the first year of a Parliamentary company, and coming under the Companies Clauses Act, the directors must be acting without any fixed salary, but merely with the expectation of receiving such a salary as the general meeting may grant them, and that therefore it must be in expectation. But that I think negatives the idea that they agreed to act without any remuneration at all. They were agreeing to act for such remuneration, during that time at least, as the general meeting at the end of the first year would grant them. But when directors have for many years gone on without its ever being suggested that they should have any remuneration, and we have this Act of Parliament which contains the clause—that the purchase-money shall be applied in paying off "any revenue debts or charges of the West Cork Company so far as the same may not already have been paid out of revenue," though there it undoubtedly enables the purchase-money to be applied in payment of any charges constituted by a resolution of a general meeting or otherwise as charges which under the Act of 1868 would properly come as against revenue—in my opinion, having regard to these words, it was not competent to a general meeting to deal with this fund when it came to distribution by providing for any remuneration to the directors for those services which they had been giving during the time the company was a going concern without any remuneration or without any resolution of a general meeting or otherwise which entitled them to remuneration. But then I think, according to section 14 and to this section (I do not decide it, because it does not presently arise, but as at present advised my opinion is in that direction), that a general meeting could in the winding-up, and in exercising for the purpose of the winding-up the powers given by section 91 of the Companies Clauses Act, give to the directors what may be considered a fair remuneration for their services in the winding-up, by which I mean for the time they were giving their services to the company after the railway and the undertaking had been taken over by the Bandon company, and all that was being done was being done for the purpose, not of carrying on the railway as a going concern, but for the purpose of doing that which was incidental to and connected with the winding-up of the company; and then if it had been shewn that this sum was given to the directors as a payment to them for their services during the winding-up in the interval from the 1st of January, 1880, to the present time, which would really be the winding-up, in my opinion that could not have been attacked if this present resolution could be considered as fixing the sum properly due to them for those services. But I think that on the evidence the inference is the other way, namely, that this sum of 1,500*l.* was agreed to or voted to be paid to them, not for their services during that term, or as a reasonable sum to be paid as remuneration for their services, but as a sum which might, with reasonable generosity, be paid to them, taking into account the fact that they never received anything during the years when they carried on the railway. That I think was beyond the powers which the company retained under section 14 and the powers of the Companies Clauses Act incidental to the carrying on of the winding-up of the company, and therefore that was ultra vires.

In my opinion, therefore, neither as regards the compensation, nor as regards the vote of 1,500*l.* to the directors, can this resolution be considered to be within the powers of a general meeting held under this Act.

I have not gone into the question—I understand none is now raised—as to whether this meeting was properly called. I have dealt with the case upon the footing that the plaintiff here stands in no better position than the shareholders would—that is to say, he is a person who by the vote of a general meeting of the company acting within its powers would be bound, and could not object simply because he thought the thing unreasonable or that it was too large a sum to vote. Then what I have said also relates to the provision made in these resolutions for paying out of the 4,000*l.* the costs which are referred to—the costs chargeable against the general account of the purchase of the undertaking.

Therefore the injunction which I think ought to be granted will be confined to this: to restrain the company from applying any part of the 4,000*l.* in accordance with the resolution, otherwise than in payment of the costs and expenses in the winding-up which are resolved to be paid thereout. It is right to add that it is not to be considered as preventing the company in general meeting from voting any sum out of the purchase-money as a reasonable remuneration for the services of the directors during the period subsequent to the 1st of January, 1880.

I think I ought to say what in my opinion is the meaning of the clause b. The general debts had to be provided for by the resolutions; but, as I say, section 5 and the proviso clearly do contemplate that some other debts still remain to be payable by the West Cork Company. I think it is to be considered that all the debts and charges which would be incurred in winding up, or which would be incurred from the time when the company was dealt with by the scheme, would practically be revenue debts and charges. It cannot, I think, be considered that they are to be confined to revenue debts and charges incurred or become such at the time when the company was a revenue-making company by means of its railway. Although not free from doubt upon the point, I think that all those charges which would be reasonably or properly incurred in winding up the company would be those charges which by the Act of 1868, the general Act, would come in the schedule of revenue debts and charges, and even such a case as a claim for an accident which had ripened into a judgment before the time—the 1st of January, 1880—that is mentioned specially in the revenue account, and not in the capital account—so that I think it means this: that all the charges incurred previously to the complete winding-up and distribution of the money will be in the nature of revenue debts and charges; they are to be provided for, and they shall be provided for, out of this capital sum, to prevent any difficulty being suggested on the ground that under the general Act they can only be paid out of income. That it does by this clause b. and intends to provide for all charges properly payable by the company before the distribution of the purchase-money. That being so, it must be, in my opinion, in the way I have indicated: that those revenue charges fixed before the time of the 1st of January, 1880, and those which might properly be incurred, are fixed as revenue charges afterwards in the winding-up of the company, and under the powers of the company existing simply and solely for the purpose of winding-up.

In my opinion, the injunction should be granted in the way I have mentioned.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion as Lord Justice Cotton.

Now the directors in this case have done, it seems to me, nothing at all wrong. Let us clear the ground, because my sympathies are rather with the judgment of Lord Justice Fry, if one could really exercise sympathy in a case where questions of law have to be decided. Not only have they done nothing wrong, but I confess I think the company have done what nine companies out of ten would do, and do without the least objection being made. They have paid perhaps liberally—perhaps not at all too liberally—persons who have served them faithfully. But that of course does not get rid of the difficulty. As soon as a question is raised by a dissentient shareholder, or by a person standing in the position of a dissentient shareholder, sympathy must be cut adrift, and we have simply to consider what the law is. In this particular instance the plaintiff is a person who stands prima facie in the condition of those who are bound by the vote of a general meeting acting within the powers of a general meeting; but he complains that the majority propose to expend certain purchase-money which the company are receiving from the Bandon Company, in two ways, which he thinks are beyond their powers. In the first place, he says that the majority are going to expend money in compensating the managing director and other officials, who are being extinguished by this transfer to the Bandon Company, for the loss of their places. The compensation which is to be awarded is not compensation for any legal loss they have sustained, because I understand that these gentlemen could always have been discharged, and they have received notice amply sufficient to prevent them from having any cause of legal grievance, and they simply have been asked in the usual way to cease to serve the masters who have no further cause for their services. In the second place, money is sought to be expended upon remuneration of the directors. The facts there again deserve to be shortly summarised. They are directors who for many years have served the company for nothing, and I cannot help thinking that, down to the time this purchase-money was to be received, it was always understood that they were going to serve the company for nothing. I see no reason to think at all events that they ever meant to put forward any claim. But after this arrangement of transfer to the Bandon Company, and after the company is wound up, or towards the close of its winding-up, it is proposed to pay them a lump sum, the measure taken not being the measure of service they have rendered in the winding-up, but a general view which the company entertain of their past merits. Now, can a majority compel a dissentient unit in the company to give way and to submit to these payments? The money which is going to be spent is not the money of the majority. That is clear. It is the money of the company, and the majority want to spend it. What would be the natural test or limit of their power? They can only spend money which is not theirs, sub modo, if they are spending it for purposes which are reasonably incidental to the carrying on of the business of the company. That is the general common sense doctrine. Bona fides cannot be the test prima facie, otherwise you might have a lunatic conducting the affairs of the company and paying away its money with both hands perfectly bona fide, but perfectly irrationally. The test must be what is reasonably incidental to and within the reasonable scope of carrying on the business of the company. Applying that kind of view, what is the character of these payments? First of all I ask myself what is the test to apply if the company was a going concern in the ordinary way; and, secondly, whether this company is still in the same position as an ordinary railway company, or whether it has not become a railway company of a very limited kind—a business adventure of a very exceptional sort, with its business contracted accordingly within very obvious and easily defined limits.

But first of all let us consider in what kind of way one would deal with the case of an ordinary railway, because Mr. Hardy in his most able and clear argument has pressed upon us that it is amply within the powers of an ordinary company to pay away money for the remuneration of its directors in the past. I do not say it is not, within limits. But what is the remuneration of directors? I think it is pretty clear that, like the compensation for loss of the services of the managing director, it is a gratuity. A director is not a servant; he is a person who is doing business for the company, but not upon any terms to be implied from the mere fact that he is a director, to the effect that he is to have a right to be paid for it. In some companies, not in railway companies perhaps so often as in other companies, but in many companies, there is a special provision for the way in which the directors should be paid; in others there is not. If there is a special provision for the way in which they are to be paid, that special provision must be looked at to see how to deal with it. But if there is no special provision, then payment is in the nature of a gratuity, as was pointed out in the case of Dunston v. The Imperial Gaslight Company (1). Directors under these circumstances often do get money. But, whenever they get it, it is in the nature of a gratuity voted. That does not get rid of the difficulty, because the question must still be asked what is the general law about gratuitous payments which are made by the directors or by a company so as to bind dissentients. It seems to me you cannot say the company has only got power to spend the money which it is bound to pay according to law, otherwise the wheels of business would stop; nor can you say that directors who have got the powers of the company given to them by section 90 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act are always to be limited to the strictest possible view of what the obligations of the company are. They are not to keep their pockets buttoned up and defy the world, unless they are liable in the way which could be enforced at law or in equity. Most businesses require liberal dealings. The test then again is, not whether it is bona fide, but whether it is bona fide done, and done within the ordinary business scope of the company's business, and whether it is reasonably incidental to the carrying on of the company's business for the company's benefit. Take this sort of instance—A railway company or the directors of the company might send down all the porters at a railway station to have tea in the country at the expense of the company. Why should they not? It is for them to judge, provided it is a matter which is reasonably incidental to the carrying on of the business of the company; and a company which always treated its employés with Draconian severity, and never allowed them a single inch more than the strict letter of the bond, would find itself deserted—at all events unless labour was very much more easy to obtain in the market than it often is.

The law does not say that there are to be no cakes and ale, but there are to be no cakes and ale except such as are required for the benefit of the company.

Now that I think is the principle to be found in the case of Hampson v. Price's Patent Candle Company (3). The Master of the Rolls there held that the company might lawfully expend a week's wages as gratuities for their servants, because that sort of liberal dealing with servants eases the friction between masters and servants, and is in the end a benefit to the company. It is not because it is charity in disguise sitting at the board of directors, because, as it seems to me, charity has no business to sit at boards of directors as charity. There is a kind of charitable dealing which is for the interest of those who practise it, and to that extent and in that garb (I admit not a very philanthropic garb) charity may go to the board, but for no other purpose. We are dealing here, not with morals and philanthropy, but with business. I think the reasons which the Master of the Rolls gave in dealing with that case are pretty much the reasons which I have now given. It is for the benefit of the company to deal liberally with their servants. In the same way might be put the remuneration of directors. A company could not always go on if the moment the directors had served six weeks or months or a year they wanted their remuneration for the past period. That is not the way to do business. The past remuneration of directors seems to me, like the gratuitous wages in Price's Patent Candle Company's Case (2) to be justifiable, provided it is within the scope of the advantage and secures advantage to the company.

I add one word more about compensation for dismissal of employés. I am by no means prepared to say that directors might not, and that a company might not, when a meritorious servant is leaving their service present him with a five-pound note. I should be very sorry to decide that they might not. All I say is that there must be a limit, and the limit is what is necessary in the reasonable management of the affairs of the company.

Is there anything in the Act of 1845, section 91, which alters that view of the law as to the remuneration of the directors? Section 90 is a section which deals with matters which are within the powers of the company, and gives the directors power generally to do all that the company may do, but does not give them power to do more than the company may. Section 91 limits their power as regards their own remuneration, because the amount must be sanctioned by a general meeting. That does not enlarge the powers of the directors with regard to their remuneration. Then take Mr. Justice Fry's judgment, and what is the passage on which his view seems to turn? It is curious that Mr. Justice Fry has not dealt with the question of compensation for dismissal in detail, and I should have been glad to know what his view was; but this is what he says with regard to remuneration for past services of the directors:—"It appears to me there is nothing whatever to prevent a general meeting from so voting remuneration for past services. If I were to hold otherwise, that would preclude directors from foregoing their right to remuneration when a company might be in trouble and difficulty, and asserting their moral right to remuneration when the company had become prosperous by reason of their services. Of course if the majority of the shareholders present think it undesirable or improper to vote remuneration for past services, the directors can have no claim whatever; but in case the majority think it reasonable and fit to vote a sum of money for past services, it appears to me it is a matter in which the majority can bind the minority." If that is meant as a simple test, I confess I do not agree with it. If it means that within certain limits that is the test, I agree there must be an ultimate limit; but the ultimate limit is not bona fides, but what is necessary for carrying on business—that is the limit which Mr. Justice, now Lord Justice, Fry has not applied to this case.

Such is the general view of the law I should take about a company which was a going concern. Now let us see whether this company is a going concern in the same sense, and whether we have the same limit with regard to the payment of money. This particular company had been sold to the Bandon company, and the purchase-money was to be assessed, and it was part of the scheme that at the time of transfer and payment of the purchase-money all capital debts of the company should be and were extinguished. The company remained alive, as Mr. Cozens Hardy has pointed out, but only for certain purposes. It was not a going concern in the full sense of the term, nor was the venture any longer the ordinary venture of a railway company. It had a special and limited business, and that business was to preside at its own funeral, to wind itself up, and carry on its own internal affairs until it had distributed the purchase-money in the way the Act of Parliament prescribed. If that be so, when applying the general test whether what has been done is incidental to the business of the company, this further matter must be borne in mind, what the business of this company is; and the question must be asked whether these payments were necessary for that kind of limited business, or could reasonably be said to be part of the business.

Now, the three material sections of the Act of Parliament are the 5th, 12th and 14th. Section 5 defines the undertaking of the West Cork Company, which is to be transferred to the Bandon Railway Company. All the then assets of the West Cork Company, with certain limitations, are transferred to the Bandon Railway Company and go with the undertaking. But, besides that, certain liabilities were part of the undertaking, and what those liabilities are, I think, is to be seen by referring to two matters—first, the fact that it was part of the scheme that all debts should be wiped off, except "revenue debts and charges" strictly speaking, and, secondly, the proviso which reserves and attaches to the selling company (the West Cork Company) all debts properly so called—that is to say, liquidated sums due, as well as mortgage and other securities. The liabilities which were to go over were such liabilities as had accrued and had not become debts. I do not say there were many other kinds of liability which would not satisfy the word "debts," but there is also the kind of liability suggested by the Court during the argument, the liability in respect of a railway accident which may have occurred upon the day before the transfer, in which a man had been killed; and that liability of the company to compensate the man's family would pass over to the new railway company, because it had not ripened into a debt; but if at the time of the transfer it had ripened into a debt, it was attached to and still remained a burden upon the selling company. That section says nothing at all about such current expenses as might be incurred after the time of the transfer and during the limited operations of the company while winding itself up and directing the apportionment of the purchase-money. Nevertheless, the company was to survive for those purposes under section 14, which I refer to next. [Reads it]. There must be some expenses connected with that dissolution. How are they provided for? They are provided for nowhere, unless they come within the words of section 12—"revenue debts or charges." The purchase-money was to be paid over, and section 12 directs how it should be applied. In the first place it is to go in paying their proportion of the costs of obtaining the Act, and incidental to the arbitration and award that fixed the price to be paid; secondly, in paying off any revenue debts or charges of the West Cork Company, so far as the same may not already have been paid out of revenue, and subject thereto; and, thirdly, in distributing the balance of such purchase-money to and amongst the respective classes of debenture stockholders and preference and ordinary shareholders. The West Cork Company would have no money to pay these expenses incident to the termination of its own existence, unless they could be taken out of the purchase-money as revenue debts or charges under sub-section b of section 12 of the Act. I think that is an answer to a difficulty which I felt, but abandoned, during the argument, as to whether these words, "revenue debts or charges," could apply to anything but the revenue debts and charges which existed at the time of the completion of the transfer. If the company could expend the money for certain purposes, I think it must be held to include that. Mr. Hardy pointed out, with great force, that "revenue debts or charges" were probably words introduced not without reference to 31 & 32 Vict., which deals with the administration of railway accounts, and which distinguishes the capital account from the revenue account; and he urged upon us, as a consequence of that, that this should be a revenue charge, and that all that would naturally fall under revenue charges and be properly charged to that particular account under the 31 & 32 Vict. might lawfully be paid under sub-section b. I agree that if he could make out that this remuneration or compensation of the directors is a charge at all, it might properly be paid under sub-section b, because it would be a revenue charge if a charge properly made. But with all respect to his argument, where it seems to me to break down is this—compensation and gratuity for past services generally, without reference to such services as were rendered during the winding-up, can no longer be charges or expenditure reasonably incidental to the carrying on, not the business of the old company, but what the business of the company would be for the purposes of its continued existence. It was moribund, and would only want to die in peace and distribute its assets; and it would not, as it seems to me, be proper to carry to the revenue account of such a company the money it voted to directors in a liberal spirit for what they had done in past years, or to a managing director for the disappointment and vexation of being deprived of an office for which he had been amply paid. The revenue debts and charges of the company must be viewed with reference to the qualified nature of its existence still left. That being so, I think the resolution as to compensation is clearly wrong. The directors have no right to give it. It might in some instances be worth the while of a company to compensate a meritorious but dismissed officer; but that kind of justification cannot exist in the case of a dying company. I think that makes the resolution bad, and I think it also renders it necessary to pass some fresh resolution, because I agree with Lord Justice Cotton that if the meeting had given even to the directors generally a surplus, on the assumption that 1,000*l.* can be expended upon officials (which is not a correct assumption), and that the surplus would have to be increased by the 1,000*l.*, it does not at all follow that it meant the directors to have that 1,000*l.* It seems to me, however, that the meeting have not considered it in the right view, and not given it in the right measure.

I do not understand Lord Justice Cotton to say that no remuneration can be granted to the directors out of the purchase-money which is reasonably measured by the services they have rendered in the winding-up of this company and in connection with the completion of the dissolution and transfer; but this resolution is couched in much wider terms, and is apparently based upon the idea that they might be charitable with reference to past services done for the company at the time it was a going company; and I think a willing majority has no right to bind a dissentient minority by any resolution so conceived.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—Inasmuch as my decision can have no effect as regards the order which will be pronounced upon the present appeal, it will be sufficient if I simply indicate the outline of the grounds which appear to me to lead to the conclusion at which I have arrived.

When the Act of 1879 was passed the defendant company was a going concern. That Act gave power to the Bandon Railway Company to purchase the undertaking of the defendant company, and authorised the price being regulated by arbitration. The contract for the purchase was entered into between the two companies in the autumn of 1879, and the purchase was to be completed before the 1st of January, 1880. The price was ascertained before that day, and upon that day all the undertaking of the defendant company passed to the Bandon Company. But there was a proviso that, when that property had so passed, the Bandon Company should not be liable for the claims of mortgagees and other creditors against the defendant company, all of which were to be paid and discharged by the defendant company. Then the 14th section was as follows [reads it]—that is to say, the company are discharged quoad outsiders, and it is to remain a company for the three purposes mentioned—namely, regulating its internal affairs, winding up the same, and applying the purchase-money in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

Now, I must say that I think the winding-up of a company is a part of the business of a company, just as much as the formation of a company is a part. I think the affairs of a company are not concluded until the winding-up is at an end. I think that the purpose for which the company is to be treated as a living company —namely, the regulation of its internal affairs—extended to the regulation of all its internal affairs, whether such regulations are to be carried out through the medium of the directors or through the medium of its shareholders. I think that all those powers continued until the winding-up was completed.

Then the question arises—which is the substantial question raised here—whether, during that interval between the time when the company was dissolved quoad outsiders by the transfer of its undertaking to the Bandon Company, and the time when it should complete its affairs by distributing the balance of the purchase-money, which time has not yet arrived, it could be part of their right, in regulating their internal affairs, to fix the amount of remuneration to be paid to the directors, and to fix the amount of compensation to be paid to the officials. I do not propose to enter into any detailed argument in support of the opinion which I have formed—I adopt substantially the view expressed by Mr. Justice Fry in his judgment as reported. But I desire to direct attention to the 90th and 91st sections of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845. The latter provides for remuneration of the directors, and they are under the general head "with respect to the powers of the directors and the powers of the company to be exercised only in general meeting." A company has the same powers of dealing with its affairs as an individual has, subject only to the restrictions imposed upon it by the terms of its incorporation. Some of those powers are to be exercised only by the directors, and some are only to be exercised under the power or control of a general meeting. The 90th section provides in general terms that the directors shall have the management and superintendence of the affairs of the company, and may lawfully exercise all the powers of the company, either under the Companies Clauses Act or under the special Act incorporating it, subject to the control and regulation of any general meeting specially convened for the purpose. And section 91 is merely an exception from the general powers which section 90 confers upon the directors as regards all powers; and it says, as regards the particular powers therein mentioned, that they are to be exercised only at a general meeting of the company. Mr. Justice Fry was of opinion that the general meeting of the company, as referred to in that section, though not so indicated there, should be an extraordinary one; and for that reason he thought it necessary to grant the partial injunction which he did grant—namely, until an extraordinary meeting had been called and another resolution passed. Then a meeting was held, and a resolution to the same effect as before was passed. One of the powers to be exercised by the general meeting, as distinguished from the directors, is the remuneration of the directors, auditors, treasurers and secretary—they are all put in the same class there. It is not said there that the directors may receive a gratuity, and the auditors, treasurers and secretary may receive remuneration.

Although the directors cannot be called the servants of the company, they are all persons entitled to have remuneration from the company in respect of services rendered to the company. I can see no difference, as regards the provisions of the 91st section, between a director and any other servant. It may be said, and I think very properly said, that until such time as a general meeting has fixed the amount of remuneration of the directors, or of the treasurer, or secretary, or any other officer, the person so indicated has not any right to demand his remuneration; but the power of granting remuneration is the same as regards one or other of the parties named, and, having regard to the words of the section, it can hardly be disputed that, at any time before what I may call the dissolution of the company quoad outsiders—that is, the first dissolution—it was in the power of a general meeting to fix the amount of remuneration of the directors, and of any other of the servants of the company. I must confess, having regard to the ordinary practice with regard to these matters with which we are all more or less acquainted, and having regard to the absence of any case in which remuneration voted to directors in respect of their services has been called into question and disallowed, I am of opinion that it was within the powers of the meeting at any time when the company was a going concern to pass a resolution and vote a sum to the directors for past services as well as for the present. As has been pointed out in the course of the argument, the first allowance of remuneration voted to directors must be for past services, because no allowance can be made until after the first general meeting.

Having regard to the view I have taken of the case, am I right in thinking that the company have the same powers after the first dissolution down to the time when the final dissolution takes place by reason of the affairs being completely wound up? I must confess that, reading as I do section 14 of the Act, so far as regards the power of regulating the internal affairs of the company, I think the power continues the same as it ever was down to the time when the purchase-money is to be ultimately divided according to the provisions of the Act; and that the same power of remunerating the directors for past services remained, and was a power of the company to be exercised by such one of its two bodies as had the duty imposed upon it of exercising that power.

But it is said that the business of the company is at an end—that the undertaking having been handed over to the Bandon Company, there is no longer any business to be done. A great deal remains to be done. If I am right in saying that the winding-up of a company is as much part of the business of the company as was its formation, what had the company to do in the winding-up of its affairs under sub-section a of the 12th section? The company had to provide for the costs of and incidental to the obtaining the Act, and also all the costs of and incidental to the arbitration and the award, which could not take place until after the Act passed. Then they had to pay off any revenue debts or charges of the defendant company, so far as the same might not already have been paid; and then, subject thereto, to distribute the ultimate balance. It can hardly be disputed that there may have been a number of debts and charges remaining at the time this Act of Parliament passed, and which had to be paid off; and no other authority, no other persons, were appointed by this Act to carry out all those proceedings after the time when the Act became the law of the land. Nobody else remained to conduct the business of the company except the directors, who are subject to the control of the general meeting. Many things remained to be done: there was a substantial amount of business to be carried on in various ways before the final dissolution could take place.

Then it is said that it would be a hard thing that a vote of this kind should be passed. But all the shareholders were represented at the meeting. If this had been the ordinary case of a company being wound up where merely the ordinary shareholders would be the persons entitled to attend and vote, they might not possibly care how much of the money of the debenture-holders might be paid in gratuities to officers or directors or any one else; but here, under the scheme of arrangement, every one of the debenture-holders had an opportunity of attending this meeting like the ordinary shareholders, and they attended and voted according to their qualifications. At this meeting the resolution was carried by a decided majority. It is suggested that there were only two opponents—the plaintiff in the present action, and his brother. However that may be, there is no suggestion that the meeting was not properly convened and properly held, and the resolution passed was not properly passed, if the meeting had power to pass it. It is not therefore a question of hardship; it is not a question of how much business remained to be done, but it is simply and solely a question of whether the company was an existing company as far as regards the regulation of its internal affairs. If I am right in that, the vote of remuneration to the directors is beyond all question. I am free to admit that there may be some further question as regards the compensation to officers for the loss, or supposed loss, of their places. The argument upon that has rather turned on the magnitude of the gift than on the principle. It is said you must not be too nice as regards a little matter—a small present of a few weeks' wages to a man who has done his work well is not important; but a large amount of compensation to men who have been faithful in the positions they occupied and who have done their work well for years is not within the powers of the company. It is difficult to measure a case of the kind by the magnitude of the sum voted. Here there are officers who have discharged their duties and served the company well for a length of time; and is it beyond their powers to vote a reasonable amount of remuneration to them for the services rendered, and which it is admitted are valuable services, they now being in the position of being deprived of the offices they held? I should be very sorry to hold that it was beyond their powers. My only doubt is whether it was not within the power of the directors without the assistance of the shareholders. However, the mere fact of the shareholders having passed the resolution is of no importance. The only other matter which I need mention is the sum of 4,000*l.*, out of which the directors were to pay a certain sum for expenses, a certain sum for compensation of officials, and a further sum by way of remuneration to themselves. The question has been raised, whether, taking the resolution as one resolution, some of the provisions being bad do not make the whole resolution bad. I should, however, prefer taking it as a resolution in three parts, giving so much in respect of law expenses, so much for the officials, and so much in respect of the directors.

In the circumstances I have stated, I think the conclusion Mr. Justice Fry arrived at is right, and I regret that my learned colleagues do not take the same view.

COTTON, L.J.—The order will be that "the plaintiff continuing the undertaking as to damages, there will be an injunction restraining the company from paying or applying any part of the 141,434*l.* in manner directed by the resolution of the 19th of April, 1883, otherwise than in providing for the costs and expenses therein mentioned. The order should also be without prejudice to the right of the general meeting to vote, and of the directors to retain or apply, any reasonable sum for the remuneration of the directors for their services since the 1st of January, 1880, in the winding-up of the company.

Solicitors—Robins & Cameron, for appellant; Norton, Rose, Norton & Co., for the company.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 27.

BADISCHE ANILIN UND SODA FABRIK v. LEVINSTEIN.

Patent Action—Practice—Use of Independent Scientific Assistance by the Court—Procedure in case of Alleged Infringement by Use of a Secret Process—Infringement—New Process—New Result—Chemical Equivalents.

Where in a patent case the evidence is conflicting and indecisive on a scientific point, the Court is at liberty to obtain competent independent scientific assistance in determining the matters at issue.

Where in a patent case the defendant denies infringement, but objects to state in open Court the process he actually practises, on the ground that it is the subject of a valuable secret, of the benefit of which he would be deprived by disclosure, the Court will first ascertain whether the defence fails in all other respects than infringement, and then, unless the defendant prefers to submit to an injunction, will hear the evidence and arguments with respect to the alleged infringement by the secret process with closed doors, and, with a view to further protecting the secret, will order the shorthand notes of the private hearing to be impounded until either an appeal is entered or the right to appeal is abandoned.

Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Levinstein.

Where a patent is obtained for the use of particular chemical materials for arriving at a particular chemical result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by the use of other chemical materials which were not known to be equivalents for the materials mentioned in the specification at the time when the patent was obtained.

Where a patent is obtained for a new process for arriving at a known result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by a different process.

Where a patent is obtained for a new result, and one process of arriving at that result is described in the specification, it is an infringement to produce the same result by any process.

Patent action.

The action was brought by a German company of chemical dye stuff manufacturers, who were the assignees of an English patent, taken out by their representative in England for an invention communicated by their chemist in Germany, for "Improvements in the production of colouring matter suitable for dyeing and printing," for the purpose of obtaining an injunction to restrain the defendants, Mr. I. Levinstein, as manufacturer, and Messrs. J. L. Levinstein & Sons, as vendors, from infringing the patent by making and selling dyes manufactured according to the patented process, and for ancillary relief.

The action was heard during eleven days in March, 1883, on the first branch of the defendants' defence—namely, the contention that the patent was invalid; but this part of the case does not appear to call for a report, except with respect to one point, which was as follows: In the course of the description given in the specification of one of the processes which were to be followed, in order to arrive at the object of the patent, a mixture of chemicals was directed, which, according to the defendants, could not be actually carried out without probably destroying the product which it was desired to obtain by the process, and possibly endangering the safety of the manufacturer by the fumes created. The evidence on the point was so conflicting that the learned Judge, for his own information, drew up and submitted certain questions to Professor Roscoe, as an impartial gentleman of great scientific attainments, who was to make a report after performing the necessary experiments. The action was accordingly adjourned for Professor Roscoe's report, which was read in Court on the 1st of June, and was in favour of the feasibility of the processes directed by the patent. The question thereupon arose, whether Professor Roscoe's opinion had been properly taken.

The second branch of the defendants' defence was that there had been no infringement, and a difficulty arose with respect to this point on account of an assertion by the defendant, I. Levinstein, the manufacturer, that his colouring matter was produced by a secret process, which it was of very great importance to him to keep secret. Accordingly his Lordship postponed going into the question of infringement until after the question of the validity of the patent had been practically concluded by Professor Roscoe's report; and, on that being unfavourable to the defendants, he gave them the option of submitting to an adverse judgment, or of protecting themselves by communicating the alleged secret process, and proving, if possible, that it was not an infringement of the plaintiffs' process. The defendants elected the latter alternative, and the action was then further heard for four more days in the early part of June on the question of infringement, the Court sitting with closed doors throughout the evidence and argument on that point.

Aston, Q.C., Webster, Q.C., and W. N. Lawson, for the plaintiffs.

Higgins, Q.C., and Chadwyck Healey, for the defendants.

PEARSON, J., stated the subject-matter of the action; and, dealing first with the first branch of the defence—namely that with regard to the validity of the patent—discussed the various contentions which had been raised on this point by the defendants. Referring to Professor Roscoe's report, he said:—The mode of sulphonating the oxyazo-naphthaline is thus described in the specification: 'In order to obtain the sulpho acids of oxyazo-naphtha-line I dissolve about ten pounds of the oxyazo-naphthaline in about twenty pounds of fuming sulphuric acid, containing about eighty per cent. of anhydrous sulphuric acid, and the mixture is heated at a temperature of about 100° centigrade for about two hours, or until a sample of this mixture will be found to produce a solution with water.' It was said that eighty per cent. of anhydrous sulphuric acid was so strong that it was perfectly impossible to produce the sulpho acids according to this process, for before you had arrived at the sulpho acid, if you used eighty per cent. of anhydrous sulphuric acid, all the oxyazo-naphthaline, or the greater part of it, would be charred, if not actually burnt. There was a great deal of conflicting evidence upon this subject, and the result of it was, that I thought it desirable to get further evidence upon the subject, and both parties agreeing to Professor Roscoe, who is one of the most competent men in England to assist the Court, I directed, by an order that was made, that he should pursue the first example and report to me what the result was. Accordingly he did so; and I think the Court has reason to feel considerably indebted to Professor Roscoe for the pains which he took in performing the experiment, and giving to the Court the advice which the Court wanted. [His Lordship then read the report, and continued:] I think that the result of Professor Roscoe's report to me is this—that for practical purposes this process can be adopted, and that the first process, therefore, shews the practical mode of working out that for which the patentee has taken out a patent, which was a practical mode of making sulpho acids of oxyazo-naphthaline, which give a distinct colour.

Before I go further, I should like to say one word upon my obtaining the report of Professor Roscoe, because a hint was thrown out, and I cannot say it was more than a hint, that there was a doubt whether I was entitled to obtain the assistance of Professor Roscoe, in order to inform myself of the matters relative to the decision to which I ought to come in this case. I am happy to say that I find a distinct decision of the Court of Appeal shewing that I had power to do that which I have done; and I should be exceedingly sorry that it should go forth that the Court has not that power. In the case of Mellin v. Monico (1) that very point was raised. Lord Justice Bramwell says this in giving his judgment:—"Under section 56, any question arising in the cause may be referred by the Court or Judge for enquiry and report to an official or special referee. He is not to dispose of the action, and I do not think he is even to determine any matter in issue between the parties; if there are facts disputed—for instance, if one of the parties asserts that a building is twenty feet high, and the other that it is twenty-five feet, the referee, in such a case as that, must determine the fact and report it; his duty is, instead of determining issues of fact or of law, to find the materials upon which the Court is to act." I think that is exactly what Professor Roscoe has done in this case; and I think I was entitled, whether the parties liked it or not (and they did not assent to or dissent from it), in this case to send the questions to Professor Roscoe, which I did, not to decide any issue in the case, but to get from him that information which would enable me to decide what was before me.

On the whole, therefore, I come to the conclusion that the patent is valid. I think there is no real objection to it. I think the idea was a new one. I think that the process is sufficient in order to protect it. I think that it is workable. I think it results, not simply in that which will produce a laboratory experiment, but in that which may be used for commercial purposes. Under those circumstances I must decide the first issue in favour of the plaintiffs.

I come now to that which to any one, like myself, unacquainted with chemistry, must necessarily be a matter of greater difficulty, and that is the question of infringement. Before proceeding to that, however, I should like to state the course that I have pursued, because the circumstances which have arisen in this case are circumstances which, as far as I know, and as far as counsel know, never arose in any other case before; and it may be useful, if the plan which I have adopted is the right and proper plan, that parties should know hereafter what plan it was upon which I did proceed. Mr. Levinstein, who has defended this case with very great fairness as well as with very great ability, set up by his defence that he had a secret process. Of course, the question as to whether or not that secret process is a process which is within the terms of the patent is what I shall have to consider. But it was plain to me that if he were called upon to state in open Court what that secret process was, it might turn out eventually, if I should come to the conclusion that the patent was bad, and if I called upon him then to state to the public a secret which he ought to be at liberty to confine within his own breast, that I might have done him irreparable mischief. Accordingly, I allowed him not to answer certain questions which were put to him, leaving him to determine for himself before the case was finally closed whether he would or would not communicate his secret process to the Court, so that the Court might be able to determine whether he infringed the patent. I thought it right, under these circumstances, to continue the case with regard to the validity of the patent until I had got so far as that the balance in my own mind was in favour of the patent, and until I found that unless, on further consideration, I changed my then opinion, I should decide that the patent was valid. I then required Mr. Levinstein's counsel to elect whether he would communicate his secret process, or whether he would not. Mr. Higgins elected to communicate the secret process, and I then heard Mr. Levinstein's description of that secret process with closed doors, no persons being present except the parties and their scientific assistants. Now, in treating this question of infringement, I shall be very careful to say nothing with regard to it that I think can communicate to the outside public the secret which Mr. Levinstein has. I think that is only fair to him, and I think I am bound, as far as I possibly can, to protect him from any injury in consequence of the statement he has made to the Court.

(1) 47 Law J. Rep. C.P. 911; Law Rep. 3 C.P. D. 147–149.

There are two principles which, in deciding this question of infringement, I have to bear in mind; one is this, that in these chemical cases, where a patentee has made some discovery in chemistry, any person may afterwards use for the same purpose chemical equivalents which were not known to be chemical equivalents at the time the patent was taken out. That is so expressed in the judgment of Mr. Justice Williams in the case of Unwin v. Heath (2), in which he says: "There is ample evidence that to melt together oxide of manganese and carbonaceous matter with steel and iron will serve as an equivalent for the melting together of carburet of manganese with steel or iron in producing the desired result. But there is no evidence that at the time of the patent and specification this was known to persons of ordinary skill in chemistry. And I fully agree with the doctrine which has been repeatedly laid down in the course of the discussion of this cause, that, though the use of a chemical or mechanical substitute which is a known equivalent to the thing pointed out by the specification and claimed as the invention amounts to an infringement of the patent, yet, if the equivalent were not known to be so at the time of the patent and specification, the use of it is no infringement." And Mr. Baron Parke says this (3): "The specification must be read as persons acquainted with the subject would read it at the time it was made; and if it could be construed as containing any chemical equivalents, it must be such as are known to such persons at that time; but those which are not known at the time as equivalents, and afterwards are found to answer the same purpose, are not included in the specification. They are new inventions." That is one principle which I have to bear in mind in looking at this case.

But there is another principle of no less importance, and that is this—that where a patent is taken out for a process of arriving at a known result (I mean before the patent is taken out for the process simpliciter), any other person may take out a patent for another process, or may use another process without taking out a patent, without any infringement of the process first taken out. But when a patent is taken out for a new result not known before, and there is one process described in the patent which is effectual for the purpose of arriving at that new result at the time when the patent is taken out, the patentee is entitled to protection against all other processes for the same result, and no person can, without infringing upon his patent, adopt simply a different process for arriving at the same result. That is stated in a great number of cases in a great deal of detail. The first case to which I refer is the case of Jupe v. Pratt (4), in which Mr. Baron Alderson quotes the argument of the Lord Chief Baron Pollock, and is referring to a case which the latter had argued, and he said this: "The difficulty which will press on you" (Mr. Baron Alderson was then addressing the jury) "and to which your attention will be called in the present case is this—you cannot take out a patent for a principle; you may take out a patent for a principle, coupled with the mode of carrying the principle into effect, provided you have not only discovered the principle but invented some mode of carrying it into effect. But then you must start with having invented some mode of carrying the principle into effect; if you have done that, then you are entitled to protect yourself from all other modes of carrying the same principle into effect, that being treated by the jury as piracy of your original invention."

(2) 5 H.L. Cas. 505-522; 25 Law J. Rep. C.P. 8.

(3) 5 H.L. Cas. 538.

The same doctrine will be found laid down in the case of The Househill Company v. Neilson (5), in which the Lord Justice Clerk Hope (and this is a case which was carried to the House of Lords) lays it down in this way: "I state to you the law to be that you may obtain a patent for a mode of carrying a principle into effect; and if you suggest and discover, not only the principle, but suggest and invent how it may be applied to a practical result by mechanical contrivance and apparatus, and shew that you are aware that no particular sort, or modification, or form of the apparatus, is essential, in order to obtain benefit from the principle, then you may take your patent for the mode of carrying it into effect, and are not under the necessity of describing and confining yourself to one form of apparatus. If that were necessary you see what would be the result. Why, that a patent could hardly ever be obtained for any mode of carrying a newly discovered principle into practical results, though the most valuable of all discoveries. For the best form and shape or modification of apparatus cannot, in matters of such vast range, and requiring observation on such a great scale, be attained at once, and so the thing would become known, and so the right lost, long before all the various kinds of apparatus could be tried. Hence, you may generally claim the mode of carrying the principle into effect by mechanical contrivance, so that any sort of apparatus applied in the way stated will more or less produce the benefit, and you are not tied down to any form."

And, in the later case of Curtis v. Platt (6) before Lord Westbury, Lord Westbury, with his usual terseness, states the matter in a manner still more pointed. He says: "It is extremely desirable that when a beneficial idea has been started by one man, he should have the benefit of his invention; and that it should not be curtailed or destroyed by another man simply improving upon that idea; but if the idea be nothing in the world more than the discovery of a road to attain a particular end, it does not at all interfere with another man discovering another road to attain that end, any more than it would be reasonable to say that if one man has a road to go to Brighton by Croydon, another man shall not have a road to go to Brighton by Dorking."

Now, bearing these cases in mind, I really have got to consider whether Mr. Levinstein's secret process comes under the first principle, a new discovery of a chemical equivalent, or whether it comes under the second principle; whether it is simply a discovery of a new process, if it be a discovery at all, to produce the same result which is patented by the patent.

[His Lordship then referred to the process adopted by Mr. Levinstein, without describing it, and continued:] The result at which I have arrived is this: The processes employed by Mr. Levinstein are processes deserving of great praise, but they are simply processes which produce exactly the same results from the same materials which are produced by this patent. The same object is pursued; the same materials are employed; the same result is attained. I cannot do otherwise than come to the conclusion that those are merely processes which are not a new invention differing from the patent, but that they are really the manufacture of the sulpho acids of oxyazo-naphthaline by a process differing in some respects from the process employed according to the patent. I cannot come to this conclusion, I must honestly say, without some regret, for I think Mr. Levinstein has employed great knowledge, great skill and great perseverance in finding out these processes; but I am sorry to say that the law compels me to inform him that these processes cannot be used in the production of this colouring matter, seeing that the production of this colouring matter is protected by a patent.

(4) 1 Webs. P.C. 144-146.

(5) 1 Webs. P.C. 673-685; 4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. 2nd Ser. 1187-1203.

(6) Goodeve, P.C. 97-102; 11 Law T. Rep. 245-9.

I must therefore decide the second issue also in favour of the plaintiffs.

There must be an order for an injunction, and there must be an account of profits, the plaintiffs electing that in preference to an enquiry as to damages. The defendants must pay the costs of the action, including the costs of the shorthand notes and the costs of consulting Professor Roscoe; and, considering the nature of the case, and the defence that it was a secret process, which I have heard in secret, and the publication of which I intend to restrict as far as I possibly can, I must order, and I do order, that the shorthand notes of the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th days, and all the printed copies in the possession of the plaintiffs or their agents, be sealed up and impounded in Court until either there shall be an appeal, in which case the parties are to be at liberty to apply for the delivery out of Court of as many copies as they want, or until, either by lapse of time or otherwise, it shall be determined that there is to be no appeal, in which case any application may be made to the Court for the disposal of them as the parties may think fit.

[On the application of the plaintiffs' counsel, his Lordship granted certificates that the validity of the patent had been in question, and that the plaintiffs had proved their breaches; and he also ordered delivery up or destruction, within a month, of dye stuffs manufactured by the defendants in violation of the patent, unless the defendants should decide to appeal, in which case the dye stuffs were to be stored up pending the result of the appeal.]

Solicitors—J. H. Johnson, for plaintiffs; Gregory, Rowcliffes & Co., agents for A. & G. W. Fox, Manchester, for defendants.

FRY, J. 1882. June 17. } In re SYMONS. LUKE v. TONKIN.

Practice—Administration—Wilful Default—Order XXXIII. rule 6—Order XL. rule 11.

An ordinary administration order had been made under Order XL. rule 11, in an action in which wilful default was alleged, and an account on that footing claimed. Such account was ordered on the further hearing.

This was an action, for the administration of real and personal estate appointed by the will of a married woman, brought by the residuary appointee against the trustees of the will. The statement of claim alleged negligence in getting in part of the personal estate, and breach of duty in the trustees in not obtaining full interest in connection with the sale of real estate. The plaintiff claimed the ordinary administration decree, and an order that the defendants should make good to him the difference between the interest actually received by them and what they ought to have received, and further or other relief. The allegations of breach of trust were denied by the statement of defence.

On motion under Order XL. rule 11, an administration decree, with the ordinary accounts and enquiries, was made.

The chief clerk, by his certificate, stated that the plaintiff had brought into chambers a surcharge for moneys which he alleged the defendants ought to have received in respect of rents due at the testatrix's death, and interest on the purchase-money of real and leasehold estate sold, and that the surcharge being in the nature of a charge of wilful default, and the administration order not empowering him to deal with such charge, he had declined to do so.

In re Symons.

The action now came on for further hearing, the plaintiff having given notice that he should apply for further relief on the footing of wilful default.

Glasse, Q.C., and Daw, for the plaintiff.—Under the Judicature Act additional relief on the footing of wilful default can be given at any stage if the pleadings raise a case for such relief—Barber v. Mackrell (1), Job v. Job (2) and Mayer v. Murray (3).

This was really the trial of the action, the proper time for going into the question of wilful default. What had been done before was to get the relief given as of course on an interlocutory application; so that even if the old practice applied, the plaintiff, on sufficient evidence, was entitled to the relief he claimed.

Gardiner, for the defendants.—The order here obtained on the admissions was, in effect, a final order, though obtained on an interlocutory application, and the Court could not now add to it so as to make a new order—In re The St. Nazaire Company (4). Mayer v. Murray (3) explained Job v. Job (2), and shewed that a judgment on the footing of wilful default cannot be obtained on amendment after judgment.

After a common administration decree executors cannot be proceeded against for wilful default, except with the leave of the Court, which has not here been obtained—Laming v. Gee (5).

Glasse, Q.C., in reply, referred to Hodson v. Ball (6).

FRY, J.—This case raises a question of very considerable importance as to the mode of proceeding in administration actions. There is clearly in the statement of claim a charge of wilful default against the executors, in their not receiving some personal estate which might have been got in, and a charge of breach of trust, in their accepting, on the unpaid purchase-moneys of real estate which they had sold, interest at a lower rate than they were bound to do; and though the claim is not in terms for relief on the footing of wilful default, it is, in my judgment, a sufficient claim for relief on that footing. In taking the accounts in chambers the plaintiff has brought in a surcharge, on which evidence has been gone into on both sides. The chief clerk has declined to go into the matter, because the administration judgment contains no direction to take accounts on the footing of wilful default. The plaintiff now asks that a direction to take accounts on that footing may be added to the judgment. This raises the important enquiry in a case where the plaintiff has charged wilful default in his pleading, but has not obtained judgment on that footing—Can the Court afterwards, at any stage of the proceedings, order an account to be taken on that footing, if evidence of wilful default is adduced? In my opinion, there is such evidence in the present case.

Considerations of considerable weight may be urged on both sides. On the one hand, it may be said that it is very important for the defendants to know, at the trial or hearing, the mode in which the proceedings will be taken. The old practice was clear—you could not get a decree on the footing of wilful default, except at the hearing of the suit. On the other hand, it might be said that it is very convenient that there should be power to direct such an account after judgment, because, in many cases, the evidence of wilful default comes out naturally in the course of taking the accounts in chambers. But it is not necessary for me to say what my conclusion would have been if the matter had been unaffected by decision, for, in my opinion, the point has been already adjudicated upon by the Master of the Rolls in Job v. Job (2) and Mayer v. Murray (3). Mr. Gardiner says that in Mayer v. Murray (3) the Master of the Rolls retracted what he had said in Job v. Job (2),

(1) Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 534.
(2) Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 562.
(3) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 605; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 424.
(4) Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 88.
(5) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 196; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 715.
(6) 1 Ph. 177; 12 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 80.

In re Symons.

and laid it down that the old practice still remains. In my opinion, it is impossible so to construe what the Master of the Rolls said. In Job v. Job (2) he said: "I think, however, that under the new practice an order charging him, the executor, with wilful default may be made at any time on a proper case being made." In Mayer v. Murray (3) he pointed out this qualification, that an order charging an executor with wilful default could not be made unless he was so charged in the pleadings; therefore the charge, unless originally pleaded, must be introduced by amendment—that is, of course, by amendment at any stage of the action at which amendments can be made—that is, before judgment. I understand these two cases to decide this, that if wilful default is charged in the pleadings, and evidence of it is adduced, accounts and enquiries on that footing may be directed at any stage of the proceedings. In my opinion, it is very important that one Judge should not attempt to draw fine distinctions between cases before him and similar cases decided by another Judge. Practitioners are much embarrassed by minute differences between the decisions of different Judges, and it is very important to follow a line of procedure which has been already laid down. In my opinion, the result of the decisions of the Master of the Rolls is what I have stated.

I so stated in Barber v. Mackrell (1), and on further consideration I adhere to what I then stated. In the present case there is a charge of wilful default in the pleadings, and there is evidence of wilful default. The defendants have had notice that these further accounts and enquiries would be asked for on the present hearing, and there is no surprise upon them. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that I am bound to direct the further accounts and enquiries on the footing of wilful default for which the plaintiff now asks. There will be no difficulty about the details of the order.

Solicitors—Coode, Kingdom & Cotton, agents for Borlase, Milton & Borlase, Penzance, for plaintiff; Dangerfield & Blythe, agents for Thomas Cornish, Penzance, for defendants.

DENMAN, J. 1883. July 20, 21.

In re ARMITAGE. SMITH v. ARMITAGE.

Practice—Administration—Executors—Misconduct—Trial—Order XXXVI., rule 6.

Where in an administration action against executors misconduct by them was alleged, and special declarations and accounts claimed, at the trial the Court refused to reserve the question of the plaintiff's right to special relief.

This was an administration action against trustees of a will. The testator gave his residuary estate, including the plant, stock-in-trade and goodwill of his business of a dyer, to his trustees John Ramsden Armitage, James Graham and John Ambler, upon trust to convert and divide the proceeds among all his children. He gave his son John Ramsden Armitage, the right, notwithstanding he was a trustee, to buy the business, and gave his trustees power to defer payment and take a mortgage to secure the purchase-money of the business. The plaintiffs were George Smith and his wife, who was the executrix and formerly the wife of Samuel Armitage, a son of the testator, who had survived him.

The statement of claim alleged that the defendants had induced Samuel Armitage by misrepresentation to sign a certain agreement empowering them to defer the sale of the trust estate for ten years, and providing that he should not call on them for any part of the capital during that time; that they had not rendered accounts. It alleged that the business had been improperly sold to the defendant John Ramsden Armitage. It also alleged other improper acts in the administration, and that "in fact, the course of administration of the said estate was conducted mainly in the interest of the defendant John Ramsden Armitage." It stated that the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to have an account of the profits of the business, and payment of a proportionate part.

The claim was—first, "To have the trusts of the will carried into execution, and to have his real and personal estate administered under the direction of the Court, and in particular to have such special declarations, accounts and relief in respect of the said testator's business, and the goodwill, assets and profits thereof, as under the circumstances hereinbefore stated the plaintiffs are entitled to"; secondly, To have new trustees appointed, and in the meantime to have a receiver appointed; and, thirdly, Further or other relief.

In re Armitage.

Barber, Q.C., and J. Beaumont, for the plaintiffs, asked to have an ordinary administration order only made, reserving the other question till the ordinary accounts and enquiries had been taken and made. They contended that, according to the practice under the Judicature Acts, a cestui que trust is entitled to have relief as against his trustees on the footing of wilful default or misconduct (provided only it is pleaded) at any stage of the proceedings. The old law that wilful default must be alleged and proved at the first hearing—Lewin on Trusts (1) and Coope v. Carter (2)—has been altered in this respect—Job v. Job (3), Mayer v. Murray (4), Barber v. Mackrell (5) and In re Symons; Luke v. Tonkin (6).

Warmington, Q.C., and Gardiner, for the defendants Graham and Ambler; and Higgins, Q.C., and Beddall, for the defendant John Armitage.—The defendants have been brought here to meet specific charges, and are ready with their evidence to meet those charges; and unless they are proved, they have a right to have the action dismissed with costs so far as relief founded on those charges is concerned—Fane v. Fane (7) and Bartlett v. Wood (8). The cases cited on the other side only shew that where (as on motion under Order XL., rule 11) under the new practice the whole of the action has not been brought to an issue, it could be decided piecemeal; but where no step has been taken for the separation of issues, and the defendants are brought to trial on all the issues, they have a right to have them disposed of, especially when they are charged with misconduct.

They referred to Sleight v. Lawson (9) as to the rule that accounts on the footing of wilful default will only be directed where some instance has been proved.

[DENMAN, J., offered to allow the plaintiffs to go into the evidence on the case of wilful default.]

Barber, Q.C., declined and replied.

DENMAN, J. (after consulting with Mr. Justice Kay, stated the effect of the pleadings, and proceeded:)—There cannot be any doubt that there are allegations of wilful default and wilful and improper conduct on the part of the defendants. That being so the case comes to trial; and when it comes to the hearing, Mr. Barber, for the plaintiffs, proposes to abstain from giving any evidence in support of these particular allegations in the statement of claim, and asks me to make an ordinary administration decree, excluding altogether allegations of wilful misconduct, leaving them to be disposed of hereafter, and to do that either through the chief clerk or in some other way that may arise. The defendants, on the other hand, say they are brought here with specific charges made against them and ready for the hearing—and brought here at considerable expense ready to meet those charges. It is said that according to the practice of the Chancery Division it is competent to the Court, and the Court ought in such a case as this, to leave matters such as these to be disposed of hereafter in some such way as I have described. It appears to me that there is no such practice made out. I admit that I am satisfied that the Court has a discretion in every case to postpone enquiry into the conduct of trustees, and to allow the enquiry to stand over in such manner as may appear reasonable; and that it is not absolutely necessary for the Court in every case to decide all the issues at once which may be brought before it at the hearing in such a case as this. I think it

(1) 6th ed. p. 740.
(2) 2 De Gex, M. & G. 292; 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 570.
(3) Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 562.
(4) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 605; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 424.
(5) Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 534.
(6) Ante, p. 709; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 757.
(7) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 200; Law Rep. 3 Ch. D. 228.
(8) 9 W.R. 817.
(9) 3 Kay & J. 292; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 553.

would be competent to the Court, if it saw good reason, to try the case in part and to adjourn it in part. But I think it would require a very strong case to make it do so, and that the hearing is the proper time to dispose of questions of the kind, and is the proper time at which allegations of fraud should be disposed of. I think that, except in the strongest case and for the strongest reasons, the Court ought not to allow parties to come with such allegations with no evidence to support them, and to ask the Court to defer questions such as these for disposal by the chief clerk or in any other way. Mr. Barber, having the matter now fully before him, declines now to go into any such charges, obviously because he is not in a position to, and has not the material. I think he ought to have the material upon such a statement of claim.

I have given the plaintiffs their election of doing the best they can at this stage if they have the evidence, and they have declined that course, and stand on the right to have an ordinary administration judgment, and to have deferred for future occasion all enquiry into these particular matters.

Now I have reported to Mr. Justice Kay what I conceive to be the result of the cases, and I have done it with such success as to have got his assent to what I conceive to be that result; and I think it to be important in matters of practice such as this not to go back to any old practice of the Court which may have existed before the Judicature Acts, but to base my decision on cases decided since—because it is obvious that where the pleadings have been altered so materially, the rules of the old practice may not be applicable; and I think it safer to base my decision on the cases more or less directly in point decided since.

Now I think all that is established by the cases is—(I won't say clearly established to my satisfaction; but I think I need not decide against the plaintiff on the ground that there is not a discretion)—but I can find no case which shews that there is a duty on the Court where the plaintiff asks so much by his pleadings to allow any part of those charges to be decided on a future occasion.

Now the cases cited seem to me clearly to establish that until charges of this sort are put on the pleadings the Court ought not to deal with them at all. Another proposition established is that the mere fact that they are not on the pleadings in the earliest stage will not prevent the Court from having them put on the pleadings, if in the course of investigation facts are ascertained which render it reasonable to believe there has been wilful default; and the Court will assist parties complaining of misconduct by trustees if in the course of the enquiries facts are ascertained which makes the existence of misconduct probable. Those two propositions, however, are totally wide of the point contended for here—namely, that where the parties ought to be ready for the hearing, and specific charges are made against defendants, it is in the option of the plaintiff to say he will not now enquire into the charges, and now go into the issues raised on them, he will have the case disposed of in part, and to have only an ordinary administration decree. I think he is bound to go on, unless he establishes a strong ground to induce the Court to try the case piecemeal. I have nothing before me in this case to induce me to do so. The plaintiffs by their statement of claim profess to be ready to prove acts of misconduct which are very specifically formulated; the defendants are ready, and I think they have a right to have the charges disposed of now.

I think it right to give an ordinary administration decree; but the question then arises, what ought I to do with the residue of the statement of claim? I think there can be no doubt that on the grounds I have pointed out to dismiss the action altogether, so far as the action goes for more than the ordinary decree; and I think that ought to be done with costs so far as the action is based on anything except a claim for administration, because it is quite obvious that if it had not been for those charges it would have been given, as a matter of course, by a simple inexpensive proceeding, instead of by bringing the defendants here to meet heavy charges at probably considerable expense. So that the plaintiffs have brought this upon themselves. I think it would be most unjust to keep these charges hanging over the defendants' head; and therefore the proper result is to dismiss the action except so far as it seeks for an administration decree—and as to that I think it is right that the costs should stand over It may be that in the course of the enquiries something much more serious may be established, and that other considerations may have to be gone into.

In re Armitage.

Solicitors—Learoyd & Co., for plaintiffs; Speechley, Mumford & Landon, agents for Mumford & Johnson, Bradford, for defendant Armitage; M. K. Braund, agent for J. T. Ray, Bradford, for defendants Ambler & Graham.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 14, 16.

THE PERUVIAN GUANO COMPANY v. BOCKWOLDT.

Practice—Stay of Proceedings—Actions between same Parties in this Country and in a Foreign Country—Same Subject-matter—Vexation.

The plaintiffs commenced an action in this country and in France against the same defendants, claiming delivery of certain cargoes of guano, or to be paid the value thereof: the only difference in the subject-matter of the two actions being that the English action extended to one more cargo of guano than the French action:—Held, that these facts did not of themselves amount to vexation; and a motion by the defendants that the plaintiffs might be put to their election as to which action they would proceed with was refused.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bacon, V.C.

On the 6th of May, 1880, the plaintiffs commenced this action, claiming delivery to them by the defendants of the cargoes of guano contained in seven vessels; or, in the alternative, for 100,000*l.*, being the value of the guano.

At the commencement of the action the vessels were in British waters, but they were subsequently removed by order of the defendants and taken to ports in France, where the cargoes were taken possession of and sold by the defendants.

In December, 1880, the plaintiffs brought an action in France against the same defendants in respect of six of the seven cargoes of guano, and claimed substantially the same relief.

On the 8th of December, 1882, a motion by the defendants that the plaintiffs might be ordered to elect whether they would proceed with this action or with the French action was refused by Bacon, V.C.

The defendants appealed.

Davey, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for the appellants.—The other side will doubtless rely on Lewis v. M'Henry (1), but that was a motion to stay proceedings, and not an application to put the plaintiff to his election.

[JESSEL, M.R.—In substance it was a motion to put the plaintiff to his election. BOWEN, L.J.—In that case we decided that the mere pendency of a foreign action between the same parties on the same subject-matter, standing alone, was no ground for a stay of proceedings. JESSEL, M.R.—The Court certainly intended in Lewis v. M'Henry (1) to cover a motion to elect.]

In Pieters v. Thompson (2) an order to elect was obtained.

[JESSEL, M.R.—Quite so. But in Lewis v. M'Henry (1) we declined to follow it.]

Orders to elect were made in Prioleau v. The United States of America and The United States of America v. Wagner (3).

Then, on the merits, we say that the French action is vexatious. Whatever the form of the two actions may be, they are substantially for the same relief, a money demand: for the cargoes no longer exist—they have been sold. At any rate, the plaintiffs should be put to their election with respect to the six cargoes, which are the subject-matter of both actions, with liberty to the plaintiffs to proceed here with respect to the seventh cargo—Barker v. Dumaresque (4); and Anon (5).

(1) Ante, p. 352; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 202.
(2) G. Cooper, 294.
(3) Both unreported.
(4) 2 Atk. 119.
(5) 1 Vern. 105.

Millar, Q.C., and H. Burton Buckley, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—It is very important in these cases that the Court should clearly see that in stopping an action it does not do injustice. Of course a man brings an action at the peril of the costs if the action does not succeed, and, as a general rule, this is sufficient to protect defendants from ill-founded actions. There is another protection, which is that where the action is vexatious it may be stayed. Now it may be vexatious on many grounds. It may be so utterly absurd that the Judge sees it cannot possibly succeed and that it is brought only for annoyance, and then the Judge has jurisdiction to stay the action. That is pure vexation. Or it may be vexation in another way—that is, the plaintiff not intending to annoy or harass the defendant, but thinking he would get some fanciful advantage, sues him in two Courts at the same time under the same jurisdiction—two of the Queen's Courts. That is vexatious, because, whatever the intention of the plaintiff may be, he cannot get any benefit in that way, and the defendant is harassed by two suits.

Now similar, although not perhaps the same, considerations apply in a case where the actions are brought one in a foreign country and one in this country. I have recently had to consider the matter in the case of M'Henry v. Lewis (1), and I went so fully into it there that I do not think it is necessary for me to discuss the rule further. It may be put as regards this case shortly in this way: that it is not vexatious to bring an action in each country where there are substantial reasons of benefit to the plaintiff. He has the right to bring an action, and if there are substantial reasons to induce him to bring the two actions, why should we deprive him of that right? A substantial advantage is not vexatious. It is very unpleasant, no doubt, to be sued twice—it is unpleasant to many people to be sued once—but still that does not make it vexatious where the plaintiff seeks to get a real substantial advantage: you cannot accuse him of vexation because he endeavours to obtain an advantage. As I put it in that case, and as I put it now, supposing in the one action he could get execution against Messrs. Dreyfus, being resident in France and having large property in France, whereas they are not resident in England and have no property here, that might be a good reason for suing them in France, and that might seem a reason for doing so when the action here is so advanced that he sees his way to a verdict here. He says: "I shall get a verdict and judgment; but that will not avail me unless I can get execution. I can use the verdict and judgment in the French action; therefore I will go on with my English action, and I will use the verdict and judgment in the French action with the view of getting judgment and execution in France." All that seems to me not unreasonable, and certainly not vexatious. That, I think, is one ground for declining to interfere. But there is another ground. The plaintiff says: "My action in France does not relate to the same number of ships as the action in England does." Mr. Joyce puts it that this was a device to escape the rule; but if it does escape it, it is a very good device. Take this case: A man has a right to six cargoes under the same title. The defendant has a place of business in England and a place of business in France. He brings an action for these cargoes in England and then in France. Why may he not do so? He may think he may get sufficient to satisfy a judgment in England for three cargoes, but not for six. You could not stop the action in either country on the ground that the six cargoes were sued for under the same title. He, in fact, brings two actions for two different subject-matters. Now does it make any difference that the action is for six in one country and one in the other? It appears to me it cannot be so. He has a right to sue in each country for a different subject-matter.

That brings me to the substance of the case. Supposing he elected to go on with his French action for the six, and in England for one—which is what is suggested on the part of the defendants he might do—what good would that be to anybody? The two actions would go on; and all that is suggested is that a witness or two less would be required possibly, not necessarily, in carrying on the litigation. That is not a ground for putting a man to his election. I asked for any precedent, if any could be found, for putting a man to his election simply because he might have to call a witness or two less in one of the two actions, and I need not say that no such precedent can be produced. All the election rules go on the doctrine that you could put a final stop to at least one action; and this appears to be quite a novel attempt, and an attempt which is not founded in reason—for it is no sufficient reason to stop a plaintiff on the ground that you can have a little less evidence in one action or try it in a less expensive mode. It seems to me that this also is a reason for our not interfering; and, again, the fact that there is no precedent for such an interference is also a reason for this Court not interfering. I think it would have been discovered a long time ago, and a precedent could have been found for an election, not between two actions, but between so much of the subject-matter of one action as is embraced in another. I think the absence of precedent is not immaterial; and, considering the danger of our depriving men of the opportunity of asserting their rights, which they are asserting bona fide, unless we arrived clearly at the conclusion that the assertion of them is vexatious, I think one ought to be slow to extend the doctrine beyond the case to which our attention has been called. For these reasons I think the appeal motion fails, and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The principles by which the Court ought to be guided in applications of this nature were fully examined and discussed in the recent case of M'Henry v. Lewis (1). I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment in that case, and it appears to me to be a most valuable decision. As I understand it, it comes to this—that where the plaintiff is suing in this country and abroad in respect of the same matter, and a motion is made to compel him to elect, it is not sufficient for the person so moving to point out that there are two proceedings being taken with reference to the same matter: he must go a step further, and shew that there is vexation in point of fact—that is to say, that there is no necessity for harassing the defendant by double litigation. He must make that out; and I think the Court ought to be very cautious before it interferes in cases of that kind, and for this reason—the Court here is not, and cannot be, alive to all the advantages which a person may have in suing in the foreign Court. It does not know with accuracy, unless the matter is called to its attention, what reasons there may be for preferring one Court to another. If in any case it is established that there is nothing except vexatious litigation, there is ample jurisdiction in this Court to make the order asked. But we ought to take care what we are about; and I am bound to say in this case I do not see my way at all to make such an order as is asked. In other words, I do not see that there is such vexation in this case as to justify our interference.

Apart from the fact that the action in France is for six cargoes, and the action here is for seven, there are certainly reasons, not vexatious reasons, not harassing reasons, for bringing that action in France. Then the fact that the action in France is for six cargoes and the action here is for seven satisfies me that it would be wrong to stop that action. Both actions must go on together, unless we see our way to stop one action altogether. I do not see my way to do that at all. If we were to interfere in the way it is suggested that we ought, we should not accomplish the result desired—that is to say, we should not wholly stop one action out of two: both would be going on. I think the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the law is clear enough. The difficulties that arise are the difficulties of administering or applying it. When a plaintiff comes into an English Court he asks for justice, and the Court is bound not to refuse to hear his case or to put him under difficulties in the way of having his action brought to a conclusion. Of course that rule does not mean that a plaintiff, under the pretence of asking for justice, is to do that which is oppressive and vexatious; and the Courts have always at common law—with which I am more familiar—and no doubt in equity also, interfered to prevent a plaintiff, under the colour of asking for justice, from harassing others. Therefore, when that which he is asking for is frivolous—or sometimes when he is asking for it in a way which necessarily involves injustice—the Courts have interfered.

It seems to me that the principle upon which a plaintiff is put to his election, when it is suggested that a double action is being pursued, is a branch of this general law. The reason you put him to his election, and compel him to decide whether he will go on with one or the other of the actions, is that the prosecution of the two actions simultaneously appears to the Court to be necessarily attended with injustice.

How are we to apply that doctrine to concurrent actions in our own and foreign Courts? It seems to me we have no sort of right, moral or legal, to take away from a plaintiff any real chance he may have of an advantage. If there is a fair possibility that he may have an advantage, and a just advantage, by prosecuting a suit in two countries, why should this Court interfere and deprive him of it? I think this case has illustrated during its progress the necessity of being very careful in exercising on behalf of the Court this sort of power of interfering with actions. For it turned out in the course of the argument that the French action has this advantage, that the plaintiffs can get execution, or they think that they can get execution, more easily and with more completeness in France against Mr. Dreyfus than if they rested only on the English action. That seems to me to illustrate exactly what was said by the Court in the case of M'Henry v. Lewis (1), and what I think ought always to be in the minds of the Court in interfering with these actions. Persons who sue in different countries very often have reasons for doing so that are not easily explained. There may be many reasons why a French action at the same time as an English action may not be vexatious or unreasonable. One obvious reason has been pointed out to us, and that is the facility of execution in the French action. I am myself very much impressed by the fact that although now we have had two cases within the last two months on this point, neither in the one case nor in the other have we had anything like a precedent shewn us for interference on the part of the Court in this country to prevent double litigation, when the double litigation has no other element of oppression than this, that an action is going on simultaneously abroad.

Solicitors — G. M. Clements, for appellants; C. & S. Harrison & Co., for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
LINDLEY, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Feb. 8, 15.

Ex parte GRIFFITH; in re WILCOXON.

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent Preference—Pressure — Old Decisions — Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 92.

In deciding whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference the Court will consider whether it comes within the definition given in section 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and will not be led away to discuss the old standards established by the decisions on the subject before the Act, which, although they may be of some value as guides, are not to be substituted for the plain enactments of the statute.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

The debtor Wilcoxon was a cabinet-maker carrying on business in London, and for the last thirty years had employed one Griffith as a traveller. Griffith's salary being in arrear, on the 17th of April, 1875, Wilcoxon, at his request, gave him a written authority to retain his salary out of the moneys collected by him for the firm "now and for the future until we give you notice to the contrary." Griffith, however, did not act upon this authority, and the arrears still continued to increase till on the 30th of June, 1881, Wilcoxon owed him 2,304*l.*

At that time Wilcoxon's firm was in difficulties; and on the 29th of June, 1881, he wrote to Griffith as follows: "I think your immediate presence in London is very desirable, as matters are in a very grave position as regards money, and we can hardly say what steps we may find it advisable to take. Even if we meet our usual Saturday's engagements we have other pecuniary claims we cannot see our way to meet, as also the acceptances maturing on the 4th prox."

Griffith then returned to London, and after several interviews with Wilcoxon he asked him for an authority to collect certain debts which were then due to the firm, amounting to 2,200*l.* Wilcoxon at first refused; but ultimately, on the 14th of July, he gave Griffith a written authority to collect specified debts to the amount of 1,044*l.*, the authority being expressed to be a continuance of the previous authority given on the 27th of September, 1879. Under this authority Griffith collected debts amounting to 722*l.*

On the 15th of July Wilcoxon signed a liquidation petition, which was filed on the 18th; and on the 9th of August the creditors resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and a trustee was appointed, on whose application Griffith was ordered to pay over to him the 722*l.*, on the ground that the giving of the authority dated the 14th of July was a fraudulent preference.

From this order Griffith appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and Herbert Reed, for the appellant.—The debtor was induced to give the authority, partly in consequence of the pressure put upon him by the appellant, and partly because he considered himself morally bound towards the appellant. If the assignment is not the spontaneous act of the debtor it is not a fraudulent preference—Johnson v. Fesenmeyer (1). In Mogg v. Baker (2) a bona fide demand for payment without pressure even, was held sufficient to take the case out of the rule. See also Bills v. Smith (3) and Ex parte Topham (4). Ex parte Tempest (5) shews that the old law on the subject has not been altered by section 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869—Robson on Bankruptcy, 177.

In Brown v. Kempton (6) it was held that if it could be shewn that the debtor was not influenced alone by the wish to prefer the creditor—that is, if he had any other motive, the transaction would be upheld.

[JESSEL, M.R., referred to observations of Mellish, L.J., in Ex parte Bolland; in re Cherry (7) and In re Clint (8).]

If you influence a man's will, that is enough—Vacher v. Cocks (9).

[JESSEL, M.R.—There must be something to control the will—some coercion.]

The act here was not spontaneous and voluntary.

If a request is made for payment, and a payment follows, the presumption of law is that the payment is the result of the request. There is enough here to take the case out of the rule as to fraudulent preference.

Sidney Woolf and E. Montefiore Nicholls, for the trustee, were not heard.

JESSEL, M.R.—In my opinion all the argument has been completely thrown away. The case is a very plain one, and is within the very words of the statute. In the first place, there was no obligation upon Wilcoxon to assign these debts at the time when he did so, and he did not do it until the very day before his petition was signed. Under what circumstances did he make the assignment? He knew that he had become indebted to the appellant in a large sum, because he had previously given him authority to collect certain debts (not specifically these debts),

(1) 3 De Gex & J. 13; 25 Beav. 88.

(2) 4 Mee. & W. 348; 8 Law J. Rep. Exch. 55.

(3) 6 B. & S. 314; 34 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 68.

(4) 42 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 57; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 614.

(5) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 22; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 70.

(6) 19 Law J. Rep. C.P. 169.

(7) Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 24.

(8) 43 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 16; Law Rep. 17 Eq. 115.

(9) 1 B. & Ad. 148; 8 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) K.B. 341.

and to retain out of them the amount due to him. He is then going to stop payment, and he writes a letter to Griffith, who was then on a journey, telling him in effect, as plainly as possible, 'I can't go on. Come up to London immediately. I can't meet my bills, and I cannot even pay the ordinary weekly wages; therefore you must at once come to London."

Now, first of all, the argument has been put upon this ground, that that letter was a revocation of the authority previously given to Griffith to retain his debt out of moneys collected by him, because an authority was given to him to collect other moneys. It was certainly not a revocation of the prior authority. Well, in compliance with that letter, Griffith comes to London, and he finds that Wilcoxon's affairs are in a hopeless state. A discussion appears to have taken place between Griffith and Wilcoxon, in which Griffith says, "Can't you give me a preference" (that is what it comes to), and he asks him to assign these debts over to him as a security for the amount owing to him. There is no pretence, so far as I can find, for saying that that was anything more than a request by Griffith for a preference.

It is said that Wilcoxon refused to comply with the request. I suppose he said, "In the present state of my affairs I can't pay you." But just on the eve of signing his petition, the very day before, he does assign those debts to Griffith. For what purpose? Clearly to give him a preference. I say, sitting as a jury, that the learned Registrar was quite right in coming to the conclusion that the mind of Wilcoxon was influenced, not by the demand of Griffith for a preference, but by his desire to accede to the demand, and to give him a preference. That is within the very words of section 92. I am not going into a long discussion of the question whether the old law on the subject has been altered by section 92. If we are of opinion that the thing was done with a view of giving a preference to this creditor over the other creditors, why are we not to apply section 92? If the assignment was made with a different view it would not be within the statute. If it was made with a view to prefer the creditor, and also with some additional view, it may be that it is not within the statute. But the additional motive may have been so trifling that it ought not to be taken into account at all. I think it is far better that we should in all these cases look to the intention of the clause in the Act, and not entangle ourselves in an enquiry as to the precise views and intentions of the parties in order to see what was the motive of the transaction, and what the law was before the statute. The law has now been put into a definite shape and form, and our duty is to construe the words of the Act. I think, however, that even under the old law this would have been a plain case of fraudulent preference. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This case illustrates in a remarkable way the danger that would result if we endeavoured to substitute one standard for another in the administration of the law. What we have to consider is the true construction of section 92. I emphatically protest against being led away from the words of the section by any argument that the standard which the Legislature has laid down is equivalent to the standard of the old law. It may be so, but the language is different, and our duty is to construe that language. I by no means wish to be understood as expressing an opinion that the old decisions are of no value as guides—of course they are; I only protest against their being substituted for the statute. Let us keep the enactment before us, and regard those decisions so far only as they are in accordance with it and throw light upon it.

Now with respect to the case before us, the evidence appears to me to lead to one conclusion only, and that is that the charge which was given by Wilcoxon on the 14th of July, 1881, was given by him with a view to give Griffith a preference over the other creditors, and I come to that conclusion for this reason. It is admitted that Griffith was more or less pressing Wilcoxon for a security when they met. To what extent Wilcoxon may have been influenced by his importunities it is impossible to guess or to infer. But Wilcoxon's letter of the 29th of June, 1881, which brought Griffith up to town, throws a flood of light upon the transaction. Taking that letter into consideration, and not being led away on a false scent by an enquiry whether there was bona fide pressure at that time, taking that letter as part of the transaction, and bearing in mind its relation to that which took place afterwards, I am driven irresistibly to the conclusion that the security was given by Wilcoxon with a view to prefer Griffith.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion; and if I say anything at all it is only with the view of paying proper respect to the acute and ingenious arguments which have been brought forward by Mr. Winslow and Mr. Reed, but which have not convinced me that we ought to accept the propositions put forward on behalf of the appellant. I should like to pause in the current of judicial decisions for the last fifteen years on the subject of fraudulent preference, and to take note, so to speak, of the position in which the Court finds itself in relation to this subject.

Everybody knows that originally there was no express statutory enactment in regard to fraudulent preference. But from the time of Lord Mansfield down to 1869 the Courts considered that certain transfers of property were frauds upon the bankruptcy law, though there was no statutory enactment upon the subject. Then came the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and in that Act it was for the first time explained what was meant by fraudulent preference, and the Act uses very definite language. Now what is the method which has been pursued by judicial decisions since? I think it is very unfortunate. I do not say that it has led to any wrong decision, but I think that it has had a tendency to draw one's mind away from the true question. The first thing which the Courts did was to discuss the question whether the Act had altered the old law and introduced an entirely new law, and they came to the conclusion that it had not altered the old law. Then began what I may call the old metaphysical exploration of the motives of people. The Courts first adopted a supposed verbal equivalent for the words of the statute, and then pursued the old enquiries as to what were the deductions which followed from the adoption of this verbal equivalent. And so we have been drawn into questions of pressure and volition, and at length in the present case we have got into a discussion as to what is the motive of a motive, whatever that may mean. I think it is a wiser policy to go back, as I do, in a humble spirit to the words of the statute, and, without discussing motives of motives, enquire whether the transaction was entered into with a view to give the one creditor a preference over the others. There is no question, to my mind, that this particular assignment was made with a view of giving this creditor a preference. But, as the Master of the Rolls has said, that may not be enough, and I go further and say that the assignment was made with the view of preferring this creditor; and, to give the coup de grace to it, I say, sitting as a juryman, that it was made with the sole view of giving this creditor a preference over every other creditor. That being so, I think that the Registrar's decision was right.

Solicitors—Reed, Lovell & Reed, for appellant; H. Montagu, for trustee.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 20. } In re DAVIES to JONES AND EVANS.

Will—Construction—Charge of Debts—Legal Estate—General Intention of Will preferred to Particular Words.

A testator directed his executors to pay his debts, &c., and after bequests of sums of money, some of which were to be invested by the executors for the benefit of the beneficiaries, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and four daughters, "in manner and form following." He then directed that the residue of his real and personal estate should be equally divided between his wife and Davies.

, and that his wife should enjoy for life; and that after her surviving executor should distribute share among his daughters, or if er should not survive his wife, ghter's share should be distributed er children; and he appointed tor and an executrix, the latter wife, "to act jointly in carrying e intentions" of his will.

the death of the testator and his d while the pecuniary bequests not fully satisfied, the surviving contracted to sell a part of the realty:—

that he could sell the realty, and legal estate therein, and make a thereto.

d. Markham v. Cooke (3 Burr. d Anthony v. Rees (2 Cr. & J. w J. Rep. Exch. 44) considered wed.

ned summons under the Vendor haser Act, 1874.

a Anwyl, by his will dated the bruary, 1876, after directing that convenient after his decease "all estamentary, and all other just ould be discharged by his there- entioned executors, bequeathed n Evan Jones a life interest in a 000*l.* to be invested by his execu- after the death of his said son the equeathed the said sum of 3,000*l.* ur daughters thereinafter men- be distributed amongst them l share alike, or amongst their f they should not be then surviv- testator also bequeathed to his am a life interest in another sum . to be invested by his executors; irected his executors, if his son should die without any legal divide equally the said 3,000*l.* his said four daughters, or, if not , their children; but if his son should leave a wife and children titled to his estate, the testator hat 1,000*l.* should be invested for it of such wife or children at the of his executors.

ll then proceeded:—

e, devise and bequeath all my personal estate of every kind, and all moneys invested on mortgages, shares in public companies or otherwise, to my wife Mary Anwyl and my four daughters, Mary Evans, Anne Jane Davies, Jane Evans and Harriet Sophia Jones, in manner and form following: After the discharge of all just debts, the investment of 6,000*l.* for the benefit of my two sons, also two sums of 50*l.* each which I hereby bequeath to my executors, I ordain that the residue of all my personal and real estate shall be equally divided between my said wife and my said four daughters. Provided as follows: My said wife Mary Anwyl shall enjoy her share during the term of her natural life, and I direct my surviving executor, his heirs, assigns or executors, to distribute the said share after the decease of my said wife among my said four daughters, share and share alike (or if any one or the whole of the said daughters should not survive my said wife, the share of each deceased daughter shall be equally distributed among the children or grandchildren of such). I appoint my wife Mary Anwyl, and my son-in-law the Rev. T. Davies, M.A., Ph.D., of London, to be my executors, to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions of this my last will and testament."

The testator died in the early part of the year 1876, and his will was shortly afterwards duly proved by the executrix and executor thereof. The widow and executrix Mary Anwyl, however, died on the 10th of June, 1876.

In the year 1877 Thomas Davies, as surviving executor, contracted to sell to David Jones and John Jones Evans a portion of the real estate of the testator, but the purchasers objected to complete, on the ground that, according to the proper construction of the will, Thomas Davies could not sell the real estate of the testator, and make a good title thereto, and receive the purchase-money thereof, and give a good discharge for the same, and pass the legal estate to a purchaser, which Thomas Davies contended he could do. The view taken by the purchasers was, that the testator, having by his will charged his real estate with the payment of debts and legacies, had devised the estate so charged for the whole of his estate or interest therein, to his wife and four daughters upon certain trusts; and, consequently, that the survivors of those five persons, together with the husbands of such of them (if any) as might be married women, were the proper persons to effect a sale, as devisees in trust, under the 14th section of the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

In re Davies.

Time went on, the purchasers took possession of the property and built upon it, but still no conclusion was arrived at, and on the 21st of February, 1883, T. Davies took out the present summons, asking for a declaration that he, as surviving executor of the testator's will, could at the time of the contract, and still could, under the charge for payment of debts and legacies contained in the will, sell the testator's real estate and make a good title thereto, and could receive the purchase-money thereof and give a good discharge for the same; and that he, as such surviving executor, could pass the legal estate in the said real estate, and that a good title to the hereditaments in the contract had been shewn in accordance therewith, and that the purchasers might be ordered to pay the costs of the application.

The statement of facts prepared for the use of the Court stated that the testator's estate was not fully administered, and that the sale of portions of the real property was necessary to enable the estate to be divided amongst the parties entitled, which could only be done when the sale of this property and the calling in of some outstanding mortgages were completed.

Lewin, for the vendor.—There are debts and legacies of the testator still remaining unpaid, and, that being so, the surviving executor is able to sell the property in order to provide the necessary funds. He can convey the fee and make a good title without the concurrence of the testator's surviving daughters, since, although there is a prima facie devise to the wife and daughters, yet it clearly appears from the whole of the will taken together that it was the testator's intention that the executors should discharge a variety of duties which they could not discharge unless the fee were vested in them. The executors have to pay debts and legacies; they have to invest, and in certain events to divide among the daughters, the two sums of 3,000*l.*; they have to divide the residue among the wife and daughters; they have to distribute the wife's share among the daughters; they have to distribute the shares of daughters in the wife's share among their children; and they have to carry out "all the intentions" of the will. The legal estate is therefore vested in them, and the specific devisees have only a beneficial interest—Bush v. Allen (1), Doe d. Beezley v. Woodhouse (2), Anthony v. Rees (3), Oates d. Markham v. Cooke (4), Trent v. Trent (5), Doe d. Pratt v. Pratt (6), Doe d. Gillard v. Gillard (7). Even if the executor has not the legal estate, yet he has power to sell and pass the legal estate under Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 16.

Loughborough, for the purchasers.—I submit that section 14 of Lord St. Leonards' Act applies, and that the survivors of the wife and daughters are devisees in trust, and, as such, are the parties to sell and convey, and that they must at least concur in a sale by the executor. The cases cited say only that the executor is to have a sufficient legal estate to carry out the purposes of the will; but the present sale is not a purpose of the will, and no case says a legal estate can be implied where it is not necessary for the purposes of the will. There is no need for the executor to have this estate; the testator has appointed his wife and daughters devisees in trust, and they can do, and ought to do, all that is necessary.

PEARSON, J.—I think that the foundation of the whole law relating to this case is stated in Oates d. Markham v. Cooke (4). In that case Lord Mansfield, who presided, "declared he had not a particle of doubt. The intention is to be collected from all the parts of the will; and it must be clear, or else the heir-at-law shall not be disinherited. But here the testator's intention is most clear 'that he meant to devise his real estate in trust.'" Mr.

(1) 5 Mod. 63.
(2) 4 Term Rep. 89.
(3) 2 Cr. & J. 75; 1 Law J. Rep. Exch. 44.
(4) 3 Burr. 1684.
(5) 1 Dowl. P.C. 102.
(6) 6 Law J. Rep. K.B. 101; 6 Ad. & E. 180.
(7) 5 B. & A. 785.

Justice Wilmot concurred, and said that "the intention of the testator is to be collected from all the parts of the will taken together; and if it be thereupon necessary to imply it, it is the same thing as if it was particularly expressed. Now here are trusts to be executed which the trustee could not execute and effectuate without having an estate in fee devised to him. No particular technical terms are requisite; it is sufficient if the implication be strong, violent and necessary." And Mr. Justice Yates "was likewise of the same opinion, and held that the implication here was clear, plain and necessary. The estate must be co-extensive with the charges, and here are annuities charged upon the real estate and devised in fee. Therefore a legal estate was certainly intended to be devised to the trustee." And, again, in Anthony v. Rees (3), Lord Lyndhurst's judgment is in these terms: "This testator gives and bequeaths to his granddaughter Mary the house called Plasbach, where widow Anthony now lives, and after her death without issue he gives and bequeaths the said house to her brother Walter Rees, to be freely possessed and enjoyed, his heirs and assigns for ever. Now, if the will stopped here, there could be no doubt but that it would pass the legal estate to the granddaughter, with remainder to Walter Rees. But the will must be taken all together; and we find in a subsequent clause that the testator gives and bequeaths to his well-beloved wife the sum of 20*l.* yearly and every year, as long as she lives, to be paid out of the freehold estate and the lease of Penlan by trustees thereinafter named; and at the same time, notwithstanding there will be nothing to the grandchildren as long as their grandmother lives. Therefore the estate originally given is qualified and restrained, and must be construed as subject to this clause. Now the trustees cannot perform the duties imposed upon them unless the legal estate is vested in them. If the rents and profits should amount to more than sufficient to pay the annuity of 20*l.*, they would be bound to pay over the surplus to the grandchildren. The trustees, therefore, will take the legal estate, and the grandchildren will have the beneficial interest after the 20*l.* annuity is satisfied, and thus both the provisions in the will are reconciled." Mr. Baron Bayley says this: "It is clear that we are bound to look at all the parts of the will to see whether a provision which may at first appear absolute be not qualified by some subsequent clause. If the will stopped after the devise to the grandchildren, the devise to them would stand unqualified. I cannot say that it would be an express devise of a legal estate, because there is no expression to shew that a legal estate is meant; and therefore Mr. Maule's argument is fallacious in this respect." Then he says, "Is there then any subsequent qualification? Suppose it had been 'subject to the qualifications hereinafter mentioned.' But these words are necessarily implied. Now, what is the qualification?" Then he goes into the facts of that case.

Now, from these authorities it clearly appears that the rule is that you must find out what are the intentions of the whole will, and then decide in such a manner as to give effect to those intentions. So that though there may be in the will words which appear to constitute a devise to certain persons, yet, if it appears that you cannot give effect to the whole meaning of the instrument if you give the legal estate to those persons, you must adopt the construction which will give effect to all the other parts of the will.

In the present case the testator says: "I give, devise and bequeath all my real and personal estate . . . . to my wife Mary Anwyl, and my four daughters, Mary Evans, Anne Jane Davies, Jane Evans and Harriet Sophia Jones," and if it had stopped there no one could have doubted that there was an absolute devise to the widow and four daughters. But it does not stop there, for the passage is continued by words which are equivalent to those which Mr. Baron Bayley said should be necessarily implied and read into the will—"in manner and form following"—so that there is a qualification of the previous gift. Then the will goes on: "After the discharge of all just debts, the investment of 6,000*l.* for the benefit of my two sons, also two sums of 50*l.* each which I hereby bequeath to my executors, I ordain that the residue of all my personal and real estate shall be equally divided between my said wife and my said four daughters." There is nothing here to shew who is to divide the residue. But the will goes on: "I direct my surviving executor, his heirs, assigns or executors, to distribute the said share"—that is, the testator's wife's share—"after the decease of my said wife, among my said four daughters, share and share alike." Then the testator appoints his wife and son-in-law executors, "to carry out all the intentions" of the will.

In re Davies.

Now I think that on the construction of the will two things are tolerably plain. The one is that it is the executors who are to carry out all the intentions of the will, including the distribution of the estate among the testator's wife and daughters. The other is that the wife and daughters are to take nothing until after the payment of debts and legacies. Putting these things together, as Lord Mansfield and Mr. Justice Wilmot say I should do, I find that the wife and daughters are not to receive the gift intended for them until after a sufficient sum has been raised to pay the testator's debts and legacies, and that after that has been done the surviving executor is to have the residue of the estate in his hands, and is to divide it among the five persons named, and that he is then to pay the interest on the wife's fifth share to her for life, and afterwards to divide that share among the daughters, share and share alike. I hold, therefore, that the executor can sell the property and make a good title to it, and I shall make a declaration in the terms of the summons. The purchasers must pay the costs.

Solicitor—J. Jordan, for vendor; Saffery & Huntley, agents for Breese, Jones & Casson, Portmadoc, for purchasers.

BANKRUPTCY.
BACON, C.J.
1883.
May 7.

In re SNEYD; ex parte THE BISHOP OF OXFORD.

Composition—Statement of Affairs—Debt not Correctly Stated—Judgment—Mortgage—Merger—Interest at Five per cent.—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126—Sequestration.

A mortgagor covenanted for payment of a principal sum and interest at five per cent. on a certain day, and further that if the said principal sum should remain unpaid after the date fixed for payment, that he would, so long as the same or any part thereof should remain unpaid, pay interest thereon at five per cent. The mortgagee recovered judgment for principal, interest to date, and costs. The mortgagor presented a petition for liquidation, and inserted the mortgagee in his statement of affairs as a creditor for a sum calculated on the assumption that four per cent. only was due to the mortgagee from the date of the judgment:—Held, that the mortgage was not merged in the judgment, and that the mortgagee was therefore entitled to interest at five per cent., and that the debt not having been truly stated the composition was not binding on the mortgagee, and that she could not be restrained from enforcing her judgment by sequestration.

Appeal from the Oxfordshire County Court.

On the 15th of May, 1878, Mrs. Nutting, the widow of the late rector of Chastleton, Oxfordshire, sold the advowson of that benefice to the debtor for 4,200*l.*, and he, being unable to pay the whole of the purchase-money, executed a mortgage of the advowson in her favour to secure the balance of the purchase-money, 2,200*l.*, with interest at five per cent. The mortgage contained a grant of the advowson, a power of sale, and the usual covenant by the debtor, Sneyd, for payment of the 2,200*l.* with interest at five per cent. on a certain day (six months after the day on which the living first fell vacant), and continued, "and further that if the said sum of 2,200*l.* or any part thereof shall remain unpaid after" the day fixed for payment, the said G. A. Sneyd "will, so long as the same sum or any part thereof shall remain unpaid, pay to the said M. J. Nutting interest for the said sum of 2,200*l.*, or for so much thereof as shall for the time being remain unpaid, at the rate of five per cent. per annum." The living of Chastleton shortly afterwards fell vacant, and the debtor presented himself. Interest was very irregularly paid, and in July, 1882, a writ was issued by Mrs. Nutting for the recovery of the 2,200*l.* and interest at five per cent. to the date of the writ. On the 29th of July judgment was recovered for 2,285*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, the amount claimed representing principal, interest at five per cent., and costs. On the 11th of November following, a fi. fa. was issued for 2,285*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* and 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* for costs, and also interest at four per cent. on 2,285*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* from the 29th of July. On the 14th of November the debtor filed his petition for liquidation, and Mrs. Nutting was thereupon restrained from proceeding under her judgment until the 10th of January, 1883. On the 6th of January, 1883, resolutions were registered for the acceptance of 2*s.* in the pound. On the 26th of January, the fi. fa. having been put in execution, the sheriff returned nulla bona. On the 27th of January a writ of sequestration in respect of the debtor's living of Chastleton was issued. On the 31st of January sequestration took place, notice being affixed to the church door on the 4th of February.

On the 15th of March further proceedings under the writ of sequestration were restrained by the County Court Judge on the application of the debtor and his trustee.

The Bishop and Mrs. Nutting appealed. Mrs. Nutting had taken no part in the liquidation proceedings, but had been scheduled in the debtor's statement of affairs as a secured creditor for 2,317*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*; this sum had been arrived at on the assumption that four per cent. only was payable from the date of the judgment. Mrs. Nutting's contention was that five per cent. was still payable notwithstanding the judgment, and that the amount of her debt being therefore inaccurately stated by the debtor in his statement of affairs the composition was not binding on her.

Winslow, Q.C., and Macaskie, for the appellants.—Mrs. Nutting's debt is not correctly stated in the debtor's statement of affairs, and therefore the composition is no bar to her action—Macdonald v. Chesney (1), Burliner v. Royle (2) and Ex parte Lang; in re Lang (3).

Notwithstanding the judgment, five per cent. is still payable under the covenant in the mortgage—Popple v. Sylvester (4).

Further, we are entitled to interest till the 6th of January, the date of the registration of the resolution—Ex parte McLaren; in re McColla (5).

Hon. B. Coleridge, and J. B. Allen, for the debtor.—The amount of the appellant's debt is correctly stated. It would have been impossible to calculate interest up to the date of the registration of the resolutions, because the debtor could not tell when that would take place. Popple v. Sylvester (4) does not apply to this case; it was not in bankruptcy; and besides, the covenant to pay five per cent. so long as the principal was due was different from the covenant here, inasmuch as it was a distinct and separate covenant there, whereas here it is only one covenant. The personal covenant to pay became merged in the judgment—King v. Hoare (6). The appellants themselves only levied for interest at four per cent.; they cannot now claim the additional one per cent.—In re The European Central Railway Company (7).

BACON, C.J.—This is a case of some importance arising under the 126th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the decisions already pronounced upon it, and which have been referred to in argument. Under this section a debtor desirous of presenting a liquidation petition has to

(1) 50 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 87.
(2) Law Rep. 5 C.P. D. 354.
(3) Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 971.
(4) Ante, p. 52; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 98.
(5) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 203; Law Rep. 16 Ch. D. 534.
(6) 13 Mee. & W. 494; 14 Law J. Rep. Exch. 29.
(7) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 57; Law Rep. 4 Ch. D. 33.

set out in his statement of affairs the names and addresses of his various creditors and the amounts due to each. The judgments of Lords Justices Bramwell and Brett in Macdonald v. Chesney (1) clearly point out the principle upon which cases arising under this section should be decided. The obligation is by the statute cast upon the debtor to state all that he owes and to whom he owes it. In this case the creditor is a mortgagee, and nothing therefore in the composition can affect her rights as mortgagee. The debtor owes her for principal and interest, and she gets judgment against him for principal, interest and costs, and issues a fi. fa., to which the sheriff returns nulla bona. It might have been otherwise; there might have been other property not included in the mortgage, and satisfaction might have been obtained and entered for some part of her debt. Mrs. Nutting is entitled to interest at four per cent. upon her debt from the date of the judgment. That is the right which the law gives her independently of contract, and by taking the interest on the judgment she does not thereby give up any right she has under the mortgage. She may sue for the principal or the interest due from time to time in default of payment under the terms of the mortgage; she may foreclose, and may in fact exercise all the rights which mortgagees possess. No composition can defeat her rights as mortgagee, neither does the judgment defeat her right under the covenant to five per cent. whilst any money remains due on the security of the mortgage. Between the date of the judgment and the filing of the liquidation petition she has become entitled to a further sum in respect of this interest at five per cent., so that the amount for which the debtor has entered her name in his statement of affairs is less than what he really owes to her; and unless the debt is accurately stated the composition does not bind the creditor. When she puts in force her legal rights, she is restrained by an order in bankruptcy, and I am of opinion that there is no ground for such order, nor for the injunction against the Bishop, who is for the present only an officer of the Court, who was taking nothing that belonged to the general body of creditors. To hold that the judgment puts an end to the covenant to pay five per cent. would be absurd, for the covenant did not commence to operate in this case until after judgment was signed. The debtor owed a certain sum on the judgment on which four per cent. was payable, and he also owed five per cent. on the principal according to his covenant, for the judgment could not take the seal off his mortgage-deed; and he has not accurately stated the amount of his debt. The debtor must be taken to have known that he was liable to pay five per cent. upon his covenant, and this amount having been omitted, the composition is not binding on the appellants. The order below was quite wrong, and must be discharged with costs.

Solicitors—Surman, Henley & Co., for appellants; James Searle, Crediton, for respondent.

CHITTY, J.
1883.
June 9.

In re MACKENZIE'S TRUST.

Settled Estate—Money to be laid out in Land—Interim Investment—"Settlement"—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 83), s. 2, sub-s. 1; ss. 21 and 33.

Money bequeathed to trustees upon trust for the purchase of land to be settled in strict settlement, with a direction for investment, until a proper purchase was found, in Government or real securities, but not in any other mode of investment, may, under section 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, be invested in railway debenture stock.

Petition for advice, under Lord St. Leonards' Act, by the trustees of the will of E. Mackenzie.

The testator, who died in September, 1880, by his will dated September, 1879, bequeathed to the petitioners three very large sums of money, bearing interest from the date of the testator's death at three per cent. per annum, upon trust to purchase three estates in fee-simple, and to settle and assure such estates, one on each of the testator's three sons for life, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male, in strict settlement. And the testator declared that, until a proper purchase or purchases should be found, the petitioners should invest the sums so bequeathed, or so much of them as should not for the time being have been invested as aforesaid, in the names of his trustees, in or upon any of the public stocks or funds of Great Britain, or upon Government or real securities in England, Wales, Scotland or Ireland, but not in any other mode of investment, with power to vary such stocks, funds and securities as they should think fit, and to pay the income of the sums bequeathed or the investments so made as if such purchase or purchases and settlement or settlements were then actually made. The will contained powers of sale and exchange, with a like power of interim investment.

A portion of one only of the sums bequeathed had been invested in the purchase of estates, and the question for the opinion and advice of the Court was whether, having regard to the language of section 2, sub-section 1, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the petitioners could, with the consent of the tenants-for-life, invest the sums bequeathed, or so much thereof as might not for the time being be laid out in the purchase of estates, and also any moneys which might arise from the exercise of the powers of sale and exchange, in railway debenture stock of the nature referred to in section 21, sub-section 1, of the Act.

By section 2 of the Act (which is headed "Definitions"), sub-section 1, it is enacted that "any deed, will, agreement for a settlement, or other agreement, covenant to surrender, copy of court roll, Act of Parliament, or other instrument or any number of instruments, whether made or passed before or after, or partly before or partly after, the commencement of this Act, under or by virtue of which instrument or instruments any land, or any estate or interest in land, stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession, creates, or is, for the purposes of this Act, a settlement, and is in this Act referred to as a settlement, or as the settlement, as the case requires."

And by section 33 of the Act it is enacted that, "where under a settlement money is in the hands of trustees, and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, then, in addition to such powers of dealing therewith as the trustees have independently of this Act, they may, at the option of the tenant-for-life, invest or apply the same as capital money arising under this Act."

Macnaghten, Q.C., and J. D. Davenport, for the petitioners.—The difficulty is, that the legacies not having been invested in real estates, there is not, within the language of section 2, sub-section 1, any land now "standing limited in succession." It is, however, submitted that the definition of "settlement" contained in section 2, sub-section 1, is not an exhaustive definition of the term, but is intended as a convenient means of making the term refer to any number or kind of instruments constituting a settlement. Moreover, the word settlement in section 33 seems to apply as well to money to be laid out in the purchase of land as to land and money derived from the sale of land. If the investment as proposed is not authorised by the Act, the result would appear to be, that if the trustees, in accordance with the trusts of the will, were to invest the money in land, the tenant-for-life might sell it forthwith and invest the proceeds as capital money arising under the Act in the mode to which he has already given his consent.

Reference was made to section 22, sub-sections 2 and 4 (as to the consent of the tenant-for-life to any investment and change of investment); section 51 (as to prohibitions against the powers of the Act being void); section 56 (as to the powers of the Act being cumulative), and section 44 (as to directions in case of dispute between tenant-for-life and trustees), in all of which sections the term "settlement" was said to apparently be used in its ordinary and larger meaning.

CHITTY, J.—I think that the trustees may make the proposed investment. It is not necessary for me to decide the point arising from the definition clause. It would, however, be absurd to hold that the proper means of effecting the investment is for the trustees first to buy land, and then for the tenant-for-life, in exercise of the power conferred by the Act, to sell it again, so as to bring the sale moneys within the scope of the Act. I think, as a mere question of giving advice, the trustees may at once invest in the debentures. The testator wanted to create landed families with large landed estates, but he did not foresee the Settled Land Act. That Act will destroy many a will which has been made with the intention of building up landed families by means of purchasing family estates. As the petition is presented in the interests or convenience of the tenants-for-life, I think that they should pay the costs.

In re Mackenzie's Trusts.

Solicitors—Cunliffe, Beaumont & Davenport.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
May 5.

In re TAYLOR.

Practice — Lunatic Tenant-for-life — Petition by Committee for Power to grant Leases—No Trustees of Settlement—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 6, 8, 38, 44 and 62—Settled Land Act Rules, 1882, rules 4 and 5.

Where a tenant-for-life is a lunatic, and his committee desires to exercise the powers of leasing given by the Settled Land Act, 1882, and no trustees of the settlement are in existence, new trustees must be appointed for the purposes of the Act.

This was a petition by the committee of a lunatic for power to grant a repairing lease for ninety-nine years of a freehold house, of which the lunatic was tenant-for-life under the will of his father.

The will contained no powers of leasing beyond twenty-one years, and there were no trustees of the will now in existence.

The evidence went to shew that the proposed lease would be for the benefit of the estate.

Ingham, for the petitioner.—Under the 6th, 8th and 62nd sections of the Settled Land Act a committee can grant such a lease with the sanction of the Court. The only question is whether, there being no trustees of the will in existence, new trustees should be appointed under the 38th section of the Act, in order that they might be served with notice of this application. There is nothing in the Rules to meet this case, although rules 4 and 5 of the Rules under the Act require notice to be given to the trustees in certain cases; but the 44th section of the Act seems to shew that the general intention of the Act is that the trustees should be served with notice of all applications to the Court.

Hope, for the tenant-in-tail and next-of-kin.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I think the safest course will be to appoint new trustees for the purposes of the Act; and we shall therefore order the petition to stand over for that purpose, with liberty to amend the petition by stating the appointment of the new trustees, and that they have been duly served with notice of this petition.

LINDLEY, L.J., and FRY, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Currie, Williams & Williams, for all parties.

KAY, J. 1883. June 2, 4, 15.

In re THE ROMFORD CANAL COMPANY: CAREW'S, POCOCK'S, AND TRICKETT'S CLAIMS.

Company—Debentures—Irregularity in Issue — Debentures issued to Contractor to obtain Money—Estoppel by Conduct of Company.

A company, having power to issue debentures transferable at law, issued certain debentures to their contractor to enable him to obtain an advance for the purposes of the company. There was an irregularity in the issue of these debentures of which the contractor was aware, but the debentures on the face of them purported to be regularly issued for valuable consideration, and to be legally transferable. The debentures subsequently came into the hands of transferees for value, who had no notice of the irregularity, but whose transfers were never registered:—Held, that as the original conduct of the company in issuing the debentures was such that the public was justified in treating it as a representation that the debentures were legally transferable, there was an equity on the part of the equitable transferees to restrain the company from pleading their indidity, although the irregularity in their use might have been a defence at law to action against the company by their transferors. But, held, that the right of the transferees being only equitable, relief must given to them on equitable terms, and that ought to be allowed, in the winding up the company, to prove, not for the nominal amount of the debentures, but only such sum, not being greater than that unt, as each of them might be able to the bona fide advanced upon the ity of the debentures he received, such however being allowed to them in aracter of debenture-holders, with advantages attaching to that position debentures so soon as one-half of their capital was subscribed or paid up.

The company duly raised the one-half of their capital, and on the 8th of April, 1876, the certificate of a Justice of the peace that the same had been subscribed or paid up was obtained pursuant to section 40 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

On the 28th of April, 1876, at a meeting of the company, at which two directors and two shareholders, and Mr. Benjamin Parker, the contractor, were present, a resolution was passed authorising the borrowing of the 19,000*l.* on debentures. This resolution was invalid, because a sufficient number of shareholders was not present at the meeting as required by section 72 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

It was alleged that the minutes of the proceedings at this meeting were read and confirmed at a subsequent meeting on the 18th of May, 1875; but there was no sufficient evidence of this, inasmuch as the minute of such last-mentioned meeting was not signed by the chairman; nor did it appear that the requisite number of shareholders was present thereat.

On the 29th of May, 1877, a series of debentures for 100*l.* each was issued. All the debentures in question in the present cases were issued to the contractor. Upon the face of them they purported to be issued for full valuable consideration, but it did not otherwise appear that any consideration was paid, and the evidence tended to shew that nothing was in fact paid. There was evidence that the debentures were issued to the contractor for the purpose of enabling him to raise money to be applied to the purposes of the company's undertaking.

Carew was the holder of upwards of eighty of these debentures, which were transferred to him directly by the contractor. The transfers to him were for full value, and were duly registered, and he took the further precaution of obtaining the certificate of a Justice as above mentioned, and also a copy of the resolution to issue the debentures, duly certified pursuant to section 40 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

Pocock was the holder of three debentures, which were duly registered in the irned summonses.

bove company was incorporated in 1875, for the purpose of making a ar Romford, under a special Act orporated the Companies Clauses i. By the special Act the com- empowered to borrow 19,000*l.*

In re Romford Canal Co.

name of the contractor. These debentures were on the 24th of August, 1877, transferred by the contractor to Yeoman, the sub-contractor, and the transfers were duly executed, but not registered. Pocock subsequently discounted Yeoman's bill for 300*l.*, and on the 8th of November, 1877, the debentures were deposited with Pocock by Yeoman as security for the sum paid by him on discounting the bill, but no transfers were executed.

Trickett was the holder of three debentures, which were never duly registered in the name of the contractor. On the 24th of August, 1877, the contractor transferred these debentures to Yeoman for a nominal consideration, and the transfers were duly registered. On the 12th of July, 1878, Yeoman transferred the debentures to Trickett by transfers which purported to be for a nominal consideration. According to the evidence of Trickett, however, the transfers were for value. Trickett applied to the company to register the transfers to him, but the company refused to do so; and in June, 1879, Trickett brought an action against the company for payment of the amount appearing to be due on the debentures, and claiming that the company should register the transfers to him, and for a receiver and further relief. This action however was stopped by the order for the winding up of the company, which was made on the 24th of February, 1882.

Neither Carew, Pocock, nor Trickett had any knowledge or notice whatever of the irregularity in the issue of the debentures.

In the winding-up, Carew, Pocock and Trickett claimed to rank as creditors for the amount of their debentures. These claims were resisted by the liquidator and adjourned into Court for argument. The cases of Pocock and Trickett were first argued.

Charles Walker, for Pocock.—These debentures were issued to the contractor in payment of work done, and were properly registered. They purport on the face of them to be debentures legally transferable, and whatever may have been the case with the contractor, Pocock, as an innocent transferee for value without notice of any irregularity, was entitled to presume that all things were rightly done—Fountaine v. The Carmarthen Railway Company (1), The Royal British Bank v. Turquand (2), Agar v. The Athenæum Life Assurance Society (3), Dickson v. The Swansea Vale and Neath and Brecon Railway Company (4), the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 17), s. 40, and Lindley on Partnership (5). Pocock had a right in equity to compel the company to register the debentures in his name so soon as he had obtained a transfer of them.

At all events he is entitled to rank as a creditor for the amount of all sums actually paid or advanced by him.

Northmore Lawrence, for Trickett.—Trickett was an assignee for value of these debentures without notice of any irregularity, and the company are estopped from setting up the irregularity as against him—Webb v. The Herne Bay Commissioners (6), In re The Bahia and San Francisco Railway Company (7), In re The Hercules Insurance Company; Bruton's Claim (8), The Landowners of West of England, &c., Company v. Ashford (9), and the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 2, 6, 18, 40 and 72.

Rawlins, for Carew, submitted that his case was covered by the decision in Webb v. The Herne Bay Commissioners (6). He also referred to Vertue v. The East Anglian Railways Company (10), and Ex parte Chorley; in re The South Essex Estuary and Reclamation Company (11).

(1) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 429; Law Rep. 5 Eq. 316.
(2) 5 E. & B. 248; 6 ibid. 327; 24 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 329; 25 ibid. 317.
(3) 3 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 725; 27 Law J. Rep. C.P. 95.
(4) 38 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 17; Law Rep. 4 Q.B. 44.
(5) 4th ed. 829.
(6) 39 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 221; Law Rep. 5 Q.B. 642.
(7) 9 B. & S. 844; 37 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 176; Law Rep. 3 Q.B. 584.
(8) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 450; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 302.
(9) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 276; Law Rep. 16 Ch. D. 411.
(10) 5 Exch. Rep. 280; 19 Law J. Rep. Exch. 235.
(11) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 153; Law Rep. 11 Eq. 157.

In re Romford Canal Co.

Haldane, for the liquidator.—Yeoman not being a purchaser for value of these debentures could be in no better position than the contractor, who was aware of the irregularity in the issue of the debentures. Pocock and Trickett not having completed their title by procuring the registration of their transfers by the company can be in no better position than Yeoman. There is nothing in the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, which puts a transferee in any better position than the transferor. The doctrine of estoppel contained in the cases cited only applies where some preliminary formalities have not been duly observed, and not to a case like the present, where the borrowing powers have never been duly exercised, and where the transferees are only equitably entitled. He referred to The Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Company v. Riche (12), The Athenæum Life Assurance Society v. Pooley (13), In re The Natal Investment Company; ex parte The Financial Corporation (14) and Peirce v. Worth (15).

Northmore Lawrence, in reply.—The only question is who has the better equity—the company who held out the contractor in the one case and Yeoman in the other as the owner of debentures validly issued, or an innocent person who has acted on the faith of the representation so made and has advanced his money without notice of any irregularity.

KAY, J.—I have in this case to deal with three claims made in the winding up of this company by persons professing to be entitled to debentures of the company, or, in the alternative, to some pecuniary payment in respect of debts for which such debentures were purported to be given.

[His Lordship then stated the facts of the case and continued:] I think Carew's case is covered by the decision in Webb v. The Herne Bay Commissioners (6), and that the company are estopped from setting up against him the irregularity in the issue of these debentures, which must be treated as valid in his hands for all purposes.

The real difficulty arises in the other two cases. The contractor having been present when the resolution for issuing debentures was passed must be taken to have known that such resolution was invalid. Then his assignments to Yeoman purport on the face of them to be in consideration of 5*s.* only, and therefore it is said that Yeoman, not being a purchaser for value, can be in no better position than the contractor, and Pocock and Trickett not having complete legal transfers, it is argued that no estoppel arises in their favour. On the other side it is argued that there is such estoppel because Pocock and Trickett have an equity as against the company to call for completion of their title by registration. It is urged that it sufficiently appears that the very purpose of issuing these debentures was to enable the contractor to raise money upon them to finance the company, and this having been carried out by debentures, which on the face of them purport to be assignable, and which, if regular, would be transferable at law, the company are not now at liberty to assert the invalidity of these debentures as against Pocock and Trickett, who have advanced their money bona fide without notice of any irregularity. I must infer from the minutes and the other evidence before me that these debentures were issued by the company to the contractor for the purpose of raising money upon them. Assuming that the contractor paid nothing to the company for the debentures, which was probably the case, though on the face of them they purport to have been issued for full consideration, the object was that he should go into the market and induce other persons to advance money upon them for the purposes of the company.

In Dickson v. The Swansea Vale and Neath and Brecon Railway Company (4), an equitable transferee of a money bond was held entitled to recover upon it against the company without regard to an equity which might have prevailed between the company and the original (12) 44 Law J. Rep. Exch. 185; Law Rep. 7 E. & Ir. App. 653.

(13) 3 De Gex & J. 294; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119.

(14) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 362; Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 355.

(15) 39 Law J. Rep. Exch. 156; Law Rep. 5 Exch. 209.

holder of the bond, because the bond had been given for the purpose of raising money upon it, and therefore the transferee who had advanced money had a superior equity. It was held in effect that if an action had been brought in that case in the name of the obligee, the defence would have been equitable, and the replication would have shewn that the equitable transferee of the bond had a better equity. The same point was decided in In re The Blakeley Ordnance Company; ex parte The New Zealand Banking Corporation (16).

In this case, if the action had been in the contractor's name, or in that of Yeoman, the suggestion is that the company would have had a legal defence against which an equitable replication would not have been available.

Would there have been a defence at law? To an action by the contractor there would, because he knew the issue was irregular. To an action by Yeoman as to the debentures not registered in his name the same defence would have been an answer. As to those which were registered in his name there is more doubt; but I think I must take it that Yeoman gave no valuable consideration for these debentures, and that the legal invalidity of them could be effectively pleaded against him.

Then the point of difficulty is this. Suppose an action brought by Pocock or Trickett in the name of the contractor or sub-contractor, and that a plea were put in of the legal invalidity of the debentures, would there, under the old practice, have been an equity to support a bill in Chancery for an injunction to restrain the company from insisting upon such a plea?

In Higgs v. The Northern Assam Tea Company (17) the facts were very similar. Certain debentures in the form of bonds payable to Higgs, his executors, administrators or assigns, were secured by a covering mortgage expressed to be for the benefit of the "holders for the time being" of these debentures. Lord Bramwell, who delivered the judgment of the Court, pointed out that the defence to an action by the original owner was a legal set-off, and considered whether there was an equity to restrain such a plea. There might be, he intimates, either from the conduct of the company in issuing the debentures in such a manner as to induce the belief that they were legally transferable, or if they had by their subsequent conduct recognised the particular transfer —both of which circumstances concurred in that case.

The decision of Lord Cairns in the Natal Investment Company (14), which some lawyers have been puzzled to reconcile with other cases, is explained in In re The General Estates Company; ex parte The City Bank (18), in a way which to my mind is very satisfactory. The instrument there in question was a money bond, and the words used in it were only equivalent to the word "assigns," which occurs in every money bond, and is never understood to represent that it is assignable at law but only in equity, and therefore only transferable subject to equities; but Lord Cairns did not decide that if an instrument is issued purporting to be legally assignable, and which the public have a right to believe to be so, the company can maintain an equitable defence which they might have against the original owner so as to defeat the claim of an equitable transferee for value.

Thus understood, the case is identical with The Athenæum Life Assurance Company v. Pooley (13). In neither case was there any intimation by the company that the instrument was transferable at law.

I understand the law as at present settled, or perhaps I should rather say developed, thus:—Where a company have power to issue securities, an irregularity in the issue cannot be set up against even the original holder, if he has a right to presume omnia rite acta—Fountaine v. The Carmarthen Railway Company (1).

If such security be legally transferable, such an irregularity, and a fortiori any equity against the original holder, cannot be asserted by the company against a bonâ fide transferee for value—Webb v. The

(16) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 418; Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 154.

(17) 38 Law J. Rep. Exch. 233; Law Rep. 4 Exch. 387.

(18) Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 758.

Herne Bay Commissioners (6). Nor can such an equity be set up against an equitable transferee, whether the security was transferable at law or not, if by the original conduct of the company in issuing the security, or by their subsequent dealing with the transferee, he has a superior equity—In re The Agra Bank; ex parte The Asiatic Banking Corporation (19), In re The Blakeley Ordnance Company (16) and Dickson v. The Swansea Vale Railway Company (4).

There remains the present case, in which I must treat the parties as equitable transferees only of securities, which the company, having power to issue such, represent on the face of them to be legally transferable, and where the company would be able to plead at law against the original holder or the first transferee that the debentures were invalid because issued by an insufficient meeting of shareholders.

I think the decision of Higgs v. The Northern Assam Tea Company (17) warrants me in saying that if the original conduct of the company issuing these debentures was such that the public were justified in treating it as a representation that they were legally transferable, there would be an equity on the part of any person who had agreed for value to take a transfer of these debentures to restrain the company from pleading their invalidity, although that might be a defence at law to an action by the transferor. I am only considering a case in which the company had power to issue debentures which would be transferable at law, and where the equitable transferee had no reason to suspect any irregularity in the issue.

It seems to me that both Pocock and Trickett are in this position, and that each of them has this equity against the company.

But their rights being only equitable, relief must be given to them on equitable terms.

In my opinion they ought to be allowed to recover, not the nominal amount of the debentures, but only such sum, not being greater than that amount, as each of them may be able to prove he bona fide advanced upon the security of the debentures he received.

But this proof must be allowed to them in the character of debenture-holders, and with all the advantages attaching to that position pari passu with other debenture-holders.

The costs in each case must be added to the debt. If no debt is proved, the summons must be dismissed with costs.

(19) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 222; Law Rep. 2 Chanc. 391.

Solicitors—T. R. Kent, for Pocock; Munns & Longden, for Trickett; Clarke, Rawlins & Co., for Carew; Haynes & Clifton, for the liquidator.

NORTH, J. 1883. June 1, 2, 4. } THE THREE TOWNS BANKING COMPANY v. MADDEVER.

13 Eliz. c. 5 —Fraudulent Conveyance —Delay.

A conveyance fraudulent against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5, was set aside after a lapse of ten years.

This was an action to set aside the conveyance of a small farm by John Maddever to his son, the defendant, James Maddever, made shortly before the death of the former. There was evidence that the annual letting value of the farm was 20*l.*, and the selling value was about 500*l.*, both at the time of the transaction and the present time. The conveyance was made in consideration of a small sum of money and a covenant to pay an annuity of 16*l.* during the life of John Maddever, who was then 81 years of age.

On the 26th of November, 1870, John Maddever made himself jointly and severally liable on a bond with Edmund Fry and John Pearn in the penal sum of 160*l.* to the plaintiffs, the Three Towns Banking Company, to secure an advance to Edmund Fry and interest.

On the 10th of October, 1871, the plaintiff company took out a debtor's summons, which was duly served, and of which the defendant James Maddever had notice before the 19th of October, 1871, when the conveyance was executed. The plaintiff company presented a bankruptcy petition against John Maddever on the 2nd of November, 1871, which was appointed to be heard on the 22nd. John Maddever died on the 18th of November, 1871.

The writ in this action was issued on the 3rd of November, 1881, the plaintiffs being the Three Towns Banking Company, and a nominee who had taken out letters of administration to the effects of John Maddever for the purpose of the action.

Higgins, Q.C., and Eyre, for the plaintiffs.

Warmington, Q.C., and Morshead, for the defendant.—The plaintiffs' right is barred in equity by laches and delay in allowing the defendant to remain so long in undisturbed possession and to deal with the property—Wright v. Vanderplank (1), Hovenden v. Lord Annesley (2), Turner v. Collins (3) and Hatch v. Hatch (4).

NORTH, J., stated the facts, and held the conveyance fraudulent under the Act, and proceeded:—Under those circumstances it is said that the effect of the plaintiffs abstaining from suing gave the defendant some equity to say that they ought not to take the premises now. I know nothing to bar the plaintiffs' right where there have been no acts of the plaintiffs, and the time necessary to raise a bar under the Statute of Limitations has not elapsed; but where there has been merely abstinence by the plaintiffs, and the defendant is left in possession without the claim being enforced, I do not see what he has to complain of for being left in possession of the property. I do not say that would have been so if the property had been let and there were any application for an account of back rents, or if there were any application that I should charge him with an occupation rent. But considering that all that was done was that the defendant was left in possession of the property, I do not see that there is any time short of the time mentioned in the Statute of Limitations that would deprive the plaintiffs of their right. Then it is said that they allowed him to deal with the property; as to that, they allowed him to remain in possession of the property, and he did have power to deal with it, and it does appear that he has effected a mortgage which very likely will embarrass the plaintiffs; but as far as he is concerned he lost nothing, and I do not see anything prejudicial to him by his being allowed to remain in possession. The decree will therefore be that the conveyance is void against the plaintiffs and other creditors. That must be so as matter of form. If the other creditors are barred by statute, they will get nothing.

(1) 8 De Gex, M. & G. 133; 2 Kay & J. 1; 25 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 753.
(2) 2 Sch. & Lef. 630.
(3) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 558; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 329.
(4) 9 Ves. 292.

Solicitors—A. Cheese, agent for Curteis & Pearse, Plymouth, for plaintiffs; Cowlard & Chowne, agents for Cowlard & Cowlard, Launceston, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1882.
Nov. 30.

Ex parte THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY; in re BUSHELL.

Bankruptcy—Railway Company—Lien for Freight — Receiver and Manager—Jurisdiction.

A trader entered into an agreement with a railway company, by which the company were to render a monthly account of the charges for freight of goods carried by them for the trader, and the company were to have a general lien for all moneys due to them on all goods belonging to him in their hands. He afterwards filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver and manager of his business was appointed, who, in order to carry on the business, bought goods with his own money, and sent them by the company's railway. The company detained the goods under their lien, and only delivered them on payment of 50l., which was due to them for freight. The receiver paid the 50l. under protest, and the Court of Bankruptcy ordered the company to repay it:*—Held, *that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to make the order.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Hazlitt, sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

On the 13th of April, 1882, A. T. Bushell, who carried on business as a tea and coffee merchant in London, and various other towns in England and Scotland, entered into an agreement with the Great Western Railway Company, by which it was provided that accounts should be rendered monthly by the company for the carriage of the goods transmitted by him over their railway in the course of his business, such accounts to be paid in full seven days after delivery of the same. It was also provided that goods sent by or belonging to Bushell should be subject to a general lien in favour of the company for all moneys due to them on any account, and that in case of bankruptcy, insolvency or stoppage of payment, such lien should take effect immediately for any sums appearing due in the books of the company.

On the 8th of September, 1882, Bushell filed a liquidation petition, and one Foster was appointed receiver and manager of his property and business. At this date Bushell owed the company 105*l.*

After the appointment of the receiver goods were purchased by him in London out of his own moneys, and sent to Bushell at one of his places of business in Birmingham. These goods were detained by the company under their lien, who refused to deliver them without payment of £— which the receiver accordingly paid under protest, and the goods were delivered.

On an application to the Court of Bankruptcy the Registrar ordered the company to repay the 50*l.* to the receiver, against which order the company now appealed.

Robinson, Q.C., and Medd, for the company.—The Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction in this matter. The receiver, having bought the goods with his own money, cannot bring the company, who are outsiders, into the Court of Bankruptcy. The company are entitled to the lien under their agreement—In re The Northfield Iron and Steel Company (1).

[JESSEL, M.R.—In that case the words of the agreement applied, here they do not.]

Herbert Reed, for the receiver.—The goods were the property of the receiver.

JESSEL, M.R.—As regards the merits of the case, I think the company have made a mistake. The agreement gives them no lien whatever on the receiver's goods, and they would have no defence to an action by him. But on the question of jurisdiction, which the company have chosen to raise, I am sorry to see such an objection taken by a great company; it can only result in mere costs. I cannot see what jurisdiction the Court of Bankruptcy had to order the re-payment of the money. But as the company have chosen to argue the case on the merits, as well as on the question of jurisdiction, the Registrar's order will be discharged without costs.

COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—R. R. Nelson, for the company; Hindson-Miller & Vernon, for the receiver.

---

(1) 14 Law Times, N.S. 695.

FRY, J.
1883.
March 12.

In re HOPKINS.
WILLIAMS v. HOPKINS.

Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, rules 99 and 100—Secured Creditor—Administration.

Secured creditors of an insolvent estate claimed for 400*l. and interest; they valued their security at* 500*l.; their names were struck out from the schedule of creditors in the chief clerk's certificate. The security realised more than* 500*l.*:—Held, that their right to the benefit of security was not limited to 500*l.*

This was an action for the administration of the estate of John C. Hopkins, in which judgment was given in 1878. The executors of George Hopkins claimed to be creditors in respect of 400*l.*, and interest from the 20th of September, 1877, on four joint and several promissory notes for 100*l.* each, given by John C. Hopkins and Henry W. C. Hopkins (who was the defendant in the action and executor of John C. Hopkins). The debt was secured by equitable charge on certain real estate given by the executor before the action commenced. The executors of George Hopkins had been required by the plaintiff in the action to value their security, which they did at 500*l.* Their names were struck out of the schedule of creditors. The property on which they had a charge was sold, and realised more than 500*l.* Their debt and interest also amounted to more than 500*l.* A question raised on second further consideration was whether they were entitled to the security for more than 500*l.*

Glasse, Q.C., and Dundas Gardiner, for the plaintiff in the action.—The mortgagees, by carrying in their claim and valuing their security, brought themselves within rules 99 and 100 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, and were not entitled to more than the value set on the security out of the property when realised.

W. W. Karslake, Q.C., and P. A. Kingdon, for the executors of George Hopkins.—As mortgagees they had not had the benefit of proof or any benefit under the bankruptcy, and were therefore entitled to the full benefit of their security.

By the arrangement for sale they were not deprived of any right—Hepworth v. Heslop (1).

Glasse, Q.C., replied.

FRY, J.—The question is, can the mortgagees take more than 500*l.*, at which they valued their security, out of the proceeds of the sale of the property and the rents? The answer to that question depends on rules 99 and 100 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870. [His Lordship read those rules and continued:] If, therefore, they are "secured creditors so proving," within rule 100, they must hand over to the creditors the balance in excess of the amount at which they valued their security. If they are not, they are not bound to do so. In my opinion they are not such creditors. The chief clerk rejected their proof. They derive, therefore, no benefit from the estate, but are secured creditors, standing on their security, and they can hold it for the full amount of their debt. That seems to me to be only reasonable, for the balance in these cases is given up as the purchase-money for the right to prove, and if there is no proof there should be no such purchase-money. They can have their principal and interest, and the costs of realising their security, in full, but no costs of seeking to be admitted to prove.

Solicitors—Dangerfield & Blythe, agents for Symonds & Son, Dorchester, for plaintiff; J. McClellan, for defendants.

---

(1) 3 Hare, 485.

COURT OF APPEAL.]

J.

Ex parte HAUXWELL; in re HEMINGWAY.

—Bill of Sale—Assignment he Whole of his Property—revious Agreement—Non-Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. ankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 6.

which enables the grantee y all the grantor's property date of its execution, but operty to be thereafter ac- including that which may means of the advance then not necessarily void as an cy.

hapman (12 Com. B. Rep. Rep. C.P. 173) overruled.

lder of a bill of sale, which pon the ground of its being of all the grantor's property ideration, attempts to sup- round that it was given in prior parol agreement, the m to shew, not only that such t did in fact exist, but that spects bona fide.

ilner; in re Barker (Law . 245) distinguished.

appeal from a decision of ingway carried on business anufacturer at Wakefield. May, 1882, being in want applied to the manager of County Bank at Wakefield exceeding 300*l.* on a current the bank. The manager nce the money upon having thereof secured by two ordingly, two friends of William Hauxwell and Wil- greed to become such sure- nderstanding that Heming- ve them an assignment of his household furniture, &c., whenever called upon to do so. In pursuance of the arrangement, Hauxwell and Rogers gave a written guarantee to the bank for the amount of the advance. A bill of sale was shortly afterwards prepared, which recited the arrangement that had been entered into, and by which Hemingway assigned to Hauxwell and Rogers all his household furniture, stock-in-trade, &c., as a security for the repayment of the loan to the bank, and as an indemnity to the sureties. This deed, however, was not executed until the 22nd of August, 1882. It was afterwards duly registered.

On the 6th of November, 1882, Hemingway filed a liquidation petition in the County Court at Wakefield, and on the same day a receiver and manager of his business was appointed.

On the 7th of November the bill of sale holders took forcible possession of the debtor's business premises and stock-in-trade.

On the 27th of November, at the first meeting of the creditors, resolutions were passed for a liquidation, and trustees were appointed. The bank proved in the liquidation for 306*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*

On the 28th of December the trustees applied to the County Court for an order declaring the bill of sale fraudulent and void as against the trustees, and an act of bankruptcy, and also void under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the bill of sale holders from interfering with the debtor's property. Upon this application affidavits were filed, shewing what took place when the bill of sale was given. The debtor stated in his affidavit that no agreement was entered into by him on the 13th of May to give Hauxwell and Rogers an assignment of the whole of his household furniture and stock-in-trade, &c., and that the whole of his property and effects was included in the assignment. The account of what took place, deposed to by both Hauxwell and Rogers, was that the debtor agreed to give them the assignment before they agreed to become sureties; and that a draft bill of sale was at once prepared by a Mr. Kemp, a solicitor, and agreed to by the debtor a day or two after the 13th of May. The debtor was to attend the next day and execute the engrossment, but neglected to do so. Rogers called upon him several times without finding him, or receiving only excuses; and at last the execution of the bill of sale was only obtained by the solicitor and Rogers attending at the debtor's place of business and waiting several hours to catch him.

The Registrar of the County Court made the order asked for, and the holders of the bill of sale appealed to the Chief Judge.

The appeal was heard on the 12th of February, 1883.

E. Cooper Willis, Q.C., and Yate Lee, for the appellants the bill of sale holders. —There is no question here of order and disposition, for the bill of sale was registered; and, unless it can be set aside as an act of bankruptcy, it is valid. A prior valid agreement for a bill of sale is enough to prevent the subsequent bill of sale being an act of bankruptcy. Here the agreement was bona fide, and full consideration was given for it—In re West; ex parte Good (1), Ex parte Kilner; in re Barker (2) and Ex parte Izard; in re Cook (3).

Winslow, Q.C., and R. Vaughan Williams, for the trustee.—The onus is on the appellants to shew that the bill of sale was given in pursuance of a valid agreement entered into for valuable consideration given at the time—Ex parte Fisher; in re Ash (4). Graham v. Chapman (5) is in our favour, and has never been overruled. There is nothing to shew that the agreement covered all the property subsequently conveyed in the bill of sale. But the property was in the order and disposition of the debtor, for the agreement ought to have been reduced into writing and registered—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 4. Besides, the 20th section of that Act is repealed by section 15 of the Act of 1882; and that, we submit, affects bills of sale registered before the 1st of November, 1882. If it had not been so intended, the wording of sections 3 and 20 of the Act of 1882 would have been different. Where a transaction is protected up to a certain point and no further, it is natural to suppose that after that point the Act applies.

E. C. Willis, Q.C., in reply.—Non-registration of a prior deed cannot affect a subsequent valid registered bill of sale. The point as to registration of the agreement was not taken in the Court below; and there is no evidence that the property was in the debtor's order and disposition.

Bacon, C.J.—The object and intention of all the Bills of Sale Acts is that there shall be the utmost publicity given to these transactions. Publicity is the thing required. The Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 4, enacts that if a man enters into any agreement within the definition of a "bill of sale," "whether intended or not to be followed up by the execution of any other instrument by which a right in equity to any personal chattels, or to any charge or security thereon, shall be conferred," such agreement shall be registered. The case here is that the present appellants were induced to become sureties for the debtor to the bank for 300*l.*, and in return for that he was to give them a security. One of the appellants says he mentioned to the debtor that he required security. The other says that he required the security of a bill of sale, and that the debtor agreed to give that security: the appellants accordingly rely upon an agreement which they say might have been specifically performed. In equity, no doubt, it might have been enforced; but the statute requires the agreement to be registered for the sake of creditors; and as it was necessary, for the agreement to have any validity, that it should be duly registered, that argument has no application to the present case. [His Lordship then stated and considered the recitals in the bill of sale, and the evidence on the point whether the debtor had or had not agreed to give a security before the guarantee was signed, upon which he expressed himself unable to come to any conclusion, and proceeded:] The case is therefore reduced to the operation of the statute; and, in my opinion, nothing would be

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 831; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 868.

(2) Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 245.

(3) 43 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 31; Law Rep. 9 Chanc. 271.

(4) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 62; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 636.

(5) 12 Com. B. Rep. 85; 21 Law J. Rep. C.P. 173.

more unsafe or more repugnant to the provisions of the statute than to hold that under a secret agreement—a non-registered, and therefore secret agreement—a man should be able to go into the world and borrow 300*l.*, to carry on his trade, to contract debts, to acquire property, and to do all the things that a trader can do, when there was hanging over him this undertaking that he would, when required, execute an assignment of all his property. It must have been all his property, otherwise the consequence would have been that as soon as he had got the guarantee for 300*l.* he might have drawn a cheque on the bank for that identical sum; and upon the appellants insisting, "Now you shall make an assignment to us of all your estate and effects," they might have realised that security, and so have got the 300*l.* into their own pockets. It is not necessary to try it by any such test as this, because this agreement being in the terms which the appellants represent, it must have meant all the effects he was then possessed of. The debtor is allowed to carry on business from the month of May down to August without any security having been executed. What is the consequence of that? That the guarantors become secured for 300*l.* against all the other creditors, and that the debtor was at liberty to deal to any extent he might think fit. Mr. Willis has argued that as the agreement is a good agreement, and not in itself an act of bankruptcy, therefore it forms the true and proper consideration for this bill of sale, and that the bill of sale is therefore a valid instrument. In my opinion it is directly opposed to the enactments of the Bills of Sale Act; and the alleged agreement, if it had been proved more distinctly than it has been, could not be sufficient consideration for this bill of sale. Nor is the agreement stated as being the consideration. The words of the bill of sale are, "in pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the premises," the debtor conveys, not all that he had on the 13th of May, but all that he had on the 27th of August and that he might thereafter have; and from the date of the execution of the bill of sale it is not disputed that he carried on his business, and contracted debts and acquired property; and when in November he fails, the appellants enforce their security, and take the whole of his property under their bill of sale. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, not only in consequence of the binding effect of the statute, but also on the plain law of the case, this bill of sale, made in consideration of an agreement not registered, is not an instrument upon which the appellants can properly rely; and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

From this decision the bill of sale holders appealed.

After the appeal had been opened the case was adjourned for the attendance of Mr. Kemp to give evidence of the circumstances under which the bill of sale was executed. He attended, and was examined and cross-examined, his evidence substantiating the account given by Rogers.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and Yate Lee, for the appellants, repeated the arguments used in the Court below, in the course of which they cited Ex parte Izard; in re Cook (3), Ex parte Burton; in re Tunstall (6), Ex parte Kilner; in re Barker (2) and Ramsden v. Lupton (7).

Winslow, Q.C., and R. Vaughan Williams, for the trustee, relied upon Ex parte Fisher; in re Ash (4), Graham v. Chapman (5), Lomax v. Buxton (8) and Ex parte Hawker; in re Keely (9).

Willis, Q.C., in reply.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Chief Judge, who himself dismissed an appeal from the Registrar; and the effect of the proceedings up to the time of their being brought into this Court was, as I understand, this, that this bill of sale was held invalid. From that decision there is now an appeal to us, and we have to consider it.

Now the facts are very short, and except on one point they are hardly in dispute at all. It appears that the bankrupt Hemingway, in May, 1882, wanted an ad-

(6) Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 102.

(7) 43 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 17; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. 17.

(8) 40 Law J. Rep. C.P. 150; Law Rep. 6 C.P. 107.

(9) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 34; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 214.

vance of some money for the purpose of carrying on his business, and he went to the bank for accommodation, and an arrangement was made between him and his bankers that he should have that accommodation to the extent of 300*l.* As a matter of business that would be the limit to which he might overdraw.

As a matter of form the bank probably would credit him with what he wanted and let him draw to that extent; but the bank made it part of the bargain that before they did accommodate him as he desired they should be guaranteed by a couple of names, and the bankrupt accordingly induced two friends of his, of the name of Rogers and Hauxwell, to become sureties to the bank for the accommodation, and they did so on the 13th of May.

Now as to whether there was or was not a promise by the bankrupt at that time to give them a security so as to indemnify them against the liabilities which they incurred to the bank, there is a conflict of testimony, because Hemingway in his affidavit denies that there was any such agreement.

The denial is in very guarded language, but still there it is for what it is worth. On the other hand there is the evidence of the sureties, and there is the evidence of Mr. Kemp; and upon the point as to whether or not there was a stipulation on the part of the sureties that they should have an assignment of his property by way of security, I am satisfied that the truth lies on the side of the sureties, and that there was a bona fide arrangement of that kind. That is a mere question of testimony; and even on the affidavits, having regard to the really very careful way in which Hemingway's affidavit is drawn, I should have come to that conclusion, even without Mr. Kemp's viva voce evidence; but with that the point appears to me to be established beyond all reasonable doubt.

Then under circumstances which are more or less obscure, and which have been explained to us by Mr. Kemp to-day more fully than by the affidavits, the security which was then promised was not in point of fact given till the 22nd of August. The bill of sale was then given, and that bill of sale was duly registered; and not only was it registered, but on the 30th of October, which is considerably before the bankruptcy proceedings, the mortgagees took possession.

Now, as regards the reason why the bill of sale which was promised on the 13th of May was not executed till the 22nd of August; that has been explained to us, partly by the affidavit of the sureties, and partly, and more particularly, by the viva voce evidence of Mr. Kemp. Without going through that evidence in detail, the result to my mind is that I am satisfied that the affidavits of the sureties are trustworthy, that there not only was an honest and real bona fide promise and undertaking to give the bill of sale, but that there was a proceeding on the part of the sureties to get it, that they did try to get it, that they did not abstain from getting it in order to bolster up the credit of the person for whom they had become sureties, and that so far as they were concerned they were honestly doing their best to get the security which they wanted, and which they had been promised. That is a question of fact, and a question of inference, and that is the inference I have come to. I do not say I should have come to that inference upon the affidavits alone, but Mr. Kemp's evidence has satisfied me that that is the real truth of the matter. That disposes of the facts.

We now come to the legal consequences; and the first thing we have to consider is, whether this bill of sale given on the 22nd of August is good for anything, or good for nothing. First of all we must consider that with regard to the Bills of Sale Act itself—because, as I understand it, the Chief Judge has held the bill of sale invalid, if not upon the true construction of the 9th section of the Bills of Sale Act, at all events by reasons founded on that section. The 9th section of the Bills of Sale Act, as I understand, is for the purpose of meeting a specific method of evading registration. That was the object of it, and, when we look at the language of it, it is confined to that particular object. It is restricted in its language. It runs thus: "Where a subsequent bill of sale is executed within or on the expiration of seven days after the execution of a prior unregistered bill of sale, and comprises all or any part of the personal chattels comprised in such prior bill of sale, then, if such subsequent bill of sale is given as a security for the same debt as is secured by the prior bill of sale, or for any part of such debt, it shall, to the extent to which it is a security for the same debt or part thereof, and so far as respects the personal chattels or part thereof comprised in the prior bill, be absolutely void, unless it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court having cognizance of the case that the subsequent bill of sale was bona fide given for the purpose of correcting some material error in the prior bill of sale, and not for the purpose of evading this Act."

Now the whole of that section turns upon this. It applies to a case where a subsequent bill of sale is executed within or on the expiration of seven days after the execution of a prior unregistered bill of sale. In terms the section does not apply to a case of this kind at all. It only applies to a specific method of evading the Act which is there pointed to. It appears to me that not only does this case not come within the section, but it would not be in conformity with legal principles to base upon the section a method of reasoning which would touch a transaction of that kind which does not come within either the letter or the spirit of the enactment. So far as the Bills of Sale Act is concerned, quite apart from the fact of possession having been taken on the 30th of October, which of course is not to be lost sight of, it appears to me that the bill of sale cannot be held to be invalid. Then it is said, quite apart from the Bills of Sale Act, that this bill of sale was an act of bankruptcy—and that is a much more formidable question. Now the bill of sale does in substance assign to the sureties for their security the whole of the grantor's property. It enables them to seize everything which he had. There is no doubt about the fact. Then it is said that that is an act of bankruptcy; and the first point which I will refer to is, whether it is an act of bankruptcy by reason of Graham v. Chapman (5); and it is said that Graham v. Chapman (5) shews that if a bill of sale is so worded as to enable the creditor to whom it is given to seize, not only all the property of his debtor, but all his property including that which may be bought by the advance then made, if there be an advance, that that itself is an act of bankruptcy. Well, if Graham v. Chapman (5) does say that, or if it did decide that, it appears to me that Graham v. Chapman (5) is distinctly wrong. It has been so considered ever since it was decided.

I do not say it is wrong, because I am not sure that it is not open to this explanation which is given of it by Mr. Justice Willes in Lomax v. Buxton (8) He says: "I think that in dealing with the case of Graham v. Chapman (5) we must take it to have turned on the particular terms of the deed, and the mode in which the advance was there made; and that though there was an advance in point of form, it came into the hands of the debtor under such circumstances that he did not get the real enjoyment of the money so advanced." Well, if that is so, then what purported to be an advance was not an advance, and then one can understand Graham v. Chapman (5). But as Graham v. Chapman (5) is supposed to be an authority to the effect that a bill of sale in the form so given is necessarily bad, to that extent it appears to me that Graham v. Chapman (5) has been dissented from and overruled, and cannot be supported, and there ought to be an end of it.

So much for Graham v. Chapman (5). But then it is said that quite apart from Graham v. Chapman (5) this bill of sale ought to be treated as an act of bankruptcy, upon the principle enunciated by this Court, and acted upon by this Court, in the case of Ex parte Kilner (2), upon the ground that, although there may have been a bona fide arrangement to give the bill of sale, yet the sureties had in fact been postponing the obtaining of that bill of sale, and the registration of it, in order to give credit to their debtor. Now Ex parte Kilner (2) appears to me, if I may say so, to be a most valuable decision, and a most valuable guide, and to point out to us the extreme care which ought to be taken before we uphold transactions of this description; and if the result of the evidence in my mind were doubtful, instead of being, as it is, clear, that this was an honest transaction on the part of these sureties—if I thought that they had been conniving at the non-execution of this bill of sale or the non-registration of it, I should not have hesitated for a moment to apply the doctrine of Ex parte Kilner (2) to it. The conclusion at which I have arrived is the other way. I believe that this case is outside any danger of that kind. It therefore strikes me that Ex parte Kilner (2) does not apply. The principle of it does, but the application of it is different, the facts being different and the evidence different. Upon these grounds, therefore, it appears to me that this bill of sale cannot be impeached either under the Bills of Sale Act or as an act of bankruptcy, and that the order appealed from must be discharged.

FRY, L.J.—I entirely agree in the judgment that has just been pronounced by Lord Justice Lindley. I accept in its fulness the doctrine laid down in Ex parte Kilner (2). I agree entirely that where a document is set up which upon the face of it is an act of bankruptcy, that is an assignment of all a man's goods for a past consideration; if it is said it is not an act of bankruptcy because it is warranted by a prior agreement, the onus probandi is always on the person who sets up the prior agreement to prove, not only that the prior agreement did exist in fact, but that it was in all respects a bona fide agreement. I would add this, that although in the present case the document was not exclusively for an antecedent debt but partially for a present advance, I think that this is a case which requires to be watched with extreme anxiety and care, because it is evident that to allow bills of sale to be supported by means of antecedent parol contracts is a matter which requires the greatest and most anxious consideration. But in the present case I am satisfied that the burden of proof which is thus cast upon those who claim under the bill of sale has been supported. I have asked myself in the first place—was there a real bona fide agreement for the immediate execution of the bill of sale in question, or was there any agreement to postpone its execution? The evidence has convinced me that there was an agreement for the immediate execution of a bill of sale, and that there was no original agreement to postpone its execution. I have then asked myself this second question—was there any acquiescence on the part of the sureties in the delay in the execution of the bill of sale, or did they take all reasonable steps to obtain the execution, and was it a delay therefore due entirely to the debtor and not to them? It is not necessary to say whether the acquiescence must amount to such as is indicative of an intention to allow the debtor to defraud his creditors. I have put the question to myself in a manner more adverse to those who claim under the bill of sale. Now, again, the evidence satisfies me that there was no such acquiescence on the part of the sureties, but that the delay really was due to the unwillingness of the debtor to execute the bill of sale which he had, as I think, clearly promised that he would execute. We find that the original transaction took place on or about the 13th of May, and that within a few days after that—namely, on the 16th—the instructions are given to Mr. Kemp. Those instructions are for the immediate preparation of the bill of sale; and within a reasonable time after those instructions had been given an appointment is made for the persons interested to hear the bill of sale read and explained to them, and then happens the first act on the part of the debtor in evading the execution of the bill of sale. He is absent. Now what does Rogers, the more active of the two sureties, do? He goes out and finds Hemingway and brings him in. That took place on the 22nd of May, and an appointment is made for the immediate execution of the bill of sale—namely, on the 23rd. Hemingway behaves in the same manner again—he makes default in attending the appointment. Now what is Rogers's conduct upon that? He immediately consults Mr. Kemp, his solicitor; and the result is that both Mr. Kemp and Rogers from time to time see Hemingway. They each press him to come and execute the bill of sale. He makes promises or he gives excuses. When he makes promises he does not observe them, and when he gives excuses they seem to have been false. But so far do they carry their pressure that they go to his works on a certain occasion to obtain his execution of the bill of sale. He is absent. They wait there for from an hour and a half to two hours, and they seek for him in the neighbourhood, and at last becoming convinced that he has not the slightest intention of ever executing the bill of sale, except under pressure, the two men—Rogers and Mr. Kemp—go to Hemingway's house one evening, where I suppose they were almost sure to find him, taking with them the bill of sale, and there and then send for a pen and ink, and, so to speak, make him execute the instrument. I have come, like Lord Justice Lindley, to the conclusion that the original contract for the execution of this bill of sale was one which was perfectly bona fide—that there has been no acquiescence in the delay in its execution; and that, consequently, the burden of proof, which I am bound to say in my judgment rests very strongly on those who claim under the agreement, has in this case been discharged.

I must make this further observation—that in the present case we have before us more evidence than was before the learned Judge of the County Court or before the learned Chief Judge, and the only thing which has created any doubt in my mind is the fact that one of my learned brethren is not so well satisfied with the evidence as I myself am.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I in no way dissent from the principles which my learned colleagues have referred to as applicable in cases of this kind, but I entertain doubts as to whether they have arrived at the right conclusion as regards the application of those principles to the circumstances of this case.

I may say at the outset that I in no way dissent from what Lord Justice Lindley has said. On the contrary, I entirely agree with him so far as regards the more particular ground on which it would appear that the Chief Judge decided this case—namely, on the construction of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. The general principles applicable to cases of this kind on the only point on which I propose to say anything now, as we all know, were most concisely stated by Lord Justice Mellish, in the case so often referred to of Ex parte Fisher; in re Ash (4). They are stated so shortly that I will even repeat what the learned Judge said: "Although we do not dispute the rule that where a sum of money is advanced on the faith of a promise that a bill of sale shall be given, such sum is to be treated as a present advance on the security of a bill of sale, we do not think this rule will protect transactions where the giving of the bill of sale is purposely postponed until the trader is in a state of insolvency in order to prevent the destruction of his credit, which would result from registering a bill of sale. We think that such a postponement is evidence of an intention to commit actual fraud against the general creditors."

Now the principles as enunciated came under the consideration of the Court of Appeal in several cases where the circumstances varied. In Ex parte Izard (3) and in Ex parte King (10) the Court was of opinion that the circumstances which were detailed to it, or were placed before it, were not such as to invalidate the bills of sale that had been given; whereas in Ex parte Burton (6), which preceded by a very little Ex parte Kilner (2), the Court was of opinion that the circumstances were such as to invalidate the bill of sale. Now I will not repeat my own views as regards the general application of this principle—I did so in some considerable detail in the course of my judgment in Ex parte Kilner (2); but there is a passage in the judgment of Lord Justice Thesiger in that case which, as it appears to me, is of importance as regards the general applicability of the further principle to which I shall presently allude. What he said was this: "I think that the decision in Ex parte Fisher (4) supplied a most wholesome corrective to the dangers which, as it seems to me, may arise from the principles laid down in Mercer v. Peterson (11), which went a long way in the direction of holding that a previous agreement was sufficient to support a subsequent bill of sale . . . . and that we ought to apply the doctrines laid down by Lord Justice Mellish to their full extent, and to require, in this and similar cases, a very clear explanation of the reason why the giving of the bill of sale was delayed." Lord Justice James, at the close of the judgment given by Lord Justice Thesiger and myself in that case, added, "Where a document is set up which upon the face of it is an act of bankruptcy—that is, an assignment of all a man's goods for a past consideration—if it is said that it is not an act of bankruptcy, because it is warranted by a prior agreement, the onus probandi is always upon the person who sets up the prior agreement to prove, not only that the agreement did exist in fact, but that it" was in all respects a bona fide agreement. Now I think that the extension of the general principle enunciated by Lord Justice Mellish in Ex parte Fisher (4) is a most valuable principle. We unfortunately have constantly instances of bills of sale which we cannot help supporting, but as to which we cannot help having very grave suspicion—as in one case that came before Lord Justice Mellish—and I do think it is of the greatest importance to uphold that principle to its fullest extent.

(10) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 109; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 256.

(11) 37 Law J. Rep. Exch. 54; Law Rep. 3 Exch. 104.

Now the question is, how are those principles to be applied to the case which we have now under consideration. Had the evidence remained as it was before the Chief Judge, I certainly should not have had the slightest doubt about upholding the decision at which he had arrived; but no doubt additional evidence is given here to-day which is very much to the advantage and benefit of the bill of sale holders. But having given my best attention to the statement Mr. Kemp has made, I am bound to say he has not satisfied my mind that the execution of this bill of sale was not postponed for the purpose of protecting the credit of Hemingway—and I say it for this reason. No doubt, immediately after the agreement was come to, there was a considerable amount of activity on the part of the gentlemen who are now the bill of sale holders and on the part of their solicitors to have the bill of sale prepared, and to procure its execution by Hemingway. There seems to have been some difficulty in bringing that gentleman to consider the terms of the bill of sale; but I give credit to the statement of Mr. Kemp that the terms of the bill of sale were some time towards the latter part of May assented to by Hemingway, or not dissented from by him. But then I must confess we have mention in the evidence that, at an early stage, Hemingway did evince a disinclination to give a bill of sale, because of the effect that the registering of that bill of sale would have upon his creditors. We are told that he was argued with by the bill of sale holders, they pointing out that the danger was not so much as he might expect; and there was a suggestion that probably most of his creditors would not be offended by such a thing taking place. But at the same time it is clear that there was that indisposition on his part, and that indisposition expressed. Certainly I am unable myself to appreciate the delay from the last specified period that Mr. Kemp spoke to, down to the time that the bill of sale was executed on the 23rd of August—a period of nearly three months. Certainly there appears to have been an acquiescence on both sides, that the bill of sale, which was intended to be executed in May, should remain as a dead-letter for the time. That matter presses upon my mind, and I have heard no explanation of the reason of the delay beyond both parties seeming apparently to allow the matter to drop.

An argument has been suggested whether, supposing that the arrangement was once bona fide entered into, the fact of not acting upon it for three months would invalidate the transaction. Possibly if this was an agreement entered into for not enforcing it for a certain length of time, it might be prejudicial to any application to have it enforced; but I regard the subsequent conduct, not so much as invalidating the agreement which had been previously entered into, but as throwing a light upon the circumstances under which it was previously entered into. I must confess that it does appear to me that the delay of three months from the time the bill of sale was prepared to the time it was executed throws a certain amount of suspicion upon the transaction—namely, that executed, because if executed have to be registered, and if t would be disagreeable to the by whom it was executed. I rtain that opinion very strongly, am bound to say that a good Mr. Kemp has said to-day has the case of the appellant; but at amount of doubt as regards stances of the case, that I can- oncur in the judgments which brethren have pronounced.

ked for costs.

AY, L.J.—As far as regards the costs, we think that this is a ich there should be no costs. put it on the ground expressed Izard (3) of its being a sus- , because that would be contrary opinion expressed by both my thers; nor do we put it on the ifference of opinion amongst us; s ground—that the appellant ed here, not upon the materials ore the Chief Judge, but upon nal materials given here in evi- y.

l dismissed, and leave to appeal the House of Lords refused.

---

ingleton & Tattershall, agents for enior & Kemp, Wakefield, for ap- lickin & Graham, agents for Horner son, Wakefield, for respondents.

In re ALFRETON'S TRUST ESTATES.

Appointment—Construction—whether Entitled to Share in d Fund.

lement, lands were conveyed to n trust, either in the lifetime of s consent in writing, or else not s decease, to raise 12,000*l.*, and me unto and between the two of M. as he should by deed, attested by two witnesses, appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the two daughters equally, to be vested interests in them at twenty-one or marriage, and to be paid at such age or time if the same should happen after the decease of M., but if the same should happen in his lifetime, then immediately after his decease, "unless he should signify his consent in writing under his hand and seal that the said respective shares should be raised and paid in his lifetime."

M., by deed attested by two witnesses, reciting the power, and that he was desirous of making some immediate as well as future provision for his daughter E., appointed that the trustees should raise two sums of 5,000*l. and* 1,000*l.—the* 5,000*l. immediately, and the* 1,000*l. immediately after his decease—and pay the same to the said E., "to the intent that the payment of the portion or portions of the said E. under the said settlement may as to the said sum of* 5,000*l. be accelerated and take effect according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, anything in the said settlement to the contrary thereof notwithstanding." M. died without making any further appointment:—*

Held, that E. was entitled to one moiety of the unappointed part of the 12,000*l., in addition to the sums so appointed to her.*

Petition.

By a settlement, dated the 3rd day of June, 1842, certain hereditaments were conveyed to trustees for (amongst other limitations) the term of 500 years, upon trust, either in the lifetime of William Palmer Morewood, with his consent in writing, or else not till after his decease, by mortgaging, selling, or otherwise, to levy and raise 12,000*l.*, with interest at four per cent. per annum, to be computed from the day of the decease of the said W. P. Morewood, or such earlier period as the said portions should or might be directed to be raised and paid, as thereinafter mentioned, until payment of the same principal sum, and to pay the said sum of 12,000*l.* and interest unto and between Ellen Palmer Morewood and Louisa Palmer Morewood, the only two daughters of W. P. Morewood and Clara his wife, in such parts, shares and proportions, manner and form, as the said W. P. Morewood, by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments in writing, with or without power of revocation and new appointment, to be by him sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, should from time to time direct or appoint; and in default of such direction or appointment, and so far as the same should not extend, the said sum of 12,000*l.* and interest to be paid unto and equally between the said Ellen P. Morewood and Louisa P. Morewood, and to be an interest vested in them respectively at her or their age or respective ages of twenty-one years, or day or respective days of marriage, which should first happen; and to be paid to her or them respectively on or at the same ages, days or times respectively, if the same respectively should happen after the decease of the said W. P. Morewood; but if the same respectively should happen in the lifetime of the said W. P. Morewood, then immediately after his decease, unless he should signify his consent in writing under his hand and seal that the said respective shares should be raised and paid in his lifetime.

In re Alfreton's Trust Estates.

By a deed-poll, dated the 29th of January, 1844, after reciting the foregoing provisions in full, including the limitation in default of appointment, and reciting that the said W. P. Morewood was desirous of making some immediate as well as future provision for the said Ellen P. Morewood, his daughter, and had therefore determined and agreed to make and execute the appointment thereinafter contained, it was witnessed that in consideration of the premises the said W. P. Morewood, in pursuance and in exercise and execution of the power and authority given, limited and reserved to him in the said in part above-recited indenture of settlement in that behalf, and also by virtue and in exercise and execution of every or any other power or authority whatsoever in anywise vested in or enabling him thereto by that deed, sealed and delivered by the said W. P. Morewood in the presence of two credible witnesses, irrevocably directed and appointed that the trustees or trustee for the time being of the said term of 500 years should, by mortgaging or selling or otherwise disposing of the said hereditaments therein comprised, or some part or parts thereof respectively, or by other the ways and means provided in this behalf, levy and raise two several sums of 5,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* (making together the sum of 6,000*l.*) at the times and in manner thereinafter mentioned (that is to say): "The sum of 5,000*l.*, part thereof, immediately after the execution of these presents, and the further sum of 1,000*l.*, other part thereof, and the remainder of the said sum of 6,000*l.*, at or immediately after the decease of the said W. P. Morewood, with interest thereon after the rate of four per cent. per annum, to be computed as to the said sum of 5,000*l.* from the day of the date hereof, and as to the said sum of 1,000*l.* from the day of the decease of the said W. P. Morewood, and thereupon pay the said respective sums of 5,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*, and all interest in respect thereof, when and as the same shall accrue and become due as aforesaid, unto the said E. P. Morewood, her executors, administrators and assigns, to the intent that the payment of the portion or portions of the said Ellen P. Morewood, under the said recited indenture of release or settlement, may as to the said sum of 5,000*l.* and interest be accelerated and take effect according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, anything in the said indenture of settlement contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding."

This appointment was made with a view to the marriage of the appointee, Ellen P. Morewood, with Mr. G. H. Elliott, which took place a few days afterwards. In contemplation of this marriage a settlement of the two sums of 5,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* was duly made.

W. P. Morewood died without making any further appointment.

Doubts having been entertained whether or not the appointment so made had the effect of excluding Mrs. Elliott from sharing in the unappointed portion of the 12,000*l.*, the trustees of the settlement, under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act, had paid into Court the sum of 4,139*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* (representing one moiety of the unappointed portion of the 12,000*l.* and interest), which sum was now standing on deposit; and this petition was presented by Mrs. Elliott and her husband, asking that this sum should be paid out to them in her right.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Hornell, for the petitioners, referred to Walmsley v. Vaughan (1), Simpson v. Paul (2), Wombwell v. Hanrott (3), Foster v. Cautley (4), Alloway v. Alloway (5) and Sugden on Powers (6).

Rigby, Q.C., and Bridgeman, for Louisa Palmer Morewood.

Cecil Austin, for the trustees.

Cur. adv. vult.

KAY, J.—I reserved judgment in this case that I might give due consideration to the very able arguments of counsel on either side. [His Lordship stated the facts of the case as above set out, and continued as follows:] The question is, in substance, who is entitled to the remainder of the 12,000*l.*? It is not denied that an appointment to a child, even of the exact amount to which he would be entitled in default of appointment, although expressed to be "as his share," will not exclude the child from taking a part of the unappointed fund.

But it is argued in this case that the deed-poll was not intended to be an appointment in that sense; that by the original settlement the power of signifying consent that the shares should be raised and paid in the lifetime of the appointor is annexed to the limitation in default of appointment; and that the object of the deed-poll was simply to fix the times at which the respective portions of the fund to which Ellen was entitled in default of appointment should be raised and paid. This, it is said, appears from the fact that the deed-poll recites not merely the power but also the limitation in default of appointment; that it does not make any kind of alteration in the amount of Ellen's share; and that the final words, to the intent that the payment of the portion or portions of Ellen under the settlement might as to 5,000*l.* and interest be accelerated, are really the governing words; and it is added, if the deed contains words of appointment which go further than this object requires, they ought to be construed with reference to the general purport of the deed. It is further urged, with much force, that equality is equity, that to allow Ellen to share in the unappointed portion would probably defeat the intention of the appointor, and that a technical rule laid down many years ago, and which can only be defended on the ground of its antiquity, ought not at this day to be applied, except to cases coming necessarily within it.

The argument on the other side may be shortly stated thus:—In the original settlement the power of signifying consent is annexed to the limitation in default of appointment to shew that it applies as well to unappointed as to appointed shares. That limitation is recited in the deed-poll in order that the recital may include this power of consent which was about to be exercised. The deed-poll was not merely for this purpose; if it had been, attestation by two witnesses would have been unnecessary; such attestation is only required by the settlement in the case of an appointment. The recital in the deed-poll as well as the operative words shew that it was intended to appoint a sum to Ellen; and that an appointment was thereby actually intended and made is put beyond question by the words "irrevocably direct and appoint," which apply to the 1,000*l.* as well as to the 5,000*l.*, and which words were properly and advisedly used in order to render it impossible to make any other appointment of either of those funds.

I am compelled to yield assent to this argument. I think it impossible, on any fair principle of construction, to deny that the deed-poll operated as an appointment to Ellen of 6,000*l.*, part of the 12,000*l.* I am bound by authority to hold that this appointment does not prevent Ellen from taking one moiety of the unappointed portion of the fund; and if this conclusion offends, as has been argued, against some rule of natural equity, it is for the Legislature to interfere and relieve the Courts

(1) 1 De Gex & J. 114; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 503.
(2) 2 Eden, 34.
(3) 14 Beav. 143; 20 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 581.
(4) 6 De Gex, M. & G. 55; 24 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 252.
(5) 4 Dr. & W. 391; Con. & Law. 377.
(6) 7th ed. 219.

In re Alfreton's Trust Estates.

from the obligation of abiding by what is now in this respect the settled law.

Solicitors—Merriman, Pike & Merriman, for petitioners; Bowker, Peake, Bird & Collins, and Bennett, Dawson & Bennett, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
June 12.

Ex parte ENGLEHART; in re ENGLEHART.

Bankruptcy — Composition — Misstatement of Amount of Debt—Correction of Mistake—Action to recover Debt—Stay of Proceedings—Bankruptcy Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 126—Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, rule 306.

In a statement of debts produced by a debtor at the meetings of creditors, at which resolutions for accepting a composition were passed, the debtor had inserted the amount of a debt due to a creditor who dissented from the resolutions as being 17*l.*, when in fact it was 17*l.* 15*s.* The creditor brought an action to recover the latter amount, but until the action was commenced the debtor was not aware of his misstatement. No steps were taken by the debtor to correct the mistake:—Held, that the creditor was not bound by the resolutions, owing to the misstatement in the statement of debts, and that the Court ought not to restrain the action to enable the debtor to obtain the consent of his creditors under rule 306 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, that the mistake should be corrected.

Appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Brougham, sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

On the 30th of November, 1882, the debtor J. G. Englehart filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition with his creditors.

On the 18th of December, 1882, a general meeting of creditors was held, when the requisite majority passed resolutions to accept a composition, the first instalment to be paid within a month from the date of the confirming resolution.

The debtor, in the statutory statement of affairs, inserted the amount of 17*l.* as due to one of his creditors. This was the amount due to him, as the debtor believed, for goods which had been supplied to him, but in respect of which no invoice had been delivered. The amount of the debt was in fact 17*l.* 15*s.*

The resolutions, after being duly confirmed, were registered on the 3rd of January, 1883.

On the 8th of February the creditor who had dissented from the resolutions commenced an action in the Mayor's Court, London, to recover the amount of his debt, 17*l.* 15*s.*, having previously refused to accept the first instalment of the composition.

The debtor, until the commencement of the action, had received no notice of the mistake which he had made as to the amount of the debt.

Mr. Registrar Brougham, on the 8th of March, refused an application by the debtor to stay the action upon the ground that the creditor was not bound by the resolutions because of the misstatement of the amount due—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126 (1) and rule 306 (2).

The debtor appealed.

Winslow, Q.C., and T. Lee Roberts, for the debtor, contended that the creditor

(1) 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 126: "The provisions of a composition accepted by an extraordinary resolution in pursuance of this section shall be binding on all the creditors whose names and addresses, and the amount of the debts due to whom, are shewn in the statement of the debtor produced to the meetings at which the resolution has passed, but shall not affect or prejudice the rights of any other creditors. . . . Any mistake made inadvertently by a debtor in the statement of his debts may be corrected after the prescribed notice has been given with the consent of a general meeting of his creditors."

(2) Rule 306: "Any mistake made inadvertently by a debtor in the statement of his debts may be corrected with the assent of a majority in value of his creditors assembled at a general meeting similarly summoned by the debtor."

was bound by the resolutions which had been passed; but that, at all events, the Court should stay the action until an opportunity had been given to the debtor to call a meeting of his creditors in order to correct the mistake.

Wilson v. Breslauer (3), Burliner v. Royle (4), In re Hatton (5), Ex parte Mathewes; in re Angel (6), Ex parte Lopez (7), Ex parte Lang (8), Ex parte Jerningham (9), the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 126 (1) and rule 306 (2) were referred to.

W. F. Robinson, Q.C., and Wyatt Hart, for the creditor, were not called upon.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The decision of the Court below was based upon the authority of the case of Burliner v. Royle (4), and, so far as I can form an opinion as to the correctness of that decision, I think that it was rightly decided. I do not, however, give judgment now upon the authority of Burliner v. Royle (4), but upon the earlier authorities upon which that decision rested. It was said that, having regard to the provisions of section 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, this debt was in substance barred by reason of the resolution for the payment of the composition. In the statement of affairs produced by the debtor at the meeting of the creditors, the debt in question was set down as being 17*l.*, when in fact it was 17*l.* 15*s.* No doubt the debt was inaccurately stated, and it would at first sight seem hard that the inaccurate statement of so small an amount should be sufficient to prevent the resolutions from binding a particular creditor. But that view is not so hard when it is borne in mind that power is given to correct any mistake made in a statement, provided that proper means are taken to correct it. In the case of Ex parte Mathewes (6) it is laid down as essential that in all cases there should be a perfect and complete accuracy, not only as regards the names and addresses of the creditors, but also as regards the amounts of the debts due to them; and that if there is any inaccuracy in the statement, the debtor must apply at the earliest possible time to get it cured in the manner pointed out by rule 306. No doubt if it were for the benefit of the creditors that the error should be corrected, a resolution would be passed to that effect. In the case of Ex parte Mathewes (6) there was an inaccuracy in the statement of affairs, but the debtor did not apply to have it corrected until about two months after the time when the statement had been made and after an action had been brought, and there it was held that the application was too late. I do not understand the Court of Appeal to have laid down that in no case would the application be too late, but that under the circumstances it was too late. The great difficulty in the present case is that the application was too late. The concluding observations of Lord Justice Mellish in Ex parte Mathewes (6) bear upon this case, where he said, "The time for payment of the first instalment is past. The action was commenced on the 5th of November, and up to this time no steps have been taken to correct the mistake. There is no section in the Act that deprives Mathewes of his rights, and he is therefore entitled to pursue his ordinary remedies as a creditor." The same view was adopted by Mr. Justice Lopes in the case of Burliner v. Royle (4). The Court cannot make an Act of Parliament; but a creditor has a right to rely upon the Act. The case of Burliner v. Royle (4) is important with regard to the question that the error in this case was a very trifling one. But where is the line to be drawn? It is of the very essence of the Act of Parliament that, if advantage is to be taken of its provisions, there must be a strict obedience to the words of the Act, and that if a mistake has been made, it must be promptly rectified. In the case of Burliner v. Royle (4) the mistake was 25*s.*, which was a much less proportion to the amount of the debt than in the present case. The view passed through my mind as to whether the matter should not

(3) 47 Law J. Rep. C.P. 729; 46 ibid. 593; Law Rep. 3 App. Cas. 672; ibid. 2 C.P. D. 314.
(4) Law Rep. 5 C.P. D. 354.
(5) 42 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 2; Law Rep. 7 Ch. App. 723.
(6) 44 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 128; Law Rep. 10 Ch. App. 304.
(7) 46 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 95; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 65.
(8) Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 971.
(9) 47 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 115; Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 468

stand over until there had been a general meeting of the creditors to correct the original statement; but, having regard to the decision in Ex parte Mathewes (6) and to the general current of authority, the Court would not be justified in so doing.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I do not see my way to take any different view. Prima facie the inclination of the Court would be to allow an inadvertent mistake to be corrected. But when one sees what has been done in the present case, the Court will not interfere. The first question is whether the creditor was bound by the resolution. If he is, the action ought not to proceed; but that question depends upon the statute. The creditor here has not raised any personal equity against himself, so that he is not precluded from standing on his strict rights. The debt has not been correctly stated according to the provisions of section 126, and the error is one which the Court would be disposed to set right. But the Act makes provision by rule 306 as to the way in which the error is to be corrected. The debtor has not, however, resorted to the method pointed out by the statute and rule for correcting the mistake. The question, therefore, simply is, whether the action ought to be stayed until proceedings have been taken to correct the mistake. I think there would have been a stronger case for doing so if it had been suggested to the Registrar that he should give an opportunity to correct the mistake. That course was never suggested; and as the suggestion is now made for the first time, it would not be fair to accede to it. In my opinion the decision of the Registrar was right in point of law.

FRY, L.J.—The first enquiry is, whether the debtor can say that the creditor is bound by the resolutions which were duly registered. The language of section 126 is very explicit. In the first place it is affirmative, and says what creditors are to be bound; and in the next place it is negative, and says that no other creditor shall be affected as regards his rights. It was admitted that, strictly speaking, the creditor here was not a creditor within the meaning of the section because the amount of the debt had not been correctly stated. The words of the statute must be strictly construed for the following reasons: first, by reason of the negative words which provide that the common law rights of a creditor are not to be taken away except in particular cases; secondly, because power is given by the statute to correct a mistake which has been inadvertently made, and that power is a strong reason for holding a debtor strictly to the words of the Act; and thirdly, because there is a long series of decisions to the effect that the provisions of the Act must be strictly complied with. It is sufficient upon that point to refer to Ex parte Lang (8), Wilson v. Breslauer (3) and Burliner v. Royle (4). There has not been any personal equity raised in this case against the creditor. The only question is, whether the action ought to be stayed until the debtor has had an opportunity of calling a meeting of his creditors. I am not, at the present moment, convinced—having regard to the strong negative words of the Act—that the Court has power to stay the action. No such point was raised when the matter came before the Registrar, and it is too late now to raise a question of that description.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors—H. Aird, for appellant; Hatchett Jones & Letcher, for respondent.

KAY, J.
1883.
April 4, 5.
May 7.

In re HAWTHORNE. GRAHAM v. MASSEY.

Jurisdiction—Foreign Law—Title to Land depending on Law of Saxony as to Immoveables.

An action was brought against the executors and devisees in trust under a will to recover a share of the proceeds of sale of a house at Dresden, which had been sold by the defendants' testator. The title of the plaintiffs to any share or interest in the house was contested by the defendants, and depended on the law of Saxony as to immoveables. All the parties were resident in this country:—Held, that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action.

In re Hawthorne.

This was an action to recover three-fourths of one moiety of the purchase-money of a house at Dresden, in Saxony, under the following circumstances.

The house originally belonged to Colonel Steele Hawthorne, a domiciled Irishman, and his wife Sarah, jointly.

Colonel Hawthorne, who died in February, 1853, by his will, in July, 1851, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to pay the rents, profits and proceeds thereof to his wife Sarah for life, and after her death upon trust for his daughter Mabella.

This will was not executed according to Saxon law.

Mabella died without issue in her father's lifetime. The widow, Sarah Hawthorne, died on the 31st of May, 1875, leaving a will, executed according to Saxon law, by which she devised all her real and personal property at her residence at Dresden, expressly including the house, to Charles S. Hawthorne, the testator in this cause. In 1875 Charles S. Hawthorne sold the house and received part of the purchase-money, and the remainder, amounting to 66,000 marks, was secured to him by a mortgage of the house according to Saxon law. He died in 1877.

The plaintiffs in this action were the administrator and the widow and children of John Graham, who was the surviving husband of Georgiana Graham, formerly Hawthorne, the only surviving child of Colonel Hawthorne. The defendants were the executors and devisees in trust under the will of Charles S. Hawthorne.

The statement of claim alleged in effect that on the death of Colonel Hawthorne one moiety of the house, subject to his widow's life interest, devolved, by Saxon law, as to three-fourth parts on Georgiana, and the remaining one-fourth part on Sarah Hawthorne, who was entitled to the other moiety; that on the death of Georgiana in 1863, John Graham became, by Saxon law, entitled to her three-fourths of one moiety; that he died intestate, and thereupon his share and interest devolved on the plaintiffs, as his administrator and next-of-kin respectively. They accordingly claimed an account of purchase-moneys and interest received by the testator Charles S. Hawthorne, a direction of the Court as to getting in the mortgage debt of 66,000 marks, payment to them of the proportion of the moneys to which they alleged themselves to be entitled, and if the defendants should not admit assets to meet their claim, then proper accounts of the real and personal estate of the testator, and administration of the same as in a creditor's action.

It was also alleged that on the death of Sarah Hawthorne, the testator Charles S. Hawthorne procured himself to be registered in Dresden as the owner of the house, and so became the legal owner, and that by Saxon law he could confer an indefeasible title on a purchaser, but that a seller under such circumstances becomes by that law responsible to the person really entitled, and if he has acted bona fide becomes a trustee of the purchase-money for the person really entitled.

The defendants, by their statement of defence, denied utterly the claim of the plaintiffs, and alleged that Charles S. Hawthorne was sole and legal owner of the entirety of the house for his own use and benefit, and submitted that the rights of the parties to the action ought to be determined by Saxon law.

All the parties to the action were resident in this country.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and W. C. Druce, for the plaintiffs.—All that the plaintiffs seek by this action is to make the defendants account to them for their share of the purchase-money of the property, and if they establish this right the Court will enforce it, notwithstanding that the property is situate in Saxony. In In re Pollard (1) the Court, acting in personam, enforced an equitable mortgage concerning land in Scotland. And in Lord Cranstoun v. Johnston (2) the Court assumed jurisdiction as to land in the colonies.

(1) 1 Mont. & C. 239; reversing s. c. 6 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 95.

(2) 3 Ves. 170.

In re Hawthorne.

[They referred also to Westlake on International Law, pp. 192 et seq.]

W. Pearson, Q.C., and Creed, for the defendants.—The question here is whether at the time of the sale this three-fourths of a moiety of the house belonged to John Graham. That is a question as to the right to property situate in Saxony, which, it is submitted, this Court has no jurisdiction to determine. The only Court which can determine it is the proper Court in Saxony. In re Pollard (1) was merely a question of the extinction of the right to redeem land in Scotland, and there was no contest as to the right to the land. In Lord Cranstoun v. Johnston (2) jurisdiction was assumed on the ground of fraud. There is no suggestion of fraud in the present case. It would be going far beyond any decided case to say that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain a case in which there is a contest as to the right to immoveable property situated abroad and governed by the foreign law as to immoveables.

W. F. Robinson, Q.C., and Joliffe, for other parties interested.

Druce, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

KAY, J.—An important question of jurisdiction arises in this case. [His Lordship then stated the material facts of the case as above set out, observing that by reason of the death of Mabella without issue Colonel Hawthorne's moiety of the house, to the extent of the beneficial interest therein after the death of the widow, was undisposed of according to the law of this country, if that law were applicable, and then proceeded as follows:] It is obvious that neither Charles S. Hawthorne nor the defendants are with reference to this claim, by English law, in any fiduciary relation to the plaintiffs. They are not bound by a contract with them, nor is the claim in any way based upon a suggestion of fraud. It is a bona fide claim on both sides of title to land or the proceeds of land in Saxony.

The claim depends primarily upon the law of Saxony as to the devolution of land in that country. If maintainable, it can only be so upon the ground that by the law of Saxony upon the death of Sarah Hawthorne three-fourths of one moiety of this property descended to Georgiana Hawthorne, under whom the plaintiffs claim.

The next question is, whether the plaintiffs by the law of Saxony are entitled to such interest (if any) as did so descend to Georgiana Hawthorne. A third question is, whether by Saxon law, Charles S. Hawthorne having sold the property, he or his estate after his decease is accountable for a share of the purchase-moneys to the plaintiffs.

I need not dwell upon the danger of error if the Courts of this country were to entertain jurisdiction to determine a contested claim of this kind depending upon questions of foreign law.

I may, perhaps, illustrate it by one of the arguments used before me. I have a number of opinions not on oath by foreign lawyers. One of these states that the time for ascertaining the heir of Colonel Hawthorne in this case was the death of Sarah Hawthorne, because of the devise to trustees during the life of Sarah, which, although in an Irish will, would be recognised in Saxony. This part of the opinion, it is said, is not answered or noticed by the expert on the other side, and therefore the Court must assume that it is admitted to be the law. How is it possible to be judicially satisfied on such evidence?

I am not aware of any case where a contested claim depending upon the title to immoveables in a foreign country, strictly so called, being no part of the British dominions or possessions, has been allowed to be litigated in this country simply because the plaintiff and defendant happened to be here. Lord Mansfield in Mostyn v. Fabrizas (3) distinguishes such a case from those in which action may be brought here. "So," he says, "if an action were brought relative to an estate in a foreign country, where the question was a matter of title only and not of damages, there might be a solid distinction of locality."

The cases cited in the argument were such as the enforcement in England of an equitable mortgage made in England concerning Scotch land, where the Court gave relief treating the remedy as in the nature of specific performance where the Court acts in personam—In re Pollard (1). There is no doubt of the jurisdiction in such a case, and the Courts will even foreclose an English mortgage of foreign land—Toller v. Carteret (4)—the foreclosure decree being, as Vice-Chancellor Bacon pointed out in Paget v. Ede (5), merely an extinction of the right to redeem, as was said also by Lord Cranworth in Colyer v. Finch (6). In Norris v. Chambres (7) Lord Romilly distinguished the case of a foreign mortgage of foreign land where no relief by foreclosure would be given by the English Courts.

(3) 1 Cowp. 161, at p. 176.

There is a class of cases in which jurisdiction as to lands in the colonies has been maintained on the ground of fraud, like Lord Cranstoun v. Johnston (2). It is not pretended that there was any fraud in the present case.

Perhaps the decision that goes furthest in the plaintiffs' favour is the recent case of In re Orr Ewing (8). There a legatee under a Scotch will or trust-deed was allowed to maintain an action for administration against the executors who had proved in England, of whom three were in this country, and the others had been served in Scotland without objection. The usual administration order was made, though there were no assets in England. But the late Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Cotton both point out that the plaintiffs' claim was undisputed. And the Master of the Rolls repudiates the notion that Scotland is a foreign country for the purpose of such a question of jurisdiction.

According to Enohin v. Wylie (9), if the claim had been contested, and had involved a disputed question of the construction of a Scotch will, it may be doubted if a decree could properly have been made.

But the case is infinitely stronger where the contested claim is based upon the right to land, where that land is situate not in Scotland but in Dresden, where the question whether the plaintiff has any claim or not must be determined by the laws of Saxony as to immoveables, and where the only grounds for instituting proceedings in this country is the fact that the defendants are resident here.

All these circumstances concur in this case; and, in my opinion, the Courts of civil judicature in England, which sit, as Lord Westbury said in Cookney v. Anderson (10), to administer the municipal law of this country, have no authority to determine in such a case as this whether or not the plaintiffs' claim is well-founded, and I must therefore dismiss this action.

Solicitors—Markby, Wilde & Burra, for plaintiffs; Henry White, for defendants; Bower, Cotton & Co., for other parties.

FRY, J.
1883.
March 16, 17, 20.

In re GREAVES' SETTLEMENT.

Will — Construction — Appointment — Wills Act (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 27.

Real estate was settled on the wife of J. G. for life, with remainder to such uses as J. G. should by deed or writing sealed and delivered appoint, with remainder to J. G. for life, with remainders over. The settlement contained a power to sell and a direction to invest the proceeds on real estate, and in the meantime on personal securities. The estate was sold and invested in bank annuities, which at J. G.'s death stood in the name of W. as sole trustee. J. G., who died in his wife's lifetime, by his will sealed and delivered bequeathed all moneys he died possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of W.:—Held, that the bequest did not pass the bank annuities.

(1) 2 Vern. 494.
(2) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 571; Law Rep. 18 Eq. 118.
(4) 5 H.L. Cas. 915; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 65.
(5) 29 Beav. 246; 3 De Gex, F. & J. 583; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 285.
(6) Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 456.
(7) 10 H.L. Cas. 1; 31 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 402.
(8) 1 De Gex, J. & S. 365; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 427.

In re Greaves' Settlement.

By an indenture of settlement, dated the 19th of March, 1823, made on the occasion of the marriage of Jonathan and Catherine Greaves, certain real estate was settled on the intended wife for life, and after her death to such uses, &c., as "the said Jonathan Greaves shall from time to time, or at any time or times, by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, to be by him sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two or more credible witnesses, limit or appoint"; and, in default of appointment, with remainder to Jonathan Greaves for life, with remainder to a trustee to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to Jonathan Greaves and his heirs. The settlement contained a power for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife during their joint lives, to sell that real estate, and declared that the purchase-money should be reinvested with all convenient speed in the purchase of other real estate, and in the meantime invested as therein declared.

The property was sold, and at the date of the will of Jonathan Greaves it was represented by bank annuities, standing in the names of Francis Field and William Underhill, the trustees of the settlement.

Jonathan Greaves made his will, dated the 17th of October, 1844, which contained this clause:—"Further, I also give and bequeath all the money or moneys I die possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of William Underhill, Esquire, of the Stock Exchange, London, or elsewhere, after my funeral expenses are paid, unto the sole use and behoof of my children hereinbefore named, share and share alike, to be theirs, their heirs and assigns, for ever." The will was sealed and delivered. Jonathan Greaves died on the 28th of December, 1851; at that time the funds were standing in the name of William Underhill, who had survived his co-trustee.

Catherine Greaves died in October, 1881; and in July following, the trustee for the time being of the settlement transferred and paid into Court the sum of 1,935*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*, New 3*l.* per cent. Annuities, the capital of the fund, and some accrued dividends.

This was a petition by the heir-at-law and eldest surviving son of Jonathan Greaves, for payment out of the whole fund to himself.

Glasse, Q.C., and Ingham, for the petition, argued that there was no appointment of the funds representing the settled real estate—Chandler v. Pocock (1), Adams v. Austen (2) and Cookson v. Cookson (3).

Cookson, Q.C., and J. G. Wood, for other children, contended—first, that the whole scope of the will and the fact that it was sealed shewed an intention to appoint the fund in question. Secondly, the case fell within one branch or the other of section 27 of the Wills Act, and the gift operated either as a general devise or general bequest to appoint the fund in question either as realty or personalty.

FRY, J. (after stating the facts), said:—The question I have now to determine has arisen on the death of Catherine Greaves in October, 1881. Up to that time she was entitled to a life interest, and without her consent nobody could discharge the money from the liability to be invested in real estate. That was the position of the money at the time of the making of the will of Jonathan Greaves. By that will he used this language, "Further, I also give and bequeath all the money or moneys that I die possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of William Underhill, Esquire, of the Stock Exchange, London, or elsewhere, after my funeral expenses are paid, unto the sole use and behoof of my children." The question is, whether that bequest passes the annuities. Now it is to be observed that the sentence I have read described the property in two ways. In the first place there is a general description of all the money or moneys I die possessed of. That is followed by an enumeration introduced by the word "whether"—"whether in the public funds or in the care of William Underhill, Esquire, London, or elsewhere." The

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 442; Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 491.
(2) 3 Russ. 461.
(3) 12 Cl. & F. 121.

Greaves' Settlement.

›rds might be treated as a paren- nd do not enlarge or affect the y. Now the question whether n exercise of the power is one of ı. That is the primary principle ›verns the determination of ques- this description. Therefore I : enquire whether, independently n 27 of the Wills Act, the lan- presses the intention to deal with ıey in the name of the trustees. appears to me that it does not. › bequeathed is money or moneys ›ossessed of. Now he did not die of this. The legal interest was ıstee. The right to receive the ras in his wife. In no sense was sed of this fund.

next place I enquire, what is the section 27 of the Wills Act on ›erty? The words of that section .nd be it further enacted, that l devise of the real estate of the or of the real estate of the tes- ıny place, or in the occupation of ›on mentioned in his will, or › described in a general manner, construed to include any real r any real estate to which such ›n shall extend (as the case may ›h he may have power to appoint ıanner he may think proper, and erate as an execution of such ınless a contrary intention shall y the will; and in like manner a of the personal estate of the or any bequest of personal described in a general manner, ›onstrued to include any personal any personal estate to which such ›n shall extend (as the case may ›h he may have power to appoint ıanner he may think proper, and erate on an execution of such ınless a contrary intention shall y the will." It is to be observed language of that section is l to bequests of a general descrip- to a particular part of a bequest, ›quest dealing with particular pro- [t is suggested that the property ion, being de facto money and de , might pass either by a general r a general devise of realty; and ›nd place, it is suggested that if that is not the true rule, it is to look at the actual condition of the property at the time of the will, and if it was de facto personal estate it will pass under a general bequest of personal property; whereas if de facto it was land it would pass under a general devise. In respect of the first of those propositions, there is a manifest inconvenience if money directed to be invested in land should be treated as personal estate; and in the same way there would be inconvenience if land directed to be held as personal estate passed as land. That rule would be one of extreme inconvenience. But it appears to me plain that both propositions are inconsistent with the decided cases. The first authority to which I will refer is the case of Guidot v. Guidot (4). There the Lord Chancellor said this:—"The question is, whether these two sums are to be considered as money or land: I see but very little doubt in this case." "The articles say it shall be laid out in the purchase of lands of inheritance, or in church and leasehold. Then the Court must take it to be the one or the other; and during the life of the husband and the wife, if laid out, it must have been in one or the other. No sort of election was made by the husband: then, at the time of the will and his death, it stood in equity as it did in the articles, either to be laid out in freehold or leasehold; and therefore this Court will call it either the one or the other, according to the rule in equity that what is agreed to be done must be considered as done." It appears to me that Lord Hardwicke there considered that the direction contained in the settlement was obligatory in respect of appointments under it; and still more expressive is the language of the Master of the Rolls in the case of Chandler v. Pocock (1), where he said this: "What the authorities have said is this, that where there are persons entitled to an intermediate interest, who, after the death of the testator, have still a right to call for the investment of money in land, the money is in equity real estate of the testator, and a gift of 'my real estate' will pass it, but a gift of 'my personal estate' will not. I agree that that is not only covered by authority, but I should think it was not arguable at this time of day as the authorities are so old."

(4) 3 Atk. 255.

In re Greaves' Settlement.

In the next place it has been suggested that the words of the will must be read in this way, as if the testator had said "I give and bequeath all moneys in the funds over which I have a power of appointment," and as he had no other moneys in the public funds except these, there is an adequate description of the subject-matter to be passed. It appears to me, however, that is not the legitimate mode of using the 27th section. It is addressed to a general bequest, and not to any enumeration of particulars within a general bequest; and if I were to introduce the application of the section to any particular part of bequest, I should be using the section not to enlarge the operation of a general bequest, but to give an intensity of expression to a particular part which the instrument itself does not possess. The result is, I hold the will does not operate on the property, and the heir-at-law is entitled to take under the ultimate limitation in the settlement.

Solicitors—Wood & Wootton, agents for H. C. Guy, Southampton, for petitioners; James Edell, for respondents; H. J. & T. Child, for trustee.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 14. } In re MUNDELL. FENTON v. CUMBERLEGE.

Practice—Evidence—Cross-examination on Affidavit—Abuse of Process of Court—Order XV. rules 1 and 2; Order XXXVII. rule 2; Order XXXVIII. rule 4.

The Court will prevent the process of the Court from being abused for the purpose of oppression.

The plaintiff in an administration action having without any necessity made an affidavit for the purpose of an application in chambers for accounts, the defendants proposed to cross-examine her on her affidavit, and on her refusing to appear, applied for an order on her to attend:—

Held, that the affidavit having been immaterial to the relief sought, and no reason having been suggested for supposing that the cross-examination could be productive of any result, the application was an abuse of the process of the Court for the purpose of oppression, and must be refused.

Motion.

Mary Mundell, by her will, appointed the plaintiff, a widow lady residing at Bath, and three of the defendants executrix and executors thereof, and gave all her residuary property upon trust for equal division between three persons, of whom the plaintiff was one and one of her co-executors was another; the share of the plaintiff to be invested and held upon trust for her for life, and after her decease for her children.

The testatrix died on the 4th of March, 1883, and the executrix and executors all proved the will.

On the 14th of March, 1883, the plaintiff issued her writ in the present action, which was for administration of the estate of the testatrix, and on the 14th of April she took out an ordinary summons for accounts under Order XV. rule 1. When the summons came on before the chief clerk, the latter adopted a suggestion by the defendants that the affidavit required by Order XV. rule 2, should be made by the plaintiff herself, and that an affidavit which had been sworn by another person, formally proving the plaintiff's title and that the residue of the estate had not been ascertained, was insufficient. The plaintiff, on the 20th of April, consequently swore the affidavit. Notice was thereupon served upon the plaintiff by the defendants to attend before the official examiner for cross-examination upon the affidavit. Two days later the defendants filed an affidavit in opposition to the summons, alleging that administration by the Court was wholly unnecessary and entirely repugnant to the expressed wishes of the testatrix, and the chief clerk refused to make any order for accounts pending the cross-examination. The plaintiff, though personally subpœnaed, failed to appear for cross-examination, but her counsel attended and stated that the cross-examination was proposed merely for the purpose of oppression, and that the plaintiff would decline to be sworn on that ground.

In re Mundell.

The defendants now moved that the plaintiff might be ordered to attend before the official examiner, for the purpose of cross-examination upon her affidavit, and their solicitors made an affidavit in support of the motion, but this did not state any reason for supposing that the cross-examination could lead to any result.

H. A. Giffard, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for the motion.—Under the old rules of practice, which are those that govern this case (Judicature Act, 1875, s. 21), a party who has given notice in writing to cross-examine a person who has made an affidavit has an absolute right to do so (Daniell's Practice, 5th ed. p. 810), and a party is bound to attend for cross-examination if he has been duly subpœnaed —15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. s. 40. The plaintiff is acting contrary to the testatrix's wishes in instituting this action, and she is employing solicitors whom the testatrix did not wish to be mixed up in her affairs.

Higgins, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, contra.—It is not clear whether the old practice does or does not apply to a case of this kind under Order XV., which is entirely new; but Order XXXVII. rule 2, shews that the Judge has a discretion to dispense with cross-examination, and Order XXXVIII. rule 4, also shews that the right to cross-examine cannot be absolute, for another penalty for failure to attend is thereby provided, and the Court of Appeal has said that an oppressive use is not to be made of powers given to litigants—Raymond v. Tapson (1). Here the plaintiff is clearly right in her summons for accounts, without her affidavit, which was wrongly called for by the chief clerk, and is of a purely formal character. No probability of benefit from the cross-examination is shewn, and the requirement can therefore only be for the purpose of oppression.

Giffard, Q.C., in reply.

PEARSON, J.—This is a motion that a lady, Mrs. Fenton, may attend before the examiner to be cross-examined upon an affidavit, which she has made in support of a summons which she took out for the administration of the estate of her aunt. She is the executrix of that will, and also residuary legatee under the will and tenant-for-life of a third of the residue. Having taken out the summons, she applied for the usual order; that application was supported, and supported to my mind unnecessarily, by the affidavit of a clerk in the office of her solicitor, verifying, as I gather, her interest under the will. Upon the parties attending before the chief clerk in chambers, it was suggested that the affidavit was insufficient, and that the plaintiff herself ought to make an affidavit. The plaintiff, who, to my mind, was ill-advised, was advised to make an affidavit, and an affidavit was made. Upon that affidavit being made—which did not in any way whatever better her case, for she had a clear right, as executrix only, to have the estate administered by this Court—she was met then by an application on the part of the defendants, who are the executors of the will, that she should be cross-examined upon that affidavit. She then declined to be cross-examined upon that affidavit, and I am now asked to compel her to attend to be cross-examined. I decline to make any such order at all. I think this application has been as flagrant an abuse of the process of the Court as I ever saw.

There is no doubt whatever that if parties make affidavits they are liable to be cross-examined upon them, and in all proper cases, and, I may even say, in every case where I had any doubt as to whether or not any possible information might be obtained on the cross-examination, I should allow the cross-examination to proceed. But not only have I the case here that the lady was entitled to the order that she asks for without any affidavit, but I have also the affidavit of her co-executors, stating most distinctly the state in which this estate is, shewing that the lady, even as residuary legatee, has a perfect right to have the accounts taken, not suggesting any single reason why those accounts should not be taken, except this, that they say the tes-

(1) Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 430.

In re Mundell.

tatrix in the cause had a great dislike to the lady's present solicitor, and that any administration of the estate in which he should intermeddle would be contrary to the wishes of the testatrix. I need not say that that is no reason whatever. It is perfectly plain to me that the entire object of this cross-examination is, if possible, to get rid of her solicitor, or to put the lady in that position in which she shall suffer a penalty for employing that solicitor. Both of those objects are perfectly unjustifiable, and I should do very wrong indeed if I allowed this cross-examination to proceed.

I may add, further, this—that there is an affidavit in support of the application by the solicitors of the defendants, and they do not shew one single cause, and they do not suggest one single reason, why there should be any cross-examination of this lady. They do not hint at any information upon this subject touching this estate which can by possibility be obtained from the lady: and the counsel for this motion has very wisely abstained from suggesting any reason whatever why this cross-examination should be allowed to proceed. He relies entirely on what he says is the strict right of every party to cross-examine any person who has made an affidavit. I had made up my mind, as soon as the affidavit of the co-executors had been read, to refuse the motion; I thought the Court must have the opportunity to say, in cases like this, that cross-examinations should not be resorted to. I am very glad to find that I was right in that conclusion, and that I am not acting upon my own authority, but upon the authority of the Court of Appeal; because in the case which was cited to me the late Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Cotton laid it down beyond all dispute that the Court has a right to protect Her Majesty's subjects from the practice and process of this Court being simply used to torture them and not for the purpose of justice. I dismiss this motion with costs.

Solicitors—W. & A. Ranken Ford, for plaintiff; Gregory, Rowcliffes & Co., for defendants.

PEARSON, J.
1883.
June 25, 26.
July 7.

In re ADAMS.

Lease—Option to purchase the Fee-simple—Conveyance to Administrator of Lessee—Will—Precatory Trust—"Full Confidence."

A testator gave all his property to his wife absolutely, "in full confidence that she will do what is right as to the disposal thereof between my children either in her lifetime or by will":—Held, that the wife took an absolute interest.

An option to purchase contained in a lease goes with the lease to the legal personal representative.

Adjourned summons.

This was an application by the Vestry of St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington, who had agreed to purchase a piece of freehold land from Charles Adams, for a declaration that the vendor could not make a good title to the land, without, first, the concurrence of the persons interested in the personal estate of Ralph Adams deceased; and secondly, the concurrence of the children of George Smith deceased.

By an indenture of lease, dated the 30th of September, 1819, and made between John Smith of the one part, and Ralph Adams of the other part, a piece of freehold land, situate at Notting Hill, in the county of Middlesex, was demised to Ralph Adams, his executors, administrators and assigns, for a term of sixty years from the 24th of June, 1819, at a yearly rent of 60*l.* This lease contained a covenant by John Smith, for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, with Ralph Adams, his executors, administrators and assigns, as follows:—

"If Ralph Adams, his executors, administrators or assigns, shall at any time or times hereafter be minded and desirous of purchasing the fee-simple and inheritance of the piece of land and premises hereby demised, and of such desire shall give notice in writing to John Smith, his heirs or assigns, then John Smith, his heirs or assigns, shall, within one calendar month next after the receipt of such notice, at his own expense make out a title to the piece of land and premises, and also accept and take the sum of 1,200*l.* in full for the purchase of the fee-simple and inheritance: and on receipt thereof shall, at the costs of Ralph Adams, his executors or administrators, convey the fee-simple and inheritance free from incumbrances to Ralph Adams, his heirs and assigns, or as he or they shall direct or appoint."

In re Adams.

On the 14th of January, 1858, Ralph Adams died intestate, leaving Ralph Adams his eldest son, Charles Adams (the vendor) his second son, and other children him surviving.

In March, 1866, Ralph Adams the son died intestate, leaving Charles Adams his heir-at-law, and heir-at-law of Ralph Adams the father.

On the 17th of August, 1876, letters of administration to the estate of Ralph Adams the father were granted to Charles Adams.

The reversion, subject to the lease, became vested in George Smith.

On the 20th of February, 1861, George Smith died, having made his will, dated the same day, as follows: "I devise and bequeath all my real and personal estate and effects unto and to the absolute use of my wife Harriet Smith, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in full confidence that she will do what is right as to the disposal thereof between my children either in her lifetime or by will after her decease."

George Smith left his widow Harriet Smith and several children him surviving.

By an indenture dated the 6th of July, 1877, and made between Harriet Smith of the one part, and Charles Adams of the other part, after reciting (amongst other things) that Charles Adams, as the heir-at-law and legal personal representative of Ralph Adams the father, was the person then entitled to exercise the option to purchase contained in the lease, and that he had given to Harriet Smith a notice in writing pursuant to the covenant therein contained, and that she had agreed to perform the covenant for sale, and to convey the piece of land; in consideration of 1,200*l.* then paid by Charles Adams to Harriet Smith, Harriet Smith conveyed the piece of land to Charles Adams in fee, "subject to, but with the benefit of," the lease.

This sum of 1,200*l.* was paid by Charles Adams out of his own moneys; and he now claimed to be absolutely entitled to the piece of land in fee.

The lease expired on the 24th of June, 1879.

By a contract dated the 25th of November, 1882, Charles Adams agreed to sell the piece of land to the Vestry of St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington, for 1,525*l.*

Smart, for the summons.—First, the option given by the lease is an option to purchase "at any time or times hereafter." It is therefore invalid on the ground of remoteness—The London and South Western Railway Company v. Gomm (1).

Assuming the option to be valid, there was no obligation on the vendor to convey at an earlier date than the exercise of the option—Edwards v. West (2)—and there was no exercise by Ralph Adams of the option during his lifetime. Therefore, whether the option be valid or not, Charles Adams bought as administrator for the benefit of the next-of-kin, who are consequently necessary parties to the conveyance.

Secondly, the words of George Smith's will, giving his property to his wife Harriet Smith absolutely, "in full confidence," &c., created a trust for his children—Jarman on Wills (3), Wace v. Mallard (4), Gully v. Cregoe (5), Shovelton v. Shovelton (6), Curnick v. Tucker (7) and Le Marchant v. Le Marchant (8).

Pownall, for the vendor.—First, the option to purchase contained in the lease created an immediate interest in the land separate and distinct from the lease—Green v. Low (9) and Buckland v. Papillon (10). It was an equitable interest in real estate—The London and South Western Railway Company v. Gomm (1)—which descended to Charles Adams as the heir-at-

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 530; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 562.
(2) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 463; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 858.
(3) 4th ed. vol. i. p. 390.
(4) 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 355.
(5) 24 Beav. 185.
(6) 32 Beav. 143.
(7) Law Rep. 17 Eq. 310.
(8) Law Rep. 18 Eq. 414.
(9) 22 Beav. 625.
(10) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 81; Law Rep. 2 Chanc. 67.

In re Adams.

law. And he, having duly exercised the option, and paid the purchase-money out of his own moneys, became absolutely entitled to the land for his own use—Dart's Vendors and Purchasers (11). He also referred to Sheppard's Touchstone, 175.

Secondly, where property is given "absolutely," the natural construction of subsequent precatory words is that they express the testator's wish without imposing a trust—Jarman on Wills (12), Irvine v. Sullivan (13), Webb v. Wools (14), Lambe v. Eames (15), In re Hutchinson and Tenant (16) and The Missouri Bank (Limited) v. Raynor (17).

Smart, in reply, referred to Palmer v. Simmonds (18).

[PEARSON, J.—If the will creates a trust at all, it would seem to be a trust for the benefit of the children, excluding the wife.]

Judgment reserved.

PEARSON, J. (on July 7).—This is an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874; and it raises two questions upon the title. [His Lordship, after stating the facts as set out above, continued:] In the year 1877 Harriet Smith, as universal legatee under the will of her husband George Smith, was called upon by Charles Adams to fulfil the covenant contained in the lease, Charles Adams being minded out of his own moneys to purchase the fee-simple. Mrs. Smith assented to that; and, by a deed dated the 6th of July, 1877, and made between Harriet Smith of the one part, and Charles Adams of the other part, Mrs. Smith conveyed the fee-simple to Charles Adams. He says that, having purchased the fee-simple with his own money, he is entitled to it absolutely for his own use; and, therefore, that he by himself can make a good title as vendor to the vestry. The vestry have taken two objections. They say, in the first place, "Although you could require Mrs. Smith to fulfil the covenant contained in the lease, and Mrs. Smith did thereupon convey to you the fee-simple of the property, you nevertheless took that lease as a part of the personal estate of your father Ralph Adams; you cannot hold it for your own use, and you cannot make a good title to it without the concurrence of those who are to share with you under the intestacy of Ralph Adams." They make a further objection—that Mrs. Smith, under the terms of her husband's will, did not take an absolute interest in the property, but took an interest saddled with a trust, and that she therefore had not an absolute right to dispose of this property. I will take the first objection first. The lease is an ordinary lease for sixty years, with this covenant added. I shall not enquire whether the covenant in that lease was a good or a bad covenant. I shall assume, for the purpose of what I am going to say, that it was invalid. But, in assuming it to be invalid, I do so without expressing any opinion at all upon the question whether it was valid or invalid. To my mind, it is immaterial, in the circumstances of the case, whether it was valid or invalid; because, at all events, Mrs. Smith has treated it as valid, and the fee-simple has been conveyed to Charles Adams; and nobody disputes that legally the fee-simple is vested in Charles Adams. He obtained it, however, as administrator of Ralph Adams.

The case was very well argued by Mr. Pownall for Mr. Charles Adams, and he put it in this way:—He said, "It is perfectly true that the lease was a part of the personal estate of Ralph Adams, and was therefore divisible amongst all his children; but the covenant in the lease was a separate thing altogether. The covenant, or the option to purchase, was an equitable interest in real estate, and it was vested in Ralph Adams as a separate interest; therefore it has descended to his heir-at-law; and Charles Adams, as his heir-at-law, was therefore entitled to it absolutely for his own use." I cannot accede to that view. I think the option contained in the lease was an integral part of the lease, and went with the lease. If the lease had been assigned without more words, the option would have passed with (11) 4th ed. p. 246.

(12) 4th ed. vol. i. p. 388.
(13) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 635; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 673.
(14) 2 Sim. N.S. 267; 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 625.
(15) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 447; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 599.
(16) Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 540.
(17) Law Rep. 7 App. Cas. 321.
(18) 2 Drew. 221.

In re Adams.

the lease; and as by the death of Ralph Adams intestate it passed to the administrator, the administrator took the lease with the right to enforce the option if he thought it beneficial to do so. The administrator has taken the benefit of that covenant and has enforced it; and I am of opinion that he cannot hold it for his own benefit, excluding his brothers and sisters from any interest in it. I therefore hold that the first objection is well founded; and that, to make a good title, the concurrence of the other persons interested under the intestacy of Ralph Adams is requisite.

The other question, as to whether Mrs. Smith could make a good title, depends upon the terms of the will of Mr. George Smith. [His Lordship, after reading the will, continued:] The vestry contend that that gift created a trust for children. The argument on the part of Mr. Charles Adams is that it gave Mrs. Smith the absolute interest, and that there was no trust superimposed. It is, of course, impossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that this raises a question between the modern authorities and the older authorities, and I have no hesitation in saying that, if I am to follow the older authorities, there are the strongest grounds for saying that the words created a trust, and that Mrs. Smith did not take for her absolute use. I fully agree with Lord Justice James in what he said in Lambe v. Eames (15), that when you come to read the older authorities you can only arrive at the conclusion that they created trusts in numbers of cases where trusts were never intended. And I am very glad to shelter myself under the decision in Lambe v. Eames (15), and to be freed from the necessity of declaring that there was any trust here. In that case the testator gave his estate to his widow "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best for the benefit of herself and family"; and certainly the Court of Appeal, composed then of Lords Justices James and Mellish (I need not put it higher than this), was disposed to come to the conclusion, and I think would have come to the conclusion if they had been driven to it, that that created no trust. No doubt there was a second point in that case upon which the decision may be said to have rested, as much as upon the first point, namely, that assuming there was a trust, the trust was not complied with. Nevertheless, when one comes to the case of In re Hutchinson and Tenant (16), before the late Master of the Rolls, he says this: "In Lambe v. Eames (15) the testator gave his estate to his widow 'to be at her disposal in any way she may think best for the benefit of herself and family'; and the Court of Appeal held, affirming the decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins, that the widow took absolutely." Certainly the opinion of the Master of the Rolls was that that was the decision of the Court of Appeal; and I think, if the Court of Appeal had been obliged to decide the case simply upon that question, whether she took absolutely or not, the decision would have been that she took absolutely.

There have been two decisions since the decision of Lambe v. Eames (15)—one the decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall in Curnick v. Tucker (7), and the other the decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins in Le Marchant v. Le Marchant (8). In both of these cases the words are more like the present case than the words in Lambe v. Eames (15) are. In Curnick v. Tucker (7) the testator appointed his wife executrix, to whom he left all his property "for her sole use and benefit, in the full confidence that she will so dispose of it amongst all our children, both during her lifetime and at her decease, doing equal justice to each and all of them." And in Le Marchant v. Le Marchant (8) the testator gave all his property to his wife "for her sole use and benefit, in the full confidence that she will so bestow it on her decease to my children, in a just and equitable spirit, and in such manner and way as she feels would meet with my full approval." In both cases the two learned Judges held that there was a trust created, and that the wife did not take absolutely. But in the case of In re Hutchinson and Tenant (16) those two cases were referred to, and the comment of the Master of the Rolls is this: "I have been referred to two authorities decided since Lambe v. Eames (15), and apparently in conflict with it; but they are decisions of inferior Courts, and no number of decisions by inferior Courts can overrule a decision of a superior Court. In my opinion the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lambe v. Eames (15) covers this case, and I shall therefore follow it."

Now when I come to look at this will, I cannot help seeing that if I were to construe it in the manner in which I am asked to construe it, I should make the will, in effect, absolutely repugnant to itself, because the gift is "of all my real and personal estate and effects unto and to the absolute use of my wife Harriet Smith, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns." Here is as plain a gift to the wife for her own absolute use and benefit as words can make it. The will goes on, "in full confidence that she will do what is right as to the disposal thereof between my children, either in her lifetime or by will after her decease." If I were to hold that that was a trust for the children, then, according to my reading of the will, I exclude the wife altogether from any benefit under it. It is a trust then to dispose, either by deed or by will, for the benefit of the children. I cannot understand that to mean that she was to take a life interest, as she is not obliged to dispose of it by her will. Under these circumstances I am very glad to find that the current of modern authority goes to prove (that which I am convinced was the intention of the testator) that these words do not create a trust, but simply express a confidence he had that his wife would do that which, according to her own judgment, unfettered and uncontrolled, would be, in her mind, for the benefit of her children. I hold, therefore, that Mrs. Smith was absolutely entitled, and could make a good conveyance to Mr. Charles Adams. This objection, therefore, must be overruled.

Solicitors—Pontifex, Hewitt & Pitt, for the summons; Lucas & Sons, for the vendor.

FRY. J.
1883.
March 12, 13.
PEARSON, J.
April 20.

In re LESLIE.
LESLIE v. FRENCH.

Policy—Premiums—Salvage—Lien—Husband and Wife—Reversion.

A husband paid the premiums on a policy on the life of his wife taken out by her before marriage. The policy was assigned by the husband and wife to secure an obligation of the husband. The wife survived: —Held, that the husband's estate had no lien on the policy for the premiums.

In May, 1843, the defendant Emily Eleanora W. Leslie, then the widow of Arthur French, effected a policy for 5,000*l.* on her own life. Shortly afterwards in the same year she married the Rev. John C. W. Leslie. In the year 1848, by an indenture made between John C. W. Leslie and his wife of the one part, and a trustee of the other part, a life interest which had been left to Mrs. Leslie by her former husband, which amounted to about 7,000*l.* a year, was assigned in trust (subject to an annuity of 800*l.* reserved to J. C. W. Leslie) for Mrs. Leslie for her separate use.

In September, 1863, upon the occasion of the marriage of their daughter with Walter Raleigh Trevelyan, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. W. Leslie assigned the policy in the Atlas to trustees, to secure the sum of 6,000*l.*, which Mr. J. C. W. Leslie covenanted to pay to the trustees on the death of his wife, to be held on trusts declared by his daughter's marriage settlement made at the same time. J. C. W. Leslie covenanted with the trustees of the settlement during his life to pay the premiums, and assigned one-fourth of his annuity of 800*l.* as security for the payment of such premiums. The trustees were empowered, after the death of J. C. W. Leslie, to raise money on the security of the policy to keep it up; and there was power to withdraw the policy on giving other security for the 6,000*l.*

J. C. W. Leslie died in November, 1877, having made a will, by which he purported to bequeath any surplus coming from the policy in the Atlas, after satisfying the 6,000*l.*, to the trustees of Mrs. Trevelyan's settlement; and empowered the trustees of his will, who were also his executors, to keep up the policy in case his wife declined to do so, and gave her certain small pecuniary benefits.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. W. Leslie had two children, Mrs. Trevelyan, and a son, Ferdinand Seymour Leslie, who died in November, 1880.

The plaintiff was the surviving executor and trustee of the will of J. C. W. Leslie, and also one of the executors of Ferdinand Seymour Leslie the son. The defendants were the other executor of Ferdinand Seymour Leslie, the surviving trustee of Mrs. Trevelyan's settlement, Emily E. W. Leslie the widow of J. C. W. Leslie, Mr. and Mrs. Trevelyan and their children.

The premiums on the policy had been paid during his life by J. C. W. Leslie, and after his death by his executors under an arrangement. The bonus addition to the sum of 5,000*l.* assured now amounted to 3,616*l.*

The plaintiff claimed a declaration of the rights of the parties in the policy, and administration of the estate of J. C. W. Leslie.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and C. T. Simpson, for the plaintiff, and Glasse, Q.C., and Dundas Gardiner, for the Trevelyans and other parties, argued—first, that the premiums paid were in the nature of salvage, and therefore the estate of Mr. Leslie, the salvor, ought to be recouped; secondly, that on the principle of contribution between part owners, the premiums ought to be paid by the person who gets the whole benefit of the property; thirdly, that the allowance asked was analogous to allowances in partition actions; and lastly, that Mrs. Leslie, by the whole course of the transactions, must be considered in equity as having contracted to repay the premiums.

They cited Burridge v. Rowe (1), West v. Reid (2), Rowley v. Unwin (3), Todd v. Moorhouse (4), Norris v. The Caledonian Insurance Company (5), Shearman v. The British Empire Insurance Company (6), Gill v. Downing (7), Saunders v. Dunman (8), Pitt v. Pitt (9), Aylwin v. Witty (10), Neesom v. Clarkson (11), Seton on Decrees (12), Spottiswoode's Case (13), Hamilton v. Denny (14), Lord Winchelsea v. Dering (15), In re Tharp (16), Jones v. Jones (17), Green v. Briggs (18) and Swan v. Swan (19).

[FRY, J., in the course of the argument, referred to Ex parte Young (20).]

Cookson, Q.C., and Macrae, for Mrs. Leslie, contended that Mr. Leslie was in no better position than a mere stranger, and had no lien for the premiums—Teasdale v. Sanderson (21), Pennell v. Millar (22), Clack v. Holland (23), Sanders v. Dunman (8) and Story's Equity Jurisprudence (24).

Medd, for the first defendant on the record.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., replied.

PEARSON, J., delivered (on April 20) the written judgment of Fry, L.J.—This question would not require immediate determination were it not for the fact that the will of Mr. Leslie raises against his wife a case of election, and that she is entitled to know between what properties she is called on to elect. The plaintiff contends that the payments made by Mr. Leslie have created a lien or charge upon the money secured by the policy to the extent of the moneys paid. The defendants deny this proposition.

(1) 1 You. & C. C.C. 183; 13 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 173.
(2) 2 Hare, 249; 12 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 245.
(3) 2 Kay & J. 138.
(4) Law Rep. 19 Eq. 69.
(5) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 721; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 127.
(6) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 466; Law Rep. 14 Eq. 4.
(7) Law Rep. 17 Eq. 316.
(8) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 338; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 824.
(9) Turn. & R. 180.
(10) 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 860.
(11) 2 Hare, 163; 12 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 99.
(12) p. 1006.
(13) 6 De Gex, M. & G. 345.
(14) 1 Ball & B. 199.
(15) 1 Cox, 318.
(16) 2 Sm. & G. 578.
(17) 5 Hare, 440.
(18) 6 Hare, 395; 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 323.
(19) 8 Price, 518.
(20) 2 Ves. & B. 242.
(21) 33 Beav. 534.
(22) 23 Beav. 172; 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 699.
(23) 19 Beav. 262; 24 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 13.
(24) 10th ed. p. 492, s. 1237.

In re Leslie.

The question thus raised has been fully discussed, and it becomes necessary to consider the various arguments which have been adduced, and the numerous cases which have been cited upon the point.

In my opinion a lien may be created upon the moneys secured by a policy by payment of premiums in the following cases:—First, by contract with a beneficial owner of the policy; secondly, by reason of the right of the trustees to an indemnity out of the trust property for money expended by them in its preservation; thirdly, by subrogation to these rights of the trustees, of some person who may have advanced money at their request for the preservation of the property; and fourthly, by reason of the right vested in the mortgagees, or other persons having a charge upon the policy, to add to that charge any moneys which have been paid by them to preserve the property.

An instance of the first class of cases to which I have referred—namely, the creation of a lien by contract with the beneficial owner, is to be found in the case of Aylwin v. Witty (10), where the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley held that, where a mortgagor had contracted with a mortgagee to pay the premiums, and there were sureties for the performance of this contract by the mortgagor, and the sureties had been called upon and had paid the premiums, they were entitled as against the mortgagor to a lien upon the policy moneys. It is obvious that in this case the sureties were, by contract with the principal debtor, entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the mortgagee could have enforced, and amongst others to a charge for the premiums paid.

The second and third classes of cases are well illustrated by Clack v. Holland (23), in which it was held that trustees who paid moneys under circumstances which gave them no right to a charge, could not create a charge in favour of any third person from whom they borrowed moneys. To the same class may be referred the case of Gill v. Downing (7), in which mortgagees, whose title as such was good after, and only after, the death of the tenant-for-life, were held entitled to a lien during the subsistence of the tenancy for life. The mortgagees were placed by subrogation in the place of the trustees. Again, in the case of Todd v. Moorhouse (4), the right of trustees to create a lien by subrogation of their rights was recognised, and it was determined that a person paying at the request of the trustee did not lose the right to the lien simply because the trustees might possibly have taken some other course to preserve the property.

Such appear to me to be the classes of cases in which a lien is created by payment of premiums. But I am unable to see that the plaintiff has brought his case within any of them. There were no trustees for himself and his wife to whose rights Mr. Leslie could be subrogated, and there was no contract between him and her under which the payments were made.

I am further of opinion that, except under the circumstances to which I have referred, no lien is created by the payment of the premiums by a mere stranger or by a part owner.

I will first consider the case of payments by a mere stranger. On principle it is difficult, if not impossible, to see why such payments, which when made without contract or request are a mere impertinence, should create a lien upon the property. It is evident that in themselves they would not even create a ground of personal action against the person eased by the payment, for it is certain that moneys paid by A for B gives no right of action against B unless they are paid upon his request.

In the next place the law relating to confusion appears to me strongly to shew that no such right would exist. If I pour my gold into your heap, or put my silver into your melting-pot, or turn my corn into that in your granary, I have no right to an account or any relief against you, but on the contrary, I have actually transferred the property in what was mine to the person with whose property I have mingled it.

Again, the authorities appear to me to be clear upon this point. In the case of Burridge v. Rowe (1), the Lord Justice Knight-Bruce, then Vice-Chancellor, used the following language: "Nothing that has been stated to me has had the effect of persuading me that, without any contract for that purpose, the mere fact of making payments of the premiums, however necessary that might be for the preservation of the property, would give the party making those payments a title to the property."

In re Leslie.

It may be perfectly true, as was contended before me, that Alderman Winchester was, during the period between 1828 and 1832, in the position of a person having no interest in the policy, and that the decree in Burridge v. Rowe (1), by giving him a lien for payments made during that period, has gone beyond the principle enunciated by the learned Vice-Chancellor. The important question is, not whether the decree was accurate, but what was the principle of law enunciated by the Judge.

In Clack v. Holland (23) Lord Romilly (Master of the Rolls) understood the case of Burridge v. Rowe (1) as laying down the principle for which I have cited it. That case, said his Lordship, "lays down a principle in accordance with my view of the case, and supports Pinkett v. Wright (25), and shews that a mere stranger by paying premiums on a policy cannot acquire a lien upon it. He can only acquire a lien by some contract with the persons beneficially interested in it, or with the trustee, where the trustee himself might have obtained a lien." It has, however, been contended that a right is created in favour of a stranger making the payments upon the principle of salvage, and it is said to be contrary to natural equity that one person should gain by another man's loss; whether there be such a doctrine as that of salvage applicable to cases of this description was doubted by the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley in the case of Aylwin v. Witty (10), to which I have already referred.

With regard to the cases of West v. Reid (2) and Shearman v. The British Empire Assurance Company (6), I will only say that I retain the opinion which I expressed with regard to those cases in the case of Saunders v. Dunman (8). The case of In re Tharp (16), before Lord St. Leonards, has been referred to as an authority for the proposition that there is some general doctrine of salvage in cases of this description; but it appears to me that the Lord Chancellor was referring to a practice in the Irish law of conveyancing, which probably has its basis in agreement, and that if it meant to assert, as the language used would rather imply, that a mortgagor making payments for the renewal of a lease was entitled to priority over his mortgagees, the proposition would seem to be inconsistent with the general law of the land.

In the next place, with regard to payments made by a part owner. It appears to me that, except by contract, such payments give no title to the person making them against the other part owner or part owners of the policy. That the payments by a mortgagor, who in equity is a part owner with the mortgagee, create no lien as against the mortgagee, was determined by Lord Romilly (Master of the Rolls) in the case of Norris v. The Caledonian Insurance Company (5). And, generally speaking, it is clear that money laid out by a tenant-for-life in improvements on the estate creates no lien against the remainderman. Again, in the case of Pennell v. Millar (22), the Master of the Rolls had to deal with a case in which A, the owner of policies, had, as part of a transaction voidable for fraud, assigned them to B, who, claiming under this assignment, had paid premiums. A instituted an action to set aside the transaction on the ground of fraud, and the Master of the Rolls determined that the assignment was a valid security for the moneys actually advanced, and not for the premiums paid by B, which were a voluntary payment. In this case it is evident that until the transaction was avoided, A and B were both possessed of interests in the policies, and yet the payment by one of the persons so interested was held to create no lien as against the other.

An argument was urged from the law of contribution; but, in the first place, the law of contribution arises only between persons joined for a common purpose, or persons who stand in the position of tenants-in-common or co-partners. In the next place, it is plain that the right to contribution is a personal right, and the remedy is a personal remedy, and that there is no lien for the amount of the moneys in respect of which the right to contribution arises. This was determined by Lord Eldon, after great consideration, in the case of part-owners of a ship, in the case of Ex parte Young and Ex parte Harrison (20), in which he overruled the previously expressed opinion to the contrary of Lord Hardwicke; and the same proposition that there is no lien for the contributed moneys is supported by the cases of Kay v. Johnston (26) and Teasdale v. Sanderson (21).

(25) 2 Hare, 120; 12 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119.

There are, however, it must be admitted, two cases which look in the opposite direction. The first of those is the case of Swan v. Swan (19), where the Court of Exchequer, sitting as a Court of equity, refused to grant partition to one co-tenant except upon the terms of the plaintiff allowing a lien for the expenditure of his co-tenant in permanent improvements. But it appears doubtful how far this case has been generally followed, and it does not appear to me to be consistent with the opinion expressed by the Master of the Rolls in Teasdale v. Sanderson (21).

The second case is Hamilton v. Denny (14). There a lease had been made to A and B as joint tenants. B had settled his moiety of the property; A had made a payment of the renewal fines, and he was held to be entitled to a lien on B's settled share. The decision was placed upon two grounds: it was said to be like the case of payments by a mortgagee, and it was said that the payments by A were entitled to the same benefit as if they had been payments made by a trustee. It is perhaps not perfectly easy to see the strict analogy between these two cases and the case then before the Court. In my view these cases are not sufficient to establish any such general proposition as that the right to contribution creates any lien on the property in respect of which it has been made, and they certainly are insufficient to support the plaintiff's case. For in those authorities the submission to a lien was required from the plaintiff as a term of other relief which he sought, whilst in the case now before me the plaintiff is affirmatively asserting his right.

It has been further urged that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien, on the ground of the acquiescence by the other persons interested in the policy in the payments made by Mr. Leslie; and it is said that where one person allows another to expend money upon his property, and stands by during such expenditure, a lien is created in favour of the person making the expenditure; but is it certain that no such lien is created, except in the case of a person who makes the payment under a belief in the validity of his own title? In the present case there is nothing whatever to shew that Mr. Leslie acted under any mistake with regard to his rights in the policy, and it is certain that during a considerable part of the period covered by his payments he was in possession of the opinion of counsel as to his legal rights.

Another argument pressed upon me by the plaintiff was derived from the relation of tenant-for-life and remainderman. It is well established that if a tenant-for-life renew leaseholds and dies before the expiration of the renewed term, his estate is entitled to a lien on the interests proportionate to the unexpired portion of the renewed term. But the equities governing the relation of tenant-for-life and remainderman are peculiar, and I fail to see any analogy between the case of a tenant-for-life making such a payment, and the case of Mr. Leslie paying premiums on a policy over which he had full control at every moment of his life, which, I repeat, but for his contract on his daughter's marriage he could have sold or surrendered without the consent of his wife.

In my judgment the arguments of the plaintiff in support of his lien fail, and I conclude that, from the time of the marriage down to the year 1863, Mr. Leslie made the payments in question in maintenance of his own right in the policy, and that from 1863 he made the payments in pursuance of his covenant with his daughter's trustees, but that in no case did he make them by reason of any contract between himself and his wife, or by reason of any mistake of his title in the policy; and, consequently, that he is entitled to no lien on the policy moneys as against her.

I understand from counsel that the defendant Mrs. Leslie consents to a declaration that the policy shall stand as a security for the 6,000*l.* secured by the Trevelyan settlement, and I believe also some arrangement has been come to as to the premiums paid since Mr. Leslie's death. I therefore advise the learned Judge to whose Court this case is attached, to make by consent a declaration to the effect of the arrangement between the parties, and then to declare that, except so far as the plaintiff is benefited by the previous declaration, he has no right or interest in the policy, but that, subject to the said declaration, the policy has accrued to Mrs. Leslie by survivorship; and to direct the plaintiff to pay the costs of the action.

(26) 21 Beav. 365.

In re Leslie.

Solicitors—Bloxams & Ellison, for plaintiff; Dangerfield & Blythe, and Maples, Teesdale & Co., for defendants.

KAY, J. 1883. April 12. } In re WEBSTER. WIDGEN v. MELLO.

Will — Construction — Substitution — "To all the children of A or, in event of decease, to their descendants."

Bequest by will of personal property "to all the children of A or, in event of decease, to their descendants, share and share alike." A had six children, of whom one died before the date of the will leaving a child, and the other five survived the testator:—Held, that the child of the deceased child of A was not entitled to share in the property.

In re Sibley's Trusts (46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 387; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 494) considered and distinguished.

The testator, the Rev. D. G. Webster, who died in December, 1880, by his will, dated the 22nd of July, 1879, after appointing executors and making certain bequests, proceeded to direct as follows:—"all my share in the Lower Berneys Estate, in the island of Barbadoes, I bequeath the same to all the children of my dear departed wife's sister, Mary Henchman Mello, or, in event of decease, to their descendants, share and share alike."

Mary Henchmann Mello had six children, of whom five survived the testator. The sixth child, C. M. Yates, died before the date of the testator's will, leaving an only child her surviving. This was an administration action, and on the hearing on further consideration, and of a certain summons which had been adjourned into Court, the question arose whether or not the child of Mrs. Yates was entitled to share in a fund representing the interest of the testator in the Lower Berneys Estate. It was admitted that the property in question was personal estate of the testator.

W. Pearson, Q.C., and Horsbrugh, for the child of Mrs. Yates.—This fund is divisible into sixths. The present case is not distinguishable from In re Sibley's Trusts (1), where it was held that issue of children who were dead at the date of the will were entitled to participate. That the words "in the event of decease" are not confined to decease after the date of the will is clear from In re Woolrich, Harris v. Harris (2). They referred also to Loring v. Thomas (3), In re Potter's Trusts (4), In re Hotchkiss's Trusts (5), Adams v. Adams (6), In re Smith's Trusts (7), West v. Orr (8), Wingfield v. Wingfield (9) and In re Riddell (10).

Kekewich, Q.C., and Hughes, for some of the surviving children of M. H. Mello.—This fund is divisible into fifths. The case is governed by Christopherson v. Naylor (11), the authority of which was

(1) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 387; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 494.
(2) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 321; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 663.
(3) 1 Dr. & Sm. 497; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 789.
(4) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 102; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 52.
(5) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 631; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 643.
(6) Law Rep. 14 Eq. 246.
(7) Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 497*n*.
(8) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 294; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 60.
(9) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 768; Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 658.
(10) Weekly Notes, 1880, p. 94.
(11) 1 Mer. 320.

In re Webster.

fully recognised in West v. Orr (8). In In re Sibley's Trusts (1) the Master of the Rolls relied upon the use of the words "all and every," coupled with the fact that there were only two children of the deceased uncle of the testator, as shewing that issue of children who died before the date of the will were included. That case is therefore no authority in the present case. The words "in event of decease," fairly construed, are words of futurity. They referred also to Congreve v. Palmer (12), In re Philps' Will (13), Burt v. Hellyar (14) and Jarman on Wills (15).

Robinson, Q.C., and G. Welby King; Rigby, Q.C., and Barrett Lennard; Hastings, Q.C., and W. Baker; and Fischer, Q.C., and Farwell, appeared for other parties.

KAY, J. (after stating the terms of the gift as above set out, continued:)—I understand that the facts are that M. H. Mello had six children, of whom five were living at the date of the will, and the same five were living at the death of the testator; one had died before the date of the will and had left issue; and the question is, whether the issue of the child who had died before the date of the will are to share with the five children of M. H. Mello, who were living at the date of the will and survived the testator. Now, as I understand the law, it was settled long ago, in the case of Christopherson v. Naylor (11), that where there is a gift to a class, and then a substitutionary gift to the issue of any one of the class who may die in the life of the testator, no one can take under the substitutionary gift who was not able to predicate that his parent might have been one of the original class, and consequently, if the parent was dead at the date of the will, and therefore by no possibility could have taken as one of the original class, the issue of such parent are not able to take under the substitutionary gift. And beyond all doubt that is still the law, because Christopherson v. Naylor (11), much as has been said about it, has been recognised in the Court of Appeal in several cases, one of the most recent of which is West v. Orr (8), in which the authority of Christopherson v. Naylor (11) was recognised and followed. Therefore, what I have to consider here is, first of all, whether this is a substitutionary gift; and in the next place whether, if it be so, the child of M. H. Mello, who died before the date of the will, is to be treated as in the original class. Very many attempts have been made to distinguish the case of Christopherson v. Naylor (11), and the first class of cases is those in which the gift is not substitutionary, but substantive, like the gift to the children of A and the issue of those who are dead. The second class of case is like Loring v. Thomas (3), where there is a gift to the children of A, and then a gift to the issue of any child who may be dead of the share which the parent would have taken if living; and Vice-Chancellor Kindersley there pointed out that it was not necessarily a substitutionary gift, in the sense of Christopherson v. Naylor (11), but a gift to the issue of the share which the parent of the issue would have taken if living at the death of the testator, which might well include the children of a parent dead at the date of the will. That was another class of cases which practically comes within the decision in Tytherleigh v. Harbin (16). Then comes a case which was said to be identical with the case before me, the case of In re Sibley's Trusts (1), decided by the late Master of the Rolls, whose authority, as we all know, is very great indeed. In that case the gift was to "all and every the children of the testator's uncle, or their issue, in equal shares," which the Master of the Rolls admitted to be a substitutionary gift—I shall refer to that later on on another point—and it appears that, in that case, of the original class there had been six in all—four died before the date of the will, and two only were living at that date; and the Master of the Rolls said, "It being then settled, as I said before, no further than that the 'or'

(12) 16 Beav. 345; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 54.

(13) Law Rep. 7 Eq. 151.

(14) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 430; Law Rep. 14 Eq. 160.

(15) 4th ed. 778.

(16) 6 Sim. 329.

is substitutionary for something, it does appear to me that, considering the state of the family, and the words used, there is nothing in the authorities to prevent my construing them literally, and reading 'all and every the children' as meaning not all the children he had then living, but all his children in the literal sense; and, consequently, I come to the conclusion that the issue of a child dead at the date of the will would take in the place of his parent, because that was really what the testator intended by his description of the first class; in other words, he meant not only 'all the children now living,' but 'all the children my late uncle had.'" The words were, "all and every the children of his uncle, or their issue, in equal shares." Now if "all the children of my late uncle" meant all the children he ever had, that attributes to the testator the intention of making all the children his uncle ever had legatees, although four of them were dead. I must confess, with the utmost possible respect for so great an authority, that the stress laid on the words "all and every the children" does not commend itself to me; I do not see what special force these words could have in a gift to "all and every the children," which is nothing more after all than a gift to "the children." A gift to "the children of A" is quite as large, and will confer benefits on as many, as a gift to "all and every the children of A." It is enough for me to say that this case does not come within that authority, because the words here are "all the children, &c." There were living at the date of the will five children, not two, therefore the words "all the children" are perfectly apt and proper words to describe the five children, or such of them as might predecease the testator. Therefore In re Sibley's Trusts (1) in that respect is not an authority the reasoning of which can apply to the present case, and not an authority which binds me at all or which I could properly follow, because the essential facts on which the reasoning was founded were entirely different. Then there is a class of cases like In re Philps' Will (13). There the words were these: The testator bequeathed a fund to his widow for life, and after her death to be divided among his "children then living or their heirs." Now, in that case "or" seems to have been read "and," and the heirs of children who predeceased the wife, including two who were dead at the date of the will, were held entitled to share in the fund. But the reason given in Jarman on Wills in the comment in that work on this case is this, that there the words read literally, "my children then living or their heirs," were contradictory, because clearly the children then living would take absolute interests, and "the children then living or their heirs" read literally was nonsense; and therefore the testator must have meant children then living, or the heirs of such as should be then dead, which brings the case again within Tytherleigh v. Harbin (16). Now that case has no reference to the case before me, because here there are no such words as "then living," but simply "all the children, &c." But then there is another case which seems to have introduced still another distinction, the case of In re Smith's Trusts (7), reported in the note to In re Sibley's Trusts (1), and decided by the same Judge, the learned Master of the Rolls. There the words of the will were: "If S. Smith should have any money at her death, she wishes it to be equally divided amongst her brothers and sisters, after all expenses are paid. Should any of her brothers and sisters be dead, their share is to be equally divided amongst their children. If no children be living, the money to be divided amongst the surviving brothers and sisters of S. Smith." There the Master of the Rolls said, "The question is, whether I am to attribute to this testatrix the capricious intention that if a brother died before her will, his children should not take, but that if a brother died after her will, his children should take. I am of opinion that I am not bound to do anything of the sort. She gives her money to be equally divided amongst her brothers and sisters, and then she says, 'should any of her brothers and sisters be dead, their share is to be equally divided amongst their children.' The words 'their share' cannot mean a share given to a brother or sister who is dead, because you cannot give a legacy to a dead person, as the testatrix must have known, and consequently 'their share' must mean 'the share which they would, if living, have taken.' Therefore I hold that the children of the brother who was dead at the date of the will are entitled to a share." That brings the case exactly within Loring v. Thomas (3), where the word "share" is used. I have no such words here, so that this case is neither within Tytherleigh v. Harbin (16), Loring v. Thomas (3), In re Philps' Will (13), In re Sibley's Trusts (1), nor In re Smith's Trusts (7); and no other distinction has been pointed out to me except this, that in Wingfield v. Wingfield (9) the Vice-Chancellor Hall read a gift which was somewhat like this, "to children or their heirs," as including the heirs of children dead at the date of the will, because he said that was consistent with the general current of later authority. Now, I have gone through the stream of authorities, so far as I know anything about them, or rather the divided currents of the authorities, from Christopherson v. Naylor (11) down to the present time, and I know of no authority that a gift to children or their heirs without more entitles the heirs of children who were dead at the date of the will to take. Therefore I feel myself bound in this case by Christopherson v. Naylor (11) and West v. Orr (8), and the rule which those cases have laid down. It is clear that this is a substitutionary gift. For that In re Sibley's Trusts (1) is an express authority, because there the words were "all and every the children or their issue," and the Master of the Rolls held that those were clearly substitutionary words. Therefore I am bound to hold that the words "or in the event of decease to their descendants" are substitutionary words, and not finding that I can bring this case within any of the exceptions which have been referred to, I am further bound to say that I must follow the decision in Christopherson v. Naylor (11), and hold that the issue of the child who was dead at the date of the will do not take, and that the property therefore goes in fifths among the children who survived the testator.

In re Webster.

Solicitors — C. Berney Brown, for plaintiff; Stuart & Tull, for the children of M. H. Mello and child of Mr. Yates; Brown & Woolnough, for defendants.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 11, 13, 18, 19.

SAYERS v. COLLYER.

Building Estate—Residential Estate—Alteration in Character of Property—Injunction.

By a deed dated the 17th of April, 1878, a certain lot of a particular block of building land was conveyed to A (the defendant's vendor), and A thereby covenanted "with the owners or owner of any other" lot to which the benefit of such covenant was attached, that no building on his land should be used as a shop, nor should any trade be carried on thereon.

In March, 1882, the plaintiff, the owner of one of these lots, brought an action to restrain the defendant from using his house as a beershop with an off-licence.

It appeared that some of the houses on this block had been used as shops notwithstanding the covenant, and that several of them were occupied, not by a single tenant, but by two families at a weekly rent:—

Held, that the character of the property having been completely changed, the covenant could no longer be enforced for the purpose for which it was originally entered into; and action dismissed with costs.

Action with witnesses.

In the year 1877, the British Land Company, Limited, were the owners (amongst other blocks) of a particular block of building land, situate at Leytonstone in the county of Essex, and described on the company's lithographed plan as lots 424 to 445 (both inclusive).

By an indenture dated the 28th of March, 1877, the Land Company conveyed to George Upton, in fee, lot 440 on the lithographed plan. On this plan there were certain special stipulations applying to all the lots in this particular block, and the indenture contained mutual covenants by the company and George Upton in all respects (mutatis mutandis) identical with the covenants contained in an indenture dated the 17th of April, 1878 (being the conveyance to the defendant's vendor).

By an indenture dated the 28th of September, 1877, George Upton conveyed lot 440 (now known as 21 Somerset Terrace) to the plaintiff, Edward Sayers, in fee. This indenture referred to the lithographed plan, and expressed that it was made subject to the mutual covenants contained in the indenture of the 28th of March, 1877.

By an indenture dated the 17th of April, 1878, the Land Company conveyed to Leonard Prevost (the defendant's vendor) lot 445 on the lithographed plan, being another lot of the same block. By this indenture the purchaser, as to the land thereby conveyed, covenanted with the Land Company and "with the owners or owner of any other land to which the benefit of the stipulations was attached," to observe the stipulations so far as they related to the duties of the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, in respect of the land thereby conveyed.

The plan contained the following stipulation with reference to lots 424 to 445 (both inclusive):—

"Trades, &c., prohibited. No building shall be erected or used as a shop, nor shall any trade or manufacture be carried on .... upon any lot."

By an indenture dated the 17th of April, 1879, Prevost conveyed lot 445 to Richard Collyer, the defendant.

On the 2nd of March, 1882, the plaintiff commenced this action, alleging that the defendant bought his lot with full notice of the restrictive covenants contained in the indenture of the 17th of April, 1878; and that he had fitted up the house built on his lot as a beerhouse or beershop, and had obtained an off-licence to sell beer there not to be consumed on the premises; and claiming an injunction to restrain the defendant from carrying on such trade in his house contrary to the covenant entered into by Leonard Prevost, on behalf of himself, his heirs and assigns, in the said indenture.

It appeared from the statement of defence that Leonard Prevost had built a shop on lot 445 in October, 1878; and that the defendant, in the month of May, 1879, obtained an off-licence to sell beer, and had ever since sold beer without any protest by the plaintiff. The statement of defence also alleged that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the user of the premises by the defendant as a shop for the sale of beer; that the action was not brought bona fide in the interests of the plaintiff, but at the instigation and for the benefit of the owners of certain public-houses in the neighbourhood which did not form part of this particular block; and that if the Land Company ever had any intention that their estate should be used as a residential estate, such intention had long been abandoned, and many of the buildings on the estate had for a long period been used as shops without interference or complaint by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's house, No. 21 Somerset Terrace, stood on the north side of a road called Lansdowne Road; the row of houses on the opposite side of the road (all in this particular block) was called Elizabeth Terrace; and the defendant's house (lot No. 445) was at the extreme eastern end of this terrace.

In the opinion of the Court the evidence shewed—First, that the defendant, when he bought, was aware of the restrictive covenants contained in the deed of the 17th of April, 1878; secondly, that the defendant began to carry on the business of a seller of beer with an off-licence in May, 1879; that the plaintiff knew of this, for nine months or a year actually purchased his beer there himself, and took no objection to the shop being used for the sale of beer until March, 1882; and thirdly, that some houses built on other lots of this particular block had been for some time used as shops, notwithstanding the covenant, and that many of the houses in Somerset Terrace were occupied, not by a single tenant, but by two families, at a total rent of 10*s.* a week.

Everitt, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the restrictive covenant contained in the conveyance of the 17th of April, 1878, though he is "not named as a party"—8 & 9 Vict. c. 108. s. 5. Where, as here, there has been a clear breach by the defendant of an express covenant, the mere abstaining for a time from taking legal proceedings is unimportant—The London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. Bull (1).

(1) 47 Law Term Rep. N.S. 413.

Sayers v. Collyer.

[PEARSON, J., referred to Evans v. Davis (2).]

The plaintiff is entitled to the injunction he asks, even though the Court should be of opinion, upon the evidence, that small breaches of the same covenant by the occupiers of a few houses in this block have not been interfered with—Western v. McDermott (3).

[PEARSON, J.—The real question seems to be, whether, if the whole character of the property has been changed, the covenant is still binding.]

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Farwell, for the defendant.—This being a covenant for the enjoyment of all the houses in this block in a particular way, there has been such acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in breaches of the covenant by occupiers of several houses in this block that he cannot now enforce it against this particular defendant. The whole character of the property being altered, it is inequitable to enforce this covenant in the existing state of the property—The Duke of Bedford v. The Trustees of the British Museum (4), Roper v. Williams (5) and Peek v. Matthews (6).

[PEARSON, J.—Can the Court do otherwise than grant an injunction to prevent a breach of a deliberate covenant?]

Here there are special circumstances, which will prevent the Court from giving equitable relief in aid of the legal right—The Directors of the Imperial Gas Light Company v. Broadbent (7). There are equitable circumstances to prevent the plaintiff having specific performance of his covenant—Barret v. Bladgrave (8).

They also referred to The Duke of Leeds v. The Earl of Amhurst (9), Eastwood v. Lever (10) and The National Provincial Plate Glass Company v. The Prudential Assurance Company (11).

Everitt, Q.C., in reply.—There is an obvious distinction between this case and The Duke of Bedford v. The Trustees of the British Museum (4). Only two houses in this block besides the defendant's were for a short time used as shops. And a house "becomes again a private house, as soon as it ceases to be used as a shop"—Kemp v. Sober (12). There has been no such change in the character of the property as to disentitle the plaintiff to an injunction to restrain the violation of an express covenant—German v. Chapman (13). As there has been a clear breach of covenant, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction, without the necessity of shewing damage—Lord Manners v. Johnson (14) and Gaskin v. Balls (15). "The main point is whether the contract has been broken"—The Attorney-General v. The Mid-Kent Railway Company (16).

PEARSON, J.—In this case the plaintiff complains of a breach of covenant, affecting a house that he has bought, because of the defendant having opened a beershop with an off-licence.

Now the plaintiff's excuse for his delay in bringing his action is this. He says that shortly after he purchased the house he mortgaged it; that from the time when he mortgaged it to the time when he paid off the mortgage he had no means of access to the deeds, and did not know what his rights were; but that when he paid off the mortgage and recovered his deeds, he ascertained for the first time what his rights were, and instructed his solicitors to stop this beershop.

Now, according to his own evidence in the box, he knew of his own rights so far back as the year 1879. There has therefore been at all events a delay of something like three years.

(2) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 223; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 747.
(3) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 76; Law Rep. 2 Chanc. 72.
(4) 2 Myl. & K. 552; 2 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 129.
(5) Turn & R. 18.
(6) Law Rep. 3 Eq. 515.
(7) 7 H.L. Cas. 600; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 377.
(8) 6 Ves. 104.
(9) 2 Ph. 117; 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 5.
(10) 4 De Gex, J. & S. 114; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 355.
(11) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 871; Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 757.
(12) 1 Sim. N.S. 517; 20 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 602.
(13) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 250; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 271.
(14) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 404; Law Rep. 1 Ch. D. 673.
(15) Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 324.
(16) Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 100.

Sayers v. Collyer.

I am not going to decide this case upon the question of acquiescence. I am not going to decide that the plaintiff has acquiesced so long in the beershop being carried on, that the defendant has now a right to carry it on. I am going to consider whether at this time, having regard to the state of the property, the Court will interfere to prevent breaches of the covenants which are contained in these stipulations.

Now I think that I can only look at the covenants affecting this particular block. I think I must treat this as if it were a solitary block, and as if I had nothing to do but to consider what was the effect of the covenants with regard to this particular block. Is this, then, a case in which the Court will interfere to restrain a breach of covenant?

Now The British Museum Case (4) seems to me to furnish the principle on which I ought to proceed. In that case the Court said to the Duke of Bedford, who came to restrain a person who wanted to build upon an adjoining part of his property, contrary to a covenant in the original deed: "You have so altered the property since you originally compelled the defendant's predecessors in title to enter into this covenant; you have so completely changed the character of the property by building houses which, strictly speaking, were against the covenant, that it would be inequitable in this Court now to give you the benefit of a covenant which you have treated as absolutely void;" and the Court thereupon refused the injunction.

Now I have to consider whether or not this is a case in which it would be, to use Lord Eldon's word, "oppressive" to give effect to this covenant. I see that the stipulations here were stipulations to keep this as a "residential" property, to keep it as private house property, in the ordinary sense of the word, and to prevent shops being built. As I understand, the intention was that these houses should be occupied, in the ordinary sense in which houses are occupied, by separate owners of each house, so as to keep each house a private house for a private family. Now I find that, during the few years which have elapsed since persons began to build here, the houses are no longer let to private persons, each having one house; but the majority of the houses in Somerset Terrace are divided between two families, at rents of 10*s.* and 8*s.* a week, each family paying one moiety of that, a very small sum. I find that during the same period of time shops have been opened immediately opposite the plaintiff's house. I find that the plaintiff himself allowed the defendant's shop to be opened, and allowed it to continue for three years before he thought of bringing his action. Therefore I come to this conclusion, that this action is not bona fide brought for the purpose of stopping this shop as a beershop because it is really and truly any injury either to the plaintiff or to the persons living in his immediate neighbourhood upon the same block; but that there is some other reason, which I do not know of, which has induced this plaintiff in the year 1882 to complain of that of which he did not complain three years before. I ask myself, therefore, Is there, really and truly, any injury whatever shewn to the plaintiff? Does the contract exist now for the purposes for which the contract was entered into? Shall I, if I grant this injunction, be enforcing the contract in order to keep the property in the state in which it was intended to be kept when these stipulations were first put on this plan? I come to the conclusion that I must answer all these questions in the negative. I must say that the contract can no longer be performed for the purposes for which it was entered into, and that I ought not therefore to grant this injunction.

Then, under that very useful Act which was obtained by Lord Cairns, and which goes by the name of Lord Cairns's Act, I have a right, in any case where I refuse an injunction, to grant damages instead. I have had no damages whatever proved before me from the opening of the shop. I cannot see that the opening of this shop either has produced, or is likely to produce, any damage to the plaintiff's property. It is not a public-house, in the ordinary sense of the word, in which there might be a complaint that the house was so conducted, and attracted so many persons to it, that it was more or less a nuisance to the plaintiff. It is a house for the sale of beer under an off-licence only. I have not heard any evidence, and I do not suppose that any evidence could be produced to shew me that it is a nuisance to the plaintiff in any way whatever; and I have his own conduct for nine months, shewing not only that it was not a nuisance, but that it was beneficial to him, for during that period he supplied himself with beer from that shop.

Sayers v. Collyer.

I therefore come to the conclusion that I cannot give the plaintiff one farthing damages for what has been done; and I dismiss the action, with costs.

Solicitors — Clapham & Fitch, for plaintiff; Stokes, Saunders & Stokes, for defendant.

BACON, V.C.
1881.
Jan. 20.
Feb. 3.

In re THE MILFORD DOCKS COMPANY; ex parte LISTER.

Winding-up — Petitioning Creditor — Unpaid Vendor—Award—Costs of Arbitration—Companies Act, 1862, s. 82—Lands Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 34, 49 and 50.

Unpaid vendors of land taken by a company under their compulsory powers are not "creditors" within the Companies Act, 1862, s. 82, until their title has been duly made out and accepted, even though the amount of the purchase and compensation money to be paid by the company has been ascertained and fixed by award; neither are they "creditors" in respect of the costs of the arbitration, unless such costs have been taxed.

This was a petition to wind up the above company by the mortgagees and owners of the equity of redemption, claiming as unpaid vendors of land taken by the company under their compulsory powers.

The company was incorporated under the Milford Docks Act, 1874, and in August, 1876, gave notice to treat for and took possession of the land of the petitioners for the purposes of their undertaking. The amount of the purchase and compensation money to be paid by the company had been ascertained and fixed by an award, dated the 17th of March, 1882, at 6,000*l.* An abstract of the petitioners' title was delivered in October, 1882, but the title had not been made out to the satisfaction of the company, nor accepted by them, at the date of the presentation of the petition. The petitioners, after stating that the company was insolvent, claimed as creditors for this 6,000*l.*, and alleged that further sums of 1,612*l.* for arrears of interest, and 2,000*l.* "in respect of rent and other outgoings, and of certain disbursements, costs and expenses," were also owing to them.

By the award, the petitioners, as vendors, had been allowed three days' costs of the reference, but these costs had not been taxed.

A great deal of evidence as to the financial prospects of the company, the dispute as to title and the wishes of the various creditors and shareholders opposing the petition, was filed and read; but the only points calling for a report were, whether the petitioners were entitled, under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 82, to present a petition, as creditors for the 6,000*l.* purchase-money, or in respect of their costs under the award. These points were not raised by the petitioners' counsel in their opening.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Oswald, for the petition.

Marten, Q.C., and Levett, for the company.—As to the award for 6,000*l.*, which is the foundation of the petitioners' claim, it cannot create a debt or constitute the vendors creditors. A jury or arbitrator, acting under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, can only assess the value of the interest claimed, and not the right to that interest—Brandon v. Brandon (1) and Ex parte Cooper; in re The London and North Western Railway Company (2). Even the verdict of a jury and judgment by the sheriff, under sections 49 and 50 of the Lands Clauses Act, do not of themselves create an absolute debt due from the company to the landowner—

(1) 2 Dr. & S. 305; 34 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 333.

(2) 2 Dr. & S. 312; 34 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 373.

In re Milford Docks Co.

Howell v. The Metropolitan District Railway Company (3); and no action can be maintained until a conveyance of the land has been executed—The Guardians of the East London Union v. The Metropolitan Railway Company (4). [They were stopped by the Court.]

Horton Smith, Q.C., in reply.—As the company are in possession, the purchase-money ought to be brought into Court, and even if the petitioners are not creditors for the unpaid purchase-money, they are at any rate creditors for the amount of costs given them by the award; and as to this debt, the execution of a conveyance to the company is not a condition precedent—Capell v. The Great Western Railway Company (5).

Marten, Q.C., in reply.—In the case last referred to the costs had been taxed; in the present case the award does not specify any amount for costs, it only gives costs of three days' reference.

Hemming, Q.C., Millar, Q.C., Northmore Lawrence, W. Latham, E. Ford, Seward Brice, A. R. Kirby, G. Henderson and Swinfen Eady, for creditors and shareholders, took no part in the argument.

BACON, V.C.—I think the objection must be allowed. The Companies Act, 1862, is explicit, and its object not to be misunderstood. Any "creditor" may, according to the wording of section 82, present a petition; the amount of the debt is not fixed, nevertheless the Court has on several occasions declined to entertain petitions for a less sum than 50*l.* If it had not done so, I should decline to entertain a petition for less than 50*l.*, having regard to the enactments of this statute.

Now the petitioners claim as unpaid vendors. Vendors they are no doubt, or intended to be; unpaid they are no doubt—but unpaid of what? Not of the sum mentioned in the award, because, until a title is made out, satisfactory, and such as the Court would force upon a purchaser, it cannot be said that any debt is due. I cannot tell what, upon the investigation of this title, might arise. It might turn out that although the purchasers—the company—were not in a position to dispute the value of the land which they took, as to the sum mentioned in the award, yet that that was not payable to these petitioners, but to some other person. How, then, can I say that under the 82nd section these petitioners are creditors of the company? In the present state of things it is quite clear that they are not creditors of the company. Until they have made out their title they cannot be said to be entitled to the money mentioned in the award. The title never has been investigated. I am quite aware of the statements read to me from the affidavits to the effect that the deeds lay upon the table, and that they might have been looked at then. That does not shew an investigation of title, nor a neglect to investigate it then, and so an acceptance of the title. What takes place afterwards when the abstract was delivered shews clearly that in the contemplation of both parties it was necessary to make out a title. No title has yet been made out, and the authorities are clear and distinct that in such a case there is no debt due by the purchaser, who is only liable to pay something to somebody, and that the amount fixed by the award does not constitute a debt between him and the vendor.

Then Mr. Horton Smith says that the petitioners are creditors for the amount of their costs under the award. Now there is no distinct mention in the petition of costs. A quantity of items are huddled together—rent and disbursements, and costs and other expenses—how much I have no means of telling. When the award is turned to, it appears that only three days' costs of the reference were allowed to the vendors, the present petitioners. No taxation has taken place, and it is impossible to assign any sum of money, whether more or less than 50*l.*, to that matter.

Upon these grounds, in my opinion, the case does not come within the provisions of the statute. They are not unpaid creditors, or rather they are not creditors, because a creditor is always unpaid; they are not creditors who are entitled to present a petition, and upon that ground I must dismiss the petition; but, consider-

(3) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 158; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 508.

(4) 38 Law J. Rep. Exch. 225; Law Rep. 4 Exch. 309.

(5) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 601; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 459.

In re Milford Docks Co.

ing the enormous expense which has been added to this case by the affidavits which have been filed, and the evidence that has been gone into by the respondents, who had that objection to take which has been taken, and which, if they had taken it earlier, would have put an end to the petition—inasmuch as, in my judgment, it is an answer to the petition, the costs of all those proceedings ought not to be paid by the petitioners.

For these reasons, I shall not give any creditors or shareholders opposing any costs. The petition will be dismissed with costs, except such costs as have been occasioned by the affidavits of the respondents respecting the title, and all the other matters that I have heard in the course of this case.

Solicitors—Johnson & Weatheralls, agents for Bowey & Brewis, Sunderland, for the petitioners; F. Heritage, for creditors; Newman, Stretton & Hilliard, for the company; Trinders & Romer, for creditors and shareholders.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 30. } In re STONOR'S TRUSTS.

Marriage Settlement—Agreement to settle after-acquired Property — Exception of Property settled to Wife's separate use— The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 5 and 19.

By a settlement made in 1862 upon the marriage of A and B, any property "settled to B's separate use" was excepted from the agreement to settle after-acquired property contained in the settlement.

C., who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by her will gave the residue of her personal estate to B.

Section 5 of the Act provides that every woman married before the commencement of the Act shall be entitled to hold as her separate property all property her title to which shall accrue after the commencement of the Act.

Held, that, as section 19 of the Act provides that nothing therein contained shall affect any settlement, section 5 must be omitted in construing the agreement; and that therefore the residuary bequest was not within the exception.

Petition.

By an indenture dated the 25th of November, 1862, being the settlement made in contemplation of the marriage then intended, and shortly afterwards solemnised, between Charles C. Welman and Eugenia Mary Welman (then Eugenia Mary Stonor, spinster), it was agreed and declared that the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of certain sums of bank annuities upon certain trusts therein mentioned for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Welman and the children of the marriage. And the settlement contained the following proviso:—

"Provided also, and it is hereby agreed and declared, that in case the intended marriage shall take effect, and any money or securities for money of the value or amount of 500*l.* or upwards at any one time (other than and except interests which shall be restricted for the life of Eugenia Mary Stonor, or, whether so restricted or not, shall be settled and limited to her separate use and disposal) shall at any time or times during the joint lives of Charles C. Welman and Eugenia Mary Stonor, by gift, devise, bequest or otherwise, devolve upon or vest in Eugenia Mary Stonor, or Charles C. Welman in her right, then and in every such case the same shall be forthwith, at the cost of the trust estate, conveyed, transferred and assured and paid to the trustees or trustee for the time being of these presents upon the trusts hereinbefore declared" concerning the trust funds hereinbefore settled.

Sophia Stonor, by her will dated the 3rd of March, 1860, after bequeathing certain pecuniary legacies, gave all the residue of her personal property unto her daughter Eugenia Mary Stonor.

Sophia Stonor died on the 14th of January, 1883. The clear residue of her personal estate, amounting to 970*l.*, had been paid by her executors into Court.

This petition was now presented by Mr. and Mrs. Welman, submitting that, upon the true construction of the settlement, and by the effect of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, she was entitled to the sum of 970*l.* for her separate use; and praying that the residue of this sum (after payment of costs) might be paid to her on her separate receipt.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, provides:—

Section 5: "Every woman married before the commencement of this Act [Jan. 1, 1883] shall be entitled to have and to hold and to dispose of in manner aforesaid as her separate property all real and personal property, her title to which, whether vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this Act."

Section 19: "Nothing in this Act contained shall interfere with or affect any settlement or agreement for a settlement made or to be made, whether before or after marriage, respecting the property of any married woman. . . ."

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Morshead, for the petition.—The effect of section 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is to give the fund in Court to Mrs. Welman for her separate use. It is thus brought within the exception to the agreement to settle after-acquired property contained in the settlement; and Mrs. Welman is now entitled to have it paid out to her upon her separate receipt.

Rashleigh and Ward, for the respondents the trustees of the settlement, were not called upon.

PEARSON, J.—Notwithstanding the ingenious argument of Mr. Cozens-Hardy, I am of opinion that this money is subject to the trusts of the settlement.

Mr. Cozens-Hardy says that any property settled to the lady's separate use is not included in the agreement to settle after-acquired property. Now this property is given to the lady absolutely, without any trust for her separate use. But then comes the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which gives to a married woman certain new rights, and, amongst others, says (section 5) that she shall be entitled to hold as her separate property "all personal property her title to which shall accrue after the commencement of the Act." It is argued that this property has accrued to her after the commencement of the Act; that therefore she is entitled to it as her separate property; and that therefore it comes within the exception.

Now, if there was no marriage settlement, the lady would take this money for her separate use. But section 19 of the Act distinctly says that "nothing in this Act contained"—that is to say, nothing contained in any clause before this section—"shall interfere with or affect any settlement made respecting the property of any married woman." I must therefore omit section 5 of the Act in construing the proper bearing of this agreement. I am therefore thrown back on the will of the mother only; and must hold that this money is not within the exception.

Solicitors—Tylee, Wickham, Moberly & Tylee, for the petition; Ward, Mills, Witham & Lambert, for respondents.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 5. } In re THE BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

Vendor and Purchaser — Title — Unstamped Deed—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

On a purchase (otherwise than by agreement) from a land society, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, of a plot of land which had been allotted and conveyed by the society to one of its members, and reconveyed by the allottee to the society, the deed of reconveyance not being stamped; the purchaser is not entitled to require that the deed of reconveyance should be stamped before completion at the vendor's expense, but it is sufficient that the allottee should join with the vendor in the conveyance.

Petition.

In the year 1871 the petitioners, as trustees of the Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, purchased certain plots of freehold land at Woodford, in the county of Essex. These plots of land were afterwards allotted and conveyed for value by the petitioners to some of the members of their society.

In re The Birkbeck Freehold Land Soc.

By the Epping Forest Act, 1878, it was provided:—

Section 11: (1) "The 'pink lands' (of which these plots formed part) shall be deemed to have been open waste lands of Epping Forest on the 11th day of August, 1851. (2) There is hereby referred to the arbitrator (appointed by the Act) the question what sum shall be paid by the conservators to the owner of the soil of any portion of the pink lands thrown open, as purchase-money for the soil thereof, with the minerals thereunder and timber thereon."

Section 24: "The provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating or not making title, and with respect to the conveyances of lands, . . . are hereby incorporated with this Act."

After the passing of the Act, the petitioners, on behalf of the society, repurchased these plots from the members to whom they had been conveyed, at the price they had paid for them. And, by deeds of reconveyance, dated the 14th of May, 1880, and the 24th of June, 1880, the allottees reconveyed the plots to the petitioners on behalf of the society. These reconveyances were indorsed on the conveyances, but were not stamped.

On the 3rd of October, 1881, the arbitrator made his award, whereby, after reciting that the society were, or claimed to be, the owners of these plots, and that they were portions of the "pink lands," he ordered that they should be thrown open; that for their interest in the soil and minerals of the plots, and for the timber thereon, the society should receive from the conservators 397*l.*; that the lands should be thrown open immediately upon the payment by the conservators to the society of that sum; and that on payment, the society should, at the expense of the conservators, execute to them a conveyance of the plots.

The society delivered to the conservators an abstract of title to these plots; and the conservators accepted the title, subject to a requisition that the deeds of reconveyance must be stamped at the expense of the society.

The society declined to comply with this requisition, but offered (in accordance with a suggestion of the arbitrator) to make the allottees join in the conveyance.

The conservators declined to accept a conveyance in this form; and on the 10th of January, 1883, paid the sum of 397*l.* into Court; and afterwards, under the provisions of section 75 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, executed a deed-poll vesting the plots in themselves in fee.

The trustees of the society then presented this petition, praying for the payment of the 397*l.* to them, and that the conservators might be ordered to pay the costs of the purchase or taking of the plots, or consequent thereon, and the costs of the petition.

The question was whether, under the circumstances, the conservators were justified in paying the money into Court.

Owen, for the petition.—This was a compulsory sale. We offered the conservators all that they were entitled to require, namely, a conveyance in which the allottees should join.

W. Baker, for the conservators.—These deeds of reconveyance are part of our title; we are therefore entitled to have them stamped at the expense of the petitioners. "A purchaser is entitled to have every deed forming a step in his title in such a shape that he can, if he needs it, give it in evidence"—Whiting to Loomes, per Lush, L.J. (1).

PEARSON, J.—This matter comes before me really and truly on one single point, the question of costs—the question whether or not the money was properly paid into Court, because the trustees of the Birkbeck Society did not execute a proper conveyance of this property. Now that raises a rather curious point.

It appears that the Birkbeck Society had allotted certain portions at all events of these lands, if not the whole of them, to certain members of their body on the assumption that they could deal with them as freehold lands and could vest them in their allottees. After all the litigation with regard to Epping Forest, and after the passing of this Act, it was plain that the Birkbeck Society had assumed to grant to their allottees that which they had not the right to grant; and the trustees of the Birkbeck Society, in order to put matters right, went to the allottees and said to them—"Finding we have given you a bad title, we will recompense you for the bad title we have so given you by repaying you all the sums you have paid to us as to those lands, you reconveying those lands to us in order that we may then dispose of them as we are bound to do under the Epping Forest Act." The allottees (with the exception of one of them, Mr. Benton) accepted these terms, and reconveyed the property to the trustees of the Birkbeck Land Society; and the deeds of reconveyance were indorsed upon the original deeds of conveyance, and were not stamped.

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 617; Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 822; affirmed on appeal, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 463; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 10.

Under those circumstances the title is handed to the conservators. The conservators approve of the title, and say, "You have shewn us a good title, but those deeds of reconveyance are not stamped; those deeds of reconveyance are part of the title; we shall have to produce them, or may have to produce them, to defend our title hereafter; and under those circumstances we call upon you to stamp those deeds." The trustees of the Birkbeck Society say, "This will put us to an excessive expense, having regard to the value of the property and the compensation money we are to receive for handing over the property to you, and we decline to stamp those deeds." Thereupon all the parties go before the arbitrator and suggest this difficulty to him; and the arbitrator, not having, as I conceive (which is putting it most favourably for the conservators), any direct authority to determine the proper form of conveyance, or the necessary parties to it, or this abstruse point as to stamping the deeds, suggests this—"I think you will get over the difficulty if the allottees who have reconveyed will join in the conveyance by the trustees of the Birkbeck Society to the conservators; because then, at all events, you will have evidence upon the title that the allottees have conveyed such interest as they had, if they had any, at the time of the conveyance." The arbitrator said, "I think, with such a deed as that, you would get a perfectly good title, and that deed would be stamped as an ordinary conveyancing deed in the present year, there being no penalty to pay"—the penalty being really and truly what the society wished to avoid paying. I come to the same conclusion as the arbitrator did; I think the arbitrator was right.

I think this is a totally different case from the case of Whiting to Loomes (1), which was decided by the late Master of the Rolls in the first instance, and was afterwards confirmed by the Court of Appeal. Now, in that case, the deed which was left unstamped was a mortgage-deed, and, as I gather from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, it was a mortgage of a term. It was a mortgage-deed, which had been acted upon. It was a valid mortgage-deed; and you could not make the mortgagee a party to the conveyance, without being obliged to shew subsequently why he was there, and what his interest was. Not only so, but it appears that the Master of the Rolls expressly said that the purchaser had a right to be able to set up that term afterwards, if necessary, as a protection to himself. As I understand the decision of the Master of the Rolls it went mainly upon this, not only that the deed was a valid deed, but that it was a deed that might possibly, and not altogether improbably, be of use to the purchaser, and one which the purchaser was entitled to have as a shelter in case any mischief arose afterwards. I do not find anything different from that in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. They seem to have indorsed what the Master of the Rolls said, to have adopted his line of argument, and to have confirmed the decision on the grounds upon which he gave it. In the present case I find nothing of the sort. This reconveyance was a reconveyance for no other purpose than to enable the legal estate to be vested in the trustees of the Birkbeck Society, that it might be conveyed to the conservators. The whole object and the intention of the reconveyance was to enable the trustees to vest the legal estate in the conservators under the Epping Forest Act. If that reconveyance were in itself insufficient to enable the trustees to do that, then the subsequent deed in which the allottees were to join with the trustees would be manifestly and plainly sufficient. And if at any time afterwards (simply with regard to the title, and not as evidence in a Court of justice) the reconveyance cropped up, so far from throwing any doubt upon the title, it would explain the whole title, and shew beyond all doubt that the conservators of Epping Forest had got everything they desired—the entire legal estate, free from any claim legal or equitable, vested in them under the conveyance to which the allottees were parties.

In re The Birkbeck Freehold Land Soc.

Upon that ground I think the conservators are not entitled to require that those deeds should be stamped at the expense of the trustees of the Birkbeck Society, but that they ought to have been content with the conveyance which was offered to them. Independently of that, I entertain very great doubts indeed as to whether or not, looking upon this as a compulsory purchase, the conservators could require the trustees of the Birkbeck Society to stamp those deeds. The trustees had got the reconveyances from the allottees; and they were entitled, if they pleased, to rest upon those reconveyances, without stamping them—subject of course to this, that if at any time they wanted to produce those deeds in a Court of justice as evidence of their title, they would be unable to do so, without having then to pay the penalty. And, assuming that the trustees have got possession of these plots, at the end of twelve years' time it will be absolutely immaterial whether these deeds were stamped or not.

Under all these circumstances I think the objection absolutely untenable. I may add this new ground—namely, that if there was any difficulty with regard to the stamping, the conservators had the power to do that which they have actually done, to vest the legal estate in themselves under the deed-poll. That they have done, as I understand, and they have got the legal estate; and I do not myself see any reason why, under the circumstances of the case, they should not have been content to act upon the advice of the arbitrator.

Under these circumstances I think the corporation ought to pay the costs of the petition.

Solicitors—Poncione & Leggatt, for petition; the City Solicitor, for respondents.

CHITTY, J. 1883. April 9. } In re THE CAMPDEN CHARITIES (NO. 2).

Charity—Jurisdiction—Church Building Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70. s. 22)—Sir S. Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3. c. 101)—District Parishes—Charity Income—Apportionment—Discharge of Order.

Where under the Church Building Acts district parishes have been severed from an original parish, and the income of a charity belonging to the original parish has been apportioned by an order of the Court among such district parishes and the remainder of the original parish, such order is not final and may be discharged or altered from time to time by the Court when changes in the distribution of population or other circumstances shall make such alteration desirable.

Petition.

This was a petition presented under Sir S. Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3. c. 101) and the Church Building Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), by the trustees of the Campden Charities, who were all ratepayers and inhabitants of the parish of St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, for the discharge of an order made on the 23rd of December, 1852, apportioning the income of the charities among the several districts into which the original parish of St. Mary Abbotts had at that time been divided.

The history and objects of the charities are fully given in the report of In re The Campden Charities (1).

The Charity Commissioners had, in 1879, prepared a new scheme, which, with some variation, was approved by the Court of Appeal on the 27th of May, 1881.

An order was made on the 23rd of December, 1852, by the High Court of Chancery, apportioning the income of the charities in 88th parts among the five district parishes which had been severed from the original parish of St. Mary Abbotts and the remainder of that parish. Between 1851 and 1881 the population of the whole parish had increased from 44,000 to 162,000, and in the same period the income had increased from 668*l.* to 3,600*l.* Sixteen new districts had been formed, making twenty-one in all, and the population was distributed among the districts entitled, in proportions so different from those which existed at the date of the order of 1852, that the trustees found it impracticable to administer the new scheme in a satisfactory manner. For example, the present population of the remainder of the old parish as it stood in 1852, and of the three districts into which since 1852 it had been divided, was 26,313, and those of the richer classes of the community—and to them, under the order of 1852, were allotted 25-88ths of the income; whereas, the old district of St. John's, Notting Hill, and the sub-districts into which it had since been divided, with a present population of 69,449, many of whom were of the poorest class, only received 17-88ths. Thus in many instances the trustees had been compelled to confer the benefits of the charities upon persons who were scarcely proper recipients of them, whilst they were unable to assist many of the most deserving poor who happened to live in a district to which only a small fraction of the income was assigned.

The question was, whether under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 22, the Court had jurisdiction to discharge the order of 1852. Section 22 enacts that when the Church Building Commissioners have formed district parishes out of any parish, "it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, ... on a petition being presented, ... to apportion between the remaining part of such parish or place and the distinct and separate parish . . . . any charitable devises, bequests or gifts which shall have been made or given to and for the use of any such parish . . . . or the produce thereof, and in any such case to direct that the distribution of the proportions of such devises, bequests or gifts, or the produce thereof, as shall be so apportioned, shall be made and distributed" by the persons therein mentioned.

The consent of the Attorney-General to the presentation of the petition had been obtained, and the petition had been served on the incumbents and churchwardens of the district parishes mentioned in the order of 1852, but they did not appear by counsel.

Ince, Q.C., and F. A. Lewin, for the petitioners.—There is nothing in section 22 of the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, to imply that an order of apportionment made under it shall be final. It would not be reasonable to attribute to the Legislature, which has given the Court so extensive a jurisdiction over charities, the intention of making an apportionment directed by the Court of an existing charity final and unalterable. It is clear in the present case that the apportionment made in 1852 is wholly inapplicable, and indeed mischievous, in consequence of the increase and the shifting of the population, by which those districts which are most richly endowed stand least in need of the charity, the poor having migrated from the older to the outlying and newly settled districts. This is clearly a case for the application of the cy-près doctrine—In re The Campden Charities (1). The apportionment of a charity is in the first instance a matter for the Court's discretion—Ex parte The Incumbent of Brompton (2) and In re The West Ham Charities (3), and there is no reason for saying that such discretion once exercised is exhausted and may not again be used as occasion may require.

Davey, Q.C., and Cecil Russell, for the

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 676; 50 ibid. 646; Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 310, 323.

(2) 5 De Gex & S. 626; 22 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 281.

(3) 2 De Gex & S. 218; 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 441.

In re Campden Charities.

Attorney-General. — The effect of the order of 1852 was to distribute the charity in the same way in which it would have been distributed if the parishes mentioned in that order had been mentioned in the original deed of foundation. Each district, the recipient of a fixed share of the income of the charity, has a right to consider that share as a permanent endowment for its own benefit. That argument is strengthened by the direction in section 22 to register the apportionment. The Attorney-General and the Charity Commissioners have no objection to the discharge of the order, but doubt the jurisdiction of the Court to discharge it.

Ince, in reply.—The registration seems only to apply to debts and charges, and not to the apportionment itself. Under Sir Samuel Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3. c. 101), the Court has power to vary schemes, and it seems only reasonable that a similar power should exist under the Church Building Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70) to vary apportionments. The order of 1852 does not sever the income, which remains one fund, but simply directs that the specified proportions of it should be paid to the districts entitled.

CHITTY, J.—This is a petition under the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, which is an Act for the further amendment of the Church Building Acts, and also under the Act commonly called Sir Samuel Romilly's Act, asking, as the case is presented at the Bar on behalf of the petitioners, for the discharge of an order made by the Court of Chancery in 1852; and the question, which is one of some importance, raised by the petitioners is whether the jurisdiction which is conferred upon the Court by the statute which I have referred to, the 8 & 9 Vict., is one which can be exercised from time to time; or whether an order once made apportioning the income or the benefits of the charities is final. Now the section on which the question turns is silent on two points. There is no express statement that the orders made by the Court under the jurisdiction thus conferred are to be final and not liable to be reopened; and on the other hand the section is silent as to whether the Court has power, from time to time, to make orders, either in discharging a former order, or varying orders which have already been made; and the Court, being left, therefore, to find out as well as it can what is the true intent of the Legislature in making this section, must have regard to general principles in coming to its determination.

Now it appears to me that in substance the new jurisdiction which is conferred on the Court is one which extends the power of the Court to make schemes. Schemes, as is well known, were made from time to time by the Court of Chancery, and are now made by this Division, in which the power of the Court of Chancery of making schemes is now vested; and in making those schemes the Court has power to depart to some extent from the trust as originally declared. The late Master of the Rolls, in giving his judgment in The Campden Charities (2), says: "In the first place, the scheme is made in pursuance of what is commonly known as the cy-près doctrine, and in cases like this it is applied where from lapse of time and change of circumstances it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied, but it can only be applied beneficially to similar purposes by different means." When the cases are properly considered it will be found that the Court has exercised from time to time a power of departing within certain recognised limits from the original deed or instrument whereby the charity was founded. The Court limited itself, generally speaking, in this way: you cannot at the present time apply the benefit of the charity so as to give effect to the original intention of the donors; the circumstances and the nature of the charity itself, and the circumstances even of the country, have so varied since the original creation, that you must endeavour to apply the benefits at the present time according to what may be called the spirit of the charity. Now it appears to me that the power which, as I have said, is conferred on the Court by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, is a power given, or jurisdiction given, in extension of the jurisdiction which the Court already possessed; and I think that is plain from this consideration. The apportionment between the new districts created under the Church Building Acts would have been, and the Legislature certainly considered it to be, too wide a departure from the cy-près doctrine, as that doctrine was applied by the Court of Chancery. The result, to my mind, is this: that the statute confers upon the Court a further and better jurisdiction with regard to the administration of the charity, and gives it an additional power with regard to its administration, having regard to the alteration of circumstances. The alteration of the circumstances here means that a portion of the parish has been lawfully cut up, under the Church Building Acts, into various districts, and it will be proper to apportion the benefit between the newly created districts. This question which I have to decide has not been before the Court, as far as I can find, on any other occasion. In the case reported of The Incumbent and Churchwardens of Brompton (2), Vice-Chancellor Parker expressed his opinion that it was not absolutely imperative on the Court to exercise the jurisdiction which was conferred upon it; and, with respect, I may say I concur in that view of the Act, having regard, as he did, to the subject-matter of the statute and to its various provisions. The Vice-Chancellor came to the conclusion that the Court had a discretion whether it would or would not apply the provisions of the Act to a particular case, and he seems to have treated the provisions of the section as provisions regarding the administration of the charity.

If that be so, if I am right in what I have said, the result appears to be this: that inasmuch as the Court always had an inherent jurisdiction, when circumstances had altered, to vary the schemes it had itself made, this additional power, which is, as I have said, a power of the same nature, when exercised, was to be liable to be re-exercised from time to time in the same manner as the Court could from time to time exercise its jurisdiction with reference to the making of schemes. For these reasons it appears to me that there is a jurisdiction in the Court to vary an order such as the order of 1852. Now the order of 1852 is an order which directed the apportionment of the income between the various districts to be thus created. Since then, various new districts have been created out of that which was the area of the original parish, and it seems that one, at least, of the new districts which have been created since the order was made is a district which has been carved out partly from one and partly from another of the districts which existed at the time the order of 1852 was made, namely, the new district of St. Philip, which is formed out of a portion of the district of St. Mary Abbotts (which is the mother parish), and the new district of St. Barnabas. What I have said with reference to this circumstance appears to me to afford some sort of clue to the construction of the Act. I go mainly on the principles I have already stated, that inasmuch as the districts themselves may be varied from time to time under the Church Building Acts, it would be a state of confusion, to my mind, to say that the power of apportionment, once exercised, is exercised finally, and cannot be exercised from time to time so as to render the apportionment suitable to the varying exigencies of the case, and to give to the new districts, of the kind I have mentioned, a new apportionment. This would not be strictly a new apportionment. For instance, St. Barnabas had apportioned to it under the order 9-88ths; St. Mary Abbotts had 25-88ths. The question, however, is not one merely of sub apportioning what St. Barnabas took or what St. Mary Abbotts took; but it would be necessary, it appears to me, and there would be jurisdiction, to make a new apportionment of the entire fund, taking it, it may be said, partly out of one district and partly out of another. But then, that is not sub-apportionment: it seems to me to be re-apportionment. Now, the order itself of 1852 did not exactly do this—it did not break the charity into distinct parts, but left its administration in the hands of trustees; and, in substance, the order was a mere direction to them as to how they should apply the various apportioned parts. It did not, although the Act of Parliament would have warranted such a course, direct that the application of the apportioned parts should be made by the incumbents and churchwardens of the various districts which were thus created. As I say, it has left the administration of the charity, as an entire charity, in the hands of trustees.

In re Campden Charities.

Now, ought I to accede to the present application? Perhaps this is a difficulty for the Court to be placed in. There is but one view on the subject. Not only do the petitioners ask for what either would be a re-apportionment, or to discharge the order so as to leave the trustees at liberty to apportion the fund from time to time among the various districts—not only do the trustees come and ask that, but the various new ecclesiastical divisions, which amount altogether to twenty-one, must be taken, as none of them appear to oppose the petition, to concur in the propriety of what is asked. I therefore discharge the order of the 23rd of December, 1852.

Solicitors—Green & Hartcup, for the petitioners; J. M. Clabon, for the Attorney-General.

FRY, J. 1883. Jan. 27, 29. Feb. 5.

THE WEST OF ENGLAND BANK v. MURCH. In re THOMAS W. BOOKER AND COMPANY.

Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), s. 27—Trustee—Appointment—Executor—Power to Compromise.

An appointment under Lord Cranworth's Act of one trustee of a will which appointed two trustees was held good.

A sale of a partnership interest in real and leasehold and other property by an executrix and trustee in consideration of cash, paid-up shares in a limited company, and extinguishment of debts, was upheld as a compromise.

In June, 1868, Thomas W. Booker and John P. Booker were carrying on in partnership certain ironworks and collieries. The partnership estates were vested in them as tenants in common. John P. Booker died on the 19th of June, 1868, having made a will by which he devised and bequeathed to two trustees, Robert F. Langley and James Wellington, all his real, leasehold and personal estate, upon trust, that they should, at their and his discretion, either sell and convert the same into money, or postpone such sale and conversion until such time as they and he might think proper, with full power to enter into such arrangements with the firm of Thomas W. Booker & Co., or their mortgagees, for carrying on the business of the firm, as his trustee or trustees might in their or his discretion think would be most to the interest of the estate. He appointed his two trustees executors, and his wife, Clara G. Booker, executrix, of his will.

The will was proved by the widow alone. On the 16th of June, 1870, R. F. Langley by deed disclaimed the office of trustee. On the 17th of June, 1870, by indenture between James Wellington of the one part and Clara G. Booker of the other part, after reciting the disclaimer of R. F. Langley, and that James Wellington had also renounced probate and was desirous of being discharged from the trusts of the will, he appointed Clara G. Booker trustee of the will.

The firm of Thomas Booker & Co. were largely indebted to the West of England Bank, who held mortgages of the partnership property. The amount of the debt in July, 1872, was nearly 444,000*l.* There were considerable liabilities of the firm to other persons.

A complicated arrangement was come to under three agreements. One was dated the 1st of July, 1872, and was between Thomas W. Booker and Clara G. Booker on the one side, and a trustee for an intended company, to be called "Thomas W. Booker and Company, Limited," on the other side. The others were dated the 28th of October, 1872, and the 27th of November, 1872, respectively; they were both between Thomas W. Booker and Clara G. Booker on the one side, and two of the registered officers of the West of England Bank on the other. Under this arrangement a company was to be formed to take over the business of Thomas W. Booker & Co., which was to take over a great part of the assets of the firm. The bank was to receive certain benefits, and to discharge the partnership liabilities and pay legacies given by the will of John P.

Booker. Clara G. Booker was to receive 18,000*l.* in fully paid-up shares of the new company, and 2,000*l.* in cash, and Thomas W. Booker was to receive certain benefits different from those of Clara G. Booker.

The arrangement was carried out; a company was registered in December, 1872, under the name of "Thomas W. Booker and Company, Limited." Among the assurances of partnership property to the new company was a conveyance of the Melin Griffiths Ironworks. Clara G. Booker joined in that deed to convey her interest in the equity of redemption. She purported to act as trustee and executrix in conveying the leasehold part of the property; as trustee only in conveying the freehold part. The property was conveyed to trustees to secure debentures.

Both the West of England Bank and Thomas W. Booker & Co. were subsequently ordered to be wound up. The action of The West of England Bank v. Murch and others was brought by the bank against the trustees for debenture-holders, in order to realise the assets subject to the debentures. Under an order of the Court in that action, and in the winding-up of Thomas Booker & Co., the ironworks were sold to James Spence. This was a summons by James Spence to have the contract rescinded, on the ground that a proper title had not been deduced.

Cookson, Q.C., and A. R. Kirby, for the summons, objected to the validity of the appointment of Mrs. Booker as trustee of her husband's will, on the ground that the provision in Lord Cranworth's Act did not enable the last of two disclaiming trustees to appoint one only. They cited Earl Lonsdale v. Beckett (1), In re Pool Bathurst's Estate (2) and Reid v. Reid (3).

Davey, Q.C., and Phipson Beale, for the plaintiffs in the action, the vendors, argued that on the construction of the Act the power had been properly exercised—In re Cunningham and Badley's Contract (4).

Everitt, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the other parties.

Cookson, Q.C., replied.

(1) 19 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 342.
(2) 2 Sm. & G. 169.
(3) 30 Beav. 388.
(4) Law J. N.C. (1877) 214.

FRY, J.—In my opinion the appointment of one trustee under the will of Mr. John Partridge Booker was not invalid. In so saying I do not mean to affirm that it was such an appointment as the Court would have sanctioned; or that it was such an appointment as ought to have been made except under special circumstances. It appears to me that it is within the power given by Lord Cranworth's Act, and I come to that conclusion partly from the language of the Act itself, which evidently does not confine the appointment of trustees to the same number as those in whose place they are appointed; and it is also to be borne in mind that that Act gives to each trustee appointed by the Act exactly the same power as he would have had if he were trustee under the original instrument.

In the present case it is perfectly plain that the surviving trustee under the original instrument could have exercised the trust or power of sale; and therefore, if two trustees had been appointed under Lord Cranworth's Act, one of them being this lady, and she had survived, it is plain that she, as surviving trustee, might have exercised the power of sale. It seems almost absurd to suppose that she could not be originally appointed, when, if she had been appointed with somebody else, and had been survivor of the two, she could have exercised the power.

Then there is a case of In re Cunningham (4), not reported in the permanent Reports; but Mr. Davey was counsel in the case, and he tells me that the case is accurately and sufficiently reported; and he also tells me that the Master of the Rolls has, in similar cases, expressed a similar opinion. That being so, I find my own opinion confirmed by authority; and I shall hold, therefore, that it is a valid appointment.

Cookson, Q.C., and A. R. Kirby, for the purchaser, contended that the sale was not made by the executrix as such, or to pay debts, but purported to be made by her as trustee, and was therefore ultra vires and void—Forshaw v. Higginson (5), Corser

(5) 8 De Gex, M. & G. 827; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 170.

v. Cartwright (6) and Colyer v. Finch (7).

Davey, Q.C., and Phipson Beale, for the vendors, were not called on.

FRY, J. (after stating the facts), said—It appears to me that the question is very much simplified by the fact that this property is shewn to be partnership property. The transaction which was entered into appears to me to have been within the competency of Mrs. Booker as executrix. In the first place, it is plain that she could sell the whole of the partnership property, whether freehold or leasehold, as executrix. That cannot be disputed in respect of the partnership property. She did sell it, but she did not sell it for cash. In lieu of that she sold it for certain property under a compromise which she entered into with her creditors. As executrix, acting under Lord Cranworth's Act, she had power to compromise the claim of the bank. It appears to me the effect of what she did was to procure certain property—the conveyance of these partnership assets—with which she entered into a compromise with the bank. The other aspect which the transaction bears is the arrangement she entered into with Mr. Thomas William Booker. Now it is said that that is unequal. That is perfectly true. Then it is said that it must be presumed that their interests in the partnership were equal. I know not why such a presumption should be made by the Court. It appears to me that there were unsettled accounts which must have been taken between Mrs. Booker and Mr. Thomas William Booker if she had not compromised those questions. Under Lord Cranworth's Act she had power to compromise, and did compromise, those questions by the arrangement then entered into. I regard the transaction, in substance, as a compromise by the executrix with the creditors the bank, and with her deceased husband's co-partner. Then it is said that if she had power so to do by omitting the words of the recital, she acted as executrix in the deeds by which she had conveyed the freehold property, and that she had precluded herself from acting in that character. In my judgment she had not done so.

Now it is to be borne in mind that, as executrix, she clearly was the hand to receive all those moneys, and therefore these moneys came to the right hand—they came to the hand of the person who was under the obligation duly to apply the assets, whether in satisfaction of the creditors of the deceased or the beneficiaries under his will. Further than that, whether she was acting as trustee or executrix, she was acting under an obligation to do the best she could for the estate. The fiduciary character was substantially the same whether she acted as executrix or as trustee. In both characters she was bound to do her utmost for the good of the estate. I think, therefore, I should be rather straining at a gnat if I considered that the mere fact that she spoke of herself as trustee in these instruments, and not as executrix, was enough to prevent a transaction being good, which in her character of executrix I hold she had the power of doing.

Now, if authority were wanting, it appears to me, I confess, that the case of Corser v. Cartwright (6) is an authority in favour of that view. I have listened very attentively to Mr. Cookson's argument, by which he endeavoured to shew that that case has nothing to do with this. In that case a person affected to mortgage as beneficial owner, and in that character he received the money, and in that character unfortunately he spent the money; but inasmuch as there was a charge, and inasmuch as he had the legal estate, and was executor, it was held that he had not only parted with the legal estate, but that he was able to make a good conveyance of the equitable estate, because his hand was the hand to receive the money. It appears to me that in what Earl Cairns (who was then Lord Chancellor) says he entirely neglects his character of trustee, and he puts it on the fact that the same person was executor and had the legal estate. He says this at page 740: "I find him selling or mortgaging, and I find him beyond all doubt able to sell and able to give to a mortgagee a good title to the legal estate." I repeat here that I find the trustee having

(6) Law Rep. 7 E. & Ir. App. 731.

(7) 5 H. L. Cas. 905; 19 Beav. 500; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 65.

the legal estate, and able therefore to convey the legal estate. The Lord Chancellor goes on: "I find that that legal estate is in his hands, and therefore any money that is produced by the sale or mortgage of that legal estate is subject to and chargeable with the payment of debts and legacies, and that, therefore, the money coming into his hands must be money which ought to be applied to the payment of debts and legacies." So I find here—the money came to the hands of the person who was bound to pay the debts and legacies. Then he goes on to say: "But then I find that he himself is an executor of the testator, that he himself is the person who ought to hold assets impressed with the liability to satisfy debts and legacies. I find, therefore, that assets which ought to be applied to the payment of debts have come into the hands of an executor, and that he has given a receipt for them. Therefore, on the one hand, the mortgagees have got the legal estate, and on the other hand they have got a receipt from the proper person for money which ought to be applied to the payment of debts and legacies. That being so, it appears to me that their title is entire and complete, without entering into any farther consideration of the question what might have been the case of a sale being attempted of other parts of the estate not comprised in the residuary devise." So here I find the executrix had the power to enter into this transaction. I find that the legal estate passed from her because she held it as trustee, and the money reached the hands of the person who was bound to distribute it among the persons entitled to it. I therefore overrule that objection.

Solicitors—Ashurst, Morris & Co., for appellants; Clarke, Woodcock & Ryland, agents for Fussell & Co., Bristol, for respondents; Rogers & Chave, for Booker & Co.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 24. } In re PATTEN AND THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF EDMONTON UNION.

Vendor and Purchaser—Sale by Trustees of Real Estate purchased in Breach of Trust—Concurrence of One Beneficiary—Good Title.

Trustees under a will which contained a power to sell real estate, but no power of investing the trust funds in real estate, bought real estate and had it conveyed to the trusts of the will:—Held, that they could sell and make a good title to the real estate wrongfully purchased with the trust funds, on obtaining the concurrence in the sale of one of the persons beneficially interested in the trust funds.

Adjourned summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

Samuel Smith, by his will, dated the 12th of October, 1835, after directing payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and making a specific devise of freeholds at Hitchin, gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion as therein mentioned, with power to give receipts, and upon trust to invest the clear produce. And as to all his moneys in the public stocks and the residue of his personal estate, upon trust to convert the same into money and invest it in the "Parliamentary stocks or funds of Great Britain or on Government or real securities, and from time to time to alter or vary the said stocks or funds and securities for or into other stocks, funds and securities of the like nature, at their and his discretion; and upon further trust to pay the interest and dividends of the moneys arising from his personal estate and effects, and also from the sale of his real estate, and of the stocks, funds and securities in which the same should from time to time be invested, as his daughter Mary, the wife of John Millar, should appoint, and, in default, to her for life for her separate use, and after her death then (after a trust for her husband for his life), as to capital as well as to income, upon trust for the child or children of his said daughter as therein mentioned, in equal shares as tenants in common."

One of the trustees, John Millar, the husband of Mary Millar, having inadvertently purchased with 1,980*l.*, forming part of the testator's residuary estate, certain freehold lands at Enfield, called Chase Farm, on the 8th of April, 1853, conveyed the same to the trustees of the will in fee-simple; and it was declared in the conveyance that the trustees should "stand possessed of the said hereditaments thereinbefore granted, or intended so to be, with their appurtenances, and the money to be produced by the sale thereof, and the rents and interest of the same respectively, upon such and the same trusts, and subject to such and the same powers, provisoes and declarations as in the said recited will of the testator Samuel Smith were expressed and declared concerning his residuary real estate, to the intent and so that the said hereditaments might in equity be deemed and converted into personalty as from the day of the date thereof."

In re Patten.

On the 10th of January, 1883, the then trustees of the will contracted in writing with the Edmonton Guardians to sell to them the property in question for the sum of 12,000*l.*, and the purchasers objected to the vendors' title that the latter could not sell the property without the concurrence of all persons beneficially interested therein, on the ground that the investment of trust funds in the purchase of real estate being unauthorised by the will, the acquisition of the property was a breach of trust, so that the beneficiaries had the option of either taking the property in specie or requiring it to be reconverted; and also on the further ground that the property had been conveyed to the trustees upon the same trusts and subject to the same powers, &c., as in the will were declared concerning the testator's residuary personal estate, and that among those trusts and powers the only power of sale was a power to sell foreign stocks or bonds; and they required all the persons beneficially interested to concur in the conveyance.

The trustees refused to obtain the concurrence of all the beneficiaries, but offered to obtain the concurrence of one of them, a Mrs. Challis, one of the daughters of Mrs. Millar, and her husband, and contended that such concurrence was sufficient, on the authority of Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 5th ed. 611, 612.

The purchasers thereupon took out the present summons, asking for a declaration that the vendors could not make a good title, or one which the guardians were bound to accept, to the property, without the concurrence of the persons beneficially entitled under the trusts of the will to the testator's residuary personal estate and the proceeds of his real estate; and that the trustees might be ordered to pay the costs.

The summons was adjourned into Court.

Bleby, for the summons.—I submit that the purchasers are right in their contention, and that they cannot safely purchase the property unless all persons interested are parties to the conveyance. There are two reasons for this—the one, that the land having been purchased by a breach of trust, the cestuis que trust have a right to elect to take the land as land if they please, and not to have it sold; the other, that there is no power of sale applicable to this property—all the beneficiaries must therefore concur—Wiles v. Gresham (1), Holloway v. Radcliffe (2), The Corporation of Newcastle v. The Attorney-General (3), and Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 4th ed. 560.

Vernon R. Smith, for the trustees.—Much expense and delay will be occasioned by requiring the concurrence of all the beneficiaries, and I submit that the concurrence of one is sufficient, since one can insist on the property being sold. I rely on Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 5th ed. 611, where the authors say, "it is conceived" that the concurrence of one is sufficient, instead of "it may be contended" that that is so, as in the earlier editions.

PEARSON, J.—The point which arises in this case is no doubt one which has given rise to considerable difficulty in the minds of conveyancers; but when the circumstances of the present case are examined, there is not much difficulty in saying what ought to be done. [His Lordship here stated the facts of the case, and continued:]

(1) 2 Drew. 258, 270; 5 De Gex, M. & G. 770; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 667; 24 ibid. 264.
(2) 23 Beav. 163; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 401.
(3) 12 Cl. & F. 403.

In re Patten.

The declaration of trust which testifies to the good faith of the trustees is the only document which creates any difficulty. If there had been no declaration of trust the land might have been sold, and the trustees, having the trust estate in their hands, would have had only to divide the proceeds among the children of the marriage according to the directions of the will. But the intending purchasers say that the trustees cannot now make a good title. If, as I have said, there had been no declaration of trust, the duty of the trustees would have been to sell the land and replace the money, and if the land had not realised the amount given for it they would have been bound to make up the deficiency; but the guardians have agreed to give for it six times the amount for which it was purchased, and, upon the principle that trustees cannot be entitled to derive any benefit from a breach of trust, the cestuis que trust are entitled to the advantage derived from the increased value. I see no reason why the trustees should not now do what it was all along their duty to do, and what the Court would have ordered them to do. At the same time, I agree that it would be proper to take the concurrence of one of the cestuis que trust, because if all of them had elected to take their shares of the land after it had been purchased, as land, they would have been entitled to do so; but if one of them objected to take the land and required that it should be resold, then the others could not compel him to take his third of the land as representing a third of the money.

The case in Clark and Finnelly was a totally different case from this, and decided on different principles, because here the property is subject to the trusts of the will, by which it is directed that all the property shall be sold and the proceeds reinvested in the manner pointed out by the will. The children of the marriage are therefore entitled to have the 12,000*l.* invested in the proper securities directed by the will, and the guardians will then get a good title to the property.

I shall declare that, on the 12,000*l.* being invested in the funds in the names of the trustees of the will, and Mrs. Challis, one of the cestuis que trust, concurring in the sale, a good title can be made; and the costs being in the discretion of the Court, I shall give none on either side.

Solicitors — Howard & Shelton, agents for F. Shelton, Edmonton, for Guardians; Lovell, Son & Pitfield, for trustees.

BACON, V.C. 1883. April 7. } In re MARY HUDSON'S TRUSTS.

Will—Executor—Undisposed of Residue—No next-of-kin—Legacy to Executors for care and trouble.

Testatrix devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to H. and G. upon trust for conversion and payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies, and the ultimate residue of her said real and personal estate she gave equally between H. and G. for their own use and benefit absolutely. She then appointed H. and G. executors and trustees of that her will. By codicil she revoked the gift of the ultimate residue to H. and G., and instead thereof gave them each 500l. for his trouble in acting as an executor and trustee of her said will. Testatrix died without leaving any heir-at-law or next-of-kin. There was a considerable amount of residuary personal estate:— Held, that on the face of the will and codicil the executors were not intended to take anything more than the 500l. legacies, and that the Crown was therefore entitled as against them to the undisposed of residuary personal estate.

Petition.

The testatrix, a widow, by her will dated the 24th of January, 1879, gave and devised specific real estate unto and to the use of Henry Hill and Charles Grabham, their heirs and assigns, upon trust to sell, and stand possessed of the proceeds of such sale, and the rents and profits until sale, upon the trusts thereinafter declared; and bequeathed to H. Hill and C. Grabham, their executors, administrators and assigns, all the moneys, stocks, funds and securities for money of which she should be possessed at her death, upon trust for conversion and payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and certain charitable legacies; and upon further trust, out of the residue of such moneys and the proceeds of sale of her specifically devised real estate, to pay certain pecuniary legacies, including one of 2,000*l.*, to H. Hill and his wife; and all the residue of the proceeds of sale of her said real estate, and of the moneys produced by the conversion of her shares, stocks, funds and securities, after paying her funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and the costs, charges and expenses of and incidental to the proving of her will, and the trusts and execution thereof and the legacies thereinbefore given, the testatrix gave and bequeathed unto and equally between the said H. Hill and C. Grabham for their own use and benefit absolutely, and in addition, so far as regarded the said H. Hill, to what she had thereinbefore bequeathed to him and his wife; and she appointed the said H. Hill and C. Grabham executors and trustees of that her will.

In re Mary Hudson's Trusts.

The will contained no general devise or bequest of residue.

The testatrix by a codicil subsequently revoked the aforesaid gift of ultimate residue to H. Hill and C. Grabham, and "instead thereof" gave to them each 500*l.* "for his trouble in acting as an executor and trustee of her said will."

The testatrix died on the 6th of July, 1879; she had no real estate other than that specifically devised.

The executors, H. Hill and C. Grabham, after paying all the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, had in their hands 2,126*l.*, representing residue of moneys and proceeds of sale of stocks and securities, 304*l.* representing undisposed-of residue of proceeds of sale of real estate, and 956*l.* representing proceeds of sale of furniture and other household articles not included in or disposed of by the will or codicil.

The testatrix had no heir-at-law or next-of-kin, and these sums having been paid into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, the question, raised on petition by the executors for payment out, was whether they or the Crown were beneficially entitled.

Counsel for the Crown admitted that the executors were entitled on the authority of Burgess v. Wheate (1) to the proceeds of sale of the realty, and this point was not argued.

Millar, Q.C., and J. T. Humphry, for the executors.—The statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4. c. 40, does not affect this case, as there are no next-of-kin; and the question is between the Crown and the executors, and must be decided as if the will had been made and the testatrix had died before the passing of that Act and had left next-of-kin—Read v. Stedman (2). No presumption arises on this will that the testatrix meant to give only the office of executor and not the beneficial interest, therefore the executors are entitled to the undisposed-of residue—Dacre v. Patrickson (3)—for the furniture is wholly undisposed of.

The onus is on the Crown to shew on the face of the will that what the executors have got virtute officii they are not entitled to beneficially—In re Knowles; Roose v. Chalk (4).

The testatrix never intended to die intestate as to the residuary real and personal estate, and when she by her codicil gave 500*l.* to the executors "instead of" what she had previously given by will, she only meant to say "instead of so much only as is incompatible with what I am now giving by codicil"—Doe d. Murch v. Marchant (5) and Barclay v. Maskelyne (6).

Stirling, for the Crown.—There is sufficient indication on the face of the will and codicil that the executors were not intended to take anything but the 500*l.* legacy. I rely on the words "and trustees"; they were appointed executors and trustees, and whatever they took as executors they took as trustees of the will. Besides, they each get a legacy for their trouble, and that is conclusive evidence that they were not entitled beneficially—White v.

(1) 1 Eden, 177.
(2) 26 Beav. 495; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 481.
(3) 1 Dr. & S. 182; 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 846.
(4) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 625.
(5) 6 Man. & G. 813; 13 Law J. Rep. C.P. 59.
(6) Johns. 124; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 118.

In re Mary Hudson's Trusts.

Evans (7). In Roose v. Chalk (4) the executors were simply appointed executors, not trustees and executors. The undisposed-of furniture the executors would take virtute officii, and anything they so took they are trustees of, and therefore are trustees for the Crown.

Millar, Q.C., in reply.—The trustees of the will hold a very different position to that held by executors, and they are only trustees of that which the will gives them as trustees. There is no clear intention to make them trustees of anything else, which requires a strong and violent presumption—Pratt v. Sladden (8).

BACON, V.C.—No doubt the case is nice, and complicated, and requires some consideration; but before I can say that the petitioners, the trustees and executors, are entitled to this sum of 2,126*l.*, representing residue of money and proceeds of sale of stocks and securities, I must be satisfied that there is not a plain and distinct contrary intention expressed or implied on the face of the will. By the will the residue of the proceeds of sale of stocks and securities was given, after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, unto the petitioners for their own use and benefit absolutely; then by her codicil she revokes this gift, and instead thereof she gives her trustees and executors 500*l.* each for his trouble in acting as an executor and trustee of her said will. I must therefore take it as clearly appearing on the will that she did not mean them to have more than 500*l.* in return for the duties she had by her will imposed upon them, and which the law had too in their capacity as executors. As to the 956*l.* representing the proceeds of sale of furniture, &c., the case is a little more difficult. These articles are admittedly not disposed of by the will or codicil, but would vest in the executors virtute officii, and would be liable in their hands for debts of the testatrix which she has directed to be paid. As to this undisposed residue, is there any evidence of an intention contrary to the beneficial interest of the executors to be found on the face of this will? I think there is, for I find a plain intention on the part of the testatrix to confine the benefit given to her executors to the sum of 500*l.*, and I do not think she ever intended them to take more than this 500*l.* The claim of the Crown, therefore, must prevail as to these two funds. The right of the petitioners to the proceeds of sale of real estate is not disputed by the Crown. In this will the petitioners are appointed executors and trustees in one breath, and I can make no such distinction as was made in Pratt v. Sladden (8), the circumstances of which case are not the same as those now before me. I think the costs should come out of the three funds rateably.

(7) 4 Ves. 21.
(8) 14 Ves. 192.

Solicitors—Torr, Janeways, Gribble & Oddie, agents for Sangster & Coleman, Pontefract, for petitioners; Solicitor to the Treasury, for the Crown.

PEARSON, J.
1883.
June 22, 29.
July 2.

In re VALLANCE'S TRUSTS.

Colonial Will—Appointment of Funds in Court in England—English Probate necessary for Payment out to Appointee.

A testator died in New Zealand, having by his will appointed to his son, in exercise of a power, the proceeds of sale of certain English leaseholds, which had been taken by a local board of works, and the proceeds paid into Court. The will appointing the proceeds of sale was proved in the Supreme Court of New Zealand:—Held, that the will must also be proved in England before payment out of Court to the appointee could be directed.

In re Tootal's Trusts (ante, p. 664) distinguished.

Petition.

Thomas Vallance died in 1838, having by his will bequeathed certain leasehold premises at Wapping to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents to his son Charles Augustus Vallance for life, and after his death to stand possessed of the property upon trust for his child or children to whom he should by will bequeath the same.

In re Vallance's Trusts.

In 1873 the Board of Works for the Limehouse district took the bequeathed leaseholds under the powers of 57 Geo. 3. c. 29, and paid the purchase-money of 1,050*l.* into Court; and under order of Malins, V.C., that sum was invested, and the dividends were paid during the life of C. A. Vallance to the trustees upon the trusts of T. Vallance's will.

On the 21st of September, 1882, C. A. Vallance died in New Zealand, having by his will bequeathed to his son James Charles Vallance all his interest in the leasehold property or the proceeds of sale thereof under the will of T. Vallance. The will was proved in the Supreme Court of New Zealand (Wellington District) in September, 1882, by the executors thereof.

This was a petition by J. C. Vallance, by his attorney, asking for the payment out of Court to him of the proceeds of sale of the leasehold property after payment of legacy duty, and the question arose whether it was necessary for the New Zealand will of C. A. Vallance to be proved in England before payment out could be directed.

S. B. L. Druce, for the petition, referred to Tatnall v. Hankey (1), In re Daly's Settlement (2), D'Huart v. Harkness (3) and Waite v. Bingley (4), and submitted that it was unnecessary for the will to be proved a second time in England, especially having regard to the fact that, as the will of C. A. Vallance was merely an exercise of a power of appointment given by the will of T. Vallance, no duty was payable, and there was no revenue reason for insisting on probate.

[PEARSON, J.—How can this Court know whether there is a will or not, if a proper probate is not produced?]

The recent case of In re Tootal's Trusts (5), before Chitty, J., is in favour of dispensing with the probate.

[PEARSON, J.—I will look into that case before I decide the point, but my present impression is that the probate must be produced.]

(1) 2 Moo. P.C. 342.
(2) 25 Beav. 456; 27 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 751.
(3) 34 Beav. 324; 34 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 311.
(4) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 651; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 674.
(5) Ante, p. 664.

T. W. Ratcliff, for the Board of Works.
Rose-Innes, for the trustees of T. Vallance's will.

PEARSON, J. (on July 2).—When this case was before me on Friday last I expressed my opinion that the will of Charles Augustus Vallance must be proved in England, but I deferred giving my decision on the point until I had had an opportunity of considering the case of In re Tootal's Trusts (5), before Mr. Justice Chitty, which Mr. Druce cited to me. If, on looking into that case, I had found a decided expression of opinion by Mr. Justice Chitty, or even a hint that his opinion was at variance with my own, I should have given that expression or hint of his opinion the gravest consideration before deciding contrary to it. But, so far from finding in that case an expression of opinion contrary to mine, I find in it an indication of opinion which is in accordance with mine. The question there arose with respect to a will made in China, and proved in Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan at Shanghai. There was really no dispute there that it was unnecessary to require an English probate of the will. This is what Mr. Justice Chitty says, speaking of the Supreme Court at Shanghai:—"The Supreme Court is a Court of law and equity, and a Court for matrimonial causes, but without jurisdiction as to dissolution, nullity, or jactitation of marriage. It is a Court of Probate, and as such, 'as far as circumstances admit,' has for and within China, with respect to the property of British subjects having at the time of death 'their fixed places of abode in China,' all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to the Court of Probate in England." Under those circumstances the Judge accepted the probate. But the Supreme Court of New Zealand is not in the same position with regard to jurisdiction in which the Court there was; and I therefore am of opinion that in the case now before me an English probate must be produced.

Solicitors—E. R. Keele, for petitioner; Ratcliff & Son, for Board of Works; A. G. Hammack, for trustees of T. Vallance.

KAY, J. 1883. July 18, 23. } In re ANDROS. ANDROS v. ANDROS.

Will—Bequest to Great-nephews, Sons of Testator's Nephew—Legitimation of Ante Natus by subsequent Marriage of Parents—Domicil.

A bequest of personalty in an English will to the children of a foreigner means to his legitimate children; and by international law, as recognised in England, those children are legitimate whose legitimacy is fixed by the law of the father's domicil.

A testator bequeathed personal estate to "his great-nephews, the sons of his deceased nephew T. G. A." T. G. A. was a native of Guernsey. The plaintiff was the son of T. G. A., born before the marriage of his parents, who were domiciled in Guernsey at the time of his birth and of their marriage. By the law of Guernsey, children are legitimated by the subsequent marriage of their parents:—

Held, that, as the plaintiff's father was domiciled in Guernsey at the plaintiff's birth, and afterwards married his mother, so as to make him legitimate by the law of Guernsey, he was entitled to share in the bequest with the sons of T. G. A. born after the marriage.

In re Goodman's Trusts (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 425; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 266) and Boyes v. Bedale (1 Hem. & M. 798; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 283) considered.

Special Case.

William Andros, who died in January, 1882, by his will dated the 13th of August, 1879, after appointing executors, gave his personal estate to trustees upon trust, as to one-third part thereof, "to pay and divide the same equally between such of his great-nephews, the sons of his deceased nephew Thomas Godfrey Andros, as should survive him, and should attain the age of twenty-five years, in equal shares"; but he gave to his said trustees absolute discretion to pay to his said great-nephews, or either of them, the whole or any portion of the capital of the shares or share to which they or he might be presumptively entitled at any time or times his said trustees or trustee might consider it expedient so to do.

The testator's nephew, Thomas Godfrey Andros, was born in the island of Guernsey. The plaintiff, who was the son of Thomas Godfrey Andros, was born in the island of Guernsey on the 1st of December, 1860.

At the time of the plaintiff's birth his father, T. G. Andros, and his mother, who was not then married to his father, were domiciled in Guernsey. Subsequently to the plaintiff's birth T. G. Andros intermarried with the plaintiff's mother, and by her had other four children.

According to the laws of the island of Guernsey, a child born before the marriage of its parents becomes legitimate on and by reason of its parents' subsequent marriage, and for the purposes of succession to personal property, and for all other purposes, is deemed to be a legitimate child of its father and mother as fully as if it had been born in lawful wedlock.

The question submitted for the opinion of the Court was whether the plaintiff ought under the circumstances to be deemed to be a legitimate son of the testator's nephew, T. G. Andros, for the purposes of the testator's will, and as such entitled to share, with the children born in lawful wedlock, in the bequest to the sons of T. G. Andros.

Hastings, Q.C., and Bardswell, for the plaintiff.—A child who is legitimate according to the law of his father's domicil is legitimate for all the purposes of succession to personalty—In re Goodman's Trusts (1). The plaintiff therefore, being legitimate according to the law of Guernsey, is entitled to share with the after-born children of T. G. Andros.

Hatfield Green, for the trustees and after-born children, referred to Boyes v. Bedale (2).

Cur. adv. vult.

KAY, J. (on the 23rd of July).—This Special Case states the will of an English testator bequeathing personal property to the testator's great-nephews, the sons of

(1) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 425; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 266.

(2) 1 Hem. & M. 798; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 283.

In re Andros.

his deceased nephew Thomas Godfrey Andros. The plaintiff is a son of Thomas Godfrey Andros, who intermarried with the plaintiff's mother after his birth; and by the law of Guernsey, of which island the father was a native, and where he and the mother were domiciled both at the time of the plaintiff's birth and their subsequent marriage, the plaintiff became legitimate when the marriage took place. Other children were born after the marriage. The will, being an English will, must of course be construed according to English law. That law requires that all who take under a gift to sons of a named father should be legitimate offspring. It must now be treated as settled that any person legitimate according to the law of the domicil of his father at his birth is legitimate everywhere within the range of international law for the purpose of succeeding to personal property. The well-known case of Birtwhistle v. Vardill (3), which introduced a distinction in this respect in the case of a person claiming to succeed as heir to real property in England by requiring such a person to establish his legitimacy according to English law—that is, as though the father had been domiciled in England at the time of the birth of the child—treats this as an exceptional case, and recognises that the rule of succession to personal estate is otherwise; and this has been recently more expressly decided by the Court of Appeal in In re Goodman's Trusts (1). If, then, a child of a foreigner, legitimate according to the law of his father's domicil, though illegitimate if his father had been an Englishman, can succeed as next-of-kin to personal estate in England, why should he not take a bequest of personalty by the description of the son of his father in the will of an English testator? On principle, it seems to me very difficult to see why he should not.

However, in Boyes v. Bedale (2), the late Lord Hatherley, in a considered judgment, decided that such a person could not take under a gift to the children of his father. The will, and every term in it, his Lordship held, must be construed according to English law. If in a Canadian will there were a gift of 100*l.*, that would mean 100*l.* Canadian currency, not 100*l.* sterling; so the testator "must be taken to mean a child in the sense in which the law of England understands the term." Speaking with all deference, the illustration seems to me inapt and wanting in analogy. If two countries happen to have the same name for their monetary currency, no one for a moment could suppose that a testator in one of them using the familiar name of the currency of his own country meant by that the currency of different value of the foreign country which happened to have the same name; but how does it follow from this that a gift to the children of a foreigner means such children only as would be legitimate if he had been a domiciled Englishman? A bequest in an English will to the children of A means to the legitimate children; but the rule of construction goes no further. The question remains, who are the legitimate children? That certainly is not a question of construction of the will. It is a question of status. By what law is that status to be determined? That is a question of law. Does that comity of nations which we call international law apply to the case or not? That may be a matter for consideration, but I do not see how the construction of the will has anything to do with it. The matter may be put in another way. What did the testator intend by this gift? That is answered by the rule of construction. He intended A's legitimate children. If you ask the further question, Did he intend his children who would be legitimate according to English law or his actual legitimate children, how can the rule of construction answer that? Lord Hatherley considered that the bequest must be read to such children as would be legitimate according to the law of England if their father had been a domiciled Englishman at their birth. But is that according to the English rule of construction that "children" means legitimate children? Try it thus. Suppose the same rule of construction to prevail in Guernsey, and that in the will of a Guernsey testator there were a bequest to the children of an Englishman. According to Boyes v. Bedale (2), (3) 5 B. & C. 438; 2 Cl. & F. 571; 6 Bligh, N.S. 479; 7 Cl. & F. 895; 6 Bing. N.C. 385; 9 Bligh, N.S. 32; 4 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) K.B. 190.

In re Andros.

children would mean such children as would be legitimate according to the law of Guernsey. By this construction ante nati of the English father would share with his children legitimate according to English law, because they would have been legitimate if the father had been domiciled in Guernsey, though they were, in fact, illegitimate by English, and of course by international, law. This would not carry out, but contravene, the rule of construction. Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in In re Wilson's Trusts (4), expressed his readiness to follow Boyes v. Bedale (2). The facts of that case, however, were not the same. A domiciled Englishman had married an Englishwoman. He went to Scotland, and, without having a Scotch domicil, he sued for and obtained a Scotch divorce, which was not sufficient to dissolve the English marriage. The woman then married in Scotland a domiciled Scotchman, and had children by him, and the question was whether they could be considered legitimate in England. The decision of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley was supported in the House of Lords—Shaw v. Gould (5)—on the ground that international law did not require the English Courts to recognise such a divorce, and therefore the children were not by that law legitimate. That decision does not apply, because it cannot be denied that the children in this case would be recognised as legitimate, for some purposes at any rate, by every other State in Christendom.

These are the two cases most nearly in point on the one side. On the other there are two decisions of Vice-Chancellor Stuart—Goodman v. Goodman (6) and Skottowe v. Young (7). The late Master of the Rolls observes of the former that the point was not there really considered and decided—see In re Goodman's Trusts (1). But, according to the report, it certainly was argued, and the decision was, that ante nati born in England while the father was domiciled here could not take under a gift to them, but that an ante natus born in Holland when the father was domiciled there might take in conjunction with the post nati by the same mother whom he married in that country, thus legitimatising the ante nati there. Skottowe v. Young (7) was a question of legacy duty, but the same point was involved.

Besides these two cases there is the analogy which I have referred to, derivable from the decisions, shewing that a child legitimate by the law of his father's domicil may take as next-of-kin in a succession to personal estate in England.

But, in addition to these considerations, there is the opinion of Lords Justices Cotton and James in the case of In re Goodman's Trusts (1). The former says (p. 440), "In Boyes v. Bedale (2) the question was on the construction of a bequest in the will of a domiciled Englishman to the children of a person named. The Vice-Chancellor held that a child exactly in the same position as Hannah Pieret was not entitled under the bequest. He said that the will, being that of a domiciled Englishman, must be construed according to English law, which, in my opinion, is correct so far as to require that this word 'children' shall be construed 'legitimate children.' But he held that English law recognised as legitimate only those children born in wedlock. This, though correct as regards the children of persons domiciled in England at the time of their birth, is, in my opinion, erroneous as to children born of parents who at the time of the birth were domiciled in a country by the law of which the children were legitimate."

Lord Justice James says the decision in Boyes v. Bedale (2) "was on the ground that in an Englishman's will the children of a nephew must mean children who would be lawful children if they were English children. That seems to me a violent presumption. It was an accident in that case that the testator was an Englishman. But supposing it had been the will of a Frenchman, dying domiciled in England, and made in favour of his French relations and their children, or of his own children, there being children legitimate and legitimated, what would have been said of such a presumption and such a construction?"

(4) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 243; Law Rep. 1 Eq. 247.
(5) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 433; Law Rep. 3 E. & Ir. App. 55.
(6) 3 Giff. 643.
(7) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 366; Law Rep. 11 Eq. 474.

In re Andros.

The decision in In re Goodman's Trusts (1) overruled the late Master of the Rolls, and was dissented from by Lord Justice Lush.

This conflict of authority leaves me free to decide this case according to my own opinion, which is in favour of the plaintiff's claim.

I observe that the testator describes the objects of his bounty not merely as the sons of his deceased nephew Thomas Godfrey Andros, but also as his own great-nephews; but that, in my opinion, makes no difference. The law of this country, by the comity of nations, recognises the plaintiff as legitimate, and therefore he is as much the lawful nephew of the testator as he is the lawful son of T. G. Andros.

The law, as I understand it, is that a bequest of personalty in an English will to the children of a foreigner means to his legitimate children, and that by international law, as recognised in this country, those children are legitimate whose legitimacy is fixed by the law of the father's domicil. Thus ante nati, whose father was domiciled in Guernsey at their birth, and subsequently married the mother, so as to make the ante nati legitimate by the law of Guernsey, are recognised as legitimate by the law of this country, and can take under such a gift.

Solicitors—Burton, Yeates, Hart & Burton, for all parties.

KAY, J. 1883. July 16.

MILES v. JARVIS.

Will — Construction — Contingent Remainder or Executory Devise—Devise to Children living at Death of Tenant-for-Life or "thereafter to be born."

A testator, who died in 1860, devised freehold hereditaments to his wife for life, and from and after her decease unto all and every the children of his son "living at the time of the decease of his (the testator's) said wife or thereafter to be born" equally as tenants in common. The son had several children, some born before, and some after, the death of the testator's widow:—Held, that the gift in remainder was an executory devise and not a contingent remainder, and that, therefore, all the children of the son whenever born were entitled to share.

In re Lechmere and Lloyd (Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 524) followed. Brackenbury v. Gibbons (Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 417) not followed.

The testator, R. Jarvis, who died in April, 1860, made his will dated the 14th of December, 1858, and by a codicil thereto dated the 10th of June, 1859, devised a certain farm and hereditaments to his wife for life, and from and after her decease unto all and every the lawful children of his son William Jarvis living at the time of the decease of his (the testator's) said wife or thereafter to be born, in equal shares as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever.

The testator's widow died on the 19th of November, 1867. At the time of her decease there were six children of William Jarvis living. Subsequently to the death of the widow William Jarvis had four other children.

This was an action by the three eldest children of William Jarvis, as plaintiffs, against the other children, as defendants, for a partition or sale of the farm and hereditaments so devised.

The question for the decision of the Court was whether or not the children of William Jarvis born after the death of the testator's widow were entitled to share.

Oswald, for the plaintiffs.—The gift in remainder after the life interest of the widow is a contingent remainder. The rule is that no gift which can take effect as a contingent remainder shall be treated as an executory devise. That is a rule of law, and not merely a rule of construction. The present case is almost exactly similar to Brackenbury v. Gibbons (1), where the gift was to the children who either before or after the death of the tenant-for-life should attain twenty-one, or die under that age leaving issue, and Hall, V.C., held that the gift was a contingent remainder, and that therefore children who attained twenty-one after the death of the tenant-for-life were not entitled to share. It is no objection to the application of the rule that it will defeat the apparent intention of the testator—see Rhodes v. Whitehead (2) and Holmes v. Prescott (3).

(1) Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 417.

It must be admitted that in In re Lechmere and Lloyd (4), where the terms of the gift were almost identical with those of the gift in Brackenbury v. Gibbons (1), Jessel, M.R., declined to follow that case, on the ground that the gift was not one which could take effect as a contingent remainder, because, if it were so construed, the children attaining twenty-one subsequently to the death of the tenant-for-life would be excluded contrary to the express words of the will; and he held, therefore, that the rule did not apply to such a gift, which must consequently be construed as an executory devise. But it is submitted that his lordship did not have sufficient regard to the fact that the rule is a rule of law.

He referred also to Jarman on Wills, vol. i. p. 264, and Hayes and Jarman's Concise Forms of Wills, 9th ed. p. 216, note.

Langworthy and Langley, for the defendants, were not called on.

KAY, J., read the codicil, and continued:—Now, first of all, what is the meaning of the words "all and every the lawful children of my son living at the time of the decease of my wife or thereafter to be born"? I think their meaning is plain. The words signify "whether living at the death of my wife or thereafter to be born," and it is not a gift in the alternative to the children living at the death of the wife or born afterwards. That is made abundantly clear by the use of the words "all and every" at the beginning of the gift. I am clearly of opinion that those words include both the children living at the death of the tenant-for-life and those afterwards born. Well, then, is that a contingent remainder, or an executory devise? Of course, if it were a contingent remainder, there would be a difficulty as to letting in children "thereafter to be born," who would be excluded from participating. But is that the true mode of construing this will? In Brackenbury v. Gibbons (1), under a limitation in very similar terms, that mode of construction was adopted. The limitation was to the child or children of the testator's daughter, who either before or after her death should attain twenty-one, or die under that age leaving issue, in fee as tenants in common, and Vice-Chancellor Hall said that the rule was that "every gift which can take effect as a remainder absolutely excludes its being treated as an executory devise," and held that the whole vested in the children who attained twenty-one before the death of the tenant-for-life, to the exclusion of those who attained that age subsequently. Now a similar case came before the late Master of the Rolls in In re Lechmere and Lloyd (4), where the gift was to such of the children of the testatrix's granddaughter living at her death as either before or after her decease should, being males, attain twenty-one, or, being females, attain that age or marry. The Master of the Rolls declined to follow the decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall, and adopted the construction that the gift was not a contingent remainder but an executory devise, and so let in the members of the class who attained twenty-one, or, being females, married after the death of the tenant-for-life. The question is, which of those two decisions I ought to follow. I shall follow that which seems to my reason to be best in point of law. It seems to me that in the present case the class indicated could not possibly take by way of contingent remainder. The class, as I have said, in effect, consists of all the children of the son who should be living at the death of the tenant-for-life or should thereafter be born. Now it is not possible that the whole of that class of persons could take by way of contingent remainder. The children "thereafter to be born" could only take, if at all, by way of executory devise. Therefore, it seems to me that the present case does not come

(2) 2 Dr. & S. 532.
(3) 10 Jur. N.S. 507; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 264.
(4) Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 524.

within the rule of law that a gift which can take effect by way of contingent remainder shall not be construed to be an executory devise, but that this is a gift which cannot take effect by way of contingent remainder. I must say I am very glad to be able to come to that conclusion, because if I came to a contrary conclusion I should absolutely defeat the very words of the testator and render ineffectual his gift to as many of the children as should thereafter be born. I hold that this gift takes effect by way of executory devise, because I cannot give effect to it if I construe it as a contingent remainder. There must be a declaration that the children of the testator's son, whether born in the lifetime of the testator's widow or after her death, are entitled to share.

Solicitors—Storey & Cowland, agents for Sadd & Linay, Norwich, for plaintiffs; Whites, Renard & Co., agents for Emerson, Norwich, for defendants.

KAY, J.
1883.
June 26, 27.
July 13.

In re CRESSWELL. PARKIN v. CRESSWELL.

Will—Construction—Contingent Future Interest, Transmissibility of—Heirlooms—Tenant-in-tail—Heirlooms and Personal Estate vesting in Tenant-in-tail not indefeasibly entitled.

A testator directed that certain chattels should be considered as heirlooms, and should pass with his real estate in the same manner as if they were an estate of inheritance at common law, and should so continue annexed to his real estate as long as the law would permit. He devised and bequeathed all his real and residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for R. C. for life, and after his decease for his sons successively in tail male; and then upon trust for H. C., the eldest son of J. C., for life, and after his decease for his sons successively in tail male; and then upon trust for "the next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said H. C.," for life, and after his decease upon trust for "the first and other sons of the body of the said next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said H. C." successively in tail male; and in default of such issue, upon trust for the testator's own right heirs. R. C. and H. C. both died without having married. G. C. was the next eldest son of J. C., who survived H. C. F. J. C., who was the eldest son of G. C., died an infant in the lifetime of R. C. and H. C.:— Held, that notwithstanding that F. J. C. died before it was ascertained whether his father would survive H. C., or whether there would be issue male of R. C. or H. C., the heirlooms and residuary personal estate vested absolutely in the legal personal representative of F. J. C.

Hogg v. Jones (32 Beav. 45; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 361) distinguished.

The testator, Daniel Cresswell, who died on the 21st of March, 1844, by his will dated the 24th of April, 1839, gave to his wife during her natural life the care and custody of all his books and plate, and from and after her decease directed that they should be considered as heirlooms, and should pass with his real estate in Edale, in the county of Derby, in the same manner as if they were an estate of inheritance at common law, and should so continue annexed to his said real estate as long as the law would permit, to be inherited by the several persons who should succeed to his said real estate in the manner thereinafter mentioned; and the testator gave and devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife during life or widowhood, and from and after her decease or second marriage upon trust for Robert Cresswell for life, and after his decease upon trust for his first and other sons successively in tail male, and in default of such issue upon the following trusts:—"Upon trust for Henry Cresswell, the eldest son of my cousin Joseph Cresswell, of Huddersfield, in the county of York, and his assigns, for and during his natural life without impeachment of waste, and in the meantime to permit and suffer him and them to receive the rents, dividends, interest and proceeds thereof; and from and immediately after his decease upon trust for the first and other sons of the body of the said Henry Cresswell lawfully begotten, severally, successively and in remainder, according to priority of birth, and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies lawfully issuing, the eldest of such sons and the heirs male of his body lawfully issuing always to be preferred to and to take before the younger of such son and sons and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies; and in default of such issue, then upon trust for the next eldest son of the said Joseph Cresswell who shall survive the said Henry Cresswell and his assigns, for and during his natural life, without impeachment of waste, and in the meantime to permit and suffer him and them to receive the rents, dividends, interest and proceeds thereof, and from and immediately after his decease, upon trust for the first and other sons of the body of the said next eldest son of the said Joseph Cresswell who shall survive the said Henry Cresswell, lawfully begotten, severally, successively and in remainder, according to priority of birth, and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies lawfully issuing, the eldest of such sons and the heirs male of his body lawfully issuing always to be preferred to and to take before the younger of such son and sons and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies; and in default of such issue, then upon trust for my own right heirs for ever."

In re Cresswell.

Joseph Cresswell, the testator's cousin in the will named, died in 1842, in the testator's lifetime. He had five sons—namely, Henry (in the will named), Charles, George, William and Thomas.

Robert Cresswell was the testator's heir-at-law; he died on the 6th of April, 1863, without having been married. The defendant G. P. Belcher was his legal personal representative. The real estate, which was vested in Robert Cresswell at the time of his death, had become vested in G. P. Belcher and Frederick Cresswell.

Henry Cresswell died on the 23rd of July, 1874, without having married. His brothers Charles and William died in his lifetime without having married. His brother Thomas also died in his lifetime, but left children. His brother George (hereinafter called George Cresswell the elder) alone survived him, and thereby became "the next eldest son of Joseph Cresswell, who survived" Henry.

George Cresswell the elder died on the 21st of April, 1879, having had three sons, all of whom died in infancy. The eldest of these sons was Frederick John Cresswell, who was born on the 15th of December, 1859, and died on the 10th of January, 1860, and who, accordingly, was the first tenant-in-tail coming into existence according to the limitations in the testator's will.

Thomas Cresswell had three sons—namely, Thomas Cresswell the younger, who died in infancy, the defendant George Cresswell and Walter Newton Cresswell.

In the year 1879, John Parkin, who was then the sole surviving trustee of the testator's will, instituted this action against the defendants George Cresswell and G. P. Belcher, and claimed to have the trusts of the will remaining unperformed carried into execution under the direction of the Court; and on the 6th of March, 1880, judgment was given, and certain accounts and enquiries were directed.

The plaintiff John Parkin died on the 15th of September, 1880; and by an order made in the action on the 30th of November, 1880, his widow and legal personal representative, Mary Ann Parkin, was made a party to the action in his stead.

The action now came on on further consideration, and one of the questions to be determined was in whom the residuary personal estate and heirlooms respectively bequeathed by the will were now vested. No question calling for a report arose in respect of the real estate.

Ingle Joyce, for the plaintiff, submitted the case to the Court.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Elgood, for the defendant George Cresswell.

Methold, for the legal personal representative of Frederick John Cresswell.—The residuary personal estate and the heirlooms, on the birth of Frederick John Cresswell, vested absolutely in him as first tenant-in-tail of the real estate.

First, as to the residuary personal estate. The title to that depends upon the question whether or not the contingent interest of Frederick John was transmissible. It is submitted that it was transmissible, notwithstanding that he died in the lifetime of Henry, and before it was known whether his father would survive Henry and his life estate take effect—Pelham v. Gregory (1). There is nothing to prevent an estate being given to a man in the event of something taking place after the man's death—Stanley v. Wise (2) and Pinbury v. Elkin (3).

[KAY, J.—Where there is no contingency of person it often happens that a contingent interest is transmissible; but does it ever happen where there is a contingency of person?]

There is no contingency here as regards the person to take. It is merely that the contingency upon the happening of which the gift was to take effect has happened after the death of the donee. The estate tail of Frederick John simply depended on the collateral event whether or not his father survived the preceding tenant-for-life. Considering the gift as to the real estate only, suppose Frederick John, dying before Henry, had left a son who survived Henry and George—would not that son have taken under the gift? He could not have taken per formam doni: he must take by descent: he must come in under the estate tail; and that is made more clear by the terms of the gift over, which must mean "in default of all the issue coming in under the estate tail." It is impossible to say that the estate tail failed merely by reason of the accident of Henry outliving Frederick John. Again, suppose Frederick John had attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of Henry and George—surely he could have disentailed the real estate. Therefore that shews that Frederick John must, so far as the real estate goes, have taken an estate tail, and therefore he must take an absolute interest as regards the personal estate.

Then as to the heirlooms. By the terms of the will the heirlooms are simply to pass with the real estate, and there is no proviso limiting the operation of the gift to the case of tenants-in-tail attaining twenty-one or of tenants-in-tail in possession. The heirlooms therefore vested absolutely in Frederick John. He referred to Harrington v. Harrington (4), Gosling v. Gosling (5), Christie v. Gosling (6) and Fearne on Contingent Remainders (7).

Kekewich, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, for the defendant G. P. Belcher, the executor of Robert Cresswell.—We claim the residuary personal estate and heirlooms. The interest of Frederick John in the personal estate was not transmissible; and therefore, on the decease of George Cresswell, the personal estate passed under the gift to the testator's own right heirs, and vested in Robert Cresswell, and devolved upon his executor. In effect, the contingency was such that it was necessary that the eldest son of George, as well as George himself, should be living at the death of Henry. No doubt if Frederick John had been alive one moment after the death of Henry the gift would have vested; but it could not vest in him before it was ascertained that his father would become "the next eldest son of the said Joseph Cresswell who shall survive the said Henry Cresswell." The contingency is a contingency of the person, and nothing could vest until it was ascertained that Frederick John would answer the description of being the son of a person who survived Henry. The contrary contention in fact involves the fallacy that a gift to the eldest son of A, A being unascertained, is a gift to an ascertained person. The heirlooms could not vest absolutely in Frederick John for the same reason, and also for the further reason that even if he did attain a vested interest, it was never indefeasibly vested, because it was at all times liable to be defeated by male issue of Robert or Henry Cresswell coming into existence. The rule is, that where heirlooms are settled upon trusts declared by reference to limitations of real estate, the heirlooms do not vest in any tenant-in-tail unless his interest is inde-

(1) 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 204.
(2) 1 Cox, 432.
(3) 1 P. Wms. 563.
(4) 10 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 716; Law Rep. 5 H.L. Cas. 87.
(5) 1 De Gex, J. & S. 1; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 233.
(6) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 667; Law Rep. 1 E. & Ir. App. 279.
(7) 10th ed. p. 364.

feasible. See Theobald on Wills (8) and Hogg v. Jones (9).

[KAY, J., observed that the decision in Hogg v. Jones (9) turned upon the words "actual possession and enjoyment" there used, indicating that the heirlooms were only to vest in a tenant-in-tail who came into actual possession of the realty.]

They referred also to Leeming v. Sherratt (10).

P. B. Lambert, for the next-of-kin of the testator, pointed out that in Hogg v. Jones (9) Romilly, M.R. (11), used language clearly intimating the opinion that in every case where the interest of a tenant-in-tail is defeasible during the whole period of his life—which was the case here—chattels in the nature of heirlooms cannot vest in him absolutely. He referred also to Martelli v. Holloway (12).

Rigby, Q.C., and A. Bailey, for Frederick Cresswell.

Cur. adv. vult.

KAY, J. (on July 13), after stating the facts of the case as above set out, continued:—The question is, whether the contingent interest of the eldest son of George in the testator's personal estate was transmissible, or whether the contingency was such that it was necessary that the eldest son of George, as well as George himself, should be living at the death of Henry.

If the gift had been to a person by name—as, for example, to A—in case his father should be living at the death of Henry, this interest, although contingent, would undoubtedly have been transmissible—Anon. (13), King v. Withers (14), Pinbury v. Elkin (3), Chauncy v. Graydon (15), Stanley v. Wise (2) and Taylor v. Graham (16); so, if the gift had been to the eldest son of George (naming the father), in case George should be living at the death of Henry. But the peculiarity of this limitation is that it is a gift to the eldest son, not necessarily of George, but of the next eldest son of Joseph who should survive Henry, so that no one could be sure until the death of Henry whose son would take under the limitation.

However, this does not make the surviving of Henry any part of the description of the person who was to take the absolute interest; and the eldest son of George, or the eldest son of a brother of George, had during the life of Henry a contingent interest, which might be determined in his favour if his father happened to be the next eldest son of Joseph who survived Henry.

As far as I can discover, the only case in which a contingent future interest is not transmissible is where the being in existence when the contingency happens is an essential part of the description of the person who is to take. If in this case it had been a gift to the next eldest son of Joseph who shall survive Henry, for his life, with remainder to his eldest son who shall also survive Henry—under such words, obviously, surviving Henry would be an essential part of the description of the legatee, and only the eldest son who did so survive would be entitled. But the argument seeks to add to the description of the legatee additional words of contingency, making it necessary that he should be living at the death of Henry, which are not to be found in the will.

Another mode of trying the case is to consider what must be the effect of this limitation upon the real estate comprised in it. It is well settled that the transmissibility of contingent interests is a doctrine applying equally to real and personal estate, and, in the case of real estate, to contingent remainders as well as executory devises—see Fearne on Contingent Remainders (17). In Butler's note (18) the doctrine is stated thus: "A contingent remainder of inheritance is transmissible to the heirs of the person to whom it is limited, if such person chance to die before the contingency happens, ex-

(8) 2nd ed. p. 552.
(9) 32 Beav. 45; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 361.
(10) 2 Ha. 14; 11 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 423.
(11) 32 Beav. at p. 53; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. at p. 364.
(12) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 26; Law Rep. 5 E. & Ir. App. 532.
(13) 2 Vent. 347.
(14) Ca. t. Talbot, 116.
(15) 2 Atk. 616.
(16) Law Rep. 3 App. Cas. 1287.
(17) 10th ed. pp. 364–371.
(18) Ibid. p. 364.

In re Cresswell.

cept the existence of the devisee of the contingent interest at some particular time may by implication enter and make a part of the contingency itself upon which such interest is intended to take effect."

Now suppose that George had survived Henry, having at Henry's death a grandson living, son of his deceased eldest son, and having also a second son living—would the grandson or the second son of George take the estate tail in remainder, subject to the life interest of George? It seems to me impossible to doubt that the grandson would take an estate tail with remainder in tail to the second son of George. But the grandson could only take as heir in tail to his deceased father, the eldest son of George, whose contingent estate was transmitted to him.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the eldest son of George had a contingent interest in the testator's personal estate transmissible to his legal personal representative, and that it devolved, upon the death of George, to the legal personal representative of his deceased eldest son.

A similar question arises upon the limitation of the heirlooms in this will. They are given to the testator's wife for life, and after her death to be considered as heirlooms, and to pass with the testator's real estate in Edale, in the county of Derby, in the same manner as if they had been an estate of inheritance at common law. [His Lordship read the words of the will, and continued:] This would entitle the first tenant-in-tail by purchase to the heirlooms absolutely — Gosling v. Gosling (5) and Christie v. Gosling (6); and the question as to them becomes the same as that concerning the other settled personal estate. A case of Hogg v. Jones (9) was much relied on, in which the limitation was "to the person who for the time being shall be in the actual possession and enjoyment of my freehold estates under the limitations of my will." A tenant-in-tail came into existence, whose estate was liable to be defeated by the birth of a son of a preceding tenant-for-life. It never was so defeated; but it did not come into possession during his lifetime, for he died before that life estate determined, leaving a son who would have been heir-in-tail in possession, if his father had not barred the estate tail. Lord Romilly held this son entitled to the heirlooms, and he used language which certainly intimated an opinion that his father could not be, because his estate was defeasible, though it was never in fact defeated. It is enough to say that the decision, which was upon the effect of the words "actual possession and enjoyment," does not affect this case.

The result at which I have arrived is that in the events which have happened the eldest son of George was entitled to an estate tail by purchase, which would have been transmitted to his issue in tail, and would have vested at the death of Henry in any such issue then living, subject to the life interest of George.

In the same manner, at the death of Henry, the personal estate and the heirlooms vested in the legal personal representative of such eldest son, subject, of course, to the life estate of his father George.

Solicitors—Gregory & Co., agents for J. S. Kingdon, Wirksworth, for plaintiffs; Tyas & Huntington; Iliffe & Co., for other parties.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
April 26.

Ex parte IZARD; in re CHAPPLE.

Bill of Sale—Registration—Order and Disposition—Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 20; 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3 and 15—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 15. sub-s. 5.

On the 18*th of September*, 1882, a debtor executed a bill of sale of his furniture, &c. The deed was registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. The debtor remained in possession of the goods until the 2*nd of November*, 1882, when he filed a liquidation petition. By section 15 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, section 20 of the Act of 1878, by virtue of which the registration of a bill of sale takes the goods out of the order and disposition of the grantor, is repealed; but section 3 of the Act of 1882 provides that that Act shall not, "unless the context otherwise requires," apply to any bill of sale duly registered before the commencement of the Act (1*st of November*, 1882) and of which the registration is subsisting:— Held, that the effect of section 3 was to continue the protection afforded by section 20, and that the bill of sale holder was entitled to the goods as against the trustee in the liquidation.

Ex parte Izard; in re Chapple, App.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Murray sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. By a bill of sale, dated the 18th of September, 1882, and registered on the 20th of September, Edward Chapple assigned his furniture, stock-in-trade, &c., to Betts, to secure a sum of 260*l.*

The goods remained in the actual possession of Chapple until the 2nd of November, 1882, when he filed a liquidation petition. On the 16th of December the creditors resolved upon a liquidation by arrangement, and a trustee was appointed. Betts having taken possession of the goods comprised in his bill of sale, the trustee applied to the Court for an order directing Betts to deliver the goods to him. In support of his application the trustee contended that section 20 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (which provides that "chattels comprised in a bill of sale which has been and continues to be duly registered under this Act shall not be deemed to be in the possession, order or disposition of the grantor of the bill of sale within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869"), had been repealed by section 15 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, as from the 1st of November, 1882, and that therefore, at the date of the commencement of the liquidation, the goods were in the order and disposition of the debtor. The application was refused by the Registrar, and the trustee now appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for the appellant.—By section 15 of the Act of 1882 section 20 of the Act of 1878 is repealed, as regards transactions taking place after the commencement of the later Act. The exception in section 3 does not apply to "order and disposition," because that only affects the title of the bill of sale holder, and not the validity of the bill of sale.

Section 20 enabled a bill of sale holder to get rid of a certain presumption of fact, and by the repeal of that section the presumption again arises.

Whereas before the 1st of November, 1882 (the date when the Act came into operation), registration of a bill of sale took the property out of the order and disposition of the grantor, after that date it did not. The exception introduced by section 3 was intended to apply only to the period between the passing of the Act and the date of its coming into operation.

Winslow, Q.C., and Lyon, for the bill of sale holder, were not called upon.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued:—At the time of the execution of the bill of sale the Act of 1878 was in force, and the deed was duly registered under that Act. As is well known, that Act contained the following clause. [His Lordship read section 20.] In 1882 another Act was passed, which, inter alia, repealed section 20 of the Act of 1878. Now the argument is this—that, by reason of that repeal coming into operation, the protection afforded to the bill of sale holder was removed as from the 1st of November, 1882, the date of the commencement of the Act, and that on that day the goods came into the order and disposition of the debtor. Now the 3rd section of the Act of 1882 says this. [His Lordship read the section.] I read that section as if it had said, "Unless the context otherwise requires, section 15 of this Act shall not apply to any bill of sale registered before the commencement of this Act, so long as the registration is not avoided." Now what does the 15th section say? [His Lordship read the section.] In other words, section 15 provides that from henceforth section 20 of the Act of 1878 (the section which afforded protection to the bill of sale holder) is repealed, and were it not for the words of section 3 I should have said that as from the 1st of November, as regards bills of sale already registered under the Act of 1878, as well as future bills of sale, section 20 was absolutely done away with,

Ex parte Izard; in re Chapple, App.

But section 3 says that section 15 is not to apply to any bill of sale duly registered before the commencement of the Act of 1882, "unless the context otherwise requires." The words are as clear as possible. Is there anything in the context which "otherwise requires" in the present case? I can see nothing. I think, therefore, the language of section 3 is sufficient to relieve the holder of the bill of sale from the penalty to which he would have been exposed by virtue of section 15 if section 3 had not introduced the exception to which I have alluded. The appeal therefore fails, and must be dismissed, with costs.

LINDLEY, L.J. — I am of the same opinion. The question really turns upon the true construction of sections 3 and 15 of the Act of 1882. Section 15 simply repeals section 20 of the Act of 1878, which provided that the title of a registered bill of sale holder should not be liable to be defeated by the order and disposition clause of the Bankruptcy Act—that is to say, the assignee under a registered bill of sale was to be taken to have signified his dissent from the goods being in the order and disposition of the grantor. Section 15 is perhaps a little ambiguous, but when we look at section 3 the ambiguity is removed. When section 3 says, "unless the context otherwise requires," I apprehend the context of the Act of 1882 is meant. Does, then, the repeal of section 20 by section 15 come within the words of section 3? Can you, consistently with section 3, hold that the title of the holder of a bill of sale registered before the commencement of the Act of 1882 is destroyed by reason of the repeal effected by section 15? It appears to me that that would be straining the language of the section. I quite see that the validity of the bill of sale is not in one sense affected, but we should be forcing the language of section 3 if we were to hold that it does not relate to the question of order and disposition, because the order and disposition clause does not apply to the bill of sale as such, but only to the title of the bill of sale holder to the goods. It appears to me that a registered bill of sale is still protected.

FRY, L.J.—I agree. It seems to me plain that section 3 was intended to prevent the application of the Act of 1882 to a bill of sale previously registered under the Act of 1878, "unless the context otherwise requires." Now, does the context otherwise require? It appears to me that it does not. The Act of 1882 is not intended to be a code applying to all bills of sale, but certain bills of sale are excepted from its operation. All absolute bills of sale are excepted; and in my opinion all bills of sale which were, previously to the 1st of November, 1882, duly registered under the Act of 1878, are also excepted, "unless the context otherwise requires." In the present case I think the context does not "otherwise require." I agree, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors—Wood & Wootton, for the trustee; Alfred Ashley, for the holder of the bill of sale.

KAY, J. 1883. June 3.

In re HALLETT to MARTIN.

Will—Power to grant Building and other Leases—Defective Exercise of Power—Statutory Aid—12 & 13 Vict. c. 26.

Under a will which empowered the trustees thereby appointed to grant building leases for ninety-nine years at increasing rentals, and ordinary leases for twenty-one years at the best rents which could be obtained, and provided that a lease granted under either power might contain an option of purchase by the lessee, the trustees demised to C. a piece of freehold and a piece of leasehold land for thirty-five years, at a nominal rent as to both for the first quarter, and afterwards, as to the freehold at an increasing rent, and as to the leasehold at a fixed rent. The lessee did not covenant to build, but only to repair all buildings erected or to be erected on the land, and to insure; and the lease gave him an option of purchase as to any part of the premises during the first twenty-one years.

In re Hallett.

In exercise of this option, C. purchased the leasehold portion of the land, which was accordingly assigned to him. Doubts having afterwards arisen as to the validity of the lease, a notice was indorsed upon it, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, and signed by C. and the trustees of the will, declaring that the lease should be considered in equity as a contract to grant a valid lease under the power to grant ordinary leases.

Upon the sale by C. of the leasehold land purchased by him, objection was taken to the title on the ground that the lease, not being a building lease, and being granted for more than twenty-one years, was an invalid exercise of the power:—

Held, that, inasmuch as the lease did not contain any covenant to build, it was invalid as a building lease; that the defect could not be remedied under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, by turning that which was a lease of one kind into a contract for a lease of another kind; and that, even if that could be done, the lease would still be invalid, in consequence of the rent reserved in respect of the freehold portion being an increasing rent, which was not in accordance with the power to grant leases other than building leases. Held, also, that the lease being bad, the option of purchase was ineffectual and could not be exercised.

William Hallett, by his will dated the 13th of March, 1862, devised and bequeathed to trustees certain freehold and leasehold lands at Brighton, upon trusts therein mentioned, and he gave his trustees power to grant a lease or leases of any part or parts of the trust premises, with or without an option of purchase, and also to make and execute any lease or leases thereof, either for the erection of any building or buildings, or for any other purpose whatsoever, for such term or terms of years, under such rents, and with such covenants, clauses, provisoes, stipulations and agreements as his said trustees should think reasonable and proper; but so, nevertheless, that no lease of the site of any messuage or other building or work should be made for any longer term than ninety-nine years, and that no such lease to be made for any other purpose should be made for any longer term than twenty-one years, such terms of years respectively to commence and take effect in possession on the granting of the lease, or within twelve calendar months next thereafter, and not otherwise in reversion or by way of future interest, and so that upon each and every such lease there should be reserved the best and most improved yearly rent or rents that could or might be reasonably had or gotten for the same, having regard to the covenants therein contained on the part of the lessee. But he thereby expressly declared that the rent or rents to be reserved in any such building lease might, during the first two years of the term thereby granted, be of a nominal amount, and might be made to increase progressively if his said trustees should think proper, and so that no fine, premium or foregift be had or taken for the making or granting of any such lease, or for any contract for the same, and so that in every such lease there be contained a condition for re-entry, on non-payment of the rent or rents to be thereby reserved by the space of twenty-one days next after the same should become payable, and so that the lessee or lessees in every such lease should execute a counterpart thereof.

The testator died in April, 1862.

By an indenture of lease dated the 8th of May, 1862, the trustees, acting under the powers conferred upon them by the will, demised to John Chester Craven—first, a piece of freehold land, and, secondly, a piece of leasehold land, for the term of thirty-five years, from the 25th of December last, he yielding and paying for both the said pieces of land unto the lessors, for the first quarter of the year the rent of one peppercorn, and thereafter, as to the piece of freehold land, for seven years, from the 25th of March last, a yearly rent of 275*l.* 5*s.*; for the next seven years, a yearly rent of 412*l.* 7*s.* 6*d*; and for the residue of the said term, a yearly rent of 688*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; and for the piece of leasehold land throughout the term the yearly rent of 125*l.*

The lessee did not enter into any covenant to build; but he covenanted that he would during the said term well and substantially repair, support, amend and keep all messuages and buildings erected or to be erected on any part of the said pieces of land, and that he would insure all messuages or buildings erected or to be erected on the said pieces of land. Clause 10 of the lease provided that the lessee should be at liberty at any time during the first twenty-one years of the said term to have conveyances of any portion of the said freehold piece of land at the rate of 600*l.* per acre, but no purchase should be for a less aggregate sum than 1,000*l.*, but the land purchased at any one time might be in one or more conveyance or conveyances; and the said lessee might during the said twenty-one years purchase the said leasehold piece of ground for 3,000*l.* for all the said lessors' then term therein, subject to the ground-rent of 20*l.* per annum and to the lessee's covenants and agreements in the original lease contained, such purchase-moneys being payable to the said lessors, and not less than one calendar month's notice in writing should be given to the said lessors for such purpose.

In re Hallett.

Craven, having entered into possession of the demised premises on the 11th of August, 1882, gave notice to the lessors of his election to purchase the piece of leasehold land demised by the said indenture of lease, according to the terms therein declared; and by an indenture dated the 28th of August, 1882, the trustees assigned the said piece of leasehold land to Craven for the residue of their term, and subject to the said ground-rent. A question having been raised whether the lease of the 8th of May, 1862, was in strict conformity with the power contained in the will, a notice of option was indorsed on the lease and counterpart, and signed by the lessors and Craven, by which, after reciting (inter alia) the powers of leasing contained in the will, and that it had been suggested that the within-written lease was invalid by reason of deviation from the terms of the powers (such deviation being that the term thereby granted was longer than twenty-one years), Craven, pursuant to the Act 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, elected and declared that the within-written lease should (if and so far as it was invalid by reason of any deviation, whether thereinbefore referred to or not, from the terms of the power in the intended exercise of which it was granted) be considered in equity as a contract for a valid lease under the last-mentioned power.

By an indenture dated the 29th of December, 1882, Craven assigned a portion of the leasehold land to F. H. Hallett for the then residue of the term of ninety-nine years, discharged from the yearly ground-rent of 20*l.*

Hallett then contracted with the trustees of the Brighton racecourse for the sale to them of the last-mentioned piece of land. Upon delivery of the abstract of title, the purchasers raised the objection that the lease of the 8th of May, 1882, was not a building lease, inasmuch as it contained no covenant to build; and that, not being a building lease, it was granted for a longer term than was authorised by the power, and that the rent was not consistent with the terms of the power.

Hallett then took out this summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to have it declared that a good title was shewn by the abstract.

W. Pearson, Q.C., and W. Renshaw, for the summons.—The defect in the lease, if there be any, is remedied by the notice indorsed upon the lease and counterpart under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, the effect of which is to enable the lease to operate as a binding contract for a lease for twenty-one years—Sugden on Powers (8th ed.), 571, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 17.

W. F. Robinson, Q.C., and C. T. Simpson, for the purchasers.—The lease is not a building lease, as it contains no covenant to build—Jones v. Verney (1); and, being granted for a term exceeding twenty-one years, it is bad, as an exercise of the power to grant leases other than building leases. A lease which is invalid as one kind of lease cannot be rendered valid under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, by being turned into a contract for a lease of a different nature—Farwell on Powers, 285.

W. Renshaw, in reply.

KAY, J.—I am afraid I must allow the objection, and I do so with all the reluctance possible, because my inclination is to make it possible, as far as I can, for the parties to carry out a purchase and sale of this kind, as the matter seems entirely bona fide.

(1) Willes, 169.

In re Hallett.

In this case—there being two powers in the will of the testator, one to grant ordinary leases for twenty-one years and the other to grant building leases for a longer term than twenty-one years, which building leases might have increasing rentals, whereas the other leases were to be at the best rents that could be obtained in the ordinary way, and the leases might contain an option of purchase—a lease of this kind was granted, reciting that the trustees have power, under the said will, of granting building leases for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years, with purchasing clauses—that is the only reference I can find to the power at all. Then a lease was granted of two pieces of land—one a piece of freehold land, and the other a piece of leasehold land partly adjoining—as I understand, for a term of thirty-five years, which term was longer than the trustees had power to grant, except as a building lease. Then I find that, as to both pieces of land, for the first quarter of the year there was to be a rent only of a peppercorn; and thereafter, as to the freehold land, for seven years 275*l.*, for the next seven years 412*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and for the residue of the term 688*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; and for the leasehold part of the land, from the 25th of March last, a yearly rent of 125*l.* Then the lease contains no covenant to build, but it does contain covenants to repair, maintain, support, amend and keep all messuages, buildings erected or to be erected on any part of the said land, and to insure; and then, in clause 10, it contains a declaration and agreement that the lessee should be at liberty, at any time during the first twenty-one years of the said term, to have a conveyance of any portion of the said freehold piece of land at the rate of 600*l.* per acre, no purchase to be for a less aggregate sum than 1,000*l.*; and the lessee might, during the said twenty-one years, purchase the said leasehold piece of land for 3,000*l.* for all the term, subject to a ground-rent of 20*l.* a year and to the lessee's covenant contained in the original lease. Then, by clause 11, on the purchase of half the freehold land, there was to be an apportionment of the rent.

Now, the first question is, What was that lease intended to be? Was it intended to be a building lease or an ordinary lease? I have these indications—the recital that the lessors had power to grant building leases, the term being thirty-five years, which is larger than they had power to grant, except in building leases; and these covenants concerning buildings to be erected upon the land, which are proper in a building lease, and quite unusual in any other except a building lease. But there is an absence of any covenant to build. The internal evidence seems to me to be too strong for it to be doubted that it was not intended to be an ordinary lease—an agricultural lease, or any other kind of lease other than a building lease. Then what took place afterwards was this. It seems that the lessee exercised his option of purchase as to the leasehold part only; and having exercised that option of purchase, he sells his interest to another person. Thereupon a doubt appears to be raised as to whether this lease is a good lease. Accordingly, a mode to remedy the lease is adopted, which, to state it shortly, is this. Availing themselves of the Act of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, they treat this lease as though it were not a building lease but a lease under the other power, and amend the defect of its being for thirty-five years instead of twenty-one—or, rather, the lessee intimates by a memorandum indorsed upon the lease that he is willing the lease shall be treated as a contract for a lease for twenty-one years. But still I must look at the Act, and see whether it is possible in that way, under the Act, to turn a building lease into something else which is not a building lease. The Act merely says this—after reciting that leases are sometimes invalid by reason of the omission of some condition or restriction, or by reason of a deviation from the terms of powers, the second clause—reading it shortly—enacts that where, in an intended exercise of any such power of leasing, a lease has been or shall be granted which is, by reason of the non-observance or omission of some restriction, or by reason of any other deviation from the terms of such power, invalid, such lease, in case the same has been made bona fide, and the lessee has entered, shall be considered in equity as a contract for the grant, at the request of the lessee of a valid lease under such power, to the like purport and effect as such invalid lease, save so far as any variation may be necessary in order to comply with the terms of such power. But that obviously means that where, under a power reserved to grant a building lease, a building lease has been granted in which there is some defect which can in this way be cured, the Act will cure that defect, and make it a good building lease? How is it possible to cure the defect in this building lease, and make it a good building lease? Is the defect in this lease, as a building lease, such a one as the Act contemplates? There is the absolute omission of any covenant to build. How could I know what sort of covenant to build I could insert here? How is it possible, under that Act, to cure a building lease in that respect? It has not been attempted to say that it could be so done; and the course the parties have taken is one which shews that they were plainly of opinion it could not be cured as a building lease. Then, how is it possible, under this Act of Parliament, to say, Very well then, seeing that this which was intended as a building lease cannot be made a building lease under this Act, we will turn it into a different class of lease, which it was not intended to be, and make it good? That, to my mind, is a perversion of the intent and meaning of the Act of Parliament. But even then the difficulty is not got over altogether; because, supposing it were possible to read the Act of Parliament for that purpose, there is still a defect in this lease, as a lease under the other power, which there is no power of curing under the Act at all, and that is this—that the rent for the freehold portion of this land is a rent which is not the best rent that could be obtained, but is a rent which is to increase every seven years, which would be perfectly good under the power to grant building leases, but entirely bad under the power to grant other leases; and as to that, how is it possible for the Court, under this Act of Parliament, to say what sort of rent shall be substituted for this increasing rent? It is not possible. Therefore that again is a defect which, if you treat this lease as being not under a power to grant building leases but under the other power, is one which, under this Act of Parliament, cannot be remedied. I must say I think this lease, in any view of the case, is bad and invalid; it departing, not in a mere formal manner from the terms of the power, but departing from them in essential respects. Then the power of granting leases contained the power to grant in a lease the option of purchase. But there was no power to grant option of purchase otherwise or in any other way than in a valid lease under the power; and, therefore, I am sorry to say that the option to purchase must fall with the lease. If the lease be invalid because it departs from the power, as I think it does, in respects which the Court has no power to remedy under the Act 12 & 13 Vict., the option of purchase, which could only be conferred as part of a valid lease, must fall with the rest of it. Accordingly, I think the objection must prevail. I am very sorry for it, and I have looked into the matter most anxiously to see whether there was any mode in which the Court could assist the parties to maintain the contract. I think there is none; and for that reason the objection must prevail, and the summons must be dismissed, with costs.

In re Hallett.

Solicitors—Clarke & Calkin, agents for Clarke & Howlett, Brighton, for vendor; Nash & Field, agents for Stuckey, Son & Jennings, Brighton, for purchasers.

PEARSON, J. 1883. June 26.

In re HARMAN.

Vendor and Purchaser—Notice of Trust—Mortgage-deed—Foreclosure—Deed of Conveyance indorsed upon Mortgage-deed.

By a deed of conveyance, dated the 1st of August, 1865 (indorsed upon a mortgage-deed), containing a recital that A (the original mortgagee) held the mortgage-money "on an account, under which C and D were then solely entitled thereto," B (the executrix and devisee under A's will), for a nominal consideration, conveyed the property comprised in the mortgage to C and D:—Held, that a purchaser from C and

In re Harman.

D might safely rely upon a recital so framed, although it appeared, from recitals in the deed, that B had absolutely foreclosed the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property eleven years before.

Adjourned summons.

By an agreement dated the 9th of December, 1882, Samuel Harman and William Harman agreed to sell to the Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Railway Company, for 510*l.*, a piece of building land situate in the parish of Hillingdon, in the county of Middlesex. Clause 4 of the agreement provided that the vendors should deliver to the purchasers' solicitors an abstract of their title to such an extent as the solicitors should require, and should deduce a good title.

The abstract delivered commenced with a mortgage in fee, dated the 4th of September, 1840, of certain freehold land (including the land the subject-matter of the agreement) to William Thomas Beeby to secure the repayment of 8,000*l.* and interest. So far as appeared from this deed he was the absolute beneficial owner of the mortgage-money.

William Thomas Beeby, by his will dated the 25th of June, 1840, devised and bequeathed his real estate (except estates vested in him upon trust or by way of mortgage), and also all the residue of his personal estate, to his wife Deborah Beeby and two others, upon trust to sell his real estate, and get in his personal estate as therein mentioned, and to stand possessed of the moneys to be raised by such sale and conversion upon certain trusts for the benefit of his wife and children.

And he devised all real estates vested in him upon any trust or by way of mortgage to the same three persons, subject to the trusts or equity of redemption affecting the same respectively. And the testator appointed the same three persons executors.

On the 11th of June, 1842, the will was proved by the widow Deborah Beeby alone. Shortly afterwards the two other trustees executed a formal deed of disclaimer. She alone acted as trustee.

On the 9th of January, 1850, Deborah Beeby commenced a suit to foreclose the equity of redemption in the mortgaged premises. In February, 1851, the usual foreclosure decree was made; and in July, 1854, the foreclosure decree was made absolute.

By an indenture dated the 1st of August, 1865 (indorsed on the mortgage-deed of September, 1840), and made between Deborah Beeby of the one part, and William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby of the other part, after reciting (amongst other things) the will of William Thomas Beeby, and the proceedings in the foreclosure suit, and reciting that "William Thomas Beeby held the money secured by the there-within written indenture of mortgage on an account under which William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby were then solely entitled thereto, as was thereby acknowledged, whereby Deborah Beeby, as trustee under the will of William Thomas Beeby, was a trustee only of the freehold hereditaments comprised in the there-within indenture of mortgage, and so foreclosed as aforesaid, for William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby; and that they had requested Deborah Beeby to convey the freehold hereditaments to them in manner thereinafter contained, which she had agreed to do"; in pursuance of the agreement, and in consideration of the premises, Deborah Beeby conveyed the freehold land unto and to the use of William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby, their heirs and assigns, "as joint tenants at law and in equity."

By an indenture dated the 31st of December, 1868, William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby conveyed this property, for value, to George Harman, under whose will the present vendors derived their title.

The company required evidence of the meaning of the recital in the deed of the 1st of August, 1865, "that William Thomas Beeby held the money secured by the mortgage on an account under which William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby were then solely entitled thereto."

And, assuming that William Thomas Beeby was a trustee of the mortgage-money, the company required the vendors to shew, first, that Messrs. Knightley, Cox and Walter Beeby were duly appointed to succeed him in the trust; and, secondly, that they had an effectual power of sale, and of giving receipts for the purchase-money.

In re Harman.

The vendors, being unable to comply with these requisitions, took out this summons, under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, for a declaration that the requisitions had been sufficiently answered, and that a good title had been shewn in accordance with the contract.

The main question in argument was as to the effect of the recital in the deed of the 1st of August, 1865.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Seeley, for the vendors.—The deed of the 1st of August, 1865, is an ordinary conveyance to Messrs. Knightley, Cox and Beeby as joint tenants; and there has been possession of the property ever since, upon the footing of that deed. We submit that the Court will not go behind the recital in the conveyance.

[They were then stopped.]

Everitt, Q.C., and Loughborough, for the company.—Prima facie, the mortgage-money belonged to the testator William Thomas Beeby. If so, his devisee and executrix could not, by any recital of acknowledgment in the deed of August, 1865, bind the cestuis que trust under his will. It would be a breach of trust on her part to convey part of the trust property without consideration, of which we might be held to have had sufficient notice to make us liable—Malpas v. Ackland (1).

The only evidence that this money was trust-money is the recital in the deed of August, 1865. If it is trust-money, we are entitled to ask how Messrs. Knightley, Cox and Beeby became solely entitled thereto—Lewin on Trusts (2).

This is not the ordinary case of a transfer of a mortgage by indorsement on the mortgage-deed, on the appointment of a new trustee, where a recital that the mortgage-money has become in equity the property of the transferees is often accepted without enquiry—see Davidson (3). Here the devisee, Mrs. Beeby, had absolutely foreclosed the equity of redemption eleven years before; Messrs. Knightley, Cox and Beeby were therefore in the position of trustees for sale; and it must be shewn that they had a valid power of sale—see the note to Key and Elphinstone's Conveyancing (4) and Prideaux's Conveyancing (5).

PEARSON, J.—In the year 1840 this property was mortgaged to William Thomas Beeby. He died in the year 1842; and, under his will, Mrs. Beeby, his executrix and devisee, became entitled to receive the money due on the mortgage. In the year 1850 she took proceedings to foreclose the equity of redemption; and in the year 1854 the foreclosure was made absolute. She remained legally in possession until the year 1865; and in that year, by the deed in dispute, she conveyed the property to three gentlemen, under whom the vendors claim.

Now, if she had simply recited that she was seized in fee, and had then conveyed the property for a nominal consideration, I think that the title would have been bad. But the deed in question is indorsed on the mortgage-deed; and it is perfectly plain that she was dealing with the mortgage title, and that, at the death of William Thomas Beeby, she was entitled to the mortgage-money only as trustee. It recites that William Thomas Beeby held the money secured by the mortgage "on an account under which William Knightley, John Cox and Walter Beeby were then solely entitled thereto, as was thereby acknowledged, whereby Deborah Beeby, as trustee under the will of William Thomas Beeby, was a trustee only of the" property for Knightley, Cox and Beeby; and that they had requested her to convey to them; and then it conveys the property to them.

Now, it is admitted to be the universal practice, where mortgages are made to trustees, to keep the title off the face of the deed, and to introduce a declaration that the money belongs to them upon a joint account; and I think that, in such cases, the Court has always refused to make any enquiry as to the trusts. But it is alleged that, under a deed framed as this is, the purchasers cannot rely upon the title so obtained, but are liable to be put upon notice of some trust or other. I think

(1) 2 Russ. 273.
(2) 6th ed. p. 293.
(3) Vol. ii. part 2. 4th ed. p. 806.
(4) 1st ed. vol. i. p. 339.
(5) 10th ed. vol. i. p. 315.

In re Harman.

that, if I were to come to any such conclusion, I should be departing from the decisions of my predecessors, who have abstained from looking behind the deed.

Every one knows that when you see property conveyed to two or more persons, the chances are ninety-nine to one that those persons are trustees; and yet the Court has resolutely refused to enquire what those trusts are.

I am of opinion that Mrs. Beeby, dealing with this property in the character of devisee of the original mortgagee, may properly rely upon the recital in this deed. Were I to hold otherwise, it would be most difficult, if not impossible, for her to deal with this property without bringing an action to administer her husband's estate.

The next objection is, that as the property is conveyed to these three persons as joint tenants, I must hold that they are trustees; and that, therefore, the vendors are bound to shew under what trust they hold, and whether they have any and what right to sell. To so hold would be, in my opinion, to act in contravention of the established rule of the Court.

There being this recital in the deed, Messrs. Knightley, Cox and Beeby are entitled to deal with the property as if they were absolute owners. There will be a declaration that the company's objections are not valid, and that a good title has been shewn, and the company must pay the costs of this application.

Solicitors—Paterson, Sons & Garner, agents for Woolls & Co., Uxbridge, for the summons; Burdett, Cunningham & Co., for the company.

KAY, J. 1883. July 3, 13. } In re COCKCROFT. BROADBENT v. GROVES.

Will—Administration—Devise of Real Estate contracted to be purchased by Testator—Unpaid Purchase-money—Vendor's Lien—Conversion—Locke King's Acts, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34—Rescission of Contract after Death of Testator—Compromise—Rights of Devisees of Real Estate.

A testator having in his lifetime contracted to purchase certain real estate, by his will dated in 1881 (after Locke King's Acts) devised it specifically to his daughter M., with remainder to her children, and died without having completed the purchase or paid all the purchase-money. His personal estate, which was barely sufficient to pay the purchase-money, was undisposed of, so that it devolved upon his next-of-kin; but he did not in his will either expressly or impliedly intimate any intention that the unpaid purchase-money should be paid out of his personal estate. After his death a compromise was effected between the vendor of the property and the executor and trustee of the will, resulting in the rescission of the contract; and this compromise was duly confirmed by an order made in an action for the administration of the testator's estate. The devisees of the real estate claimed to be entitled to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the purchase-money of the land contracted to be bought, on the ground that there was a conversion by the testator of his personal estate, and that the provisions of Locke King's Acts did not apply:—Held, that this was a case of vendor's lien, and came within the provisions of Locke King's Acts Amendment Act (40 & 41 Vict. c. 34); that all that the devisees could have been entitled to was the purchased property charged with the unpaid purchase-money; and that therefore, the personal estate being of less amount than the unpaid purchase-money, they were not entitled to anything. Held, also, that if the claim had been otherwise good, the compromise would have been fatal to it.

John Cockcroft, by his will dated the 3rd of August, 1881, gave to the plaintiff,

In re Cockcroft.

Broadbent, and one Wood, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, "all his real estate, consisting of nine dwelling-houses and their appurtenances, situate in or near to Charles Street, Quarry Hill, Leeds." He also gave them all his personal property and securities for money, upon trust to receive the rents of his real estate, and let and relet the houses from time to time; and after keeping the property in good repair, and paying his trustees and executors for their time in looking after and repairing the property, and for collecting the rents, the testator willed and declared that his trustees and executors should pay the surplus to his daughter, the defendant Mary Ann Groves, during her life, and after her decease he gave the said real estate to all the children of his said daughter in equal proportions as tenants-in-common; and the testator, after giving his trustees and executors power to sell his real estate or any part of it at any time, with directions as to the investment of the proceeds, and after giving pecuniary legacies, including one of 5*l.* to his wife, the defendant Emma Cockcroft, appointed the plaintiff and Wood to be his trustees and executors.

The testator died on the 8th of August, 1881, leaving him surviving his wife, the defendant Emma Cockcroft, and three daughters — the defendant Mary Ann Groves, and two others who were infants. The will was proved by the plaintiff Broadbent, Wood having renounced probate and disclaimed. Previously to the date of his will the testator had entered into a contract with one Watson to buy the nine dwelling-houses in Leeds for 580*l.*, and had paid a deposit of 50*l.* At the time of his death the contract had not been completed.

Besides these houses he had no real estate, and his personal estate consisted of 470*l.* cash on deposit at his bankers', his household furniture and effects, and a debt of 30*l.* owing to him upon a promissory note.

In September, 1881, the plaintiff Broadbent brought this action against Mary Ann Groves and her husband Alfred Groves and Emma Cockcroft for the administration of the testator's estate.

In February, 1882, Watson brought an action against Broadbent for specific performance of the contract which had been entered into by the testator.

By an order made in the administration action, and dated the 25th of April, 1882, a compromise was sanctioned, the terms of which were that the contract should be rescinded, and that Watson should retain the deposit of 50*l.*, and have his costs.

Mary Ann Groves had since died, leaving the defendant Alfred Groves and certain infant children her surviving.

The question now was, whether the devisees of the real estate were entitled as against the next-of-kin of the testator to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the unpaid purchase-money.

Warrington, for the plaintiff.

Decimus Sturges, for the defendant Emma Cockcroft.—Hudson v. Cooke (1) is no doubt an authority for the proposition that where there is a binding contract at the death of the testator it works conversion; but I submit, first, that here there was no binding contract, and therefore no conversion; and secondly, assuming there was conversion, by the operation of Locke King's Act the fund is turned back into personalty.

The lien for the unpaid purchase-money is a "mortgage" on the property within section 2 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, and the amount should be raised for the benefit of the next-of-kin.

The whole fund being less than the value of the estate contracted to be purchased is personalty. That point was not taken in Hudson v. Cooke (1), because it was not until after the passing of the Act 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34, that the principle of Locke King's Act applied to an intestacy —Harding v. Harding (2). At any rate, the order of compromise which was taken by consent was binding upon all parties.

Melville, for the infant children of M. A. Groves.—Locke King's Act does not apply to this case at all. The real question is whether there was a binding contract. At the death of the testator the respective

(1) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 306; Law Rep. 13 Eq. 417.

(2) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 523 Law Rep. 13 Eq. 493.

In re Cockcroft.

interests of the devisees of the real estate and the next-of-kin were fixed—Jarman on Wills (4th ed.), p. 52.

The rights of the respective claimants cannot be affected by the compromise which took place after the testator's death —Lysaght v. Edwards (3).

It is quite clear that the testator considered that all he had to dispose of was the real estate, his personal estate being barely sufficient to pay for it.

He also referred to Seton on Decrees (4th ed.), p. 900.

Sturges, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

KAY, J. (on July 13).—The series of statutes known as Locke King's Acts are three—17 & 18 Vict. c. 113 (1854), 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69 (1867), and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34 (1877). The first of these, reciting that it is expedient that the law whereunder the real and personal assets of deceased persons are administered should be amended, makes a mortgaged estate left by a testator or intestate primarily liable to pay the mortgage debt, unless by his will or deed or other document he has signified a contrary or other intention, saving however the right of the mortgagee to obtain full payment or satisfaction of his mortgage debt either out of the personal estate of the person so dying or otherwise.

The 2nd statute provided that a general direction to pay debts out of the testator's personal estate, not mentioning or necessarily implying mortgage debts, is not to be deemed a declaration of a contrary intention; and also that in the construction of both Acts the word mortgage should be deemed to extend to any lien for unpaid purchase-money upon any lands or hereditaments purchased by a testator. This Act did not include a vendor's lien on lands descending from one who died intestate. The 3rd statute enacted as follows: "The Acts mentioned in the schedule hereto" (which were the two statutes I have referred to) "shall, as to any testator or intestate dying after the 31st of December, 1877, be held to extend to a testator or intestate dying seized or possessed of or entitled to any land or other hereditaments of whatever tenure which shall at the time of his death be charged with the payment of any sum or sums of money by way of mortgage or any other equitable charge, including any lien for unpaid purchase-money, and the devisee or legatee or heir shall not be entitled to have such sum or sums discharged or satisfied out of any other estate of the testator or intestate, unless (in the case of a testator) he shall, within the meaning of the said Acts, have signified a contrary intention, and such contrary intention shall not be deemed to be signified by a charge of or direction for payment of debts upon or out of residuary real and personal estate or residuary real estate."

The object of these enactments was to subject any real estate of a testator or intestate to all the incumbrances upon it in exoneration of the personal estate or other real estate, and to prevent the heir or devisee from being able to insist that the personal or other estate should be applied to discharge them. The former rule of administration which entitled him to claim such exoneration was fixed when personal estate was comparatively of small value or account, and the law favoured greatly the heir or devisee of the real estate. That law has been relaxed by degrees, first by subjecting real estate to the payment of the debts of the deceased, and more recently by these statutes, which have made it primarily liable to all legal or equitable charges expressly in exoneration of the personal or other assets. In the case before me a testator having in his lifetime contracted to purchase certain real estate, by his will in 1881, after these statutes, devised it specifically to his daughter Mary Jane Groves for life, with remainder to her children. His personal estate was undisposed of, so that it devolved upon his next-of-kin, but he did not in his will either expressly or impliedly intimate any intention that the unpaid purchase-money should be paid out of the personal estate. He died without having completed the purchase or paid all the purchase-money. The devisees now insist that they are entitled to so much of the personal

(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 554; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 490.

In re Cockcroft.

estate as is equivalent to the unpaid purchase-money. It seems that after the testator's death a compromise was come to between the vendor of the property and the executor and trustee of the will, against whom the vendor had brought an action for specific performance of the testator's contract to purchase, and such compromise was confirmed by an order made in this action in the presence of the tenant-for-life of the real estate. The trustee would represent her children, none of whom had attained twenty-one, so that such order would be binding on them. In fact, I suppose it was their incapacity which made it necessary to obtain the sanction of the Court. By this compromise the contract was put an end to on the terms that the vendor was to retain the deposit of 50*l.* and to have his costs. There is therefore no real estate, and of course no lien to discharge; but the devisees now say that the purchase by the testator was a conversion of so much of his personal estate as was equivalent to the purchase-money, and that Locke King's Acts have not altered this, and that therefore they are entitled to so much of the personal estate. If this be a good claim in point of law, and not provided for by these statutes, I must accede to it. There would not be any equity against it. These Acts only provide that a vendor's lien shall be primarily payable out of the real estate. If a portion of the personal estate has been equitably converted, and thus must be treated as real estate, there is nothing in the Acts which affects the rights arising from that fact. They are not in any respect a favourable specimen of legislation. The first of them expresses that a contrary intention to the primary liability of the estate charged may be signified by a will or deed or other document. But the last Act, which for the first time applies the rule as to a vendor's lien to the administration of the estate of an intestate, seems to limit the exception of the expression of a contrary intention to the case of a testator, the draftsman apparently forgetting that it might be by deed or other document as well as by will. If this be the true interpretation, the expression by an intestate of a contrary intention by a deed or other document would be effective in the case of a mortgage under the first Act, but not in the case of a vendor's lien. Suppose that a testator or intestate had purchased real estate under such circumstances that the vendor had no lien—as, for example, if the lien were excluded by express agreement in the contract of purchase—the case would not come within the Acts, and the devisee or heir would not be prevented by them from claiming to have the payment made out of the personal estate. The Acts do not interfere with the consequences of the contract of purchase unless there happen to be a lien on the estate.

But the answer to the argument in this case seems to me to be that here there was a vendor's lien, and the Acts applied. And although it may be true in a sense that a purchase by a testator of real estate effects a conversion of a portion of his personal estate, this is rather a description of the consequence of such purchase according to the old rule of administration after his death, than an accurate legal definition of the act done by him in purchasing. Since these statutes, if he dies before paying the purchase-money, leaving it equitably charged by way of lien on the land, no such notional conversion is effected, because, in the words of the last of these Acts, the devisee or heir is not entitled to have such sum discharged or satisfied out of any other estate of the testator or intestate. All that the devisees were entitled to was this real estate charged with the unpaid purchase-money; all that they have lost is such value as the land might have beyond that sum. If their present claim could be maintained, it would also be maintainable if the purchase had not been rescinded, which would be directly contrary to the spirit and letter of these enactments. But I think also that the order of compromise would be fatal to their claim if otherwise good. It was made in the presence of the tenant-for-life and the trustee, and was sanctioned by the Court, and is binding upon them all. Probably they have lost little or nothing by this compromise.

In Hudson v. Cooke (1), one of the cases cited, the purchaser had died intestate in 1869. The case therefore was not affected by these statutes, which did not apply the law as to vendor's lien to the case of an intestate dying before the 31st of December, 1877. The decision followed Whittaker v. Whittaker (4), in which it was held that where a devisee was entitled to have the devised land paid for out of the personal estate, he did not lose that right by the rescission of the contract after the testator's death. As the case did not come within the statutes the decision is not applicable.

In re Cockcroft.

Solicitors—Bell, Brodrick & Gray, agents for Hopps & Bedford, Leeds, for plaintiff; Hamlin, Grammer & Hamlin, agents for B. C. Pullan, Leeds, for defendant Cockcroft; Gregory & Co., agents for G. E. Pickering, Leeds, for defendants Groves and their children.

BACON, V.C. 1883. July 31. } In re BECK'S SETTLED ESTATES.

Solicitors' Remuneration — Sale by Tenant-for-life — Auction — Private Contract—Mortgagees—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), Order I. rule 4, Order II. rule 2—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 53.

A tenant-for-life put up a settled estate for sale by auction at a reserve price at which no sale was effected, but on the same day the estate was sold by private contract:—Held, that the trustees ought to pay, out of the proceeds of sale, to the solicitor of the tenant-for-life commission for conducting the sale by auction, including the conditions of sale, and also commission for deducing the title and perusing and completing the conveyance, but not, under the circumstances of this case, an additional commission for negotiating the sale by private contract.

The tenant-for-life had mortgaged his life interest, and the mortgagees employed separate solicitors:—Held, that the trustees ought to pay out of the proceeds of sale the charges of the mortgagees' solicitors in connection with the sale.

Adjourned summons.

A tenant-for-life, under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, put up a settled estate for sale by auction at a reserve price at which no sale was effected, but on the same day the estate was sold by private contract for 37,500*l.* The tenant-for-life had mortgaged his life interest, and the mortgagees employed separate solicitors. The conduct of the business was in the hands of the solicitor of the tenant-for-life.

This was a summons by the trustees, who had received the proceeds of sale, that they might be at liberty, out of the proceeds of sale in their hands, to pay to the solicitor of the tenant-for-life commission for conducting the sale of the estate by public auction, including the conditions of sale, and also commission for deducing the title thereto and perusing and completing the conveyance thereof, according to the scale set out in part 1 of the 1st schedule of the General Order made in pursuance of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881; and also to pay to the solicitors of the mortgagees of the tenant-for-life their proper charges in connection with the said sale.

Wolstenholme, for the summons.—The first question is, whether the costs of the solicitor of the tenant-for-life ought to be paid out of the capital according to the scale prescribed by schedule 1 to part 1 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. This seems to be clearly the case under Order I. rule 2 (a) which provides that "in respect of sales . . . . completed, the remuneration of the solicitor having the conduct of the business . . . . is to be that prescribed in part 1 of schedule 1 to this Order, and to be subject to the regulations therein contained."

The second question is, whether under the circumstances of this case the solicitor of the tenant-for-life is entitled to an additional commission on the actual sale by contract as well as on the attempted sale by auction. Rule 2 of the rules to the General Order provides that "when property offered for sale by auction is bought in, and terms of sale are afterwards negotiated and arranged by the solicitor, he is to be entitled to charge commission according to the above scales on the reserved price where the property is not sold, and also one-half of the commission for negotiating the sale." But this, it is submitted, cannot be intended to apply to a case like this, where the attempted sale by auction and the sale by private contract are virtually one transaction.

(4) 4 Bro. C.C. 30.

In re Beck's Settled Estates.

The third question is, whether the costs of the solicitors of the mortgagees of the tenant-for-life ought to be paid out of capital. In the case of a sale under a power in the settlement, according to the old practice, no doubt, such costs would be payable out of the capital; but it is submitted that a different rule should be applied to a sale by the tenant-for-life under the Settled Land Act, 1882. The tenant-for-life is selling for his own benefit, and, if he encumbers his life interest, he ought to pay the costs of his own mortgagees.

Shebbeare (with him Hemming, Q.C.), for the tenant-for-life, referred to the Settled Land Act, s. 21, sub-s. 10, s. 22, sub-s. 2, s. 43 and s. 46, as shewing that the costs ought to be paid out of the capital. As regards the second question, he did not contend that the solicitor in this case was entitled to more than one commission; but as regards the third question, he contended that the costs of the solicitors of the mortgagees of the tenant-for-life ought to be paid out of the capital moneys, and referred to section 53 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, which provides that "A tenant-for-life shall, in exercising any power under this Act, have regard to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement, and shall, in relation to the exercise thereof by him, be deemed to be in the position and to have the duties and liabilities of a trustee for those parties."

BACON, V.C., allowed the proposed payments, observing as to the costs of the mortgagees, that the tenant-for-life was entitled to these, since by virtue of section 53 he was in the position of a trustee. His Lordship also expressed his opinion that the summons was right in excluding an additional commission for negotiating the sale by private contract, since the attempted sale by auction and the actual sale by contract were in this case really one transaction.

Solicitors—Mills, Dowson & Co., for trustees; Johnston, Harrison & Powell, agents for Harrison & Milne, Kendal, for tenant-for-life.

FRY, J.
1883.
April 9.

LADD v. PULESTON.
PULESTON v. LADD.

Practice—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 34—Accounts—Chancery Division.

The Court refused to stay or transfer from the Chancery Division an action for account, though there was pending in a more advanced stage a common law action in which the same issues were raised by the plaintiff in the Chancery Division by counter-claim.

On the 4th of November, 1882, Messrs. Puleston & Co., the defendants in this action, who are stockbrokers not on the Stock Exchange, issued the writ in the action of Puleston v. Ladd against the plaintiff in this action in the Common Law Division of the High Court. The writ was specially endorsed under Order III. rule 6, for a sum of 1,462*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* Appearance was entered by the defendant on the 15th of November, 1882. Messrs. Puleston took out a summons to obtain final judgment, under Order XIV. rule 1. Ladd, the defendant in that action, opposed the summons, which was heard on the 25th of November. The defendant obtained leave to defend upon an affidavit, in which he stated: "I believe the action has been commenced against me for the purpose of delaying or preventing a proper investigation of the plaintiffs' accounts and documents, and with the view of anticipating the action which the plaintiffs knew I was about to commence against them, which I am advised should now be effected by counter-claim in this action."

Ladd v. Puleston.

On the 5th of December Mr. Ladd issued the writ in this action, by which he claimed a general account from Messrs. Puleston, as his agents in certain stockbroking transactions. A statement of claim was delivered in the action of Puleston v. Ladd on the 27th of December, 1882, and on the 15th of February, 1883, Mr. Ladd put in a statement of defence and counter-claim, by which he sought the same relief as in this action. No pleadings had been put in in this action. This was a summons on the part of Messrs. Puleston for a transfer of this action to the Queen's Bench Division, or, in the alternative, a stay of proceedings.

Anderson, for the summons.—Mr. Ladd, the defendant in the common law action, obtained leave to defend that action, on the ground that he was going to have the whole accounts opened by counter-claim. By his affidavit he elected to have the questions tried at common law, and from that election he cannot now go back. Messrs. Puleston, having been first in the field, are entitled to the position of plaintiffs; and the common law action has proceeded further than this action. If this action is allowed to go on instead of the common law action, those proceedings would be wasted. For both those reasons this action should be stayed. At common law the matter would probably be referred to an arbitrator, who could deal with the whole matter better than the Court. He cited Thompson v. The South Eastern Railway Company (1).

Decimus Sturges, for Ladd.—The machinery of this division is more suited for an action of account. Moreover, the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, expressly enacts that actions of account shall be assigned to the Chancery Division; and there is the authority of Holloway v. York (2) for the transfer to the Chancery Division of actions assignable to that division.

[FRY, J., asked if both parties were willing to have the common law action transferred to this division, and this action stayed.]

Anderson, for Messrs. Puleston, refused to consent to such course, and replied.

FRY, J. (after stating the facts), said:—Now there are considerations on both sides which must be borne in mind. In the first place, there can be no doubt that the taking of this account, which is sought alike by the counter-claim and by the original action of Mr. Ladd, is a matter of business assigned by the Act of 1873 to the Chancery Division, and I have no doubt that the Chancery Division is more competent to deal with that business than the Queen's Bench Division. In fact, Mr. Anderson has put it that the result of its going on at common law would be to force or bring about an arbitration. Now an arbitration is not a proceeding, strictly speaking, by the Court; but to refer a matter to arbitration, is, to some extent, according to my opinion at any rate, a confession that the Court is unable to deal with the matter. No doubt legislative powers are given to refer accounts to arbitration, but that is because the common law Courts have not the power adequately to deal with accounts. The Legislature having assigned accounts to the Chancery Division, the Courts are not likely to transfer them from the Chancery Division to one which has not the requisite machinery.

On the other hand, it is to be borne in mind that the defendant Mr. Ladd has, by means of the affidavit which he made on the summons, obtained the benefit of defending, and that a judgment has not been signed against him for the particular sum which Messrs. Puleston sought to recover, and also that the proceedings in the common law action have advanced further than the proceedings in the Chancery action. That makes the common law action a more desirable one to be prosecuted than the other.

Under these circumstances the proper order in my judgment to be made is this—that the action in the Queen's Bench Division should be transferred to the Chancery Division; that thereupon the action originally commenced in the Chancery Division should be stayed; that the costs of that action should await the discretion of the Judge in the other action.

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 322; Law Rep. 9 Q B. D. 320.
(2) Law Rep. 2 Ex. D. 333.

Ladd v. Puleston.

But I have no power, without the consent of Messrs. Puleston, to make such an order. Mr. Ladd consents to such an order being made, Messrs. Puleston decline to permit such an order to be made with their consent, and, as I cannot make it without their consent, the result is that no such order can be made. It appears to me, therefore, I repeat, that Messrs. Puleston declining to allow me by consent to make that order, which would be a proper and reasonable one—the proper one, because it would have the questions of account settled in the division which is capable of dealing with the account, and because it would give them the advantage of being plaintiffs in the action—because it would give them the advantage of all the steps that have already been taken in the common law action—that order, I repeat, they declining to accede to, the result is, in my judgment, they are asking me to transfer from the Chancery Division an action which is proper for it, to a division which is not capable of dealing with it.

I decline to make such an order; therefore I dismiss this summons with costs.

Solicitors—Soames, Edwards & Jones, for defendant; Hyde, Tandy & Mahon, for plaintiff.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
May 30.

KETTLEWELL v. WATSON.

Practice—Change of Country Solicitors after Judgment—Notice of Appeal by New Solicitors—Same London Agents—Irregularity — Order LVII. rule 7 — Order LVIII. rule 3.

A notice of appeal was signed by A & Co. as the London agents of B & Co., the appellant's solicitors. At this time, C & Co., who had been the appellant's solicitors down to the judgment appealed against, and who had throughout also acted by A & Co., were still his solicitors on the record, although B & Co. were now really his solicitors. On the error being discovered, the appellant obtained the usual order to change solicitors. The respondent's solicitors having intimated that they should, on the hearing of the appeal, rely on the mistake as a fatal irregularity in the notice of appeal,—Held, on motion by the appellant that his time for appealing might under the circumstances be extended, that, the notice of appeal being in other respects regular, the inaccuracy in the description of his solicitors did not invalidate it.

Quære, whether it is essential that a notice of appeal should be signed by a solicitor.

On the 1st of February, 1881, judgment was given on the trial of this action (see 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 281; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 685), but the order was not passed and entered until the 4th of May, 1881.

On the 27th of April, 1882, Padgett, one of the defendants, gave the usual formal notice of appeal, which was signed by Messrs. Layton & Jaques as the London agents for Messrs. Markland & Davy, Leeds, the appellant's solicitors.

At this time the firm of Messrs. Scholefield & Son, of Dewsbury, who, from the commencement of the action until judgment, had been the solicitors of Padgett, still appeared on the record as the solicitors of Padgett, although he had some time previously to the notice of appeal left them and retained Messrs. Markland & Davy to act for him.

On the error being discovered, the usual summons to change solicitors was taken out, and the order was made, and perfected by the 10th of May, 1882.

The plaintiff's solicitors having refused to waive the irregularity in the description of the appellant's solicitor, and having given him notice that they should seek to take advantage of the irregularity on the hearing of the appeal, he now applied that the time for appealing from the order of the 1st of February might be extended, or for such other order as the Court should think proper.

tlewell v. Watson, App.

rdswell, for the motion.—This motion ught in order to save the expense of ring heavy briefs on the appeal in our notice of appeal should be held lar at the hearing, and therefore d. But the notice was regular in respect except in the description of ppellant's solicitors. It is a mere vhich can be cured by amendment Order LVIII. rule 3, or it is a case ich the Court has power to enlarge me under Order LVII. rule 6, and the circumstances will do so—'s Case (1) and Little's Case (2).

was stopped.]

kson, Q.C., and Langworthy, for the dent.—The objection to the notice eal is one of substance. There is tice of appeal here at all, and the ant is now really asking to give a notice of appeal. We admit there en a slip, but we are entitled to dvantage of it. It is not a case of able accident, nor are there any stances that raise an equity in of the appellant—In re Blyth and (3), McAndrew v. Barker (4) and Mansel (5); and the Court will be low to grant an extension of time judgment—Collins v. The Vestry of ngton (6). This notice amounts to intimation of an intention to apnd that is not enough—In re The allao Company (7).

ther, it is usual to recognise only licitor on the record. That is a ome practice, and should be observed.

TON, L.J.—In the case of persons in forma pauperis it is necessary notice of appeal should be signed by itor—Perry v. Walker (8); but is any authority for saying that an ry notice of appeal must be signed licitor?]

In Daniell's Chancery Practice (9), it is laid down that the notice of appeal must be signed by a solicitor, but no authority is cited for the proposition, except in the case of a pauper.

Lastly, the appellant is asking for an indulgence, and, if the slip is put right, he must pay the costs of this application.

Bardswell, in reply, on the question of costs, referred to Little's Case (2), and submitted that the costs of the application should be costs in the appeal.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., said:—In this case, within the time for appealing from the judgment of the Court below, the defendant gave a formal notice of appeal against that judgment. It was signed by Messrs. Layton & Jaques as agents for Messrs. Markland & Davy, Leeds, the solicitors of the defendant Padgett. Messrs. Layton & Jaques, during the proceedings in the action from its commencement down to the judgment at the trial, were also the agents for Messrs. Scholefield & Sons, who were originally the solicitors on the record for the defendant Padgett. Subsequently to the judgment Padgett changed his solicitors, and retained Messrs. Markland & Davy, but no formal order to change solicitors was obtained. Messrs. Scholefield & Son therefore remained on the record as the solicitors of Padgett, but practically Messrs. Markland & Davy were his solicitors.

In that respect, therefore, there was an inaccuracy in the notice of appeal in the description of Messrs. Layton & Jaques, because, although they were the agents for Messrs. Scholefield & Son, the latter were not the solicitors of Padgett at that time. The inaccuracy having been discovered, the usual order to change solicitors was obtained, and perfected by the 10th of May. Nothing further was heard from the plaintiff's solicitors until they said they should seek to take advantage of the inaccuracy on the hearing of the appeal. Now I think this notice of motion is right, assuming the original notice of appeal was invalid. I do not, however, retire at all from my judgment in Collins v. The Vestry of

7 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 696; Law Rep. 8 635.
aw Rep. 8 Ch. D. 806.
aw Rep. 13 Ch. D. 416.
7 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 340; Law Rep. 7 701.
7 Law. J. Rep. Chanc. 870; Law Rep. 7 711.
9 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 624; Law Rep. 5 368.
ante, p. 283; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 484.
Beav. 452.

(9) p. 1440.

Paddington (6) as to extending the time for appeal. I think the circumstances must be very special indeed to justify an extension of time. Whether the circumstances here would be sufficient is not to my mind material, though the bias of my mind would be to grant it; but I prefer to rest my judgment on the fact that the original notice of appeal, though somewhat inaccurate—I prefer that expression to "irregular"—was a valid notice of appeal, and, having been properly set down, will come on in due course to be heard. The inaccuracy, in my opinion, is not such as to invalidate that notice of appeal. No one was deceived by the notice, for Messrs. Layton & Jaques were in fact the agents for Padgett's solicitors. I think therefore that there should be no order on this motion, except an intimation that the notice of appeal that has been given is regular, and should be set down. As to the costs—the appellant has come here for an indulgence, and he must therefore pay the costs of it.

COTTON, L.J., said:—In this case I think this application was unnecessary. The original notice of appeal was signed by Messrs. Layton & Jaques as agents for Markland & Davy, the solicitors of the appellant. As far as I can ascertain, there is nothing in the orders or rules that requires a notice of appeal should be signed by a solicitor, except that in the case of paupers such notices must be signed by a solicitor. But it is not necessary to decide that point, because here the notice of appeal is in fact signed by Messrs. Layton & Jaques, not for Messrs. Scholefield & Son, but for Messrs. Markland & Davy, who were, and are really, the solicitors of the appellant. In my opinion, therefore, although there is an inaccuracy as to the position of Messrs. Layton & Jaques, it is a mere false description not sufficient to invalidate the notice of appeal. There is therefore a sufficient notice of appeal, and this application was unnecessary, and therefore the appellant must pay the costs of it.

BOWEN, L.J., said:—I am of the same opinion. The original notice of appeal was a valid notice, although it contains an inaccurate description of the appellant's solicitors, by reason of the names of Messrs. Scholefield & Sons being still on the record as the appellant's solicitors. It is within the principle falsa demonstratio non nocet. Nobody has been misled or injured by the inaccuracy. It was a mere mistake in description, and did not mislead any one. There is therefore an effectual notice of appeal, and in my opinion there should be no order on this motion, except that the applicant do pay the costs of it.

Solicitors—Layton & Jaques, agents for Markland & Davy, Leeds, for appellant; Paterson, Snow, & Bloxam, agents for Dibb, Atkinson & Braithwaite, Leeds, for respondent.

BACON, V.C. 1883. May 24, 25.

In re GODFREY. GODFREY v. FAULKNER.

Trustee — Investment on Mortgage of Agricultural Land—Valuation—Rule as to two-thirds of Value — Liability of Trustee.

In 1869 M. purchased a farm of 147 acres from the governors of Christ's Hospital for 6,895*l.*, being the valuation then made on behalf of the vendors. In 1870 G. and F., trustees of a will (with power to lend on contributory mortgage), advanced 2,400*l.*, while another person advanced 2,600*l.*, making 5,000*l. in all, on contributory mortgage to M. on the farm. G. was one of the governors of Christ's Hospital, and also solicitor to the hospital, and also to the trust estate. No independent valuation was made on behalf of the mortgagees, but they relied on the valuation made on behalf of the vendors. Owing to agricultural depression the farm went out of cultivation and could not be let or sold, and M., the mortgagor, became insolvent. In an action by the beneficiary to make the trustees liable for the loss sustained,*—Held, that the trustees had not acted otherwise than prudent men would have acted in the conduct of their own affairs, and were not liable.

In re Godfrey.

The rule that trustees are not to advance more than two-thirds of the value of agricultural land is not to be applied with mathematical accuracy.

This was an action by the widow of the late T. C. Godfrey, who died in 1858, to make the defendant, W. C. Faulkner, the surviving trustee of his will, and the estate of Daniel Godfrey, a deceased trustee, liable for an alleged improper investment of the trust funds, to which in the events which had happened the widow was now absolutely entitled.

By his will the testator empowered his trustees to invest on a contributory mortgage, and he directed that Daniel Godfrey (who was a solicitor) should be solicitor to the trust estate.

It appeared that in 1868 E. T. Middleditch, a farmer, was treating with the governors of Christ's Hospital for the purchase of a freehold farm of 147 acres, called the Hospital Farm, and situate at Broad Blunsdon, in the county of Wilts. Daniel Godfrey was himself one of the governors of Christ's Hospital, and was solicitor to the hospital. In 1868 the farm was valued by W. Bryan Wood, of Chippenham, a land surveyor and valuer, on behalf of the governors of Christ's Hospital, at 6,800*l.*, and the timber at 95*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, and Middleditch agreed to purchase at this price, and the farm was conveyed to him by deed dated the 17th of August, 1869. In the matter of this purchase Middleditch employed his own solicitor, Mr. Crowdy, of Highworth, near Farringdon.

It appeared that Middleditch had requested the governors of Christ's Hospital to allow 5,000*l.* to remain on mortgage, which the Charity Commissioners refused to allow; and then Daniel Godfrey offered to advance 5,000*l.*, as to 2,600*l.* out of moneys belonging to a Mrs. Charlotte Faulkner, and as to the remaining 2,400*l.* out of moneys of the estate of the testator. The money was contributed in these proportions, and the mortgage carried out by deed dated the 24th of May, 1870, whereby the farm was conveyed to W. C. Faulkner, Daniel Godfrey, and Mrs. Charlotte Faulkner, as joint tenants, to secure the principal sum of 5,000*l.* with interest at four per cent. No independent valuation of the property was made on behalf of the mortgagees.

Daniel Godfrey, who had throughout acted as solicitor to the trust estate, died in 1877, and about that time the interest on the mortgage fell into arrears, and the farm had since gone out of cultivation, and was now unlet. Middleditch was insolvent. It appeared that in 1868 the farm was rated at a gross estimated rental of 155*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* The plaintiff, by her statement of claim, alleged that the trustees had acted on an erroneous valuation made on behalf of the vendors to Middleditch, and advanced too large an amount even on that valuation, and claimed a declaration that W. C. Godfrey and the estate of Daniel Godfrey were jointly and severally liable to pay to the plaintiff the sum of 2,400*l.* and interest, and consequential relief.

W. C. Faulkner, by his statement of defence, denied that the mortgage was an improper investment, and alleged that he had left the management of the trust estate entirely in the hands of Daniel Godfrey. The correspondence which passed between W. C. Faulkner and Daniel Godfrey is referred to in the judgment. The executors of Daniel Godfrey, by their defence, stated in detail the circumstances under which the mortgage was carried out, and that on the occasion of the mortgage Mrs. Charlotte Faulkner, the defendant W. C. Faulkner, and Daniel Godfrey had produced to them the valuation which had been made by the said W. Bryan Wood, who was known to them as a surveyor of eminence, and under the circumstances of that valuation having been so recently made, and of the purchase having been made by the said E. T. Middleditch on the basis of it, they considered themselves justified, and submitted that they were fully justified, in accepting that valuation and in not putting the mortgagor to the expense of a fresh valuation, and they accordingly advanced the sum of 5,000*l.* to the said E. T. Middleditch.

W. Bryan Wood made an affidavit on behalf of the plaintiff in this action, in which he stated that he valued the farm at a price which he considered Middleditch as adjoining owner might fairly be asked to give; that he considered the farm capable of improvement, and added 500*l.* for latent value in consequence; that he should not have valued the farm in the same way on behalf of an intending mortgagee; that his valuation was not intended for and would not have been applicable to the case of a mortgage loan, and that in that case he should not have added anything for latent value. Owing to ill-health the deponent was unable to undergo cross-examination on this affidavit.

In re Godfrey.

Evidence was adduced on behalf of the defendants, shewing that the Broad Blunsdon farm was heavy land, and though such land was in demand in the year 1870, yet, owing to the wet seasons and American competition, there had been a great depreciation in the value of farming land, and especially in land of this character, and that acres upon acres of such land, which used to command high rents, had practically fallen out of cultivation, and could not now command any rent or market. Middleditch himself deposed that these circumstances only prevented him carrying on the Hospital Farm at a profit, and reduced it from an ample and sufficient security to an insufficient one.

Mr. Jonas, of the firm of Drivers & Co., estate agents, on behalf of the defendants, also deposed that in July, 1877, his firm was instructed on behalf of Middleditch to sell the freehold estate at Broad Blunsdon, comprising in the whole 670 acres, including the Hospital Farm, and that in preparation for the sale he made a detailed valuation of the property, and that his firm were then of opinion that the Hospital Farm was well worth the sum of 7,500*l.*, exclusive of the timber, which was at the rate of 50*l.* per acre, and that the reserves placed on the several lots were at a higher rate per acre than what they valued the Hospital Farm portion of the estate at. No part of the property was sold, and the attempted sales were abortive.

The action now came on for trial.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Blakesley, for the plaintiff.—The trustees ought not to have trusted to a valuation made on behalf of the vendors, but to have had an independent valuation made — Ingle v. Partridge (1) and Budge v. Gummow (2). But even according to the vendor's valuation, the trustees advanced too much, since two-thirds of the value would have been 4,596*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*, not 5,000*l.* The estimated rental, 155*l.*, did not equal the amount of interest on the mortgage, which was 200*l.*

Hemming, Q.C., and Rawlinson, for the executors of Godfrey.—There is no arbitrary rule that trustees may only advance up to two-thirds of the value; the true rule is that trustees may deal with the trust property as a prudent man would deal with his own property. In Jones v. Lewis (3) trustees advanced more than two-thirds in value, and were held not liable.

[Horton Smith, Q.C. — That case is stated to have been reversed upon appeal, "but on what grounds not known"—Lewin on Trusts (4)]. The rule and principles are laid down in Ex parte Belchier (5) and the recent case of Speight v. Gaunt (6). In the cases of Ingle v. Partridge (1) and Budge v. Gummow (2) there was negligence. There was none here.

Millar, Q.C., and Vernon Smith, for Faulkner, supported the same argument.

Horton Smith, Q.C., replied, and referred to Clough v. Bond (7).

BACON, V.C.—This case belongs to a class in which a trustee is called upon to administer the trusts of a will according to law. The duty of a trustee is to deal with property entrusted to his care exactly as any prudent man would deal with his own property. But the words in which it is expressed must not be strained beyond their meaning. Business men in their dealings incur risk. Those things may happen and must happen in almost all human affairs, so that, not intending, so far as I am concerned, to relax the strict meaning of that rule I

(1) 34 Beav. 411.
(2) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 22; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 719.
(3) 3 De Gex & S. 471; 18 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 430.
(4) 6th ed. 1875, p. 287*n*.
(5) Amb. 218.
(6) Ante, p. 503; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 727.
(7) 3 Myl. & Cr. 490, 496; 8 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 51.

have referred to, still I must consider that that rule is the only one I have to attend to in this case. A great deal of time has been spent—I do not say uselessly spent—in going through all the smallest details in this case, all the steps that were taken, all the letters that were written, all the accidents that happened and so on; but, after all, it must come back to this—the plaintiff says, "You, the defendants, have wronged me. You were entrusted with my money to lay out as a prudent man would lay it out. You have not discharged that duty; and therefore pay me back my money." That is the whole case. Now the facts upon which they arise are simple enough in themselves. I should observe that there is no suggestion of bad faith, no suggestion of culpable negligence, and no suggestion of misconduct by any one of the parties here concerned. They are all respectable people, and throughout the transactions have conducted themselves as respectable people do. The case begins with the will of a Mr. Godfrey, who gives his estate upon trust to Mr. Faulkner and Mr. Daniel Godfrey. He does not enlarge the duty of the trustees, does not curtail it in any respect, and does not exempt it from the rule I have referred to. There is this feature also: having great confidence in one of the trustees by reason of his professional capacity, he desires that he shall be the person to conduct professionally the operations incident to these trusts which are to be executed, over what it is now unnecessary to advert to. There came a time when the trustees in the exercise of their discretion were called upon to deal, or thought it right they should deal, with a sum of 2,400*l.* Now the particulars of that are contained in the evidence which has been adduced, and they consist of a letter from Mr. Daniel Godfrey to Mr. Faulkner, his co-trustee, dated the 24th of December, 1869; and it is quite necessary to attend to the correspondence, because that speaks plainly of what it is said they intend to do, and we must take it that what they said they meant, and what they meant they did. The letter is this, "My dear sir,—I write to ask if you will join the 2,400*l.* lately paid in from Coleman's mortgage with the 2,600*l.* I have to advance from another quarter, to make up 5,000*l.*, at four per cent., upon the freehold farm of 147a. 1r. 3p. near Highworth, lately purchased for 7,000*l.* If so, I will get the security completed as soon as I can. It will produce Mrs. Godfrey better interest than she now gets upon deposit at the London and County Bank of the 2,400*l.*" That letter is answered by Mr. Faulkner on the next day. "I have no objection to your lending Mrs. Godfrey's money on the security you name, provided you think it desirable to do so. I suppose you cannot get a quarter or a half per cent. more. I have no doubt it would be very acceptable to her." Those are very businesslike, plain letters. Nobody can impute to the trustees that they disregard the plaintiff's interest. The estate had been purchased for about 7,000*l.*, and the circumstances under which the purchase had been made are those on which the plaintiff mainly relies to establish the charge of culpable negligence against the trustees, one living and the other represented by the other defendants in this suit. What do they turn out to be? The Charity Corporation having this estate to sell employ a man to value; he values it; his evidence has been read, and the result of his evidence is that he valued it at an excessive price, at more than its real value, and he explains in his evidence why he did that. He said, I valued it, not for a mortgage, but I valued it for the owners, to guide them in the sale which they were about to make, at 6,890*l.* Mr. Godfrey was a member of that corporation that was going to sell this property, and he was one of the persons who had employed Mr. Wood to make that valuation, so that he was in possession of the fact of Mr. Wood's notion that the seller might ask 7,000*l.* for it. What a vendor may ask is one thing, what he may accept is another, but neither one nor the other furnish a reasonable ground for saying what is the true value of the thing to be bought. Having sold this to Middleditch for nearly 7,000*l.*, Mr. Godfrey proposes, in the letter I have read, to his co-trustee to take a mortgage for 5,000*l.* Is there any imprudence in that? Putting the rule as strictly as you like, and considering the matter as if he had been dealing with his own interest, is there anything so very unreasonable in what he did? In perfectly good faith, and with a perfectly good desire to do all that they could for Mrs. Godfrey to secure this sum of money to be lent upon mortgage, the two trustees think that it is a reasonable transaction for them to enter into.

In re Godfrey.

How does that come within the rule which says, that unless a trustee does as a prudent man would with his own money he shall be held to have done a wrong? I can see nothing that was imprudent in what was done here. If times had been better, and if Middleditch's expectations in managing this farm in that neighbourhood had been realised, the security would have been a perfectly good one. For several years, from the date of the mortgage up to 1877, the interest was paid, though irregularly—I suppose there are a large proportion of cases of mortgages in which the interest is not paid on quarter-day or the half-yearly day on which it is due; but interest was paid up to 1877. The evidence is that since then farming has been so bad that the farmers have been ruined, that Middleditch has become bankrupt, that a man who had been doing well before had been reduced to the utmost extremity, and that the property is not now saleable. But there is one thing which has not been very much observed upon. I will read the evidence of Mr. Jonas in this matter, which is, in my opinion, very well worth attending to. Mr. Jonas says, in July, 1877, he was instructed on behalf of Middleditch. That he then made a detailed valuation of the land of the Hospital Farm; that the Hospital Farm, portion of Middleditch's estate, was well worth the sum of 7,500*l.*, exclusive of the timber thereon, which is at the rate of about 50*l.* per acre; that the reserves placed upon the lots in contemplation of the abortive sale in 1877 were at a higher rate than that at which he valued the Hospital Farm portion of the said estate at. That is evidence on which I am asked to say that these two trustees did, wilfully disregarding their duty to their cestui que trust, take a mortgage for 5,000*l.* on this estate which was bought for nearly 7,000*l.*, and that they have therefore made themselves personally liable for all the loss that may have ensued by reason of the disaster which has since fallen upon the property.

Now the case of Speight v. Gaunt (6), which has been so much referred to, contains some observations which I may as well read. The Master of the Rolls, having the case before him, in which he examined all the authorities, and went into the matter with very great minuteness, says (at page 746) this:—"I think it is the duty of the Court, in those cases where there is a question of nicety as to construction or otherwise, to lean to the side of the honest trustee, and not to be anxious to find fine and extraordinary reasons for fixing him with any liability upon the contract. You are to endeavour as far as possible, having regard to the whole transaction, to avoid making an honest man, who is not paid for the performance of an unthankful office, liable for the failure of other people, from whom he receives no benefit. I think that is the view which has been taken by modern Judges, and some of the older cases in which a different view has been taken would now be repudiated with indignation." If I were to adopt that as a proposition of law, and apply that to this case, what can I find to blame in the conduct of these trustees?

Then there is the point of arithmetic. It is said, without taking into account what Mr. Wood has designated as the "latent value," the amount advanced was more than two-thirds of the estimated value of the farm; and when this amount has been exceeded the rule becomes strictly applicable. But the test always has been—Is this what a prudent man would have done with his own money? Let us try Mr. Godfrey's conduct in that respect. As a member of the corporation, he was advised that the property was worth 7,000*l.*, and he applies to Mr. Faulkner, who is a skilful agriculturist, and a man of business, and says:—"This estate, which was lately sold for about 7,000*l.*, I propose to invest the trust-money in, in order to get a better interest for Mrs. Godfrey." That is the case which is the foundation of this suit; and because 200*l.*, 300*l.* or 500*l.* more than the proper amount of the mortgage-money, which ought to have been invested, has been invested, I am asked to fix these two honest men, one alive, and the other through his representatives, with the consequences of having exercised their thankless office as they have done. And why? To the weather, which has caused the disaster which has fallen upon the agricultural interest, and to that alone, is ascribed any loss that has been sustained; and I am asked, by the decree which Mr. Horton Smith asks me to make, to fix these gentlemen with liability. I make no such order. Keeping to the rule I have before mentioned, and with a perfect desire to do justice between the parties, and to see, as far as I am concerned, that the rule is unimpaired which makes trustees liable for the acts they perform in the discharge of their duty, I decline to make any such decree as is asked for in this case. I dismiss this action without costs, but the trustees can take their costs out of the estate.

In re Godfrey.

Solicitors—R. J. Child & Son, agents for E. Ormond, Wantage, for plaintiff; Newman, Stretton & Hilliard, for Mr. Godfrey's representatives; Lovell, Son & Pitfield, agents for Dayman & Walsh, Oxford, for Mr. Faulkner.

DENMAN, J. 1883. July 10. } WOODHOUSE v. SPURGEON.

Will — Construction — Life Interest by Implication.

By deed, personalty was settled on trust for the wife for life, and after her death to pay the income during the husband's life as the wife should by will appoint; and if no children, then in the event which happened in trust for her appointees by will, remainder to her statutory next-of-kin. The wife, by will, appointed the fund after her husband's death, "but not to affect the income thereof during his life," to some (but not all) of her next-of-kin:—Held, that her husband did not take a life interest by implication.

By a deed, dated August, 1860, made on the occasion of the marriage of the defendant, the Rev. James Archer Spurgeon, and Emily Georgina Burgoyne, certain personal property (then in reversion) was settled on trust that the trustees should pay the income to the intended wife for life for her separate use; and after her decease, if the defendant J. A. Spurgeon should survive her, that they should pay the income during his life as the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon, notwithstanding coverture, should by will appoint; and it was declared that, after the determination of the trusts aforesaid, the trustees, in the event, which happened, of there being no child of the marriage to take an interest under the settlement, the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds, in case the defendant J. A. Spurgeon should die in the lifetime of the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon, in trust for the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon, her executors, administrators and assigns. But in case the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon should die in the lifetime of the defendant J. A. Spurgeon, then upon and for such trusts, intents and purposes, and with and under and subject to such powers, provisions and declarations as the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon should, notwithstanding her coverture, by will or codicil direct or appoint; and in default of such direction or appointment, and so far as any such direction or appointment should not extend, in trust for such person or persons as at the decease of the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon would have become entitled thereto under the statutes for the distribution of the personal estates of intestates, in case the said Emily Georgina Spurgeon had died possessed thereof intestate and without having been married; such persons, if more than one, to take as tenants-in-common in the shares in which they would have been entitled under the same statutes.

In March, 1862, some personal property in possession was settled on the same trusts. In April, 1862, Mrs. Spurgeon made a will, by which—after reciting the settlement, and that under the trusts thereof, after her decease, in case she should die in the lifetime of her husband, and without leaving any child who should attain a vested interest, such property was to go and be upon such trusts as she should by her will appoint — she gave, directed and appointed all such property so subject to her disposition as aforesaid, and from and after the decease of her said husband (but not to affect the income thereof during his life), in equal fifth parts, unto and between her brother, Captain Hugh Talbot Burgoyne, and her sisters, Margaret Wrottesley, Selina Henrietta Burgoyne, Caroline Stopford and Elizabeth Montague Woodhouse, being one-fifth part for each of them her brother and sisters respectively; and she directed the trustees of the settlements to dispose of such property accordingly. She did not appoint any executor.

Mrs. Spurgeon died in September, 1881. Her brother Hugh Talbot Burgoyne had predeceased her. The persons who would have taken under the settlements in default of appointment were her five sisters mentioned in her will, and Hugh J. D. Gretton, the only child of a sister who had predeceased her.

This was an administration action, brought by the trustees of the settlements, to determine who was entitled to the property during the life of J. A. Spurgeon, and who was entitled to the lapsed share of Hugh Talbot Burgoyne. The defendants were J. A. Spurgeon and Selina Henrietta Burgoyne, one of the sisters of the testatrix named in her will.

Barber, Q.C., and Borthwick, for the plaintiffs.

Warmington, Q.C., and Newman, for the defendant Spurgeon. — The meaning of the actual language of the will, upon a fair construction, was that the husband should have a life interest — Wilson v. Piggott (1) and Stevens v. Hall (2). The case was within the rule which gave a life interest by implication where realty was devised to an heir or personalty bequeathed to next-of-kin after the death of a person named. The fact that one of the persons entitled in default of appointment was omitted from the benefit did not prevent the reason of the rule applying; it was not like the case of Ralph v. Carrick (3), where a stranger had been included with next-of-kin as one of the objects of a bequest after the death of a person named. They cited as authorities for the rule Blackwell v. Bull (4) and Cockshott v. Cockshott (5).

They submitted that the testatrix had, as to the whole property, during the life of her husband, and still more the lapsed fifth, dealt with it so as to shew she meant to appoint, and had consequently made it her own; and her husband took by virtue of his relationship; though they admitted circumstances, such as the appointment of executors, which had been relied on in the decided cases as indicating such intention, were wanting here.

Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the defendant Selina H. Burgoyne.—There were no words in the will to give a life interest to the husband. Neither did a life interest arise by implication in consequence of a postponed gift being made after the death of an individual, except in the case where the donees were the very persons who would have taken in default of a will—Ralph v. Carrick (3), Upton v. Lord Ferrers (6), Theobald on Wills (7) and Henderson v. Constable (8).

Warmington, in reply.

DENMAN, J.—I am sorry to say that I have come to a conclusion that the husband takes nothing here by the appointment; and I say it with the greater regret because (to repeat what I said early in the argument) I believe the wife did intend to give him a life interest, but she has used language which it appears to me does not give it.

Now I do not rely at all upon the history of the case. I do not think it would be legitimate to take that into consideration in deciding what would be the effect of the will. One has to look at the words of the will. And, looking at the

(1) 2 Ves. 351.
(2) 2 Dr. & S. 22.
(3) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 801; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 984; 11 Ch. D. 873.
(4) 1 Keen, 176; 5 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 251.
(5) 2 Coll. C.C. 432; 15 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 131.
(6) 5 Ves. 801.
(7) p. 566.
(8) 5 Beav. 297; 11 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 322.

words of the will, I think it is clear, as far as anything of the kind can be clear, that they do not carry out that which I suspect, and strongly suspect, to have been the intention of the testatrix. She recites the settlements and the property which she was possessed of a power over. Then she goes on in this language: "Now I hereby give, direct and appoint all such property so subject to my disposition as aforesaid, and from and after the decease of my said dear husband," to five persons, who she named, who were her brother and four sisters—not all, but five of the six persons who would have taken under the settlement in default of appointment if they had all survived her. Now it did occur to me in the course of the argument that something or other might have been done, by inserting words, in order to effect that which, as I strongly suspect, was the intention of the testatrix, considering the words used are obviously incomplete, and the use of the word "and" indicates a probable omission of something. And it is quite possible that in the rough draft, or in some intention in the mind of the testatrix, there may have been an actual appointment of all the property mentioned in the will to the husband for life; but there is nothing of the kind to be found in the will, nor is there anything to justify one in supposing that it was so, except the use of the word "and." Now I have looked into the cases which have been decided on the question how far anything can be imported into a will to carry out what the Court may think the obvious intention of a testator. But I can find no case going anything like the length that would be required here. Indeed Mr. Warmington has not contended that there is. And I am quite sure he would have if such case could be found which would have enabled the Court, from the mere use of the word "and," to import a whole clause not found in the will itself. I should have been very glad if I could find any such authority; but I find none.

Then it is contended that there has been an actual exercise of the power—that is to say, that, putting a fair construction on the will, the language does give a life interest to the husband. I wish I could think so; but I cannot. She appointed the property "from and after the decease of my said husband." It is obvious that the language only contemplates dealing with the property from and after the decease of her husband, and does not therefore deal at all with anything that is to take place during his life, dealing with it from and after his decease. But then comes this parenthesis, "but not to affect the income thereof during his life." It is contended that means "not to affect his having the income during his life." Now if there were any words to give him the income during his life, it would be unnecessary to consider what those words mean. But there being nothing of the kind, what construction can I put on those words that would give him a life interest? They do not give him one, but they say the income is not to be affected during his life. What is the plain meaning of that? It appears to me that the plain meaning is that this appointment is not to come into play during his life, and that therefore the income is untouched by this appointment, and will go according to the settlement in default of appointment. And accordingly, there being no appointment of income, then the trustees will have to deal with it in favour of those who are interested in default of appointment. That seems to me really to dispose of the case so far as the question of whether this is an appointment under the settlement itself is concerned. I come to the conclusion with regret. I should have been very glad to find it otherwise, but I think it would be a very great stretch of language to do so, and it would be doing that which the will has failed to do.

But it is said that there is a gift by implication on this ground—that five of the persons to whom the property was to have gone in default of appointment are appointees after the life of the husband; and Mr. Warmington has very fairly and candidly called my attention to a case of Ralph v. Carrick (3), and others have been cited on the other side. Now, if those persons had been all the persons who would have been entitled under the Statute of Distributions, I am not at all sure that it would not have been a case in which the principle of those other cases would have been applicable, and that I might not imply a life interest in the husband; inasmuch as in that case they would all have come into the property, but for the postponement of their taking till the decease of the husband, it would not have been unreasonable to say they were only postponed in order that the husband might have that life estate. But, unfortunately for that contention, they are not all of the persons who would come into the property—there being one other. But there are five named persons; and it appears to me they are no more within the principle of the cases cited than if they had been five strangers. Ralph v. Carrick (3) is a very strong case to shew that where there is any other person named in the appointmen besides those entitled in default the implication does not arise. Indeed, in all cases the ratio decidendi is that the persons are the same. And I cannot see any distinction between the case where five out of six persons, some only of the persons entitled being named, and a case where an additional person is named, or where somebody entirely different from an heir or next-of-kin is appointed. Therefore I think that contention also fails, and, in accordance with the authorities, I should not be justified here in implying a life estate in the husband.

One other point was raised, but it was scarcely pressed, in respect of the share of one of the appointees who died in the lifetime of the testatrix—that his share was in fact dealt with by the testatrix, and she made it her own money, and that her husband would be entitled as her administrator and by force of his relationship. I think there is no indication that she was intending to deal with the property as her own. I think this is a case in which there is properly a lapsed legacy, and there will be the same result as in a failure to appoint, and the trustees will have to deal with the share for the benefit of those who would be entitled in default of appointment. I am sorry to come to this result, and I should be only too glad if the Court of Appeal, if the case went before it, took a different view.

Solicitors—Burgoynes, Milnes, Thrupp & Burgoyne, for plaintiffs; Thomas C. Page, for defendant.

PEARSON, J. 1883. July 3.

In re EARLE.

Vendor and Purchaser—Trust for Sale—Sale by Trustees—No Life Interest—The Settled Land Act, 1882, section 63.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale (after the death of his wife) in trust for his children in certain proportions—the sons taking absolutely, and the daughters' shares being settled upon themselves for life, with remainder to their children, or, in default of children, as they should appoint. The wife and all the children were dead. In February, 1883, the trustees contracted to sell part of the real estate:—Held, that as there was not, at the date of the contract for sale, any person entitled to the income of the settled land "for his life, or any other limited period," under the will of the testator, "the instrument under which the trust arose," section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, had no application, and the trustees could make a good title, without the concurrence of the beneficiaries, just as they could have done before the passing of the Act.

Adjourned summons.

This was an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

Thomas Earle, by his will dated the 21st of October, 1820, devised the residue of his real estate to trustees upon trust, at any time or times after his decease as they might think proper, to sell in manner therein mentioned, and convey the same to the purchasers thereof and receive the purchase-moneys for the same, with power to give receipts for the same. And the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale after the death of his wife, in trust for his son William Earle as to four-fourteenth parts, and for each of his sons Hardman Earle and Richard Earle as to three-fourteenth parts thereof, and for each of his daughters Ann Earle and Jane Earle as to two-fourteenth parts thereof, the shares of the daughters being settled upon trusts for the benefit of themselves respectively for life, with limited powers of appointment

In re Earle.

among their issue, and general powers in default of issue.

The testator died in 1822. His widow and all his sons and daughters were dead.

Sub-settlements had been made by some of the children of the daughters of their shares.

On the 12th of February, 1883, the then trustees of the will contracted to sell to Messrs. James and John Webster a part of the testator's real estate.

The purchasers insisted that, having regard to the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the several beneficiaries entitled to the income of the property at the date of the contract were necessary parties to the conveyance.

On the 3rd of May, 1883, the trustees of the will took out this summons for a declaration that they were entitled to convey the hereditaments comprised in the contract, and that the concurrence in such conveyance of the persons beneficially entitled to the income thereof was not necessary.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, is as follows:—

Section 63, sub-section 1: "Any land which, under any will . . . or other instrument or any number of instruments, whether made before or after the commencement of this Act, is subject to a trust or direction for sale of that land, and for the application or disposal of the money to arise from the sale, or the income of that money, or the income of the land until sale, or any part of that money or income, for the benefit of any person for his life, or any other limited period, or for the benefit of two or more persons concurrently for any limited period, and whether absolutely, or subject to a trust for accumulation of income for payment of debts or other purpose, or to any other restriction, shall be deemed to be settled land, and the instrument or instruments under which the trust arises shall be deemed to be a settlement; and the person for the time being beneficially entitled to the income of the land aforesaid until sale, whether absolutely or subject as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be tenant for life thereof; or if two or more persons are so entitled concurrently, then those persons shall be deemed to constitute together the tenant for life thereof; and the persons, if any, who are for the time being under the settlement trustees for sale of the settled land . . . are for purposes of this Act trustees of the settlement.

Sub-section 2:—"In every such case the provisions of this Act referring to a tenant for life, and to a settlement, and to settled land, shall extend to the person or persons aforesaid, and to the instrument or instruments under which his or their estate or interest arises, and to the land therein comprised. . . ."

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Phipson Beale, for the trustees.—The testator, by his will, has devised his real estate to trustees, upon an absolute trust for sale; and the proceeds of sale are given to his children in certain proportions. Section 63 of the Act only applies where there is some person interested in the proceeds of sale "for his life, or other limited period." Here all the life interests are gone; the persons to take under the will are absolutely entitled; and therefore the section has no application.

[PEARSON, J.—Undoubtedly, before the Act, the trustees would have had full power to sell under such a will.]

They also referred to section 56, sub-section 2.

Whitley, for the purchasers.—Under section 63 of the Act, one must look at the state of things existing at the time when the settlement takes effect; that is in this case at the death of the testator. The land then became "settled land"; and nothing has since happened to alter its character. Your Lordship held, in the recent case of In re The Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates (1), that the effect of the Act was "to give the tenant for life very enlarged powers for his own benefit"; and, under section 63, the persons for the time being beneficially entitled to the income "shall be deemed to constitute together the tenant for life." Their consent is therefore necessary.

PEARSON, J.—I hope I am not led away by my feelings of what convenience requires in the construction of this section. I have endeavoured to construe it as if it were a matter of utter indifference to her Majesty's subjects whether it is construed one way or the other. In the first place I have come to the conclusion that the words, "the instrument or instruments under which the trust arises shall be deemed to be a settlement," make it imperative on the Court to look simply at the instrument which creates the trust for sale. The instrument which is to be considered the settlement is, I think, the one instrument (or it may be the two instruments) which contains the trust for sale.

(1) Ante, p. 645; Solicitor's Journal, vol. xxvii. p. 499.

In re Earle.

Under these circumstances the one instrument to which I must look in the present case is the will of Mr. Thomas Earle. I find there an absolute trust for sale, introduced for the purpose of converting the real estate out and out. Now there can be no doubt that if this Act had not been passed the trustees of the will could sell the property, and give an absolute receipt to the purchaser for the purchase-money; and the only question submitted to me is whether under the 63rd section I am bound to hold that the persons beneficially interested under the will must concur in the sale in order to make it valid.

Now, under the will, the property is to be converted out and out; and, on the death of the widow (which happened some time since), the moneys to arise from the conversion of the property are to be divided into fourteenths—some of the children taking four-fourteenths, some three-fourteenths, and some two-fourteenths. I am informed that all the children are dead; but in some cases there are grandchildren; and where there are no grandchildren, the children have, in some way or other, absolutely dealt with and disposed of their shares of the sale moneys. Now section 63 deals with the case of a trust for sale, and for the application of the money to arise from the sale, or the income of that money, or the income of the land until sale, "for the benefit of any person for his life or any other limited period, or for the benefit of two or more persons concurrently for any limited period." But I am dealing with an instrument under which there is now no person interested for life, or for any limited period; because, the widow being dead, the children have taken their shares absolutely; and whether being sons they have sold them, or being daughters they have settled them, can make no difference, because the children have taken their shares absolutely under the only instrument at which I can look.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that this section has no application, and that the trustees can make a good title under the trust for sale, as they could have done before the Act. There will therefore be a declaration that the vendors can make a good title without the concurrence of any of the beneficiaries.

Solicitors—Sharpe, Parkers & Co., agents for Laces, Bird & Co., Liverpool.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 8.

JACKSON v. TYAS.

Practice—Investment of Exchequer Bills in Court—Cash under Control of Court—Money paid in under Private Act—23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 10—General Order, February 1st, 1861.

Money paid into Court under a private Act, and invested in Exchequer Bills, is "cash under the control of the Court," within the meaning of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, and the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861; and may be invested in any of the securities sanctioned by the Court, although such private Act directs the investment to be in Exchequer Bills.

Adjourned summons.

William Ward Jackson, the testator in the action, duly made his will, dated the 3rd day of May, 1832, and died on the 1st of February, 1842. The will contained no power of investment.

The Ward Jackson's Estate Act, 1853, being a private Act "to enable the trustees of the will of the late William W. Jackson to grant mining, building and improving leases of the estates thereby devised upon trusts by way of settlement, and for other purposes," provides:—

Section 57: "That upon a petition or motion to be preferred or made to the Court of Chancery in a summary way by any person interested in the lands for the time being, subject to such of the recited trusts of the will of William Ward Jackson as for the time being subsist, or in the moneys paid into the bank pursuant to this Act, the Court may order all such moneys so paid into the bank, or so much thereof as shall not be ordered by the Court to be applied in payment of costs, charges and expenses, according to the provisions of this Act, to be from time to time laid out in the purchase or redemption of land-tax, or in or towards the discharge of any debts or other incumbrances (being charges on the inheritance) affecting all or any part of the lands for the time being subject to those trusts, or in or towards draining, building on or otherwise substantially improving any of the lands subject to those trusts, or in the purchase of freehold or copyhold lands in England or Wales."

Section 58 provides that the lands from time to time purchased under the Act shall be conveyed to the trustees of the will upon the trusts thereof.

Section 59: "All moneys which, pursuant to this Act, are paid into the bank, or so much thereof as are not ordered by the Court to be applied in payment of costs, charges and expenses, according to the provisions of this Act, shall, in the meantime, and until such moneys be applied, or be invested, or laid out in or for all or any of the purposes by this Act authorised, be from time to time laid out in the name of the Accountant-General in the purchase of Exchequer Bills."

Section 61: "All such Exchequer Bills shall be deposited in the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General, and shall there remain until the same be, upon a petition or motion to be preferred or made to the said Court in a summary way, ordered to be sold by the Accountant-General for completing any purchase, or for any other of the purposes of this Act."

Under the provisions of this Act there was a sum of about 47,000*l.* in Court, invested in Exchequer Bills.

This was an application by the defendants, the trustees of the will of William W. Jackson (in effect), to consider whether, having regard to the above-mentioned sections of the Ward Jackson's Estate Act, 1853, these Exchequer Bills were cash under the control of the Court, within the meaning of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 10, and the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861.

A. Bailey, for the summons.—In In re The Birmingham Blue Coat School (1), an investment in Consols was ordered, notwithstanding a provision in the private Act that the fund should be invested in Exchequer Bills; and in In re Wilkinson's Estate (2), an investment in India Four per cent. Stock was ordered, notwithstanding a provision in the private Act that the fund should be invested in Consols, in Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities. The recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte St. John Baptist College, Oxford (3), is quite general in its terms, and shews that the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861, applies to cash "standing in the name of the Accountant-General in any cause or matter." He also referred to In re Boyd's Settled Estates (4) and Ex parte The Vicar of St. Mary, Wigton (5).

E. Ward, for the plaintiff.

PEARSON, J.—I think that the construction put by the Court of Appeal on the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861, in the recent case of Ex parte St. John Baptist College, Oxford (3), shews plainly what the intention of that Order was. That decision means that, whenever money is under the care and control of the Court, the intention of the General Order was to give the enlarged power of investment. Here the private Act has put this money under the care and control of the Court. I think, therefore, that I may avail myself of the enlarged power of

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 837; Law Rep. 1 Eq. 632.

(2) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 384; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 343.

(3) Ante, p. 268; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 93.

(4) 21 W. R. 667.

(5) Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 646.

investment, and do that which is reasonable and convenient.

The summons will go back to chambers, with a declaration that, in the opinion of the Court, the Act of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, and the General Order under it, applies to the Exchequer Bills in Court.

Solicitors—E. C. Huntington, for the summons; Hughes, Hooker & Co., for plaintiff.

BACON, V.C.
1883.
July 19.

SEEAR v. WEBB.

Practice—Judgment in Default of Appearance—Subject to Production of Affidavit of Service—Time within which Production must be made.

Where judgment is obtained in default of appearance, subject to the production of an affidavit of service, it is no longer necessary that it should be produced before the rising of the Court on the same day.

Lord Milltown v. Stuart (8 Sim. 34) has no application to the present practice.

Motion.

This was an action for redemption, in which, on Friday, the 13th of July, judgment was obtained dismissing the action for want of prosecution. The plaintiff did not appear, and judgment was given, subject to the production of the usual affidavit of service of notice of motion. This affidavit, however, was not filed or produced to the Registrar till the Monday following, the 16th of July. The order was drawn up and passed on the 18th of July.

C. H. Turner, for the plaintiff, obtained an ex parte order staying proceedings under the judgment.

July 19.—Marten, Q.C., and Latham, for the defendant, now moved on short notice by leave to discharge the ex parte order.

C. H. Turner, for the plaintiff, referred to Consolidated Order XVIII. rule 5 (1), and Lord Milltown v. Stuart (2), as an authority that no judgment ought to be drawn up unless the affidavit of service of the notice of motion was filed, at the latest, before the rising of the Court on the day on which the application was made.

BACON, V.C., said that, in his opinion, Lord Milltown v. Stuart (2) had no application to the present practice, and, being of opinion that it was clearly established that the plaintiff in fact had due notice of the motion to dismiss, held that the production of the affidavit to the Registrar on the Monday, before the judgment was drawn up, was sufficient, and discharged the ex parte order.

Solicitors—George Reader, for plaintiff; F. Heritage & Co., for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
June 23.
July 7.

In re ORDE.

Practice—Appointment of New Trustee—Will of Deceased Lunatic—Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32—Trustee Extension Act, 1852, ss. 9 and 10—Affidavit of Fitness.

Where the trustees appointed by the will of a deceased lunatic both predecease the lunatic, the Court has jurisdiction under section 9 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, to appoint new trustees of the will.

The affidavit as to the fitness of a new trustee must truly describe the position and

(1) Cons. Ord. XVIII. rule 5: "Before any affidavit is exhibited in Court, or otherwise produced for the purpose of grounding any order, writ, process or proceeding thereon, such affidavit shall be filed in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs; and no order grounded upon an affidavit shall be drawn up, unless the affidavit be first so filed, and an office copy thereof be produced."

(2) 8 Sim. 34.

In re Orde, App.

occupation of the deponent. The term "gentleman" is an insufficient description.

In this case the deceased lunatic had, prior to his lunacy, made a will by which he devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to two trustees upon certain trusts.

Both of the trustees predeceased the lunatic.

Under the lunacy all the real and personal estate of the lunatic had been sold, and the proceeds had been invested in Consols; and on the death of the lunatic administration with the will annexed was granted to one of the next-of-kin.

A petition was now presented, entitled in Lunacy and in the Chancery Division, by the beneficiaries under the will, praying that two new trustees of the will might be appointed, and that the Consols representing the real estate might be transferred to the new trustees, and that the Consols representing the personal estate might be transferred to the administrator with the will annexed.

W. Barber, Q.C., and Manisty, for the petitioners, referred to the Trustee Act, 1850, s. 32, and the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, ss. 9 and 10.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., said:—It is the duty of the Court, exercising its jurisdiction in lunacy, to get rid of the estate of a deceased lunatic, and that cannot now be done here without appointing new trustees of the will of the deceased lunatic; but a difficulty has been suggested as to whether the Court had power in such a case to appoint new trustees. I think, however, that the case comes within section 9 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, and that the order may be made.

COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

This case was (on July 7) again mentioned to the Court, and Manisty, for the petitioners, tendered an affidavit as to the fitness of the proposed new trustees, in which the deponent was simply described as "a gentleman."

COTTON, L.J., said:—I wish solicitors to understand that it is not sufficient to describe the deponent to an affidavit, which speaks as to the fitness of a new trustee, as "a gentleman," without stating his occupation. In future such an affidavit will not be accepted, nor the costs of it allowed.

BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Warrens, agents for W. & W. Dickson, Alnwick, for petitioners.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
May 22, 30.
July 9.

PHILLIPS v. HOMFRAY.
HOMFRAY v. PHILLIPS.

Wrongful User of Wayleave—Judgment for Compensation and Damages for the Trespass—Enquiry as to Damages—Death of Wrongdoer pending Enquiry—Cesser of Cause of Action—Application of "Actio personalis moritur cum persona."

It is not every wrongful act, attended with advantage to a wrongdoer, that warrants an action against his executors. Appropriation of property, or the proceeds or value of property, by the deceased wrongdoer should be shewn—per COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J.

In an action for compensation for tortious user of underground ways under the plaintiffs' land, judgment was given for the plaintiffs, and enquiries were directed as to—2. What quantities of coal had been conveyed; 3. What amount ought to be paid by the defendants for wayleave and royalty; 4. Whether the property of the plaintiffs had sustained any and what damage by reason of the manner in which the defendants had worked the coal. While these enquiries were being proceeded with, one of the defendants died. On motion by his executrix that the enquiries might be stayed as against her,—Held, per COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J. (dissentiente BAGGALLAY,

Phillips v. Homfray, App.

L.J.), that, although a personal benefit had accrued to the deceased defendant from his tortious user of the wayleave, it could not be said that there was anything amongst his assets that in law or equity belonged to the plaintiffs; and, therefore, that as the claims of the plaintiffs to which the second and third enquiries were directed were claims for unliquidated damages in respect of a trespass, and the object of those enquiries was to assess such unliquidated damages, such claims and the enquiries that related to them did not survive against the executrix of the deceased defendant.

Held further, per Curiam, that the subject-matter of the fourth enquiry, being a pure claim for damages for a wrongful act which did not result in any benefit to the wrongdoer, did not survive against the executrix of the wrongdoer.

Hambly v. Trott (1 Cowp. 374) discussed and considered.

These were cross appeals from a decision of Pearson, J., reported ante, p. 401: a defendant, the executrix of the deceased defendant Fothergill, appealing from so much of his Lordship's order as directed the second and third enquiries under the judgment to be proceeded with, on the ground that the cause of action thereunder had survived against the appellant as such executrix; and the plaintiffs appealing from so much of the order as directed the fourth enquiry under the judgment to be stayed, on the ground that the cause of action thereunder had not survived against such executrix.

Rigby, Q.C., and Osler, for the appellant in the first appeal, the executrix of the deceased defendant, and who was also the respondent to the cross appeal.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Maclean, for the plaintiffs in the action, the appellants in the cross appeal.

Howard, for other parties interested.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment. The arguments were the same as in the Court below, and in addition to the authorities there cited the following were referred to:—The Bishop of Winchester v. Knight (1), Pugh v. Jones (2), Mayne on Damages (3), Adams on Ejectment (4) and Pulteney v. Warren (5).

Cur. adv. vult.

The considered judgments of the Court were delivered on July 9; the judgment of Cotton, L.J., and Bowen, L.J., being delivered by BOWEN, L.J.—The appeal and cross appeal respectively in this case raise the question how far certain enquiries directed in the case of Phillips v. Homfray (6) have been affected by the death of R. Fothergill, one of the defendants, against whom in his lifetime such enquiries were directed. The suit was instituted, in the year 1866, by the plaintiffs against S. Homfray and other persons, including the deceased R. Fothergill, praying for a declaration that the defendants were liable in respect of certain coal and ironstone gotten and removed by them from the plaintiffs' farm; for an account of the coal and ironstone gotten by them from under the farm; for an account of coal and ironstone conveyed from the defendants' own mines through roads and passages under the plaintiffs' farm; and that the defendants might be decreed to pay for the coal and ironstone wrongly gotten by them from under the plaintiffs' farm at their proper value, and also to pay a wayleave, rent or compensation in respect of their user of the roads and passages under the plaintiffs' farm for the conveyance of their own coal and ironstone; also that they might pay compensation for the damage done to the surface of the plaintiffs' farm, and for other relief.

The facts of the case are substantially set forth in Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 770.

On the 28th of August, 1869, W. H. Forman, one of the defendants, died, and the suit was revived against his executors. The cause came on for hearing before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, together with the cross suit of Fothergill v. Collins, in which the defendants in the first-named suit prayed against the plaintiffs in the first-named suit specific performance of an agreement for sale of the plaintiffs' farm.

(1) 1 P. Wms. 406.
(2) 13 Mee. & W. 12.
(3) 3rd ed. p. 391.
(4) p. 336.
(5) 6 Ves. 86.
(6) Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 770.

Phillips v. Homfray, App.

On the 9th of May, a decree was made in both suits by the Vice-Chancellor, which was appealed from. The appeal came on for hearing before Lord Hatherley, Lord Chancellor, who, on the 30th of June, 1871, made an order varying the decree of the Vice-Chancellor.

By the Vice-Chancellor's decree, as varied on appeal, it was, amongst other things, declared that the defendants Fothergill and S. Homfray in the first suit, and the estate of the deceased defendant W. H. Forman in the first suit, were answerable to the plaintiffs in the first suit for and in respect of all coal, ironstone and other produce at any time gotten or removed by them or their orders, or for their use, under the plaintiffs' farm or any part thereof, and that the defendants S. Homfray and R. Fothergill in the first suit were liable to make compensation to the plaintiffs in the first suit for user of all roads and passages under the said farm, and the following enquiries were directed:—

1. An enquiry what quantities of coal, ironstone and other produce had been so gotten or removed as aforesaid. And it was ordered that the market price or value, or as near thereto as may be, of all coal, ironstone and other produce so gotten or removed as aforesaid at the pit's mouth, all just allowance being made to the defendants in the first suit in respect of their charges and expenses (if any) on account of the carriage to the pit's mouth or otherwise of such coal, ironstone and other produce, but no allowance being made for the expense of getting, severing or working the same, be certified. And it was ordered that the following enquiries be made:—

2. An enquiry what quantities of coal, ironstone and other produce have been conveyed from the collieries and mines of the defendants in the first suit in the pleadings mentioned, or any of them, over or through the roads or passages under the plaintiffs' said farm.

3. An enquiry what amount upon the result of the enquiry last directed ought to be paid by the defendants in the first suit to the plaintiffs in the first suit for any wayleave and royalty in respect of the user by the defendants in the first suit of the said roads and passages, and for the purpose of working their said collieries and mines.

4. An enquiry whether the said farm and the mineral property of the plaintiffs in the first suit under the same have sustained any and, if any, what amount of damage by reason of the manner in which the defendants in the first suit have worked the coal, ironstone and other produce under the plaintiffs' said farm..

R. Fothergill died on the 19th of September, 1881, and the suit of Phillips v. Homfray was revived against the defendant Mary Fothergill, as executrix of the will of R. Fothergill. In consequence of litigation in respect of other matters with the lady of the manor in which the plaintiffs' farm is situate, the above enquiries in Phillips v. Homfray were not proceeded with until July, 1882, when an order was made by Mr. Justice Kay in chambers, directing that the enquiry should be made by the official referee, who, after hearing the parties for some days, adjourned the case until July, 1883.

As the prosecution of the enquiries involved considerable expense, a motion was made upon the 15th of February, 1883, before Mr. Justice Pearson, on behalf of Mrs. Fothergill, praying that all further proceedings under the second, third and fourth enquiries might be stayed and the official referee directed not to proceed with them. Mr. Justice Pearson stayed the fourth enquiry, on the ground that it had necessarily abated by reason of the death of R. Fothergill, but refused to stay the second and third enquiries.

The defendant Mary Fothergill has appealed against his refusal to stay the second and third of these enquiries, while the plaintiffs by their cross appeal complain of his decision that the fourth enquiry is to be stayed; and the question raised in both appeals is how far the respective enquiries and the plaintiffs' claims, in virtue of which they were directed, are affected by the principle "Actio personalis moritur cum persona."

The plaintiffs' claim out of which the second and third enquiries spring is a claim to be compensated for the secret and tortious use made by the deceased R. Fothergill and others during his lifetime of the underground ways and passages under the plaintiffs' farm for the purpose of conveying the coal and ironstone of R. Fothergill and his co-trespassers.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Pearson as to these two enquiries is based upon the view that this description of claim did not abate upon R. Fothergill's death, but was capable of being prosecuted against the assets in the hands of his executrix. That it is in form a claim in the nature of a claim for trespass, the damages for which were to be measured by the amount of wayleave which the defendants would have had to pay for permission to use the plaintiffs' ways and passages, cannot be disputed. But Mr. Justice Pearson was of opinion that this was one of the class of cases in which a deceased man's estate remained liable for a profit derived by it out of his wrongful acts during his lifetime. The learned Judge founded his opinion upon certain language of Lord Mansfield, in the case of Hambly v. Trott (7), to the effect that so far as the act of the offender had been beneficial to himself his assets ought to be answerable. We have therefore to consider, in the first place, what is the true limit and meaning of the rule "that a personal action dies upon a defendant's death," and whether there is or can be in the circumstances raised by the case a profit received by his assets which the plaintiffs can follow.

The only cases in which, apart from questions of breach of contract expressed or implied, a remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act, appear to us to be those in which property, or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his own estate or moneys.

In such cases, whatever the original form of action, it is in substance brought to recover property, or its proceeds or value, and by amendment could be made such in form as well as in substance. In such cases the action, though arising out of a wrongful act, does not die with the person. The property, or the proceeds or value, which in the lifetime of the wrongdoer could have been recovered from him, can be traced after his death to his assets, and recaptured by the rightful owner there. But it is not every wrongful act by which a wrongdoer indirectly benefits that falls under this head, if the benefit does not consist in the acquisition of property, or its proceeds or value. Where there is nothing among the assets of the deceased that in law or in equity belongs to the plaintiff, and the damages which have been done to him are unliquidated and uncertain, the executors of a wrongdoer cannot be sued merely because it was worth the wrongdoer's while to commit the act which is complained of, and an indirect benefit may have been reaped thereby to himself. Two illustrations can be given of the above distinction with regard to the liability of executors.

The produce, proceeds or value of waste, equitable or legal, committed by a tenant-for-life, can be followed into the hands of his executors and retaken from them. If he has wrongly cut timber, the timber, or its proceeds or value, can be followed; but no action for waste, permissive or voluntary, as such, lies against the executors of a tenant-for-life. By non-repairing a house, or by ploughing up ancient meadow, the tenant-for-life may have indirectly benefited himself or saved his own pocket. But neither law nor equity recognise in this indirect benefit which he may have received any ground for proceedings against his executors.

A second illustration may be given of the distinction we have referred to. The rents, or the produce or profits, of the land which have wrongly been received by a person other than the rightful owner—as a rule, and subject to certain exceptions that we need not now discuss—may be pursued by the rightful owner and recovered from the wrongdoer, or, if he is dead, from his estate. But there is a sense in which the term "profits" is used with reference to land to represent the unliquidated damages recoverable in respect of a trespass—as when an action for mesne profits is maintained to recover, not the rents or produce of land, or their equivalent, but compensation for the bare possession, wrongfully taken and held, of the land itself. An action for mesne profits in this narrower sense will not lie at common law, and apart from statute, against executors, and no account would be decreed in equity except in a case where the profits were either property, or the produce or profits or value of property, actually received.

(7) 1 Cowp. 374.

This line of demarcation has drawn itself in strict conformity with the classification of forms of action known to the English law; and as long as the maxim "Actio personalis" is preserved by the law of this country, the line drawn is neither inconvenient nor unreasonable. If every wrongful act, which was attended consequentially and indirectly with advantage to the wrongdoer or his pocket, were to warrant an action against executors, it would be impossible to know when executors were liable or not, and the maxim "Actio personalis" would, in fact, become a mere source of litigation. We have not now to consider the policy of the maxim. It is part of the law, and, while it is so, ought not to be frittered away. The judgment of Mr. Justice Pearson is based, however, upon certain dicta of Lord Mansfield in Hambly v. Trott (7), which are in form ambiguous, and it is necessary, accordingly, to examine these dicta with reference to the history of the maxim "Actio personalis moritur cum persona." Whatever its wisdom or policy, the rule, with certain limitations and explanations, is as old as the English law. By the civil law, penal actions arising from wrong were not generally available against the heir, and certain actions ex contractu fell under the same disability. By the English law, an executor represents the debts and property, but not the person, of the testator. It seems to have been thought that there would be an injustice in making the executor stand in the place of the dead man, when the causes of action were purely personal—see Year Book, 19 Hen. 6. 66 B. "The taking up of an executorship," says Bacon, in his Abridgment, Exec. p. 2, "is an engagement to answer all debts of the deceased, and all undertakings that create a debt, so far as there are assets, but doth not embark the executor in the personal trusts of the deceased, nor is he obliged to answer for his several injuries, for none can tell how they might have been discharged or answered by the testator himself." And even in some actions of contract, such as debt, where the testator could have waged his law, the executor was not held liable, for this would have been to deprive his executor of the benefit of the wager of law. As regards all actions essentially based on tort, the principle was inflexibly applied.

There was, however, a species of personal actions to which the rule in question was not extended. These were such as were founded upon some obligation, contract, debt, covenant or other duty to be performed—see Pinchon's Case (8) and Wheatley v. Lane (9)—where, if an injury had been done to the personal property of the plaintiff, for relief arising out of which assumpsit could be brought (as in the case of actions against carriers and bailees), the executors of the deceased might still be sued.

It was urged before us on behalf of the plaintiffs that they were entitled in the present case to waive the tort which had been committed against them by the deceased, and to treat the claim as substantially one of implied contract or account, upon the theory of an implied promise by him to pay for what he had done, or, at all events, on the principle that his estate had reaped some measureable benefit or profit from the wrong which the executrix was not entitled as against the plaintiffs to retain.

Reference was made to the analogy of the cases where an action for money had and received had been maintainable for the proceeds of goods wrongfully sold; and to a more doubtful class of authorities, in which it has been suggested that use and occupation would lie for the enjoyment of lands occupied, even in the absence of any demise of the plaintiff. It seems to us, as we have said, that the profits arising from a wrong done by a deceased man which can be followed against his estate are only such profits as take the shape of property, or the proceeds or value of property, withdrawn from the rightful owner and acquired by the wrongdoer. But in order to understand Lord Mansfield, and the argument to which reference has been made,

(8) 9 Coke, 157.

(9) 1 Wms. Saund. 216*a*.

it is desirable to begin with some cases in the reign of Elizabeth which illustrate the matter. The first is that of Sir Henry Sherrington, cited in Saville, p. 40, and referred to by Lord Mansfield in Hambly v. Trott (7). Sir Henry Sherrington had cut during his lifetime, and converted to his own use, certain oaks and growing trees upon land belonging to the Queen. After his death the Attorney-General exhibited an information against his executrix, and Chief Justice Manwood, in giving judgment, has used language which, it seems to us, has been misunderstood. "In every case," he says, "in which a price or value has been set upon a thing in which the offence is committed, if the offender dies his executors shall be chargeable; as in this case the information is for cutting 100 oaks to the value of 100*l.*, or for taking 100 cattle of the Queen, price 20*l.*, the executors are chargeable; but where the action or information is for trampling the herbage only, ad damnum, &c., the executor shall not be chargeable." The point of this judgment seems to us to be that the deceased had converted the Queen's property to his own use during his lifetime, and the Attorney-General was held entitled to recover for the Queen the property, or, in default, the "value" which represented the property or its proceeds. In Sir Brien Tuck's Case (10), in the same reign, it was held by the Barons of the Exchequer that the executor of an executor should not be charged with a devastavit made by the executor of the first testator—"No: not in the case of the King, because it is a personal wrong only." The collocation of these two cases points to the distinction which we have drawn. The proceeds or value of actual property acquired wrongfully by the testator can be recovered against an executor; but the mere fact that the wrongful act or neglect saved the testator from expense is not sufficient justification for suing his executor. In Tooley v. Windham (11) the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant under the following circumstances. The defendant's father in his lifetime had taken the profits of certain land, whereupon the plaintiff had purchased a writ out of Chancery against the defendant, with the intent of exhibiting a bill against him. Upon the return of the writ for the said profits, the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would forbear suit, promised the plaintiff that, if he would prove that his father had taken the profits, or had had the possession of the lands under the title of the plaintiff's father, he, the defendant, would pay the plaintiff for the profits of the land. The Court held that this was no consideration for the promise, on the ground that the taking of the profits of the plaintiff's land by the defendant's father was a personal tort for which neither the executor nor heir could be made to answer. So far as we are aware, an action for mesne profits (or bare damages for wrongful possession and occupation of land) has never been considered maintainable at common law against the executors of the person who was wrongfully in possession. But the language of Lord Mansfield in the case of Hambly v. Trott (7) is relied upon in the judgment of Mr. Justice Pearson as going beyond the above line, and it is important, therefore, to examine it in detail.

That action was an action of trover brought against an administrator with the will annexed for a conversion by the plaintiff in his lifetime. The plea was that the testator was not guilty. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, the Court unanimously arrested the judgment, on the ground that the cause of action as laid was a personal tort which died with the person. This was in accordance with the decision in Bailey's Case, reported in Sir Thomas Raymond, p. 71.

The judgment in Hambly v. Trott (7) can therefore be no authority for the appellant's contention, but the language of Lord Mansfield, which has since been cited with approval by the highest tribunals, is of course entitled to the utmost weight.

Lord Mansfield, in the first place, observes that no action of tort, where the plea must be "not guilty," will lie against an executor. "On the face of such a record the cause of action arises ex delicto," and "all private criminal injuries or wrongs, as well as all public crimes, are buried with the offender." This is the inflexible rule.

(10) 3 Leo. 241.
(11) 1 Cro. Eliz. 206.

In mitigation of the apparent hardship, Lord Mansfield proceeds, obiter dictu, to point out that in most cases where trover lies against the testator another action might be brought against the executor which will serve the purpose; and he gives the following illustration. An action on the custom of the realm against a common carrier is for a tort and a supposed crime. The plea is "not guilty"; therefore, such action will not lie against an executor; but assumpsit, which is another action for the same cause, will lie instead. "So," continues Lord Mansfield, "if a man take a horse from another and bring him back again, an action of trespass will not lie against his executor, though it would against him; but an action for the use and hire of the horse will lie against the executor." And in further illustration of this distinction Lord Mansfield points out that, in Bailey's Case (Sir Thomas Raymond, p. 71), the executor would have been liable for the value of the goods wrongfully sold by the testator, just as Sir Henry Sherrington's Estate (in Saville, p. 40) was liable for the value of the trees he had cut and carried away. It is with reference to the above distinction that Lord Mansfield goes on to use the language which, we think, has been misunderstood. "Here, therefore, is a fundamental distinction. If it is a sort of injury by which the offender acquires a gain to himself at the expense of the sufferer, as beating or imprisoning a man, &c., then the person injured has only a reparation for the delictum in damages, to be assessed by a jury. But where, besides the crime, property is acquired which benefits the testator, there an action for the value of the property shall survive against the executor; as, for instance, the executor shall not be chargeable for the injury done by his testator in cutting down another man's trees, but for the benefit arising to his testator for the value or sale of the trees, he shall. So far as the tort itself goes, an executor shall not be liable; and therefore it is that all public and all private crimes die with the offender, and the executor is not chargeable; but, so far as the act of the offender is beneficial, his assets ought to be answerable, and his executor, therefore, shall be charged."

It seems to us that Lord Mansfield does no more than indicate that there is a class of cases in which assumpsit can be brought against a wrongdoer to recover the property he has taken, or its proceeds or value, and that in such cases the action will survive against the executor. In the illustration given by him of the horse, he does not mean that an action for the use and hire of a horse wrongfully taken will always lie against an executor, but that it will lie whenever a similar action would have lain against the wrongdoer himself. The case he puts is the case of a horse taken and restored, not of a horse taken and held under an adverse claim; and we are not prepared to say, if absolutely nothing appeared in evidence, except that a horse was taken and was afterwards brought back again, the owner might not recover for the use and hire of the horse, on the hypothesis of an implied contract to pay for him. It is in such a sense that Lord Ellenborough, in Foster v. Stewart (12), clearly understood Lord Mansfield's language. We see nothing in the language of Lord Chelmsford, in the House of Lords, in Peek v. Gurney (13), to indicate that he understood it otherwise. If so, the true test to be applied in the present case is whether the plaintiffs' claim against the deceased R. Fothergill, in respect of which enquiries 2 and 3 were directed in his lifetime, belongs to the category of actions ex delicto, or whether any form of action against the executors of the deceased, or the deceased man in his lifetime, can be based upon any implied contract or duty. In other words, could the plaintiff have sued the deceased at law in any form of action in which "not guilty" would not be the proper plea? If such alternative forms of action could be conceived, it must be either an action for the use, by the plaintiffs' permission, of the plaintiffs' roads and passages, similar in principle, though not identical, with an action for the use and occupation of the plaintiffs' land; or it must be in the shape of an action for money had and received, based upon the supposition that

(12) 3 M. & S. 196.

(13) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 19; Law Rep. 6 E. & Ir. App. 393.

funds are in the hands of the executors which properly belong, in law or in equity, to the plaintiff.

We do not believe that the principle of waiving a tort and suing in contract can be carried further than this—that a plaintiff is entitled, if he chooses it, to abstain from treating as a wrong the acts of the defendant in cases where, independently of the question of wrong, the plaintiff could make a case for relief. There have been, no doubt, instances in which, nothing further appearing in evidence but that one person was the owner of land and that another had taken possession of and enjoyed it, an action for use and occupation under the statute has been upheld—see Hilyer v. Silcocks (14). In such cases the inference, in the absence of proof to the contrary, has been allowed to be drawn that the enjoyment was by permission of the rightful owner. On a somewhat similar principle an action by the lord of a market for stallage was held maintainable against a person who fixed a stall in the soil without leave or licence. The authority of this latter case has been questioned—see Turner v. The Cameron Coal Steam Company (15)—and actions for use and occupation, according to the better opinion, have been confined to the class of cases where defendant is not a trespasser setting up an adverse title, and where there are no circumstances that negative the implication of a contract—see Churchward v. Blight and Ford (16), per Chief Baron Pollock, and Birch v. Wright (17). No doubt the mere enjoyment by one man of another man's property, real or personal, may be had under such circumstances as leave still open as a reasonable inference the presumption that it is taken on the terms of payment. Just as a man who takes a bun from the refreshment counter at a railway station takes it on the implied promise to pay for it, so actions of assumpsit have been held to lie for the rents of land improperly received under pretence of title—see Bacon's Abridgment, Assumpsit, H. p. 260, and Clarence v. Marshal, per Baron Bailey (18).

One of the most remarkable instances of waiver of a tort is to be found in the case of Lightly v. Clouston (19), where the master of an apprentice who had been seduced from his service to work for another person was held justified in waiving the tort and bringing an action of indebitatus assumpsit for work and labour done against the tort-feasor. Lord Mansfield, in deciding the case, referred to the cases of the wrongful sale of goods, where, if the rightful owner chooses to sue for the produce of the sale, he may do it, the practice being an advantage, and not a disadvantage, to the defendant. The case was decided upon the ground that the labour of the apprentice belonged to his master, who might insist on an equivalent for it—or, at all events, that the apprentice could not contract for the benefit of anybody except his rightful owner—see per Lord Ellenborough, in Foster v. Stewart (12). And actions in which the owners of goods wrongfully sold were held entitled to waive the tort and to recover in assumpsit for the proceeds had become familiar to the common law as far back as towards the seventeenth century—see La Mine v. Dorrell (20). The difficulties of extending the above principle to the present case appear to us insuperable. The deceased R. Fothergill, by carrying his coal and ironstone in secret over the plaintiffs' roads, took nothing from the plaintiffs. The circumstances under which he used the road appear to us to negative the idea that he meant to pay for it. Nor have the assets of the deceased defendant been necessarily swollen by what he has done. He saved his estate expense, but he did not bring into it any additional property or value belonging to another person. The case of Kirk v. Todd (21) seems to us materially in point. There the owners of certain dye-works sued the original defendants for fouling and polluting a brook. It was held that the action would not survive against their executors. The late Master of the Rolls

(14) 19 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 295.
(15) 5 Exch. Rep. 932; 20 Law J. Rep. Exch. 71.
(16) 2 Hurl. & N. 446; 26 Law J. Rep. Exch. 354.
(17) 1 Term Rep. 398
(18) 2 C. & M. 495.
(19) 1 Taunt. 113.
(20) 2 Ld. Raym. 1216.
(21) Ante, p. 224; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 484.

used the following language:—"This was an action on a simple tort. It did not appear that the defendant had got any benefit by fouling the plaintiff's stream; he had only injured the plaintiff. As I understand the rule at common law, it was this. You could not sue executors for a wrong committed by their testator for which you could recover only unliquidated damages. That rule has never been altered except by the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42, which allowed the executors to be sued in certain cases, but with a limitation that the injury must have been committed not more than six months before the death of the testator. That was not so here. Therefore the statute did not apply, and the rule of the common law remains in its simplicity."

In every case where one man fouls the flow of water to which another is entitled he probably saves himself expense by doing so. But the benefit to which the Master of the Rolls alludes appears to us to be some beneficial property or value, capable of being measured, followed and recovered.

It remains to be considered whether there is any equitable doctrine which can extend or vary the above rules of the common law. We can see none. An action for account will only under such circumstances lie where the defendant has something in his hands representing the plaintiff's property, or the proceeds or value of it. But if there were any such, it could be recovered at law as well as in equity.

It is true that the wrongful acts complained of were done in secret; but even if such concealment could raise in favour of the plaintiffs an equity to be relieved from the application of the principle "Actio personalis moritur cum persona," which we doubt, the fraud in this case was discovered during the lifetime of the deceased R. Fothergill. The mere circumstance of the defendant's death after the decree and before the accounts taken would not raise any equity in the plaintiffs' favour, and, as far as we can see, the equity authorities relied upon in argument by the plaintiffs do not assist them. In The Bishop of Winchester v. Knight (1), it was held that the lord of the manor might maintain a bill for an account of ore dug or timber cut by the defendant's testator. Lord Chancellor Cooper, in giving judgment, said: "It would be a reproach to equity to say that when a man has taken my property, my ore or timber, and disposed of it in his lifetime, and dies, that in this case I must be without remedy." But he added "that the trespass of breaking up meadows or ancient pasture ground died with the person." If the plaintiffs in the present action were to recover, it is difficult to see why a landlord should not be entitled in equity to an account against the executors of his tenant for a profit indirectly derived or expense saved by the testator through breaking up ancient meadow or pasture land. In Pulteney v. Warren (5) an account of mesne profits was decreed against executors on the special ground that the plaintiff had been prevented by injunction, afterwards dissolved, from proceeding in ejectment against the testator in his lifetime, and that it ought to have been one of the terms on which the injunction was granted that the testator or his estate would compensate the plaintiff against the loss of such mesne profits if the injunction turned out to be unjust. It would follow that, had not such special grounds existed, the bill for an account of mesne profits would have been held not maintainable against the executors. Pulteney v. Warren (5) is therefore an authority which bears against the plaintiffs in the present case. In Moneypenny v. Bristowe (22) a suit was held maintainable against the executors for rents received during the continuance in possession of the testatrix; but the rents in question seem to have been rents which had actually been paid over to the testatrix, and fell within the description of property taken by the trespasser. The history of the case of Lansdowne v. Lansdowne (23) appears to us to shew that the doctrine of the Courts of equity is in exact conformity with the distinction we have pointed out. A bill was filed by a remainderman against the representative of a deceased tenant-for-life without impeachment for waste. Two causes of complaint

(22) 2 Russ. & M. 117; 1 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 88.

(23) 1 Madd. 116.

has been very fully considered by Mr. Justice Pearson in the course of his judgment, and also by my colleagues in that which has just been delivered, I desire to add my own comments upon it, as its true effect has, in my opinion, been to some extent misapprehended.

The judgment in Hambly v. Trott (7) is generally referred to as that of Lord Mansfield, but it expressed the unanimous fully considered opinion of the Court, which included Justices Aston and Ashurst, as well as Lord Mansfield, and was delivered after the case had been twice argued.

The action was in trover against an administrator with the will annexed; the declaration laid an unlawful conversion by the testator to his own use of certain sheep, pigs, goats and oats; the plea was that the testator was not guilty. The verdict being for the plaintiff, the Court was moved, on behalf of the defendant, in arrest of judgment, upon the ground that the wrongful act of the testator was a personal tort which died with the person. A rule to shew cause was granted, and it was upon cause being shewn that the judgment was given. At the close of the arguments on the first occasion, Lord Mansfield said, "I should be very sorry to decide that trover will not lie, if there is no other remedy for the right"; and, after an opinion expressed by the other Judges, that, as then advised, they thought the action maintainable, the Court ordered the matter to stand over for further argument, Lord Mansfield adding, "The criterion I go upon is this: can justice possibly be done in any other form of action?"

After the second argument, on the 24th of January, 1776, the Court took time to consider its judgment, and, on the 12th of February, in the same year, held that the judgment must be arrested. But it is important to notice the grounds upon which the Court arrived at this conclusion. After stating (a) that the axiom "Actio personalis moritur cum persona" was not generally true, and much less universally so, and that it left the law undefined as to the kind of personal actions which die with the person or survive against the executor; and (b) that an action of trover was in form a fiction, and in substance founded on property, for the equitable purpose of recovering the value of the plaintiff's specific property used and enjoyed by the defendant; and that, if no other action could be brought against the executor, it seemed unjust and inconvenient that the testator's assets should not be liable for the value of what belonged to another man which the testator had reaped the benefit of; and (c) that the Court, deeming the matter well deserved consideration, had carefully examined all the cases upon the subject—Lord Mansfield proceeded to enunciate the conclusions at which the Court had arrived as to actions which survived against an executor and those which died with the person, distinguishing between those which survived or died on account of the form of action—a distinction which it is, in my opinion, most important to bear in mind. As regards those actions which survive or die on account of the cause of action, Lord Mansfield expressed himself as follows: "Where the cause of action is money due on a contract to be performed, gain or acquisition of the testator by the work and labour or property of another, the action survives against the executor. But where the cause of action is a tort, or arises ex delicto, supposed to be by force and against the King's peace, there the action dies—as battery, false imprisonment, trespass, nuisance, obstructing lights, diverting a watercourse, escape against the sheriff, and many others of a like kind." And as regards those actions which survive or die in respect of the form of action, he went on to say as follows: "In some actions the defendant could have waged his law, and therefore no action in that form lies against an executor. But now other actions are substituted in their room upon the very same cause, which do survive and lie against the executor. No action, where in form the declaration must be 'quare vi et armis et contra pacem,' or where the plea must be, as in this case, that the testator was not guilty, can lie against the executor. Upon the face of the record the cause of action arises ex delicto, and all private criminal injuries or wrongs, as well as all public crimes, are buried with the offender." But having said thus much, Lord Mansfield added that, in most if not in all the cases, where trover lies against the testator, another action might be brought against the executor, which would answer the purpose. In applying the rules so enunciated to the circumstances of the case then under consideration, the Court held that the form of the plea, that the testator was not guilty, was decisive, and that the judgment must be arrested, but added that no mischief would be thereby occasioned, because, so far as the cause of action did not arise ex delicto or ex maleficio of the testator, but was founded on a duty which the testator owed to the plaintiff, another form of action might be brought.

It would appear, then, that the Judges who disposed of Hambly v. Trott (7) were of opinion—first, that the cause of action was such that the executors might have been made liable; secondly, that by reason of the form of the action—the declaration being in trover, and the plea that the testator was not guilty—it could not be maintained against the executors; and, thirdly, that, notwithstanding the arrest of judgment in the pending action, another form of action might be brought and maintained against the executors. It is, to my mind, clear that the Judges were of opinion that the merits were with the plaintiff, but that they were precluded, by the technicalities of the pleadings, from giving him that to which they deemed him morally entitled. That this was their view is supported by the comments of Lord Mansfield upon two older cases which he cited in the course of the judgment. In the first of these cases—which was later in date than the other, and which he cited from Sir T. Raymond—the plaintiff declared that he was possessed of a cow, which he delivered to the testator to keep for the use of the plaintiff, which cow the testator sold, and disposed of the money to his own use; and that neither the testator nor the defendant, his executor, had ever paid the money. Commenting upon this case, Lord Mansfield said :—"Upon this state of the case no one can doubt but that the executor was liable for the value; but the special injury charged obliged him to plead that the testator was not guilty." The jury found the defendant guilty; but, on motion for arrest of judgment, it was held that the executor ought not to be chargeable. The other case cited was that known as Sir Henry Sherrington's (27). He had cut down trees upon the land of Queen Elizabeth, and converted them to his own use. Upon an information against his widow, Mr. Justice Manwood, in the course of his judgment, said :—"In every case where any price or value is set upon the thing in which the offence is committed, if the defendant dies his executor shall be chargeable; but where the action is for damages only in satisfaction of the injury alone, there his executors shall not be liable." In further commenting upon these two cases, Lord Mansfield said :—"Here, therefore, is a fundamental distinction. If it is a sort of injury by which the offender acquires no gain to himself at the expense of the sufferer—as beating or imprisoning a man, &c.—there the person injured has only a reparation for the delictum in damages, to be assessed by a jury. But where, besides the crime, property is acquired which benefits the testator, there an action for the value of the property shall survive against the executor. As, for instance, the executor shall not be charged for the injury done by his testator in cutting down another man's trees; but for the benefit arising to the testator from the value or sale of the trees, he shall." Upwards of a hundred years have elapsed since this judgment in Hambly v. Trott (7) was delivered. It has ever since been regarded as an accurate representation as to the state of the law as affecting executors, in respect of causes of action and forms of action arising out of the acts of their testators.

The circumstances under which the wrongful act with which we at present have to deal was committed may be concisely stated as follows :—In the year 1866 the plaintiffs were the owners of a farm in Monmouthshire, and the defendants, Homfray, Fothergill and Forman, who carried on business under the style of the "Tredegar Iron Company," had for some time past been working the minerals underlying lands adjoining the plaintiffs' farm; and in the course of that year the plaintiffs discovered that the defendants were not only getting minerals from under the farm, but were using roads and passages made by them through the plaintiffs' minerals for the conveyance of minerals gotten by the defendants from their own mines. In the observations which I am about to make, it is important to bear in mind the nature of the wrongful act in respect of which the plaintiffs claim redress; but I deem it unnecessary to further refer to the institution and progress of the suit, as those have been sufficiently detailed in the judgment which has just been delivered.

(27) Sav. 40.

It has hardly been contended, on the present appeal, that a remedy for a wrongful act cannot be pursued against the estate of a deceased person by whom the act has been committed, when property or the proceeds of property belonging to another have been appropriated by the deceased person—in other words, that the action in such cases, though arising out of a wrongful act, does not die with the person; but it has been urged that the principle thus enunciated is limited to cases in which property or the proceeds of property have been appropriated by the deceased person, and that it does not apply to a case in which the deceased person has derived any other benefit from his wrongdoing than property or the proceeds of property; and, in particular, that it does not apply to a case in which the benefit derived has not been in the form of an actual acquisition of property, but of a saving of expenditure which must otherwise have been incurred by the wrongdoer, as in the present case; in which, for the purpose of the present argument, it must be assumed that by the use by the defendants for the carriage of their minerals, of the roads and passages under the plaintiffs' farm, there was a saving to them of an expenditure which they must otherwise have incurred. Speaking with much diffidence—as my views in this respect differ from those of my colleagues—I feel bound to say that I cannot appreciate the reasons upon which it is insisted that, although the executors are bound to account for any accretion to the property of their testator derived directly from his wrongful act, they are not liable for the amount or value of any other benefit which may be derived by his estate from or by reason of such wrongful act.

I find nothing in the language used by Lord Mansfield that can support this view. On the contrary, when classifying the actions which survive against an executor by reason of the causes of action, he includes amongst such causes of action "gain or acquisition of the testator by the work and labour or property of another"; and he in no respect limits or qualifies the nature or character of the "gain" referred to. A gain or acquisition to the wrongdoer by the work and labour or property of another does not necessarily, if it does at all, imply a diminution of the property of such other person.

Whether the amount of the wayleave which a person could reasonably be called upon to pay for the use for the carriage of his minerals over the roads of another would be a fair measure of the gain or acquisition to the property of the person who has so used them without paying any wayleave, is a question which it is not necessary to decide. I entertain no doubt as to there being ample means of ascertaining the amount of gain or acquisition to the property of a person so using the roads of another. That Lord Mansfield did not intend to limit the generality of the rule enunciated by him in the manner suggested, is, I think, clear from the following observations made by him in the course of the first argument in Hambly v. Trott (7):—"Suppose the testator had sold the sheep, &c., in question. In that case, an action for money had and received would lie. Suppose the testator had left them in specie to the executors; the conversion must have been laid against the executors. Suppose the testator had consumed them and had eaten the sheep. What action would have lain there? Is the executor to get off altogether? I shall be very sorry to decide that trover will not lie, if there is no other remedy for the right." It appears to me clear that, in the opinion of Lord Mansfield, the injured owner of the sheep was equally entitled to redress against the estate of the wrongdoer, whether the sheep were sold by him, or were consumed by him or were left by him in specie at his death.

Now if the sheep had been consumed by the testator, the only accretion to his property derived from his so doing would have been the amount of the saving in his butcher's bill; and I am unable to appreciate the distinction in principle between adding to his property by savings in the amount of his butcher's bills and by savings in the cost of carrying his minerals.

Upon the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the causes of action which were the foundation of the decree made in the present suit, and to which I deem it unnecessary to more particularly refer, were such as, within the rule in Hambly v. Trott (7), to entitle the plaintiffs to maintain their suit against Mrs. Fothergill, as the executrix of the deceased defendant R. Fothergill, in respect of the subject-matter of the 2nd and 3rd enquiries directed by the decree. Whether the proceedings which the plaintiffs have adopted for the purpose of enforcing their rights are in form such as to entitle Mrs. Fothergill to succeed in her appeal, is a question the consideration of which I will postpone until after I have referred to some cases in equity which appear to me to have an important bearing upon it, but as to some of which the views formed by me in some respects differ from those expressed in the judgment of my colleagues. The first case to which I will refer is that of Garth v. Cotton (28), decided by Lord Hardwicke in the year 1753. This was before the decision in Hambly v. Trott (7). The bill was for an account of all sums of money produced by a fall of timber in the year 1714. A number of objections were raised on the part of the defendant, the 7th of which was stated by Lord Hardwicke in the following terms (see p. 214):—"I shall mention but one objection more, and that arises recently from the present state of the cause as it comes before the Court upon a bill of revivor against the representatives of Sir John Hind Cotton, the original defendant—that an action of waste dies with the person; and if the plaintiff had in other respects been in a condition to maintain waste against Sir John Hind Cotton, the original defendant, it had been gone by his death; that the law is the same as to the action of trover: pari ratione he hath lost his equitable remedy for the waste." In meeting this objection Lord Hardwicke said—"There have been several determinations in this Court, where, by force of the rule 'Actio personalis moritur cum persona,' the remedy at law hath been extinguished, yet equity hath given the like satisfaction;" and after referring to various authorities, he proceeded as follows:—"I hold that in all cases of fraud, the remedy doth not die with the person; but the same relief shall be had against an executor out of the assets of his testator as ought to have been given against the testator himself; for as equity disclaims the maxim that a personal remedy dies with the person, wherever the demand is proper for that jurisdiction, this Court will follow the estate of the party liable to that demand, and out of that decree satisfaction."

In 1801 the case of Pulteney v. Warren (5) came before Lord Eldon. The bill prayed an account of mesne profits against the executors of one Dr. Warren. Under ordinary circumstances a bill in equity could not be maintained for an account of mesne profits, the proper jurisdiction being at law; and the substantial question was whether, under the special circumstances of the case, the suit could be maintained. The plaintiff had been prevented from recovering in ejectment by a rule of the Court of King's Bench staying proceedings against Dr. Warren, to abide the result of proceedings in the House of Lords in another case; and also by an injunction, at the instance of the occupier, who ultimately failed both at law and in equity. Lord Eldon held that these circumstances were sufficient to justify the plaintiff in commencing proceedings in equity; and, having upheld the jurisdiction, decreed the account prayed against Dr. Warren's executors, though it was strongly urged upon him that, having regard to the case of Hambly v. Trott (7), the remedy was gone by reason of the death of Dr. Warren. The case of The Marquis of Lansdowne v. The Marchioness Dowager of Lansdowne (23) came before the Vice-Chancellor Sir Thomas Plumer in 1815. The bill was against the representative of a deceased tenant-for-life, and prayed an account of equitable waste committed by him. On the part of the defendant it was urged that, if the tenant-for-life had committed legal waste and died, his representatives would not have been answerable, and that the same doctrine applied by analogy to equitable waste. In dealing with this argument, the Vice-Chancellor Sir Thomas Plumer quoted in some detail the observations of Lord Mansfield in Hambly v. Trott (7), and added, "This I take to be a just exposition of the qualifications under which the maxim 'Actio personalis moritur cum persona' is received at law; and if equity is to decide in analogy to a Court of law, the question in the present case will be, whether, by the equitable waste committed by the late marquis, he derived any benefit; or whether it was a naked injury by which his estate was not benefited. It is clear it was benefited; and as at law, if legal waste be committed and the party dies, an action for money had and received lies against his representative, so, upon the same principle, in cases of equitable waste, the party must, through his representatives, refund in respect of the wrong he has done." The case was decided by Sir Thomas Plumer upon the broad principle that, where equitable waste had been committed, the Court had jurisdiction to make the representatives of the party committing such waste accountable. Again, in Moneypenny v. Bristow (22), the bill was filed by the heir of a testator against the personal representatives of his widow, who, with the acquiescence of his heir, had been let into possession of certain freehold houses under an erroneous supposition that they passed by the will along with other property in which a life interest was devised to her. She died before the error was discovered. The bill prayed delivery of the title-deeds and an account of the rents received by the widow during her continuance in possession. It was urged, by way of defence, that these rents, being wrongfully received by the widow, could have been recovered in her lifetime only by an action of trespass, and that this suit, being founded in tort, died with her; but this contention was rejected by the Master of the Rolls, Sir John Leech, who, after referring to the judgment in Hambly v. Trott (7), decreed the account prayed. There was an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, who dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of Sir John Leech. The last case in equity to which I shall refer is Peek v. Gurney (13). In that case it was sought to make the estate of Mr. Gibbs liable for a misrepresentation made by him in conjunction with other directors of a company formed under the Companies Acts. His executors contended that the suit was in effect a proceeding to recover damages for a wrong done by Mr. Gibbs, and that the maxim "Actio personalis moritur cum persona" applied; but the plaintiffs failed in their case as against the executors of Mr. Gibbs, on the express ground that Mr. Gibbs's estate had derived no benefit from the misrepresentation to which he was a party.

(28) 1 Dicken, 215.

The general result of these cases and of others to the like effect may be thus stated: that a Court of equity will give effect to a demand against the estate of a deceased person in respect of a wrongful act done by him, if the wrongful act has resulted in a benefit capable of being measured pecuniarily, and if the demand is of such a nature as can be properly entertained by the Court. The principles thus acted upon by Courts of equity are in accordance with the conclusions enunciated by Lord Mansfield with reference to actions at common law which survive or die on account of the cause of action; but, as regards those actions which at common law survive or die on account of the form of action, Courts of equity will not permit the justice of the case to be defeated by reason of the technicalities of particular procedure. That the demand of the plaintiffs in this suit was one proper to be made in a Court of equity cannot be disputed; the decree is conclusive upon this point. Upon the question whether the wrongful act resulted in a benefit to the estate of the wrongdoer, I think the proper enquiry is that suggested by Sir Thomas Plumer—"Did the wrongdoer derive any benefit from the wrong done by him, or was it a naked injury by which his estate was in no way benefited?" My answer to that enquiry, as applied to the circumstances of the present case, is that the estate of the defendant R. Fothergill was benefited by the wrongful user by the defendants of the roads and passages under the plaintiffs' farm. Indeed, the decree, as varied by Lord Hatherley, and as explained by him, appears to me to be conclusive on this point also. If the views which I have expressed are correct, it would follow that, had no suit been instituted against the defendant R. Fothergill, a suit to the like effect as regards the subject-matter of the 2nd and 3rd enquiries might have been commenced and prosecuted after his death against his executrix. Does the fact that the suit was commenced against him and abated upon his death make any difference? Can it be said that the suit survives as regards part of the relief prayed, but has died as regards the subject-matter of the 2nd and 3rd enquiries? I think not. The decision of Lord Hardwicke was upon a bill of revivor against the representative of a defendant to the original bill; and that in the case of The Marquis of Lansdowne (23) was upon a demurrer to a supplemental bill filed against the representative of the marquis, who was a defendant to the original bill. For these reasons the appeal of Mrs. Fothergill ought, in my opinion, to be dismissed.

I think also that the appeal of the plaintiffs, as regards the 4th enquiry, fails, inasmuch as the wrongful acts which are the subject of it, though occasioning injury to the plaintiffs, did not result in any profit to the wrongdoers.

The appeal of the defendant Mrs. Fothergill as to the 2nd and 3rd enquiries was accordingly allowed with costs; the cross appeal of the plaintiffs as to the 4th enquiry being dismissed with costs.

Solicitors—Ullithorne, Currey & Villiers, agents for Simons & Plews, Merthyr Tydvil, for plaintiffs; Field, Roscoe & Co., for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
FRY, L.J.
1883.
April 17, 21, 23, 24, 27.
May 9.

TAYLOR v. MOSTYN.
MOSTYN v. LANCASTER.

Settlement — Mines — Tenant-for-life — Power of Leasing—Mining Lease by way of Mortgage—Charge on Inheritance—Consolidation of Charges—Incorporation of Exceptions by Reference to Prior Mining Lease—Removal of Pillars—Consent—Injunction.

A testator devised real estates in strict settlement, and empowered tenants-for-life, who were unimpeachable for waste, to grant mining leases for such terms, and under and subject to such rents or reservations or agreements as to them should "seem reasonable and proper." A tenant-for-life, in 1843, demised mines for a term of ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, by way of mortgage, to secure 6,000*l. and interest*:—Held, that this was a valid lease under the power, and binding on the inheritance.

Sheehy v. Muskerry (1 H.L. Cas. 576) approved and followed.

On the 26*th of April,* 1850, the term of ninety-nine years and the mortgage debt were transferred to S. & Co., and by the same deed the tenant-for-life mortgaged his life estate to S. & Co. to secure further sums, and thereby made the term of ninety-nine years redeemable only on payment of the further sums as well as of the original mortgage debt:—Held, that the term of ninety-nine years was validly charged with the further sums.

The lease of 1843 referred to a prior lease of the same mines granted by the testator in 1829, and purported to grant the mines on the "like liberties, powers, authorities and privileges as were thereby granted, and all other liberties, &c., necessary for working the mines, except as in the said lease of 1829 was excepted." The lease of 1829 excepted certain minerals from the demise, and contained covenants by the lessees not to remove the pillars of the mines without the consent of the testator, his heirs or assigns:—Held, that the lease of 1843 incorporated the covenants of the lease of 1829 against the removal of the pillars.

On the 10*th of May*, 1850, the tenant-for-life, by arrangement with the mortgagees, demised the mines to a trustee for the mortgagees for forty years on an ordinary working lease, and the lease contained a covenant not to remove the pillars without the consent of the tenant-for-life, his heirs or assigns, or the person or persons for the time being entitled to the premises:— Held, that the covenant was for the protection of the equity of redemption, and that the mortgagees had no power to consent to the removal of the pillars by the lessee.

Decisions of BACON, V.C., affirmed, with a slight variation.

These were cross appeals from decisions of Bacon, V.C., reported 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 696.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment. The arguments were the same as in the Court below.

Davey, Q.C., and Sir A. T. Watson, for the appellants in Mostyn v. Lancaster, who were also the respondents to the cross appeal of the plaintiffs in Taylor v. Mostyn.

Marten, Q.C., J. Dixon, and Finch, for the appellants in Taylor v. Mostyn.

Cur. adv. vult.

The considered judgment of the Court was (on May 9) delivered by FRY, L.J.—Although the facts in these cases are not in dispute, it is necessary shortly to refer to them, in order to make the judgment I am about to pronounce intelligible.

It appears that in the year 1831 the late Sir Thomas Mostyn died seized of considerable landed estates in North Wales, a portion of which consisted of coal-mines in and under the estuary of the Dee. He made his will in the year 1818, and had republished it in the year 1826, and by the will he had devised his real estate to the present Lord Mostyn for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and he had given the usual powers which are incident to a strict settlement of real estate, including powers of charging portions, raising jointures, and so forth. Further than that, he had in the year 1829 granted a lease of these coal-mines to two gentlemen of the name of Eyton, for a term of twenty-one years from the 31st of December, 1827, and which, therefore, expired on the 31st of December, 1848. In that lease there were contained certain restrictions with regard to pillars to be left to support the roof, to which it will be necessary hereafter more particularly to refer. On the death of Sir Thomas Mostyn, the present Lord Mostyn entered into possession as tenant-for-life, and on the 8th of December, 1843, he made a mortgage by way of demise to the Rev. James Craig. That mortgage purported to be made in exercise of a power of leasing contained in the will of Sir Thomas Mostyn. The first question which will arise for decision in this case is as to the validity of that mortgage by way of demise as an exercise of the leasing power. That mortgage was made by creating a term of ninety-nine years from its date, at a peppercorn rent, with a proviso for cesser on payment of 6,000*l.* and interest, and the powers were granted by reference to the lease of 1829. In this indenture of 1843 there was contained a covenant for further assurance, with a particular provision that Sir T. Mostyn would grant other leases in case he was so required by the mortgagee Mr. Craig. Before April, 1850, Craig had died, and his executors had transferred the mortgage of 1843 to a gentleman of the name of Wynne Williams. It appears that the amount then secured to the mortgagee had amounted to 7,800*l.* It further appears that at the same time Lord Mostyn was indebted to his bankers, Messrs. Strahan, Paul & Bates, in a sum of 59,741*l.* Whether he had become indebted to his bankers in consequence of the money laid out in the exploration of the mines, or in the assistance rendered to the lessees or otherwise, does not in any way appear. It further appears that at this time the agreement was entered into that Messrs. Strahan, Paul & Bates should pay off Mr. Wynne Williams, and that a mortgage should be executed to secure the entire balance. Whether the entire security which I am about to refer to was given for the entire balance is a question in dislessees to work the pillars below the 130 yards level.

I have now stated the titles of the litigant parties before the Court. Two actions have been brought, the one by the Taylors, the persons beneficially interested in the mortgage securities, for the foreclosure of those mortgage securities; and the other by the representative of Mr. Mostyn, to restrain the under-lessees from working the pillars, which they threaten and intend to work. Two judgments have been pronounced by the learned Vice-Chancellor, from whom this appeal is brought; and by the judgment in the case of Taylor v. Mostyn, the Vice-Chancellor declared that by the indenture of the 8th of December, 1843, a valid lease of the collieries, mines and premises comprised therein was granted for a term of ninety-nine years, and that the term thereby created was subject to the payment of all moneys due on the security of that indenture of mortgage of the 26th of April, 1850. By the judgment pronounced in the other action he restrained the defendants in that action—namely, the sub-lessees—" from working, removing or injuring any of the pillars and walls of coal heretofore left for the support of the roof of the mines in the collieries known as the Mostyn collieries, and from working any mines in the said collieries without leaving substantial, good and sufficient walls and pillars for the support of the roof and for the preventing of thrusts and creeps." From both these judgments appeals have been brought, and the judgment I am about to pronounce deals with both those appeals.

The first question which arises for determination is this—Is the lease of the 8th of December, 1843, a valid exercise of the power contained in Sir Thomas Mostyn's will, or is it valid only for the life of Sir Thomas Mostyn? To answer that question, one must consider, in the first place, the terms of the power contained in Sir Thomas Mostyn's will; and, in the second place, the terms of the instrument under which it is purported to be exercised. As I have already mentioned, Sir Thomas Mostyn, by his will, created an ordinary strict settlement of his real estate, and conferred the usual powers of raising portions and creating jointure charges. But in addition to those, there were three powers of leasing which are found together, and which I am about to read. The testator uses the following language:—"I hereby empower the respective tenants-for-life under this my will, when they shall respectively be in the actual possession of the said manors, lands and hereditaments hereinbefore devised to them, and the guardian or guardians of the person or persons who, by virtue of the limitations hereinbefore expressed, shall be tenant or tenants-for-life or in tail in possession of the aforesaid several hereditaments and premises, during the minority of such tenant or tenants-for-life or in tail, by the indenture to demise or lease the said manors, lands and hereditaments, or any part thereof (except the mansion-houses, offices and grounds of Mostyn and Gloddaeth), to any person or persons for any term not exceeding twenty-one years in possession, so as that in every such lease to be granted under the power herein contained there be reserved, to be made payable half yearly or oftener, the best and most improved rent during the term of years to be thereby respectively granted that can be reasonably obtained, and without taking any fine, premium or foregift for the making thereof respectively, with a power or condition of re-entry for non-payment of the same, and so as that none of the lessees be freed from impeachment of or made dispunishable for waste, and that all such lessees execute counterparts of their respective leases; and I hereby likewise empower the said respective tenants-for-life, when in possession of my said estates, and also the guardian or guardians of any such infant or infants as aforesaid, to grant any lease or leases of any mine or mines, or quarry or quarries, colliery or collieries, or of any parcel or parcels of land, for the purpose of digging for, winning or gaining any ore, minerals or coal, in any part of my said estates, for such terms or number of years, and under and subject to such rents or reservations and agreements, as to such tenant-for-life or guardian or guardians shall seem reasonable and proper; and likewise to make and grant any building or repairing lease or leases of any part of my said estates for any term or number of years, not exceeding ninety-nine years, in possession and not in reversion, and at and under the best yearly rent or rents which can be reasonably had or gotten for the same, without taking any fines, premium or foregift." There are, it will be observed, three distinct powers: the one is the ordinary power of granting leases for twenty-one years, the next is the power of leasing the collieries, the third is the power of granting building leases; and it is on the second of these that the question now turns. Now, in the first place, it is necessary to look at the power itself, and looking at that power I am struck with this, that there is no limitation whatever as to the term of years or as to the conditions to be imposed; but everything is left to the discretion of the tenant-for-life or guardian or guardians. It is, as I have already read, to be "for such term or number of years, and under and subject to such rents, reservations and agreements, as to such tenant-for-life or guardian or guardians shall seem reasonable and proper." The donee of the power is therefore the absolute judge of what is "reasonable and proper," and what he deems to be reasonable and proper is within the power. In the next place, one's attention must be drawn to this enquiry—is there anything whatever to limit the generality of the language used by the testator? There is one clause which has been insisted upon as defining the purpose for which the power is to be exercised. It is to be found in these words—"for the purpose of digging for, winning or gaining any ore, minerals or coal in any part of my said estates." But it appears to me that, according to the true construction of the power, those words are not a limitation on the power generally, but are only a limitation on the power so far as it relates to any parcel or parcels of land. I come to that conclusion for two reasons. In the first place, it appears to me more probable that such a limitation would be expressed in regard to parcels of land, which might include land outside the operation of any colliery lease, than that it should be applied to a power which is obviously intended to enable the collieries to be worked. The expression, I say, is more probable in the one case than in the other. In the next place, it is to be observed, looking accurately at the language, that the testator has repeated the word "of" in a manner which seems intended to separate the parcel or parcels of land from the previous description of property, and to make it, therefore, more natural to add the words "for the purpose of digging" to the words "parcel or parcels of land." The power is to "grant any lease or leases of any mines or mine, or quarry or quarries, colliery or collieries, or of any parcel or parcels of land, for the purpose of digging for, winning or gaining any ore, minerals or coal in any part of my said estates." Therefore it enables the donee of the power to grant a lease of any parcel of land, wherever situated, provided only it is required for the purpose of gaining coals or minerals on any part of the estate. It appears to me, therefore, that there is no limitation to be put upon the generality of the power by those words. In the next place, it must be enquired—does the position of this power, the association of it with the more limited powers which precede and follow it, place any such limitation upon it? In my judgment there is nothing whatever in the position of the power to create any limitation. We are asked to infer that, coming between two powers of management, it must be a mere power of management, and ought therefore to be confined to the benefit of the persons successively taking the estate. But it appears to me that the proximity of that power to others, which are so differently expressed, only emphasises the difference between those powers and the one in question. The first and third powers are confined as to the terms of years; they are confined as to the nature of the rent to be required. The second power is neither confined to the term of years, nor as to the rent to be taken. Nothing could have been easier, if the testator had been so minded, than to say that the lease should be granted at the best rent. I think that, therefore, we should be doing violence to the language of the testator if we put any limit upon this power, or held that it could not be exercised by a tenant-for-life, or guardian or guardians whom he has named, in any manner which such tenant-for-life should think reasonable and proper. It has been admitted that the tenant-for-life could under this power take a fine; but it has been said that the fine must be a reasonable one, and that he must have regard to the interests of the persons claiming under the settlement. It appears to me that the moment it is conceded the tenant-for-life may benefit himself by taking a fine, it is impossible for the Court to put any measure on the extent to which he may bind himself. The Court has no means of telling whether the tenant-for-life has thought the exercise of the power reasonable and proper, and therefore we should be entering upon an enquiry which we have no means of answering. It appears to me further, that the point was really decided by the case of Sheehy v. Lord Muskerry (1), which was before the Court in Ireland, and also before the House of Lords. In that case, no doubt, the power was to the donee of the power to grant such leases as he should think fit; and it has been contended that, whilst the words "he should think fit" import an arbitrary power, the words "as shall seem reasonable and proper" import only a discretion, regulated by the interest of the other persons under the settlement. I think there is no real distinction between the two phrases, and that "that which is fit" is only another expression for "that which is reasonable and proper." In that case Lord St. Leonards, when it came before him in Ireland, pointed out the great difficulty in imposing terms on an arbitrary power. He said, "I must say that I think Courts of law and equity have very often been spending their time in seeking to introduce qualifications where parties have used general expressions and not taken the trouble to explain the intention to use them in a restricted sense. If I am to restrain this power at all, will any one point out how far I am to restrain it? Where is the limit to be? The term may be ten thousand years, and the rent a peppercorn, and where is the line to be drawn as to the amount of the fine? I see none. I think there is no power in this Court to cut down this power." I adopt that language and apply it here. Then the case, as I have already mentioned, came before the House of Lords, and, in delivering the opinion of the Judges who were there consulted, Mr. Baron Alderson said this: "There is no case, we believe, to be found in our books in which a lease, conformable to the literal tenor of the words in which the power is given, has been held invalid in law on the ground of any supposed or real hardship inflicted on the remainderman; and it would be strange if such a case could be found, for as the remainderman takes what is given him subject to the power, he must take the advantage cum onere, and has no reasonable ground for complaint if that should happen which the framer of the power, who had the jus disponendi, contemplated." No doubt he also added, "In all cases, in order to determine what is the real meaning of the words of the power itself, it must be competent for the Court to look to the whole instrument in which it is found, and to examine and consider the consequence to the remainder, and to the other objects of the deed, for the purpose, if the words be ambiguous, of adopting that construction of them which may produce the least inconvenience and harmonise with all the other provisions which the parties have thought proper to make." And it has been urged upon us in the present case that there is such ambiguity as ought to induce us to restrain the power, so as to have regard to the interests of the remainder. I see no such limitation in this power as will enable me to put any fetter upon what appears to me to be simply the meaning of the words used. The power was exercised by the instrument of 1843, and by that the tenant-for-life, Lord Mostyn, created a mortgage to the extent of 6,000*l.*, and created a term for the purpose of securing that. It appears to me that the tenant-for-life has declared that in his judgment it is reasonable and proper that that 6,000*l.* should be charged upon the minerals. Is it for this Court to say it is not reasonable and proper? It appears to me that we can say nothing of the sort, and that the deed of 1843 is a valid exercise of the leasing power contained in Sir Thomas Mostyn's will.

Taylor v. Mostyn, App.

Now the second question which arises is this—Is the consolidating mortgage of the 26th of April, 1850, a good exercise of this power contained in Sir T. Mostyn's will, so as to make the term of ninety-nine years redeemable only upon payment of the total amount secured by that mortgage? I have already stated generally the provisions of the mortgage, and the first question which arises is whether, looking at that instrument, there is an intention to charge the whole 67,000*l.* upon the property in question. The mortgage debt of 1843, and the mortgage property of 1843—or rather the mortgage property comprised in the mortgage of 1843—is, as I have already mentioned, assigned by Mr. Williams to Messrs. Strahan, Paul & Bates, subject to the equity of redemption created by the deed of 1843. Then in the deed of 1850, after the assignment, is to be found this proviso: "It is declared and agreed by and between the parties to these presents, so far as they respectively are interested, that the said collieries, minerals, engines, machinery, goods, chattels, judgments, furniture, effects, moneys and premises are so respectively assigned or assured unto Messrs. Strahan, Paul & Bates, their executors, administrators and assigns, subject to the proviso of redemption, and with and under the powers and provisions hereinafter contained." Then the proviso that follows is this: "That if Lord Mostyn shall pay the 67,000*l.*, and any other after-advanced moneys, on demand, then, in such case, Cookney, his executors, administrators and assigns, together with Strahan, Paul & Bates, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the persons constituting the banking firm, or their or his assigns, shall, upon the request and at the cost and charge of Edward Mostyn Lloyd Mostyn and Thomas Price Lloyd respectively, or their respective executors, administrators or assigns, reassign or reassure the said premises thereby mortgaged, or intended so to be, unto the said Edward Mostyn Lloyd Mostyn and Thomas Price Lloyd respectively, or their respective executors, administrators or assigns, according to their respective estates or interests, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding." Now it appears to me to be clear that the declaration which prefaces the wider declaration has this operation - that whereas the property comprised in the mortgage of 1843 had been originally assigned only subject to the equity of the deed of 1843, it is now made subject to the proviso for redemption in this deed. The property respectively assigned to Strahan, Paul & Bates can mean nothing but this property. No other collieries were assigned to them, except the assignment of the term for ninety-nine years. Therefore, it appears to me that to contend that the property comprised in that mortgage was not intended to be charged with the entire debt would be to give no meaning to that declaration. Then it is further to be observed that the proviso for redemption contemplates a reassignment being made by Cookney with Messrs. Strahan, Paul & Bates, who are the very persons to reassign that property. I think, therefore, that the intent of the deed to charge the entire property with the entire amount is sufficiently apparent.

(1) 1 H. L. Cas. 576.

Then arises the question whether that is a good exercise of the power contained in Sir Thomas Mostyn's will. It must be borne in mind that Sir Thomas Mostyn's will is recited in that deed of 1850, and that the particular power in question is recited in that instrument. It appears to me, therefore, that there is a plain intention to effect by that power, if necessary, everything that the deed intends to do; and that, consequently, there is a good exercise of the leasing power by varying the proviso for redemption which had been created by the deed of 1843, and by substituting for that proviso the proviso comprised in the deed of 1850. If it were a defective exercise of the power, then it appears to me it was for valuable consideration, and that the defect could be made good, and ought to be made good, in a Court of equity. Therefore, either the exercise of the power is sufficient, or it is only defective in a manner which can and ought to be made good. The decision of these two questions determines the first appeal, and leads to the conclusion that that appeal must be refused with costs.

The third question which arises has reference to the other action—namely, the action brought by Mostyn's executors against the sub-lessees who are now in possession. It is this—Can the defendants, during the subsistence of the lease of the 10th of May, 1850, work the pillars? That lease, as I have already mentioned, expires in the year 1890. In order to answer that question it is, of course, necessary to refer to the deed of May, 1850, and to consider what are the provisions therein contained. It appears to me that the whole question turns upon the instruments; because, if there be an express contract not to work these pillars, the Court has nothing to do with the safety or danger of working. The injunction is sought, not upon any ground really of that description, but because it is said that an express contract has been entered into which prevents these pillars from being worked. I have already referred to the general nature of the working lease of 1850, and I find that Mr. Cookney entered into the usual covenants for working, and that amongst those covenants was this—a covenant that he "shall and will have in good repair all underground roadways and air-courses to all unwrought coals in the said mines; and also that the pillars of coal to be left in working the said mines for the support of the roofs of the coals therein shall not be worked or wrought without the consent in writing of the said Lord Mostyn or his assigns, or other the person or persons entitled as aforesaid." The "person or persons entitled as aforesaid" appear, by referring back, to be the person or persons for the time being entitled to the said mines, land and premises hereby demised. Then there is a further covenant also by Mr. Cookney that he "shall and will, at all times during this demise, have substantial, good and sufficient walls and pillars for the support of the roof and for preventing of thrusts and creeps, and not remove the same or any part thereof without the consent in writing of the said Edward Mostyn Lord Mostyn or his agents, or other the person or persons for the time being entitled to the mines, lands and premises hereby demised, for that purpose first had and obtained." The covenant, therefore, appears to be a very strict one. Certainly, if it is enforced, it will prevent the works being carried on by the defendants. The contention on their part is this. It is said that a written consent is to be given by Lord Mostyn or his assigns; and it is said that by the deed of April, 1850—the deed of the preceding month—Lord Mostyn had assigned his life interest to Mr. Cookney, and that therefore that Mr. Cookney himself, the lessee in the lease of May, 1850, was the person who was to give the consent to his own working of his pillars. It appears to me that that contention is entirely unfounded, and that Lord Mostyn is the persona designata in that covenant, and that the consent which will enable the lessee to work the pillars must be by the consent either of Lord Mostyn, so long as he lives, or of his subsequent assigns. Now in the present case he has assigned his life interest to the representative of his son, and, although there may be a mortgage subsisting upon that, it appears to me that it is plain that either Lord Mostyn, or every person who claims by assignment subsequently to the 10th of May, 1850, must give a written consent before the sub-lessees of the lease of May, 1850, are entitled to work. No such consent has been given; consequently, I hold that the injunction must go, at any rate as regards that term—namely, the term created by the indenture of the 10th of May, 1850.

The fourth question that arises is this: Can the defendants work the pillars during the term created by the lease of 1843 after the year 1890, when the lease of 1850 expires? The answer to that question depends upon different considerations. It depends upon the consideration of the lease of 1829 and the lease of 1843, because the lease of 1843 refers to the lease of 1829. Now what says the lease of 1829 with regard to these pillars? It is a lease, as I have already said, made by Sir Thomas Mostyn, the testator in this matter. He thereby leased the mines in question, "together with full and free liberty, power and authority to and for the said Thomas Eyton and John Price Eyton, their executors, administrators and assigns, and his and their agents, colliers, workmen and servants, from time to time and at all times during the continuance of this demise, at their costs and charges, to enter into and upon the lands, grounds and premises hereby demised or described, or any part or parts thereof, except and with such consent as hereinafter is mentioned"—I dwell upon those words, because it is plain there that what is called an exception relates to something which requires consent—"and there to dig, bore, delve, sink, search for and raise, get and work the said pit, mines, seams and veins, and follow and pursue the same, according to the law and customs of mines, but subject to the provisions, limitations, agreements and conditions hereinafter contained." Then, after other powers, there comes a power "to do and perform all reasonable acts and things necessary and proper for the carrying away the coal, cannel, slack and ironstone, and also full and free liberty of ingress, egress and regress into, out of and from the lands, grounds and premises, except and subject, nevertheless, as hereinbefore and hereinafter is mentioned." There again it is to be observed that the description is coupled with words of subjection which follow. Then come certain strict exceptions—namely, the exception of coal under the mansion-house, the exception of the coal under the quay of the dock, and the exception of the timber. Then comes the usual habendum. Then, amongst the covenants which are contained in the lease on the part of the lessees, there is this covenant, that they "shall and will, at the end or other sooner determination of this demise, leave sufficient walls or timber for the support of the roof and for preventing of thrusts and creeps, and not remove the same without the consent in writing of the said Sir Thomas Mostyn, his heirs or assigns, for that purpose first had and obtained." Those are the terms of the lease of 1829 as far as they are material to refer to. Then, in the lease of the 8th of December, 1843, Lord Mostyn, exercising the power conferred upon him by Sir Thomas Mostyn, conveys to Mr. Craig all the collieries comprised in the deed of 1829, "and also all such and the like liberties, powers, authorities and privileges as by the said indentures of lease are granted or reserved to the said Thomas Eyton and John Price Eyton, their executors, administrators and assigns, and all other liberties, powers, authorities and privileges whatsoever which are or shall be necessary or proper for searching for, raising, getting and working the said collieries, pits, mines, minerals, coals, cannels, slack and ironstone with effect, except as in the said indenture of lease is excepted." Now it has been contended that that exception is confined to the three strict exceptions to which I have referred—namely, the exception of the coal under the mansion-house, the exception of the coal under the quay of the dock, and the exception of the timber. As I have already pointed out, there are exceptions in that instrument which are not strict exceptions. There is a reference by way of exception to the inability to work the pillars, and the exception there is, "except as in the said indenture is excepted." I think, therefore, that everything which is treated as an exception in that lease of 1829 is introduced as an exception in the lease of 1843; that in the lease of 1829 the restriction on the working of the pillars is treated as an exception, and consequently it must be treated as an exception in the lease of 1843; and that in the result, therefore, the limitation of the power of working imposed by the lease of 1829 is still subsisting for the entirety of the term of ninety-nine years, subject only to this one observation, as I have already pointed out, that Lord Mostyn's life interest has become vested in Robert Lancaster by the instrument of the 17th of December, 1880; and supposing Lord Mostyn should survive the period fixed for the determination of the lease of 1850—namely, the year 1890—it would appear to me that R. Lancaster can, during so much of Lord Mostyn's life as may happen after that date, if such there should be, consent to the working of the pillars by persons who are interested under the lease of 1843. I propose, therefore, that the Court should declare that an injunction should be granted during such part of the term of ninety-nine years created by the lease of 1843 as will subsist between the 10th of May, 1890, and the death of Lord Mostyn, in case Lord Mostyn should live after that date. The point is one, no doubt, of the smallest practical importance, and I only refer to it as illustrating the principle on which the Court proceeds. As it has made no substantial difference in the matter, it will make no difference in the costs of the appeal which has been brought with regard to the injunction granted by the Vice-Chancellor. With that variation, I am of opinion that both the judgments of the Vice-Chancellor ought to be affirmed and the appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors—Law, Hussey & Hulbert; Gregory, Rowcliffes & Rawle.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

JESSEL, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1882.
Dec. 13, 19.

In re THE GUARDIAN PERMANENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY.
CRACE-CALVERT'S CASE.
HAWKINS'S CASE.
SCOTT'S CASE.

Building Society — Rules — Unlimited Borrowing — Equitable Mortgagees — Unsecured Creditors — Preference Shareholders — Investing or Unadvanced Members — Priorities — 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32 — The Building Societies Act (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), 1874, ss. 7, 8 and 15—The Building Societies Act (38 & 39 Vict. c. 9), 1875, s. 1.

A rule of a benefit building society enrolled under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, conferred on the society an unlimited power of borrowing, and under it the society borrowed large sums of money by way of equitable mortgage on title-deeds with a memorandum of deposit in the usual way. Another rule empowered the society to issue deposit or paid-up shares of the value of 30*l. each, bearing interest at five per cent., and allowed the depositor, on giving a month's notice, to withdraw the whole or part of his deposit in preference to all other shares. This rule was struck out by the certifying barrister; but, nevertheless, the society retained it in its printed book of rules, and under it issued many paid-up* 30*l. shares. Afterwards the society amended the rule by substituting* 1*l. for* 30*l., and the barrister certified the rule as altered. Many* 1*l. paid-up shares were issued under the amended rule, and also those who held* 30*l. shares exchanged them for* 1*l. shares. After the Building Societies Act,* 1874, came into operation, the society borrowed moneys on the security of promissory notes, but such notes had not printed on them the 14*th and* 15*th sections of that Act, as required by the* 15*th sub-section of section* 5 of the Act.

On the winding-up of the society, questions arose as to the validity of the above transactions, and as to the priorities of the parties after payment of the outside creditors and the costs of the liquidation, and it was held:—

First, that an unlimited power of borrowing being invalid and ultra vires, the equitable mortgagees held no valid securities for their advances, and must give up to the official liquidator the deeds that had been deposited with them. Secondly, that the issuing of paid-up or preference shares was not a disguised borrowing, nor contrary to the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, and therefore not illegal; and that such of the holders of such shares as had given notice of withdrawal prior to the winding-up were entitled to be paid in priority to other investing members. Thirdly, that the omission to print the 14*th and* 15*th sections of the Act of* 1874 on the promissory notes did not invalidate the notes, the directors of the society being the persons, if any, liable for such omission; and therefore that the holders of the notes were in the position of secured creditors, and entitled to rank as though they were outside creditors.

The order of priorities, therefore, was as follows:—First, the holders of the promissory notes; next, the preference shareholders; and then the residue of the assets to be divided pari passu between the equitable mortgagees whose securities were invalidated and the other investing members.

These were appeals, in the winding-up of the above society, from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the Lancaster Palatine Court on three representative cases which raised important questions as to the manner in which the assets of the society, after payment of outside creditors, were to be dealt with. The society was enrolled, in the year 1870, under the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32. The material rules of the society were the following:—

Rule 5 provided that the members might pay up in advance any number of shares, or half shares, in accordance with table 2 to the rules.

Rule 31. "The board for the time being shall have power, as the circumstances may require, to issue deposit or paid-up shares of the value of 30*l.* each upon a certificate bearing interest after the rate of five per cent. per annum, and such certificate shall entitle the depositor (after one month's notice in writing, to be reckoned from a monthly meeting) to withdraw the whole or part of his deposit in preference to all other shares. The form of certificate shall be the same as set forth in the schedule to these rules."

Rule 32. "The trustees or directors for the time being of this society may from time to time, as occasion may require, borrow and take up at interest any sum or sums of money from the society's banker, or from any banker, or from any other person or persons, and any borrowed money shall be a first charge on the funds and property of the society. And in case the trustees or directors shall at any time give their joint and several promissory notes or other security for money borrowed for and on behalf of the society, then and in such case the persons giving the security shall be indemnified by the society, and the funds and property of the society shall be held subject and liable to the repayment of the borrowed moneys; the borrowed moneys being always deemed a first charge on the society's funds and property."

Rule 37. "If a loss should arise which the contingent fund is insufficient to make good, or if from any other reason the board should at any other time deem an augmentation of the contingent fund to be necessary or expedient, the board shall at once direct a levy of such a sum on and from every share or shares, half share or half shares, advanced and unadvanced, as will cover all deficiency, or as the board may consider necessary for other purposes of the contingent fund. Provided, nevertheless, that no levy of any sum shall be made on, from, or in respect of any deposit or paid-up shares mentioned or referred to in section 31 of these rules."

Rule 41. "Any member may withdraw unadvanced shares on giving one clear month's notice; the amount payable on withdrawals shall be determined by the tables. Withdrawals shall be payable in rotation according to the priority of notice. The board may limit the number of withdrawals to be paid off in any one month."

Rule 44. "Whenever there is any balance at the bank not wanted for advances or other claims, the board may at any monthly meeting cause the members of the society who have not received advances, either to take an advance as before provided, or to withdraw by ballot as many shares as shall be sufficient to exhaust the balance."

When the rules were first submitted to the revising barrister for his approval, he struck out the 31st rule. The society nevertheless retained and printed it in its book of rules.

In June, 1876, the society amended the 31st rule by inserting "1*l.*" instead of "30*l.*," and the rule as thus amended was certified by the revising barrister.

The society borrowed large sums of money under the 32nd rule, and also issued a large number of preference shares under section 31, both before and after its amendment.

In November, 1881, the society was ordered to be wound up, and in the winding-up important questions arose as to the rights and priorities of the members, and formed the subject of the representative cases on which the present appeal arose.

Crace-Calvert's Case.

On the 25th of June, 1874, Mrs. Crace-Calvert lent 2,000*l.* to the society, and on the 3rd of July, 1875, she lent them a further sum of 2,000*l.* These advances were secured by the deposits of deeds mortgaged to the society for advances made by the society to its advanced members. At the date of the winding-up 2,600*l.* only was due to Mrs. Crace-Calvert on her securities, and in the winding-up she claimed to be an equitable mortgagee in respect of the securities she held, and to have the properties comprised in them sold, and to be paid her principal, interest and costs of the proceeds of sale in priority to the other unadvanced members of the society.

The Vice-Chancellor having held that she was entitled to the priority she claimed, the official liquidator appealed.

Ambrose, Q.C., Maberley, and E. Jones, for the appellant.—The 32nd rule is ultra vires and illegal, and Mrs. Crace-Calvert did not acquire a valid charge on the assets of the society. The case is within the principle of The Blackburn Benefit Building Society v. Cunliffe (1), and Bar-

(1) Ante, p. 92; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 61.

wick v. The English Joint Stock Bank (2).

[They were stopped.]

Rigby, Q.C., and Hopkinson, for Mrs. Crace-Calvert.—It is not disputed that these loans passed into the coffers of the society, and that a great part of the assets of the society were purchased with them, although we cannot distinctly trace how they were applied. The outside creditors can readily be provided for; and then, as to the surplus, we submit that these deeds were given to us for valuable consideration, and that we are entitled to hold them as against the society.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The law is settled the other way. I do not see how you can hold the deeds unless you can trace the money.]

We admit we cannot trace it; but it is clear that it is mixed up with the present assets of the society. Why should those persons who lent their money without any security have priority to us who lent our money believing we got a valid security?

Then there is another point. The Building Societies Act, 1874, which came into operation on the 2nd of November, 1874, repealed (section 7) the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, and enacted (section 8) that every society, the rules of which had been certified under the repealed Act, should be deemed to be a society under the Act of 1874; and then section 15, sub-section 4, provided that any deposits with or loans to a society under the Act of 1874 made before the commencement of that Act in accordance with its certified rules should be held valid and binding. Then the Building Societies Act, 1875, section 1, repealed section 8 of the Act of 1874, but enacted that the repeal should not affect anything suffered or done in pursuance of such section before the date of its repeal. We contend, therefore, that immediately the Building Societies Act, 1874, was passed, Mrs. Crace-Calvert became a legal mortgagee, and her rights were not taken away by the repealing Act of 1875.

S. Hall, for unadvanced members, supported the appeal.

(2) 36 Law J. Rep. Exch. 147; Law Rep. 2 Exch. 259.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster. The question is, how the assets of the society are to be disposed of, having regard to the very curious circumstances of the case. This is a building society, with a rule which empowered the governing body of the society to borrow unlimited sums of money. This rule has been certified and has been acted upon to a very considerable extent. But it is now well settled by the law that in such a society as this an unlimited power to borrow is not authorised, and consequently such borrowing was beyond the powers of the society. Still all has been done here perfectly bona fide. The persons who made the rule, as well as those who acted upon it by borrowing and lending, all acted under a common mistake in law that that was a lawful rule and was binding on the society. To a great extent the borrowing has been from the bankers of the society, and the money so borrowed has been advanced to members of the society on mortgage securities in the usual way. A sum of about 7,000*l.* has also been received from unadvanced members, and has been employed in making loans in the same way. The borrowing from the bankers went on for a long time, and the sums borrowed were from time to time paid off with money borrowed from other people, including Mrs. Crace-Calvert. In some cases the moneys advanced by these third parties were not applied in repayment to the bankers, but were lent to unadvanced members, and so these funds have got mixed up in a way which renders it difficult to say how far they have been applied in one way and how far in another. Under these circumstances the society was wound up, and it appears that of the assets, amounting to upwards of 81,000*l.*, 7,000*l.* odd has been obtained from the unadvanced members of the society, and the balance of the sum in question has been obtained in some shape or other from people who lent their money either on equitable deposits or on mortgages of property to the society, and the present respondent is one of these persons. Such borrowing from her was unauthorised, and consequently her loan to the society did not create either a legal or equitable debt from the society to her, it being beyond the power of the society to incur any such debt. It follows, therefore, that the deposit or security which she obtained was a deposit or security for nothing. It was a deposit or security not authorised, and the result is, therefore, that she must give it up. Upon that point there can be no doubt whatever. But then, what is to be done with the assets of the society? It is obvious that if the society realises 80,000*l.* worth of its securities, there will be about 70,000*l.* worth of claims made which have arisen from the advances made by the persons who lent the society this money. The actual money will, of course, be considerably smaller, because the 81,000*l.* will not realise so much by a very large sum. Still, after paying the strictly outside creditors, and the sums subscribed by the unadvanced members, there will be a very large surplus to be disposed of. It is plain that it cannot be said on behalf of the society that the surplus so obtained ought to be retained by the members of the society. It was obtained by their own innocent mistake, because they had passed the rule authorising the directors to borrow. They advertised the loans, and so obtained the money. It was a mistake common to both sides. The surplus which arises from the advances so made must obviously, on the plainest principles of equity, be returned to the people who advanced. Nobody can have a claim upon it except those whose money it is. The actual money cannot be traced, but after the prior claims on the assets of the company have all been paid off, the surplus must come to them; but with regard to the intermediate application of the surplus, it must go to the outside creditors and the unadvanced members who have established a claim. The outside creditors had nothing to do with the adoption of the mistaken rule; they were not bound in any way, and they are therefore entitled to come upon the society and say that the assets were liable to satisfy their demands. Of the unadvanced members there are two classes: those who have given notice of withdrawal, and those who have not; but for the purpose of the present judgment it is unnecessary to distinguish between them in order to determine their priorities. It cannot be said the unadvanced members of the society are not to take the assets. They have a right to claim payment out of the assets, and it is impossible to point to any part of those assets as coming from any particular part of the money so distinguished from the rest. Their legal rights must therefore prevail, and they will accordingly be paid in priority to the other persons, who would get the surplus. Of course the costs of the liquidator must be paid in priority to every other claim. The proper decree to make will be to discharge the order of the Vice-Chancellor, to order payment of the liquidator's costs, then those of the respondent; next, payment of the outside creditors, then of the ordinary unadvanced members; and then distribute the surplus pro rata among the persons who advanced their money by way of loan upon those invalid contracts. The deeds must of course be ordered to be delivered up to the official liquidator.

COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

HAWKINS'S CASE.

In this case Mrs. Hawkins advanced her money to the society, in the interval between the date of the passing of the Building Societies Act, 1874, and the passing of the Act of 1875, on the security of the promissory notes of the society; but the 14th and 15th sections of the Act were not printed on the back of the promissory notes, as required by the 5th sub-section of the 15th section. The Vice-Chancellor held that this omission was fatal, and that the promissory notes held by Mrs. Hawkins were invalid.

Mrs. Hawkins appealed.

Chadwyck Healey, for the appellant.

[JESSEL, M.R.—Your loan is good, even if no promissory notes were given. The directors may be liable for not having printed the sections on the back of the notes, but that omission does not invalidate your loan.]

Ambrose, Q.C., Maberley, and E. Jones, for the official liquidator.—We admit the loan is good.

JESSEL, M.R.—This appeal must be allowed. The promissory notes held by Mrs. Hawkins are valid, and she is entitled to come in and rank as an outside creditor, and to have her costs as between party and party.

COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

SCOTT'S CASE.

On the 15th of August, 1874, Mr. Scott took and paid for five deposit or preference shares of 30*l.* each, under the 31st rule of the society, and on the 16th of April, 1875, he took five more 30*l.* preference shares. After the alteration of the rule he exchanged his ten 30*l.* shares for 300 1*l.* preference shares, and in 1878 he took 300 more 1*l.* preference shares.

Prior to the winding-up he had, after notice of withdrawal, received payment of 50*l.*; and he had also given notice to withdraw the remainder of his shares.

The Vice-Chancellor held that the 31st rule was a disguised borrowing, and was invalid, and that the holders of paid-up preference shares were not members of the society, and therefore not entitled to any preferential payment, but were only entitled to prove against the residuary assets of the society pari passu with investing members who had advanced their money in the usual way.

Against this decision Scott appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and H. Burton Buckley, for the appellants.—The question is, whether this appellant is entitled to rank as a shareholder or a creditor. Although the 31st rule was struck out by the barrister, the directors nevertheless acted on it, and held it out as a valid rule. We advanced our money on the representation that it was a valid rule, and are entitled to have that representation made good. At all events, as to such of this class who advanced their money after the rule had been altered and certified, they are in the same position as the class represented by Mrs. Hawkins.

Ambrose, Q.C., Maberley, and E. Jones, for the liquidator.—This appellant is in the same position as the class represented by Mrs. Crace-Calvert. He has advanced his money under a rule which was illegal and void. The subsequent certificate of the barrister did not validate the rule. At any rate, until 1876, there was no rule 31, and therefore there is no liability on the part of the society in respect of these shares. It is the directors who are liable for having made false representations. Further, this rule is a scheme to disguise unlimited borrowing. These preference shares are not within the scope of the society. The preamble and section 1 of the Act of Will. 4 clearly shew that the Act only contemplates shares subscribed for by monthly subscriptions not exceeding 20*s.* per month. Therefore these are shares which the society could not legally issue.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., in reply.

JESSEL, M.R.—This case raises important questions which I believe have never been raised before. The rules of the society are most peculiar. The question we have to decide is as to the rights of certain persons, called members of the society, who took what are called paid-up shares. They originally took, as to part of them, 30*l.* shares, under a rule which I will call attention to, and afterwards exchanged those 30*l.* shares for 1*l.* shares. It is said half of them did this, and that the other half originally subscribed for the 1*l.* shares. Therefore there are two classes, and their position may be different, so it will be well to consider them separately.

Now the first point to be observed is, that whatever the effect of the Act of Will. 4 may be, it applied to societies already in existence, and it intended to deal with those societies. It is familiar to all those interested in this subject that at the date of that Act these societies consisted of two classes of members, called investing members and borrowing members—they are sometimes called unadvanced and advanced members. The whole scheme of these societies was this: that certain persons who had saved money were desirous of investing that money at a higher rate of interest than the usury laws enabled them to obtain at that time; and that other persons were desirous of either building or buying houses for their own habitation. The two classes came together, and the people who had saved the money or were saving the money paid money into the concern, and it was lent to the persons who were desirous of building or buying the houses, on the security of the houses, and on terms which compelled the borrowers to pay a larger sum by way of interest than five per cent. per annum. That was the substance of those societies, and it must have been known to the Legislature. Again, the societies were divided into two classes. One class were called terminable societies, and came to an end at the expiration of a fixed period—sometimes ten years, sometimes fifteen years, and so on. The other class were called permanent societies, and only came to an end when all the shares were paid up. In both cases when the society came to an end the scheme was this: The property of the society was realised, and the surplus assets, after paying the debts, were divided amongst the members who had paid up their shares. They got back their money and an addition in the shape of interest, which I am afraid, although always expected to be more than the five per cent., was sometimes a good deal less. Therefore the investing members got back their money and interest, and the advanced members got their houses on payment off of the mortgages which were given to secure the sums payable on their shares.

That being the position of matters, this Act of 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, was passed, and it is an Act for the regulation of existing building societies. The first recital is "Whereas certain societies, commonly called building societies, have been established in different parts of the kingdom, principally" (not entirely) "amongst the industrious classes, for the purpose of raising, by small periodical subscriptions, a fund to assist the members thereof in obtaining a small freehold or leasehold property." Now that is an important description. That was not the sole object of these societies: it was one of their objects; it must have been perfectly well known to the Legislature that the other object was that the investing members should get a high rate of interest for their money; and that it was known is obvious from another section. Then it is enacted that it may be lawful for these two classes "to form themselves into and establish societies for the purpose of raising, by monthly or other subscriptions of the several members of such societies, shares not exceeding the value of 150*l.* for each share, such subscriptions not to exceed in the whole 20*s.* per month for each share." Now it is to be noticed that these restrictive words obviously apply to the monthly subscriptions. Of course, if you pay down the whole amount of the share at once, those words have no application. Then the subscriptions are "for the purpose of enabling each member to receive out of the funds of such society the amount or value of his or her share or shares therein to erect or purchase one or more dwelling-house or dwelling-houses," and so on, "until the amount or value of his or her shares shall have been fully repaid to such society." Now it is very odd that you do not find there any provision as to the investing members. It looks as if everybody was to get an advance, and that the framers of the Act were forgetting that the people who made the advance must be somewhere. Then it goes on: "And to and for the several members of each society from time to time to assemble together and to make, ordain and constitute such proper and wholesome rules and regulations for the government and guidance of the same as to the major part of the members of such society, as assembled together, shall seem meet, so as such rules shall not be repugnant to the express provisions of this Act and to the general law of the realm." Whether those rules were intended to be merely by-laws, to be made after the society was constituted, or not, does not appear to me to make any difference, because the Legislature must know that the society could not start without rules, and therefore, if you restrict those words to the subsequent rules or laws, there is no provision as to the original rules; and it appears to me that the true meaning of this clause is that these rules spoken of are not the original constitution of the society, but subsequent, "as to the major part of the members of such society, as assembled together, shall seem meet"; but they must be members to make the rules. It seems to me to point to a period subsequent to the starting of the society, and that there is really in this Act of Parliament no restriction and no direction as to the original rules which govern the constitution of the society. But, however, whatever view you take, the only limitation as to the rules is this: that they shall not be repugnant to the laws of the realm or to the express provisions of this Act.

Then section 2 shews me this, that the Legislature knew of these investing members, for it enacts, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for any such society to have and receive from any member or members thereof any sum or sums of money by way of bonus on any share or shares for the privilege of receiving the same in advance prior to the same being realised, and also any interest for the share or shares so received or any part thereof, without being subject or liable on account thereof to any of the forfeitures or penalties imposed by any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to usury." In other words, that the society was entitled to take from its borrowing members a larger rate of interest than the usury laws then in force allowed. What does that mean? Who does it apply to? Clearly to lending members. It would have no possible meaning except it contemplated a body of lending members. By lending members I do not mean lending in the actual sense of a loan proceeding from the members, but that class which I have described as investing members. Then the 7th section extended the benefit of the Act to all societies then existing which got their rules certified. Now under this Act it has been held—and we are bound by the decisions—that a general and unlimited power of borrowing is not authorised by the Act; but I am not aware of any decision that says you cannot have paid-up shares or preference shares, or any peculiar kind of share, and it is undoubted that in very many of the societies there have been different classes of shares. Now the first question we have to decide depends on a very peculiar state of circumstances, which, as far as I know, has never happened before. This society had its rules printed, and when they were sent to the revising barrister he struck out rule 31; but, notwithstanding that it was struck out, the society did not alter their printed books, but retained the rule which had been disallowed as if it were an existing rule, and took many thousand pounds from the public on the representation that that was a rule of the society, though it was not. Now I do not intend to impute to the directors any notion of fraud. I believe they were simply guilty of gross carelessness; but it is an extraordinary circumstance that the directors and trustees of this society should continue printing the disallowed rule, and should take some money of the public on the assumption that it was in existence. Now this disallowed rule offered the public the option of taking 30*l.* shares—I will discuss their nature presently—and they did take them to the extent of many thousands of pounds. What was the position of those persons who took those shares and whose money went into the coffers of the society? I think it is tolerably plain that, as between them and the society, the society must either admit the validity of their shares or give them back their money. They cannot say, "We represented to you that there was a rule by which we could issue such shares, when there was no such rule, and we can keep the money which you paid."

At a subsequent period, everybody apparently having forgotten that this rule had been struck out, and was not a rule binding the society, they amended it on the 19th of June, 1876. That is, they amended a non-existing rule, and they did it by inserting "1*l.*" instead of 30*l.* The amended rule went to the revising barrister; and I am afraid I cannot altogether acquit him of a little carelessness, for he certified that amendment without looking to see whether the rule was existing. Now the effect of his certificate was to make the rule which had been struck out a valid rule again, so that after the 19th of June, 1876, this rule existed, but altered by 1*l.* being substituted for 30*l.* What happens? Those who had subscribed for the 30*l.* shares exchanged them for the 1*l.* shares, and others who had not before held paid-up shares took 1*l.* shares under the altered rule. Therefore we have two classes—the original class who exchanged their 30*l.* shares for 1*l.* shares, and the second class who subscribed for 1*l.* shares under the altered rule. But the question is, whether on the winding-up either, or both, of those classes have any claim against the society.

In re Guardian Permanent Building Soc., App.

If I am right in what I said about the first class, they cannot have lost their rights by taking the 1*l.* shares.

As regards the second class, however, there was no misrepresentation at all, because, according to my opinion, the rule was in existence when they took their shares; and if it is a valid rule, they are entitled to their 1*l.* share; if it is an invalid rule, then the question arises whether the transaction was in fact a contract to take shares, or whether, as the Vice-Chancellor has held, it was a mere device for a loan, and therefore struck at by those decisions which laid down that you cannot have an unlimited power of borrowing. That really is the question we have to decide as regards this class, and, if it be decided in their favour, it will cover the first class because they are in the same position.

Now, the first question to be considered is, Was it a device to borrow? That is always a question of construction. It must depend on two things. First, you look at the rules to see whether it was a designed borrowing, for that is the meaning of a device to borrow; secondly, one has to consider whether, even supposing it was not intended to be a disguised borrowing, it was not so in fact. Now I have come to the conclusion, not only that it was not intended to be a disguised borrowing, but that it was not so in fact.

First of all as regards the intention. On that point there was in the rules an express power to borrow, unlimited. Now the moment you have that, and it is in my opinion the strongest possible evidence of intention, you have no occasion to have a disguised power of borrowing. The people who framed these rules no doubt were mistaken in law according to the decisions. They thought they might borrow to any extent they liked, and put it in the plainest terms; therefore it is impossible, as it seems to me, to suppose for a moment that they intended rule 31 to be otherwise than a bona fide rule. Rule 32 enables the society to borrow and take any sum of money from the bankers of the society, or from any bankers, or from any other person, and the borrowed money must be a first charge on the funds of the society. This puts an end to any notion of an intention to disguise the power of borrowing; but still it does not put an end to the question as to whether it is in fact a mere borrowing under the disguise of shares, although not so intended; but the fact of the intention being plain, of course, is not to be lost sight of in ascertaining what the meaning of rule 31 is. When you shew that it is not intended to be a borrowing, but it is intended to be an issue of shares, it does help you to determine whether it is a share or not. Is it a share? First of all, it is called a share. "The board for the time being shall have power as circumstances may require to issue deposit or paid-up shares of the value of 30*l.* shares, upon a certificate bearing interest after the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum, and such certificate shall entitle the depositor"—it does not entitle him to interest, that is the important point—it shall entitle him "(after one month's notice in writing, to be reckoned from a monthly meeting) to withdraw the whole or part of his deposit in preference to all other shares." Now it is to be observed upon those words: first, there is no agreement to pay him anything—the certificate only entitles him to withdrawal. In the next place, his right to be paid on withdrawal is not an absolute right, but only in preference to other shares—the lending people take first. It is behind the lenders—that is the important point. It shews it is not a mere borrowing of money, because if it were they would be on the same footing as the other lenders; but the other lenders are to have a first charge on the property of the society, whereas these people only take a preference as between themselves and the other shareholders.

Now, I must call attention to the 5th rule. There the society is to consist of shares and half-shares, and it will be found that "members may pay up in advance any number of shares or half-shares in accordance with table No. 2"; so that even the ordinary members may pay up in advance. How do they differ from the paid-up shares? They differ in this way: they are behind them. The withdrawing member who has got a paid-up share under section 31 is entitled in preference to all other shares; but still, the man who pays up his share under rule 5 is a paid-up shareholder, and on withdrawal will get his money paid, if there is money to pay him; but he is in an inferior position, for there are, if I may call them so, preference shares. Now, when we come to the power to withdraw, there is no other power to be found except rule 41. It is headed "Power to withdraw"; and though the first part of the rule relates to unadvanced shares—which, in a sense, these deposit shares are—it relates really to advanced shares, which the deposit shares are not, because the amount payable is to be determined by the tables, which do not apply to them. Therefore the first part relates to advanced shares under rule 5, whether they are paid up or not. Then there is to be one clear month's notice—the same notice in both cases as regards time. The only difference is this: one is a month's notice after a monthly meeting, and the other is a clear month's notice. Then "withdrawals shall be payable in rotation, according to the priority of notice." That seems to be general, and must be applicable to all withdrawals. "The board may limit the number of withdrawals to be paid off in any one month." That is really the criterion of the whole thing: if they are shares, and you can only get paid on withdrawal, of course it was never intended that you should break up the society by selling up its property. What was meant was this—which is very often provided for; indeed, I have seen it provided for in a great many rules—that you shall only be allowed to withdraw the money when there is money to withdraw; and that is the meaning of the words that "The board may limit the number of withdrawals to be paid off in any one month."

Now, if this is the true meaning of it, these preference shareholders, as I have called them, can only withdraw if there is money to pay them. That is a totally different position from a lender. The lender of money, when the time for repayment has arrived, whether that time of repayment was originally fixed, or whether it is fixed by his own volition, has a right to immediate payment. He has a right to judgment and execution; but these people have no such right. As I read the rules, they have only a right to be paid when the board shall so determine. Of course, the board will only so determine having regard to the funds they have at their disposal available for the purpose of repayment. It appears to me, the holders of deposit shares are not lenders at all; that they are shareholders, like the other shareholders, entitled to withdraw if they wish to do so. The other shareholders who are unadvanced may withdraw at any time, whether paid up or not; therefore, in this respect, the position of preferred shareholders does not differ from the position of non-preferred or ordinary shareholders who are unadvanced. That is the point. They are not in the position of lenders, and have not the right of lenders. On the other hand, what is the position of the society? A borrower may always pay off a loan; indeed, it has been carried so far that he may pay off a loan before it is due. He may be liable to pay damages—that is, to pay interest over and above to compensate the lender for paying off before it is due; but he can always pay it; whereas this society cannot pay off the preference shares. There is no power, until the end of the society, to pay them off at all.

That seems quite plain from rule 36, and when you consider rules 31, 36 and 41, the effect seems to be that the withdrawing member will only get money, and a member who does not withdraw will get nothing until the end of the society. If that is so, the society is no more in the position of borrower than the deposit shareholder is in the position of lender. It is, in fact, a true preference share—that is, it gives them rights subject to the payment of the society's debts—of course, I mean those debts of the society which are valid. That being so, if they are true preference shares, is there anything in the Act of Parliament which prevents their being valid as such? Of course, you must find something either in the common law or in the express words of the statute to prevent that. I cannot find anything in the common law—it is out of the question; and there is nothing in the statute which says that you may not contract to give some shares an advantage over others for value received.

But then there is this further consideration which must be discussed. Is it contrary to the nature of the society, so that it is impossible to make a society with this kind of share consistent with the law and conduct of the society? On that point I do not think it is the province of the Judicature to find out things to be inconsistent with the ordinary requirements of mankind which the people themselves have not found out. It is all very easy for people to say it is against policy, or against the meaning of these societies; but when you see that people who have established the society do not think so, and have acted on a contrary view, it is very improbable that it is contrary to their nature and contrary to the objects they have in view. But, besides that, I cannot see anything in reason why it should be so. The lending members are unadvanced members. The investing members become so for the purpose of getting more interest than they can get in the usual way. Why may not they stipulate for some security? Why may they not say, as between themselves and the other members, "If this society comes to grief, recollect we shall be paid first?" It is only in that case; if the society is prosperous, everybody is paid, and paid handsomely. Why shall not they say, "We will put our money down; we will start your society, and get you money which shall be advanced to your building members or buying members who want house property, on these terms—namely, if we put our money down in hard cash, if the society does not turn out prosperous, we shall be repaid." There does not appear to me to be anything against the constitution of the society in such an arrangement; on the contrary, it may enable societies to be established which otherwise could not be set agoing at all. Again, is it contrary to the constitution of such a society that members shall pay up instalments in advance? I say clearly not; the more money you get from the investing members the more money you have ready to advance to the borrowing members, and the more rapidly you would bring your society to an end, if the society is established without a fixed period. It seems to me there is no reason why the Judicature should say that these arrangements—which, as far as I am concerned, appear to be perfectly reasonable, and not only framed not to obstruct, but to further the object of these societies—are illegal, because they are contrary to the policy on which these societies are founded. It does appear to me there is no valid legal objection to what has been done; and I hold that this second class—those who came in and took the 1*l.* shares—are entitled to the benefit of their shares; and therefore, subject to the payment of the debts, are entitled to be paid out of the assets of the society. Of course this covers the claim of the first class, which I should have been ready to hold, in the event of our not being willing to extend the benefit to the second class, entitled to come in subject to the payment of the outside creditors.

COTTON, L.J.—The question we have to decide on this appeal is, whether the holders of certain shares, whose money has been taken by the society without any authority, are entitled only—as decided by the Vice-Chancellor—to come in and receive back what they can get after all the creditors and shareholders have been paid, in which case they will not receive the benefit of their moneys, which have been taken illegally; or whether they are entitled to stand as holders of shares, and, as such, to be paid in accordance with the rules of the society. Now the rule under which these shares must be considered as taken, authorised paid-up shares to be issued; and the terms on which those shares are to be issued are the printed rule 31, subject only to the substitution of 1*l.* for 30*l.* Now, some question has been raised as to whether it can be said there is any such rule. I do not say for a moment that those holders would stand in a worse position if there were no such rule, but I think the effect of what has been done is this: that a print being submitted to the barrister, and rule 31 being struck out by him, it ought not to have been in the print of the rules of the society. Therefore the effect of what the barrister did was to replace rule 31 in the print, with the substitution of 1*l.* for 30*l.*, as a new rule of the society; and the question we have to consider is, whether the holders of shares under that rule are entitled in the winding-up to be treated on the footing of being the holders of shares. It was argued that this rule was illegal, and therefore that they could not be so entitled; and it was so decided by the Judge in the Court below, who said: "By 'illegal,' of course, it meant not that which is prohibited under penalty, but something which is not allowed in societies of this nature." I do not for a moment say that the rule, as it originally stood, would have been a rule which could properly be introduced into a society of this sort, because it provided for payment at once of 30*l.* down, whereas the Act says that the periodical and other subscriptions are to be of small amount, not to exceed 1*l.* monthly. The barrister might very well have said, "This is not a rule which is in accordance with the constitution of this society, which primarily is a society which raises funds by subscriptions small in amount, not to exceed 1*l.* in a month." But what we have to consider is, whether, with the alteration referred to, it is contrary to law that a society of this sort should have shares of this description.

Now, I do not at all express an opinion that if a society was formed with nothing but shares such as these, it would come within and be such a society as is entitled to the benefit of the Act of 6 & 7 Will. 4, and of the Friendly Societies Act, which was introduced by that into building societies; because, under those Acts, it must be a society which does, to a considerable extent at least, consist of members who, by small subscriptions from time to time, are to provide a fund to be dealt with by the society; but here we have a society which was formed, to a very great extent at least, for the purpose of receiving subscriptions in the ordinary way from its subscribing members, whether they chose to take an advance or not.

That being so, we have to consider whether in a society entitled, as regards its general constitution, to the benefit of this Act, this rule is ultra vires, or that which the law will not allow as a binding rule and regulation of such a society. Now there is nothing whatever in this Act of Parliament which expressly prohibits such shares as these. The subscription to be paid at once is not beyond the amount which is authorised, and unless there is something else which can make this class of shares not admissible in such a society, in my opinion we ought to hold that those who have been received in this way as shareholders are to be treated not otherwise than as entitled to be holders of valid shares. It is said that the fund is to be raised by periodical subscriptions; but it is not suggested that, where a society has by its constitution the power to raise funds in that way, it is illegal to receive the total amount of the shares in advance. I do not think it is necessary to go into the question whether under these rules the holders of these shares could have obtained an advance. I do not at all say they could. I think under these rules the advance pointed at is an advance to be within the amount of these shares, and all the payments are calculated on that footing. But that does not decide the question. If these are really shares not expressly prohibited by the Act of Parliament, why are we to say they are shares which do not form part of the share capital of the society? The object is this, that by means of these monthly or other subscriptions of the members a stock or fund may be raised for the purpose of enabling the members thereof to receive out of the funds of the society a certain amount—the amount or value of their share or shares. Of course it is clear that every member cannot become an advanced member. Some members must be members who either by choice or by want of luck do not get an advance. It is clear there is nothing in the Act of Parliament that really does prevent shares of this sort. Powers of unlimited borrowing given to the directors have been rightly held to be ultra vires, and not within the purview of the Act; but there is no prohibition in the Act against the existence of such a class of members who by choice, when they go in once for all, may say, "We do not require an advance." In my opinion, unless it can be said that this is really borrowing, and not a taking in of members' capital, it cannot be said that the shares are ultra vires. Of course, if it appears in any particular society that this class of shares was introduced for the purpose of covertly borrowing—that is, giving under the mask of membership a power of borrowing—then it would come within the decisions and principle which lay down that such societies are not entitled to raise money in that way, because that would be doing something contrary to the intention of the Act of Parliament. Here, did they so intend? I think the Master of the Rolls disposed of that by shewing that there was in the rules themselves an unlimited power of borrowing, and it may well be that that rule was introduced under the belief that it was perfectly legal. I do not know what the state of the authorites was at the time when these rules were framed; but we can hardly come to the conclusion that this was introduced covertly to do under the mask of something else that which was openly authorised, so far as rules could authorise it. The Master of the Rolls has shewn that these persons stand, not in the position of lenders, but in the position of members who are entitled to withdraw, subject to the claims of creditors whose demands are payable, with certain rights of preference. A difficulty has been raised, which must be taken into account, that in this society all unadvanced shares are to get interest on payments made. That appears by one of the tables; but it is unnecessary to decide that question now. The directors have acted, in my opinion, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and therefore we ought not here to hold that this is borrowing under the guise of issuing shares. In my opinion it cannot be said that the shareholders are to be put in any other position than that of shareholders.

Now there is a difference as regards class. It seems that some took shares on the representation that there was a clause authorising the issue of the 30*l.* shares which the directors purported to issue to them. I think the Master of the Rolls intimated, and certainly I do not dissent from that view, that these persons have not lost any such right as they had by taking these 1*l.* shares in exchange for the 30*l.* shares, if the 30*l.* shares were shares which could not be properly issued. Then could it be said that the society is entitled to retain the money received from those who took 30*l.* shares, which were taken by them on the representation of the agents of the society, from whom they took the shares, that there was a certified rule authorising the issue of those shares, when in fact that was entirely inaccurate, and there was no rule authorising the issue of any such shares? In my opinion, under those circumstances, the takers of those shares would be entitled to recover from the society that money which was obtained only on the misrepresentation or carelessness or otherwise of those who were the agents, and who got that money from the persons taking the 30*l.* shares. In my opinion, therefore, the holders of these 1*l.* shares must be entitled to rank at least as high as the shareholders in this society.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. After the judgments which have been delivered, in which I entirely agree, I do not propose to add very many words. It seems to me different considerations might very well apply to the two classes of persons with whom we are dealing. These are, in the first place, those who originally took 30*l.* shares upon the representation virtually made to them by the society that rule 31 had been certified by the barrister, whereas those who directed the society ought to have known, and must be taken to have known, that that rule had been struck out. Therefore, those who subscribed for 30*l.* shares upon the belief that the barrister had duly certified rule 31, really paid their money and were induced to pay their money upon a misrepresentation. How does their position differ from the positions of persons who make loans to a society which has got no borrowing power? It seems to me the difference is tolerably clear. Those who deal with the society which professes to borrow have equal means of knowledge with the society itself of the statutory power of the society—they are put, so to speak, upon enquiry whether the society really can borrow validly or not; and if they choose to lend their money to a society which cannot properly borrow, it cannot be said there is a failure of consideration. The society has got their money, it is true; but they must be taken to have known what they bought, and to have been willing to take their chance. But when you come to people who were induced, as these people were, to lend or subscribe their money by misrepresentation put before them by the society, although the society has had the money, I agree that the directors and not the society would be the persons to be sued —because the misrepresentation, I suppose, was the misrepresentation of the directors—the society cannot keep the money which they obtained by the misrepresentation of the directors without, as far as they can, doing all that lies in their power to make good the representation. They cannot take the benefit of the misrepresentation and repudiate the act of the directors altogether. Therefore, in the first place, these people who subscribed money upon the faith of this rule 31 being certified by the barrister would be entitled, as it seems to me, against the society to be placed at all events in the position in which they would have been if rule 31 had been approved by the barrister. It may be said that would not do them much good, because, if rule 31 is invalid, they would only be placed in the position of people who had taken invalid shares. I think there would be a fallacy in that answer if it were made; because it does not follow that, if they had known all the facts, if they had known from the beginning that rule 31 had not been certified by the barrister, they would have advanced this money. I take it they would be entitled to be placed in the position of creditors of the society but for their own acts. But they have been willing from the first, although creditors, to be treated as members. They subscribed upon the belief that they would be members, and when they took the 1*l.* shares in 1876 they assented to stand on that footing. They cannot demand more of the liquidator than that they should be treated as members upon the terms of the rule, valid or invalid, and they cannot be denied as much as that. So that, if the case solely concerned the members who had taken shares on the faith that rule 31 had been certified by the barrister, I have no doubt that their claim was a good one, and I do not think they prejudiced it in the least by taking the 1*l.* shares; that is to say, they are still entitled to assert their right to be treated upon the footing that those 1*l.* shares are valid.

But that does not dispose of the whole of the class which we have been discussing, because there is a large portion, half probably, who have taken 1*l.* shares after 1876, and who have not therefore been induced by any misrepresentation of the society to subscribe, and therefore we are driven to consider the question whether the rule, as altered in 1876, is a valid rule or ultra vires. Now it certainly would be ultra vires if it were a disguised or real loan; but it seems to me, when you look at the rules under which the subscription is obtained, that it is not a loan. I will not go through what was said by the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Cotton, but simply state my opinion that it was not a loan. It really is intended to be a preferential share to place those people, to a certain extent at all events, in the position of investing members. It has been argued that the society had no right to create these preferential shares to the extent of 1*l.* If the society had no right to create preferential shares of this kind to the extent of 1*l.*, it seems to me difficult to maintain that there could be such things as paid-up shares to the extent of 1*l.* Whether paid-up shares under rule 31 to the extent of more than 1*l.* are within the Act or not, it seems to me at all events that paid-up shares to the value of 1*l.* and preferential shares of the value of 1*l.* are. If you look at the words of the Act, however you read them, the limit is only this—there shall not be in any one month more paid upon a share than 20*s.* I say "however you read it"—giving it the narrowest construction, the one most in favour of the contention of the liquidator, these are within it. For the other reasons given by the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Cotton, in which I concur, but especially for that reason, it seems to me all the class are entitled to succeed who have the 1*l.* shares, though those who originally subscribed for 30*l.* have, it seems me, an additional ground on which to rest their claim.

Solicitors—Pritchard, Englefield & Co., agents for Boote & Edgar, Manchester, for the official liquidator; Rooke & Sons, agents for Earle & Sons, Manchester; Chester & Co., agents for H. T. Crofton, Manchester, and for Woodall & Co., Manchester; R. W. Marsland, agent for Addleshaw & Warburton, Manchester, for other parties.

Board a written direction signed by the vendors to pay the purchase-money into some bank to the joint account of the vendors. On the other hand, the solicitors for the vendors insisted that, having regard to the 8th and 56th sections of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act of 1881, it would be sufficient if they attended and produced the deed of conveyance duly executed by the vendors, and having in the body thereof or indorsed thereon a receipt duly signed by them, and that therefore the purchase-money should be paid to them. This not being assented to by the purchasers, they took out a summons, under the Vendor and Purchaser Act of 1874, asking for a declaration that the requisition so made by them ought to be complied with. On the return of the summons Mr. Justice Kay held that, unless the purchasers had reason to suspect an intended misapplication of the purchase-money, the vendors were entitled to avail themselves of the provisions of the Act of 1881, and he dismissed the application. From such dismissal the present appeal is brought.

On the part of the appellants it has been contended before us, as it appears to have been contended before Mr. Justice Kay, that an authority given by trustees for sale to their solicitor to receive the purchase-money would be a breach of trust; and that if the purchaser paid his purchase-money to the solicitor upon such an authority he would be implicated in the breach of trust, and might be called upon to repay the purchase-money in the event of its being misapplied by the solicitor. The former of the two propositions thus affirmed is, in my opinion, well founded; and, as a general proposition, it has not been disputed by the respondents.

Lord Langdale's decision in Ghost v. Waller (8) has always been recognised and followed. But I am not aware of any authority that supports the latter proposition as applicable to any cases other than those in which, from the surrounding circumstances, knowledge, or at least a suspicion, of an intended misapplication of the purchase-money has been attributed to the purchaser. The cases of Webb v. Ledsam (9) and Hope v. Liddell (10), so far as they have any bearing on the general proposition, appear to me to be adverse to the appellants' contention. In Webb v. Ledsam (9), the purchaser, by arrangement with the trustees, retained in his own hands for eight years a considerable portion of the purchase-money, and eventually it was one of the trustees who misapplied it. Here there was a clear breach of trust, of which the purchaser was not only cognisant, but took an active part in carrying it out. The Vice-Chancellor held the purchaser responsible by reason of his participation in what he knew to be a breach of trust; but in the course of his judgment he said: "I know of no authority for holding liable to pay over again purchase-money paid to one of several trustees upon a receipt signed by all," and then proceeded to distinguish the case that was under his consideration. In Hope v. Liddell (10), Lord Romilly said: "The purchaser having obeyed the direction of the trustee to pay it"—that is, the purchase-money—"to another person, has, in my opinion, thereby made a payment of it to the trustee himself, and is exonerated from the consequences of misapplication, unless the purchaser had express notice that the person to whom he was directed to pay it was about to commit a breach of trust, in such a way as to make the purchaser, in fact, a party to the wrongful act." The case of Viney v. Chaplin (11), although alluded to by Mr. Justice Kay in his judgment, does not appear to have been discussed in the arguments of counsel before him; but I agree with Mr. Justice Kay in thinking that the 8th and 56th sections of the Conveyancing Act of 1881 were passed with reference to the views expressed by the learned Judges by whom Viney v. Chaplin (11) was decided. In that case two questions were raised—the first, whether a purchaser has a right to insist upon having the conveyance executed in the presence of himself or of his agent; and the second, whether he has a right to require that the money should be paid to the vendor personally or in his

(8) 9 Beav. 497.

(9) 1 Kay & J. 385.

(10) 21 Beav. 180.

(11) 2 De Gex & J. 468; 4 Drew. 237; 27 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 434.

presence. Upon these two questions the Court (composed of Lord Chancellor Cranworth and Lords Justices Knight-Bruce and Turner) declined to give an opinion in the abstract; but, in the course of his judgment, the Lord Chancellor, after stating that under ordinary circumstances the purchaser's solicitor had no hesitation in accepting the conveyance, though he had not witnessed its execution, or in permitting his client to pay the purchase-money to the solicitor of the vendor, said that circumstances might arise in which the purchaser might feel that he ought to be armed with the most complete proof of the transaction, both as to the execution of the conveyance and as to the receipt of the purchase-money; and after further observing that if the purchaser paid his purchase-money to a person not authorised to receive it, he would be liable to pay it over again, and that the possession of the executed conveyance, with the signed receipt for the purchase-money indorsed, was not in itself an authority to the solicitor of the vendor to receive the purchase-money, he proceeded as follows: "The difficulty is to see how the purchaser can be safe at all times from the danger of paying his money to an unauthorised person, without the vendor being present, or having expressly given to the purchaser or his solicitor authority to pay it in a particular manner;" and after further observing that in many cases it would be extremely unreasonable for the purchaser to require the presence of the vendor, he added: "it will be sufficient for this case to say that if a purchaser has not the right in every case to insist upon the vendor being present when the purchase-money is to be paid, neither is a vendor to refuse compliance with a request of this description when circumstances arise which are sufficient to justify it." And in the same case, Lord Justice Turner, after stating that a solicitor was not entitled by virtue of his office to receive purchase-money, and that if a vendor asserted the authority of his solicitor to receive it, it was incumbent upon him to produce that authority, proceeded to express himself as follows: "I think that the purchaser has the right of insisting, either that the vendor should attend and himself receive the purchase-money, or of requiring that there should be written authority to pay the solicitor." Much reliance has been placed by the appellants upon the opinions of text-writers, and we have been told in the course of the argument that Hope v. Liddell (10) has not been approved by conveyancers; but nearly thirty years have elapsed since the decision in that case, and I am not aware that its authority has ever been impugned. It was quoted in Viney v. Chaplin (11), and no disapprobation of it was expressed; and the decision in Viney v. Chaplin (11) was perfectly consistent with it. We are all aware of the advice given by Lord St. Leonards, that when the vendors are trustees for sale the purchasers should, for their own protection, either pay the money to the vendors, or into a bank to the joint account of the trustees. That advice was given many years ago, and was, in my opinion, sound advice for general guidance; and for this reason—that if at any future time the authority of the agent should be disputed, or it should be sought to affect the purchaser with knowledge or suspicion of an intended misapplication of the purchase-money, it might be difficult for the purchaser or his representatives to prove the one or disprove the other. That advice has been repeated in the books of other writers, and it appears to have been adopted in practice by conveyancers generally. It was, doubtless, the foundation of the requisition made on behalf of the appellants in the present case; but it was not advice which ought in all cases to be acted upon, if effect is to be given to the views expressed in Viney v. Chaplin (11); and Lord St. Leonards, in the 14th edition of his great work, published some two or three years after the decision on the appeal in Viney v. Chaplin (11), first refers to the decision of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley (12) as supporting the proposition "that, as a general rule, the purchaser had a right to pay the purchase-money to the seller himself," and adds that "on appeal it was considered that a written authority would be sufficient, but the solicitor, as such, had no right to receive the money." Whatever may have been Lord St. Leonards' opinion of the views expressed by Lord Cranworth and Lord Justice Turner in Viney v. Chaplin (11), he expressed no dissent from them. In the last edition also of Mr. Lewin's work on Trusts, the following passage occurs:—"Trustees, as between themselves and the purchasers, are not bound to receive the purchase-money personally, but may give a written or other express authority to their solicitor or agent to receive it on their behalf; but payment to a solicitor or agent without a written or other express authority from them will not be sufficient." In my opinion, these comments of Lord St. Leonards and Mr. Lewin correctly represent the principles recognised and acted upon by Courts of equity previously to the passing of the Act of 1881, when dealing with questions such as are involved in the present appeal. It is impossible to state them more concisely, but, with the view of applying them to the case now under consideration, I would enunciate them as follows. That, in the absence of any reason to suspect a misapplication of the purchase-money, a purchaser from trustees for sale would be bound to pay them to the solicitor of the trustees upon the production by him of a written authority signed by the trustees to receive them.

(12) 4 Drew. 237.

Let us now examine the 8th and 56th sections of the Act of 1881. The 8th is in the following terms:—"On a sale, the purchaser shall not be entitled to require that the conveyance to him be executed in his presence, or in that of his solicitor as such, but shall be entitled to have, at his own cost, the execution of the conveyance attested by some person appointed by him, who may, if he thinks fit, be his solicitor." This deals with the subject-matter of the first question raised in Viney v. Chaplin (11), as to which their Lordships, while declining to lay down any general rule applicable to all cases, in effect held that the question, whether a purchaser in any particular case had a right to insist upon having the conveyance executed in the presence of his solicitor or his agent, must depend upon the circumstances of that case. The 8th section gives to the purchaser the right of having, but at his own cost, the execution of the conveyance attested by some person appointed by him, who may be his own solicitor, but negatives any right in him to require that the conveyance shall be executed in his presence, or in that of his solicitor, as such. The 56th section of the Act in like manner deals with the subject-matter of the second question raised in Viney v. Chaplin (11). It provides as follows:—"Where a solicitor produces a deed, having in the body thereof or indorsed thereon a receipt for consideration money or other consideration, the deed being executed, or the indorsed receipt being signed, by the person entitled to give a receipt for that consideration, the deed shall be sufficient authority to the person liable to pay or give the same for his paying or giving the same to the solicitor, without the solicitor producing any separate or other direction or authority in that behalf from the person who executed or signed the deed or receipt." It has been suggested, though it has hardly been pressed, that this 56th section does not apply to the case of a sale by trustees; but I can see nothing either in the section itself or elsewhere in the Act to justify so limited an application of its provisions. Treating the section as applicable to the present case, and assuming the views which I have expressed as to the effect of the decision in Viney v. Chaplin (11) to be correct, the 56th section, in my opinion, substitutes the production of the deed, as mentioned in the earlier portion of the section, for the written authority, which, according to the decision in Viney v. Chaplin (11), would have been sufficient. I will only add that in the arguments before us the vendors have been throughout treated as trustees for sale, with power to give receipts; but it appears that they are not trustees for sale, as the expression is commonly understood. The estates are strictly settled by the will, with a power to the trustees, upon request as therein mentioned, to sell, and to revoke uses and trusts to give effect to such sales, with a declaration that their receipts shall be effectual discharges for the purchase-moneys thereby expressed to have been received, and that the persons taking such receipts shall not be obliged to see to the application, or be in any wise answerable or accountable for any loss, misapplication or non-application thereof. The distinction does not appear to me material, but the provision as to the purchaser not being liable for misapplication of the purchase-moneys brings the case more completely within the decision in Hope v. Liddell (10). I will only add that, in my opinion, the 56th section of the Act of 1881 was intended to meet the circumstances of such a case as the present, and to prevent in like cases such a requisition being made as has been made by the appellants. I think the appeal should be dismissed.

In re Bellamy, App.

COTTON, L.J.—This case comes before us on appeal from an order made by Mr. Justice Kay upon a summons taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act. The purchasers made a requisition that the vendors should either personally receive the money, or name some bank into which it should be paid to the joint account of the vendors, who were trustees. Their solicitors, without any explanation of any circumstances which rendered it desirable or necessary that neither of those alternatives should be adopted, said:—"We will produce a conveyance in which there shall be a receipt for the purchase-money; that is sufficient authority. We claim under that to receive the purchase-money and to disregard your requisitions." The question which we have to consider is, whether upon the answer so made by the vendors they are entitled to specific performance. Now the first point, which was argued a good deal, was upon the 56th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act of 1881, and it was contended that, however the matter would have stood in the absence of that section, that section prevented the requisition made by the purchaser from being insisted on in the case where the trustees are vendors. In my opinion, that is not a correct rendering of that section. In my opinion, the simple effect of that section is to make a deed, in the form pointed out by that section, equivalent to a special authority given to the solicitor to receive the money. What is the section? [His Lordship read the section, and continued:] Well, that, on its fair interpretation, points simply to the absence of a separate or special written direction or authority, and means that the production of the deed shall be equivalent to and obviate the necessity of a separate or other written direction or authority, and shall operate as a good discharge to the purchaser. If it was meant that it should be a good discharge, under all circumstances, to the person who so paid the money, that would have been in different language; and although I do not say that this section does not apply to the case of trustees being vendors, where possibly they may be right in authorising their solicitor under certain circumstances to receive the money, yet, in my opinion, that applies only to vendors who have power to authorise their solicitors to receive the money, and does not give vendors any additional power of authorising their solicitors to receive the money, or give to the purchaser any additional protection in payment to a solicitor who produces the deed, except this, that the deed shall be equivalent to and have the same force and authority as a separate and special written authority or direction.

If that is so—and that, in my opinion, is the true construction of this section—what one has to deal with are two questions. First, we must consider whether trustees have power to authorise their solicitor to receive purchase-money payable to them, the vendors; and then whether a purchaser is bound to accept the receipt of the solicitor, instead of paying the money to the trustees personally or into a bank to their account. Now I think it may be safely stated, as a general rule, that under ordinary circumstances trustees are not justified in authorising their solicitor or other agent to receive purchase-money which ought to be paid personally to them. But that is not in any way, in my opinion, a universal rule. There may be circumstances which would justify and render it necessary for trustees to grant power to somebody else to receive purchase-money for them; but, as a general rule, I think it may be safely laid down that it is their duty not to authorise or delegate to an agent or solicitor power to receive the trust-money. It was argued that that would be wrong, that it was part of the ordinary course of business to employ a solicitor in completing a purchase; and then it was said that the case of Speight v. Gaunt (3) was an authority that trustees would be justified in doing what was usual, and in giving their solicitor authority to receive the money. That case I entirely agree with; but it has no application to the present case. That case simply decided this, that when, according to the ordinary course of business, it is necessary for trustees to employ an agent—an agent having from his very employment power to receive money—the trustees are not committing a breach of trust in employing an agent having those powers where it is necessary as a matter of business, nor are they answerable for his misapplication of the money. The case there was that of a broker on the Stock Exchange, who was to invest trust-money. But here it is an entirely different case. A solicitor, as such, and from his employment in completing a purchase, has not authority to receive the money—Viney v. Chaplin (11) settled that; and the question is as to special authority given to him, not incidental to his employment in the completion of a purchase, but a special authority given to him under the terms of this section. That being so, taking the general rule, can the vendors, being trustees, require the purchaser to complete in this way, simply by saying to the purchaser, "I require completion on payment of the purchase-money to him"?—not deigning to give any explanation of circumstances which would justify or render it necessary for them to authorise him to receive the money, but simply saying, "There is the conveyance. There is the Act. You are bound to pay the money to him." In my opinion that is not sufficient. Assume there may be circumstances where the trustees would be justified in authorising the solicitor to receive the purchase-money, yet the 56th section does not say that the purchaser shall be bound to pay. But, in my opinion, when the vendor's solicitor requires the purchase-money to be paid to him simply, the purchaser has a right to say, "I may be safe, and I by no means say that I am not, but I do not choose to mix myself up with any investigation which may hereafter arise between the cestui que trust, and the vendors, the trustees and myself, as to the validity of the sale or the distribution of the purchase-moneys"—instituted, it may be, with the object of fixing him with knowledge of a breach of trust committed by the trustees. I think a purchaser is justified in saying, "I will be prudent. It may be I am safe in taking the conveyance from you, but I decline to be mixed up in the question in any way, and I require—for the refusal of which there is no reason here—payment of the moneys to the trustees themselves, or to their joint account with the bankers designated by them." It is said there is authority against that. Now, undoubtedly, high authorities on Conveyancing have advised trustees to adopt the course laid down by these requisitions. It is said there have been alterations in the later editions—and possibly there have; but I do not think the authority of Lord St. Leonards can be vouched for the proposition which was involved in the decision of Mr. Justice Kay, of which I speak with great respect, as, of course, I need hardly say I do also of the opinion of the Lord Justice who has preceded me. One must look to see whether the case of Viney v. Chaplin (11), which was referred to by Lord St. Leonards, not as laying down a doctrine he approved of, but as altering the practice, decided anything of the kind. Now, that the Lord Chancellor did not intend to decide what should be done where there were trustee vendors, and the purchaser desired to be prudent and safe, is clear, for he says at p. 79, "Neither is it necessary to consider whether Mr. Chaplin was or was not a trustee, although the cases shew that where there was a trust a purchaser may incur considerable risk in paying to a solicitor for a trustee, for this is merely a question of degree"; so that he certainly did not intend by his judgment in any way to give an opinion on this question we have now to consider; nor, as far as I see, did Lord Justice Turner, because the facts there were these—that the solicitor had no written authority at all, but insisted on his right from his mere position as a solicitor, or from a verbal authority given him. It is very true that he does refer to the non-existence of a special authority, but that is when he is dealing with the question whether the solicitor was then in a position to say that, as between him and his employer the vendor, he could give a good discharge which would prevent the vendor from afterwards saying, "I insist on my vendor's lien, and that payment has never been effectually made to me." Here it is different. It is not a question between vendor and purchaser—whether the vendor can afterwards object to the payment to the solicitor—but whether the purchaser would be safe in paying to the solicitor, whether he is not prudent, and justifiably prudent—not overcautious, but justifiably prudent—in saying, "I will not specifically perform until I am made safe from any future question by your allowing me to pay the money to the trustees themselves, as the vendors, or to an account in their names at a bank." In my opinion, the purchasers here were justified in taking that course; and therefore, in my opinion, the decision of Mr. Justice Kay must be reversed.

In re Bellamy, App.

BOWEN, L.J.—I agree with the opinion of Lord Justice Cotton in this matter. It seems to me the questions we have to decide are two:—First, whether the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, affects the position of the solicitor of the trustee in respect to the question which has been raised; and, secondly, what really was the law of the Court as to payment made to solicitors of trustees before the Act.

I begin by saying what, in my opinion, is the true construction of section 56 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. I think its only effect is to make a vendor's receipt, of the character described in the section, equivalent, for the purpose of the protection of the vendee, to a written direction of the vendor. I do not think the section is meant to compel the purchaser to accept a written receipt, where he would not before the Act have been compelled to act on a written direction. It seems to me that the whole framework of the section points to its being intended for the protection of a vendee who acts on a receipt without having any written authority—that is to say, to place the vendee who acts on such a receipt in the same position as if a written authority had been handed to him by the vendor. I do not say, and I do not think it can be said, that this section does not apply to the case of trustees. It appears to me that it applies to the case of any trustee, who would be right in authorising his solicitor to receive the purchase-money upon a written direction. All that appears to me to be clear is, that it does not enlarge the powers of trustees as to the employment of a solicitor, but leaves it exactly where it was before.

Next comes the question, what was the law before as to the employment by trustees of a solicitor to receive the purchase-money? It appears to me there can be no invariable rule on the subject. The employment of a solicitor by a trustee to receive purchase-money from purchasers must depend on the general principles which regulate the conduct of trustees. Sometimes the trustee would find it essential to employ a solicitor to receive the purchase-money. For example, a case was put in argument which was an apt illustration. Suppose a trustee is abroad, you cannot expect a purchaser to be hunting all over the globe for the purpose of finding the man to whom he is to pay the money. That would be unreasonable, and I can see many cases in which it would be reasonable that a trustee should employ a solicitor to receive the purchase-money; but still, a solicitor—to use the language of a Judge in a well-known case—is not employed to receive the purchase-money except in the case of moral necessity. It must depend upon the circumstances of each case whether he was properly so employed or not, and therefore I do not propose to lay down any general rule as to whether the purchaser will, or will not, be safe in cases where a trustee employs a solicitor to receive the purchase-money. It seems to me sufficient to say—speaking with great consciousness of my own inferiority to judge as compared with that of the learned Lords Justices who have preceded me—that a purchaser would not have been compelled before the Act to pay to the solicitor of the trustee, if the trustee simply wrote to say he wished him to do so, and the purchaser simply said that he wished to run no risk. Then, if that be so, what is there in section 56 of this Act which alters the position of the vendor and vendee? If I am right in the construction I put on section 56, that it is not meant to enlarge the power of trustees to employ a solicitor, but only to warrant the purchaser in paying where he could before have done so only on a written direction, I think it would not justify the Court in insisting on a purchaser now doing in respect to the purchase-money what the Court would not have insisted on his doing before.

Appeal accordingly allowed; but without costs, the appellants not asking for them.

Solicitors—R. Ward, for appellants; Hunters, Gwatkin & Co., for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
1883.
June 13.

PRESTNEY v. THE MAYOR, ETC., OF COLCHESTER.

Practice—Production of Documents—Place of Production—Subsequent Order changing Place of Production—Discretion of Court—Jurisdiction.

As a general rule, after a Judge has made the usual order for the production of documents at any particular place, he or his successor, or his representative on the Bench, has jurisdiction at any subsequent period, if circumstances appear to warrant it, to direct that those documents, previously directed to be produced at one place, or some of them, shall be produced at another place.

Such an order is an exercise of the Judge's discretion, and an appeal therefrom will not be readily entertained.

Semble,—The same rule applies to orders which do not decide the rights of parties, but are merely directory in their nature, when circumstances arise that require the form of the order to be varied.

This was an appeal from a decision of Pearson, J., reported ante, p. 346.

On the 19th of May, 1882, Hall, V.C., on the application of the plaintiffs, made the usual order that the documents, &c., in the action should be produced at the office of the London agents of the defendants' solicitor.

On the 24th of May, 1883, Pearson, J., on the application of the defendants, ordered that the inspection should be at Colchester at the muniments office of the defendants, instead of in London: see the report below.

The plaintiffs appealed.

W. Pearson, Q.C., and H. J. Hood, for the appellants.—The Judge had no jurisdiction to vary this prior order; and, even if he had, the application should have been made within twenty-one days after the former order was passed and entered. The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 50, Dickson v. Harrison (1) and Heatley v. Newton (2).

[BAGGALLAY, L.J., referred to Bonnardet v. Taylor (3).]

As to the merits: to go to Colchester will entail an enormous expense on the plaintiffs, because there is a great mass of ancient documents, consisting of charters, books of account and vouchers, to be perused, inspected and examined; but as to the charters we only require copies, and an opportunity to examine them with the originals. According to the general practice of the Court, documents ought to be produced at the office of the Clerk of Records and Writs in London. We want production in such a way as not to incur the enormous expense which we should be put to if we have to go to Colchester. If inspection is to be at Colchester, then it ought to be at the cost of the defendants.

Philbrick, Q.C., N. Smart and Eustace Smith, for the respondents.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—Subject to anything that Mr. Philbrick may say, the Court is at present disposed to dismiss the appeal, but with liberty to the plaintiffs to apply for production of any particular documents in London, the corporation undertaking

(1) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 761; Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 243.

(2) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 225; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 326.

(3) 1 Jo. & H. 383; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 523.

Prestney v. Mayor of Colchester, App.

to pay such extra costs as the plaintiffs may reasonably incur in examining the documents at Colchester.]

Philbrick, Q.C.—We do not object to that.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I think that this appeal fails substantially, though I think we may make an order which may afford an additional protection to the present appellants. As regards the power or jurisdiction of Mr. Justice Pearson to make the order which he has made, if the circumstances of the case warranted it, I entertain no doubt. I take it that, after a Judge has made the usual order for the production of documents at any particular place, he, or his successor, or his representative on the Bench, may at a subsequent period, if the circumstances appear to warrant it, direct that those documents previously directed to be produced at one place, or some of them, may be produced at another. In the case of Bonnardet v. Taylor (3), the documents were commercial documents, and Vice-Chancellor Wood seemed to entertain no doubt whatever that the Court had full power, after an order had once been made for the production at Liverpool, to make an order for the production at Newcastle. That was a considered matter, because it was originally a summons in chambers, and was adjourned into Court for the decision.

Then, if there was jurisdiction for Mr. Justice Pearson to make this order, has he under the circumstances of the case made an order which cannot be justified or ought to be discharged? In my opinion, it is one of that class of cases in which, though there may be said to be a right of appeal against the decision, yet, excepting in a very strong case, the Court will not interfere with a discretion exercised by a learned Judge, although the individual members of the Court may think that, perhaps, had they been in the position of the Judge of first instance, they might have come to a different conclusion. Unless they are of opinion that his decision was manifestly wrong, I think this is one of the class of cases in which the Court will not interfere. So far from thinking that the view taken by Mr. Justice Pearson in the circumstances of the case was wrong, I am bound to say that, now that we have the whole case fairly placed before us, I have reason to think that, so far as the general terms of the order are concerned, it was right. At the same time, I cannot but think that there may be some documents which the present appellants may deem it desirable to examine more in detail, and that facilities for that further or more complete examination should be given by having the production in London. I think it desirable that, while we reject the appeal, we should give leave to the present appellants to make any application they may be advised as regards the production of any particular documents. I hope that the exercise, or the availing themselves, of that leave will become unnecessary to the parties, by the corporation of Colchester at once agreeing to produce those documents in London which it will be reasonable so to produce. If they unreasonably refuse, and the present appellants are compelled to come to the Court to ask for a compulsory order, the Court will know how to deal with the costs of an application of that kind. I do not anticipate that such will be the case. I gather that the corporation will be willing to produce in London all such documents as may be deemed necessary on the part of the appellants or the plaintiffs in support of their case, unless some sufficient reason exists as regards the condition, or the number, or bulk, or whatever it may be, of those documents, which would make it unreasonable that they should do so. I think, however, that, as this is an indulgence, and as the order of Mr. Justice Pearson was an indulgence, and he so treated it by giving the appellants liberty to apply for any additional costs occasioned by the examination in Colchester instead of in London, whether they were successful or unsuccessful in the action, that qualification should be a little more full, and that the order should be that the corporation undertake to pay such additional costs occasioned by the production in Colchester, instead of the production in London, as the Judge or the Court may deem reasonable on the hearing of the action.

COTTON, L.J.—There are two questions

here, and the first is, whether Mr. Justice Pearson had any power to make this order. Now, as I said in the course of the argument, I think that probably the order was wrong in form. There was no power in him to hear, by way of appeal, an application to vary an order which had been made by his predecessor, not even by himself, after the lapse of time which had occurred; and the proper form of order I think would have been this—that, notwithstanding the directions contained in the previous order, the defendants should produce the documents, which by that order they were directed to produce in London, at Colchester, at the place named. As regards that, if the order was in that form, and that is the substance, I have no doubt Mr. Justice Pearson had full jurisdiction and power to make an order, because the other order did not prescribe anything as of right between the parties, but merely directed how the documents which are mentioned in the affidavit should be produced, and the matter not being brought before the Court as to the inconvenience of producing the documents in London rather than in Colchester, it was put in what practically is the common form—namely, for production at the office of the solicitors in London. If that were so, in my opinion the Court and the Judge must have a right in dealing with such a question, and in dealing with what has been directed by a previous interlocutory order, when new facts are brought before it to shew that following the precise directions of that interlocutory order will cause what he considers unnecessary inconvenience or other injury to the parties, to give directions that, notwithstanding the directions contained in the previous interlocutory order, a different mode shall be adopted of carrying into effect the substance of the previous interlocutory order. It would be very different if this were an interlocutory order in which the rights of the parties had been decided; then it is appeal, and appeal only, and it must be prosecuted in the ordinary way. Here, where it is merely directing the mode in which the plaintiff is to avail himself of the right of inspection, in my opinion the Judge has a perfect right, and it is his duty, on further facts being brought before him, which shall render such a course necessary for the purpose of the due administration of justice, to make a new order, varying the form, and giving a new direction as to the mode in which production shall be made. One has known it done frequently in one's practice at the Bar. Then, in the next place, was this order right? I think the order was right. I say nothing as to this order not being appealable. I think that where a Judge has exercised a discretion, the Court will hardly ever interfere; it is always difficult to get the Court of Appeal to interfere with the exercise by a Judge in the Court below of a discretion, unless it can see clearly that it has been exercised on a wrong principle, where, as has sometimes been said, it is not an exercise of the discretion which the Judge has, but an attempt to exercise some other discretion. I say I think the Judge was perfectly right. There are in this case a number of documents which are muniments of title of the corporation; they are kept in the place where the muniments can properly be kept at Colchester, and as to many of them it would be dangerous to bring them up to London. That being so, and these being documents of that nature, muniments of title of the corporation in their proper place of deposit, I think the proper place to produce them en masse is the place of deposit at Colchester—the muniment room. Still I think the plaintiffs will have a perfect right to come to the Court to say that there are some of these documents the inspection of which at Colchester would cause very great additional expense and inconvenience to them and their advisers, and there can be no risk in bringing those up to London. If that is made out, then I think, on the principle which I before stated, the Judge would be right, if he were satisfied of that, notwithstanding this order, in giving a direction that certain specified documents, as to which that principle would apply, should be brought up to London, and not kept down at Colchester; because there are other documents which we think ought not to be brought up to London. I think, therefore, that the proper addition will be that suggested by Lord Justice Baggallay—that there should be an addition that this is not to prejudice the plaintiffs in any application they may make with reference to any particular documents of which they may desire to have inspection in London. So far as one can express one's opinion, I think that should be only where there are documents as to which there is no reasonable objection to their being brought up to London, and as to which there is some reason which makes it necessary for gentlemen who live in London to go one day in one week and one in another for the purpose of inspection, and it might be inconvenient to go up and down to inspect them. As regards the other matter, I think the defendants, asking for indulgence, were not put quite enough under terms in the Court below, and I think the proper terms would be that they should undertake to pay such additional costs as the Judge may think were reasonably incurred in consequence of the production being at Colchester and not in London. That I think ought to be added to the order.

Order of PEARSON, J., affirmed with a slight variation.

Solicitors—C. Harris, for appellants; Philbrick & Free, agents for F. B. Philbrick, Colchester, for respondents.

BACON, V.C.
1883.
May 29.

PINNOCK v. BAILEY.

Mortgage—Notice—Fund in Court—Stop Order—Priority.

A mortgagee of a fund in Court did not give notice to the trustees. A subsequent mortgagee gave notice, but did not obtain a stop order. The prior mortgagee then obtained a stop order:—Held, that he thereby obtained priority.

In this action a decree had been made in 1857 for administration of the trusts of a settlement, under which the estates comprised in the settlement had been sold and the purchase-money paid into Court, and by an order on further consideration, made on the 27th of June, 1867, directions were given for payment of the interest of the fund to the beneficiaries. On the 16th of September, 1863, M. Pinnock, one of the persons entitled, mortgaged his share to Bailey. Bailey gave no notice of his security to the trustees, but on the 6th of January, 1877, obtained a stop order.

On the 17th of September, 1867, M. Pinnock mortgaged his share to Dobson, without disclosing the prior mortgage. Dobson gave notice of his mortgage to the trustees on the 3rd of June, 1875, but did not obtain a stop order.

In answer to an enquiry directed on second further consideration in 1882, the chief clerk found that Dobson was entitled to priority. This was an adjourned summons to vary the certificate by postponing Dobson's mortgage to Bailey's.

Warmington, Q.C., for the summons.—Where the trust funds are no longer under the control of the trustees, but are under the control of the Court, the right way to perfect a mortgage is to obtain a stop order, and not to give notice to the trustees, who have no longer any power over the fund—Elder v. Maclean (1), Bridge v. Beadon (2) and Warburton v. Hill (3). Bailey therefore is entitled to priority.

E. Ford, contra.—Notice to the trustees is effectual, whether the fund is actually in their hands or not—Thompson v. Tomkins (4) and Warburton v. Hill (3). Dobson, therefore, obtained priority by giving notice to the trustees.

Decimus Sturges, Beale, G. E. S. Fryer, and Lyall, for other parties.

BACON, V.C., said that on payment of the fund into Court the office of the trustees was suspended and the Court took upon itself the trusteeship of the fund; and that a stop order was the most effectual way of perfecting the security; and that Bailey, who was first in time, was

(1) 6 W. R. 447; 3 Jur. N.S. 283.
(2) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 351; Law Rep. 3 Eq. 646.
(3) Kay, 470; 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 633.
(4) 2 Dr. & S. 8; 31 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 633.

nnock v. Bailey.

entitled to priority by virtue of his order, and the certificate must be d accordingly.

---

tors—James, Son & James, for Bailey; e, Ockerby & Everington, for Pinnock.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

ALLAY, L.J.
LEY, L.J.
L.J.
1883.
ay 2, 7, 8.
June 5.

KALTENBACH v. LEWIS.

ctors Acts, 4 Geo. 4. c. 83. 9 Geo. 4. 4. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39. ss. 1 and 3 reign Principal — Goods consigned gent in England for Sale—Brokers oyed by Agent—Lien for Advances s by Brokers—Set-off.

A person receiving goods from an t can acquire from the agent—(a) all title as the agent had in the goods by n of lien for advances or otherwise; ll such title as the agent had express ority, or (c) all such title as the agent authority to create, by law, or custom ie country where the agency is to be ised.

Although an agent authorised to re- money for a disclosed principal can validly receive it in cash and dis- ged from any other relations between r and payee, an agent for sale autho- to employ in his own name a broker her sub-agent to effect the sale, may be fied by set-off or in any other manner hich a debt may be discharged as be- n the agent and sub-agent.

The authority given by the agent for to the broker or sub-agent is with- n by the death of the agent; and as rds the moneys arising from sale sub- ent to his death, the set-off which other- would have been allowable cannot be ntained.

he plaintiffs, foreign merchants, consigned foreign produce to M., a London merchant and commission agent, for sale on their account, the arrangement between them being that M. should accept the bills drawn by the plaintiffs against the goods, and take up the bills if on maturity he had funds of the plaintiffs in his hands sufficient to do so; if not, the plaintiffs themselves should take them up or arrange for their withdrawal.

M. employed the defendants, colonial brokers in London, to sell the goods so consigned. The defendants were also engaged in other transactions with M., in the course of which they made advances to M. M. died on the 5th of May, 1880, hopelessly insolvent, indebted to the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants had been employed to sell the cargoes of ships consigned by the plaintiffs for sale. Two of the cargoes had been agreed to be sold before M.'s death, but only a small portion of the purchase-money had been actually received. The other cargoes were unsold at the time of the plaintiffs' demand:—

Held, that an alleged agreement between M. and the defendants for a general lien for advances on all goods in their hands on his account was not given by section 1 of the Factors Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39.

But held, that, independently of the Factors Acts, the defendants had a general lien on all the proceeds of the goods sold before M.'s death, while as regards the goods unsold at M.'s death, the plaintiffs, claiming by a right of property, could recover them subject only to the advances specifically made against them.

The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (50 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 433; Law Rep. 7 Q.B. D. 374) and Maspons v. Mildred (51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 604; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 530) discussed and explained.

The defendants had purchased, as brokers for M., shellac, for which they were, as between themselves and their vendors, liable, but as between themselves and M., M. was primarily liable. To enable M. to pay for the shellac, the defendants made two advances to him upon the security of the cargoes of two ships, being aware, in the case of one cargo at least, that he was acting for a principal:—

Held, that the advances were bona fide advances under the Factors Acts, and the fact that the defendants were themselves liable to their vendors did not make them advances in respect of antecedent debts within section 3 of the Act.

The antecedent debt within that section is a debt due from the person making the pledge to the person making the advance, and a suretyship liability, which has not ripened into a debt, is not within the section.

Macnee v. Gorst (Law Rep. 4 Eq. 315) distinguished.

The plaintiffs, Kaltenbach, Fischer & Co., were merchants, carrying on business at Singapore. The plaintiff Gustav Kaltenbach was the resident agent of the plaintiffs' firm at Paris. The plaintiffs' firm were in the habit of consigning foreign produce to Charles Meyer, a commission agent in London, for sale on their account.

The course of business between the plaintiffs and Meyer, as proved upon the evidence, was, that the plaintiffs drew bills upon Meyer against the consignments, which bills he accepted; and if at the time when the bills fell due he had sufficient funds of the plaintiffs in his hands to meet them, he took them up; if he had not, then the plaintiffs themselves met the bills, or arranged for their renewal until the goods against which they were drawn were sold. Meyer never made advances to the plaintiffs against the consignments.

The defendants were a firm of produce brokers in London, and were employed as such by Meyer in selling the plaintiffs' consignments. They had, besides, other transactions with Meyer, and made purchases and sales to a large amount on his behalf; and in the course of these transactions made large advances to him, and at the time of his death such advances amounted to about 33,000*l.*

The question in this action related to the consignments made by the plaintiffs' firm by six ships—the Beaconsfield, Antenor, Comus, Glen Callach or Glen Caladh, Lansdowne and Soteria.

On the 8th of December, 1879, the plaintiff G. Kaltenbach sent Meyer the bills of lading of two lots of 429 bags and 532 bags of pepper per the Beaconsfield, and drew upon Meyer bills to the amount of 2,400*l.*

On the 19th of December, 1879, Meyer handed the bills of lading to the defendants, who on the same day advanced to him on the security thereof a sum of 2,000*l.* on current account, and these consignments of pepper were sold by the defendants to arrive in the months of November and December, 1879, by the direction of Meyer, and realised the net sum of 3,535*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*, which sum was credited to Meyer in his account with them in March, 1880, and was actually received by the defendants at the expiration of the prompt on the 20th of June, 1880.

On the appeal the right of the defendants to a lien under the Factors Acts for this advance of 2,000*l.* was admitted, and it is not therefore necessary further to particularise the transaction.

On the 11th of February, 1880, the plaintiffs consigned to Meyer for sale 411 bags of tapioca per the Antenor, and on the 13th of March, 1880, Meyer handed to the defendants the bill of lading for such consignments; and on the security of that bill of lading, and of other documents of title deposited by Meyer with them and then in their possession, they advanced to him, on the same 13th of March, 3,500*l.* The defendants, on payment by Meyer to them of 50*l.*, allowed him to obtain delivery of 164 of the bags, and the remaining 247 were sold by Meyer's direction in March by the defendants, who received, by his direction, the net proceeds of the sale, which had passed in account to the credit of the plaintiffs before they made any demand on the defendants, and accordingly upon the appeal the right of the defendants to retain those proceeds was not contested.

On the 15th of February, 1880, the plaintiffs handed to Meyer bills of lading for 866 bags of black pepper and 457 bags of white pepper per the Comus. Meyer, on the 20th of February, 1880, handed the bills of lading to the defendants, who on that day, on the security of such bills and of other documents of title to goods deposited with them, advanced a sum of 3,000*l.* to Meyer. This consignment had been sold by the defendants by the direction of Meyer to arrive on the 5th and 6th of February, 1880, and realised 2,995*l.*, which sum was credited in account in June, 1880.

Only a sum of about 300*l.* had been actually received by the defendants in respect of the sales of the consignment per the Comus and per the Beaconsfield at the death of Meyer.

On the 15th of February, 1880, the plaintiffs handed to Meyer bills of lading for 494 bags of black pepper and 99 bags of white pepper per the Glen Callach, and Meyer handed these bills of lading on the 3rd of April to the defendants, who advanced upon them on that day the sum of 800*l.* This consignment was sold by the defendants on the 25th of August, 1880, and realised 879*l.*, which sum was credited in account at the same time.

On the 22nd of March, 1880, the plaintiffs handed to Meyer bills of lading for 883 bags of tapioca per the Lansdowne, and 804 bags of tapioca per the Soteria; and on the 10th of April Meyer handed these bills over to the defendants, who advanced upon them the sum of 200*l.* A proposal had been made by Meyer to the defendants that they should advance the sum of 1,800*l.*, but the defendants declined to advance more than 200*l.* unless the duplicates of the bills of lading were handed over to them; and as Meyer failed to hand over such duplicates the defendants did not advance the 1,600*l.* The consignments by these two ships remained unsold at the time of Meyer's death.

Meyer committed suicide on the 5th of May, 1880. He was then hopelessly insolvent, and largely indebted both to the plaintiffs and the defendants.

On the 12th of May the plaintiffs demanded from the defendants the goods ex Beaconsfield and the deposited bills of lading and documents, and on the 14th of May commenced the present action.

With regard to the advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* made against the consignments per Comus and the Glen Callach, the following facts were proved:—

The defendants had been employed by Meyer in buying for him, as brokers, large quantities of shellac—as regards which, according to the almost invariable custom for brokers to deal without disclosing their principals' names, the defendants were liable to their vendors—while as between themselves and Meyer he was the person really liable.

On the 21st of February, 1880, Meyer had to pay to the defendants a sum of 3,512*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* for deposits of shellac; but, being unable to find the money, he wrote to the defendants as follows:—

"Messrs. Lewis & Peat.—20 Feb. 1880.

"Can you oblige me to-morrow with a loan of 3,000*l.* against enclosed securities, the insured value of which are 3,700*l.* The goods have been sold by you to arrive. I have nearly this amount to pay to-morrow on deposits of shellac.

"Meyer."

The enclosed securities were the bills of lading for the consignment per the Comus. The defendants accordingly, on the 21st of February, made an advance of 3,000*l.* as above mentioned, and Meyer handed to them cheques for an aggregate sum of 3,512*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*

On the 3rd of April, 1880, Meyer had to pay the defendants a sum of about 800*l.* for shellac purchased as above mentioned, and he again asked the defendants for an advance.

"Messrs. Lewis & Peat.—3 April, 1880.

"Sirs,—I will pay the prompt on the 200 c/ fine orange per Waterloo, amounting to about 480*l.*, and the 500*l.* on shellac prompt, 17th instant, if you will advance me this sum on a bill of lading for 494 B. black Singapore pepper per Glen Callach, dated 13th of January, and which I have power to sell at 4⅞ to arrive, as soon as prices reach this point."

And in answer to a letter from the defendants promising to make an advance on his paying them that day the amounts due, he wrote again:—

"Herewith I hand you the bill of lading for the 494 Y.B. black pepper per Glen Callach, and insurance policy, for which you agree to advance me and 480*l.* deposit on 200 c/ shellac per [Waterloo, which cheque I will hand you back for these amounts."

500*l.*

980*l.*

And received in answer on the same day from the defendants:—

"We make the pepper advances about 800*l.* on our usual terms, which we give you cheque for, you paying sums agreed and remainder next week. We require the other bills of lading."

Accordingly, on receipt of the cheque from the defendants, Meyer handed it back to them, and on the same day paid them by cheque other moneys, amounting, with the 800*l.*, to 1,424*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.*

As regards the advance of 200*l.* on the goods consigned by the Lansdowne and Soteria, the appellants' counsel conceded that the defendants were entitled to a lien under the Factors Acts on the proceeds of the sale of such goods.

In reference to the advance of 1,600*l.*, the balance of 1,800*l.*, Meyer wrote on the 14th of April, 1880, to the defendants:—"My cheque for 1,591*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* is quite ready against your cheque for 1,600*l.*, as agreed on Saturday last with Mr. Peat," to which they answered on the same day, "In reply to your note we think the exchange of cheques you name should be deferred till you get the other bills of lading, when we shall be ready to do as you wish"; and in other letters which passed between Meyer and the defendants the expression "exchange of cheques" occurred.

The plaintiffs, by their amended statement of claim, alleged that none of the advances were made bona fide; that Meyer and the defendants were engaged in speculations in shellac, the defendants being largely interested as principals; that these transactions were bargains intended when made to be settled, and which were actually settled, by payment of differences only, and not purchases and sales by the defendants, as brokers, for a merchant employing them in the ordinary course of business; and claimed a direction that the alleged advances were not advances in respect of which the defendants would acquire or claim any charge, pledge or lien upon the plaintiffs' goods and consignments and bills of lading under the Factors Act; for delivery up of the bills of lading for the 866 bags of black pepper and 457 bags of white pepper per the Comus, for 494 bags of black pepper and 99 bags of white pepper per the Glen Callach, for 883 bags of tapioca per the Lansdowne, and for 804 bags of tapioca per the Soteria; or, in the alternative, an account of what, if anything, might be due to the defendants in respect of bona fide advances against particular goods, if any such should be established, and, upon payment by the plaintiffs to the defendants of the amount for which they might be so entitled to a lien or charge, delivery over to the plaintiffs of the bills of lading and goods, and payment of the net proceeds of such portions of such goods as had been sold.

The plaintiffs had no notice or suspicion that Meyer had parted or dealt with any of the bills of lading or documents relating to the consignments entrusted to him for sale, until receipt by the plaintiffs on the 3rd of May of a letter from Meyer announcing to him the fact of his dealings with their bills of lading, and that they were in the possession of the defendants.

The defendants denied that they had ever acted as principals in the purchases of shellac, and also denied such of the allegations of the plaintiffs as tended to impute to them any notice of any impropriety by Meyer in pledging the goods, and claimed a right to retain the balance they had in hand after deducting the advances specifically made against the particular goods, in discharge of what was due to them on the general account between themselves and Meyer, under the Factors Acts, and independently of those Acts—partly on the ground of an alleged agreement or custom of dealing between them and Meyer, whereby they were to have a general lien for the full amount of their advances to him on all goods and moneys for which they might be accountable to him; and also on the ground that the plaintiffs, being foreign principals, could not sue them except upon the terms of placing themselves in the position of Meyer, and being subject to all the rights of lien and set-off to which Meyer would, as between himself and the defendants, be liable.

Bacon, V.C., dismissed the action with costs, on the ground mainly that all the charges made by the plaintiffs against the defendants were unfounded, and that all the advances were protected by the Factors Acts.

From that decision the plaintiffs appealed.

Webster, Q.C., Everitt, Q.C., and F. M. Abraham, for the appellants.—We do not dispute the right of the defendants to a lien for the 2,000*l.* advanced against the Beaconsfield consignment, and for the 200*l.* advanced against the goods consigned by the Soteria and Lansdowne; nor do we claim anything as regards the Antenor shipment. But we dispute the right of the defendants to retain the balance of the proceeds of sale of the goods ex Beaconsfield, or any sums received by them or payable to them on the sale of the goods ex Comus and ex Glen Callach for their advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* on such goods, or the balance of the goods ex Soteria and Lansdowne which were unsold at Meyer's death, after providing for the advance of 200*l.*

The defendants claim the balance of the Beaconsfield under an alleged custom or agreement that any further advance, made after an advance on goods, was secured on the original goods as well as on future goods; but no such custom or agreement, if proved, could be set up against the plaintiffs, who had not dealt on the footing of any such custom, and who were no parties to any such agreement. There is no authority which says that, where specific loans have been made, the lender can get beyond the Factors Acts by alleging a general lien for a balance of account. There is no evidence of any such general custom; it cannot be set higher than the usage of Mincing Lane, and cannot be set up against the plaintiffs —Leuchart v. Cooper (1).

The case of The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2), which was cited by the Vice-Chancellor as governing the present case, did not touch the Factors Acts at all, while the decision of the Vice-Chancellor went entirely upon the Factors Act; but that case has no application to the present. There the broker had accounted to the agents of the foreign principal for all the proceeds of sale, and then the foreign principal came and claimed, not the goods, but the benefit of the contracts after the goods had been sold and the proceeds carried into account between the agents and the brokers; and it was held that they could not do so—that is, they could not take the benefit of the contract without also bearing the burden. But that case, and the case of Die Elbinger Actien Gesellschaft, &c., v. Claye (3), and similar cases, were cases of foreign undisclosed principals coming forward to claim proceeds of sale or to sue for breach of contract. Here the plaintiffs have property in the goods, and sue by virtue of their right of property. Their claim was made before the defendants had received the proceeds of sale of the goods, and only in the case of the Beaconsfield consignment were any of the goods then actually sold.

On the 12th of May, when the plaintiffs applied for the goods ex Beaconsfield, no real credit had been given; and that claim was made by virtue of their property in the goods, and not by virtue of any contract which they were trying to get the benefit of; and the defendant refused to hand them over, which but for the Factors Acts they were bound to do. If there has been actual payment, or what is equivalent to payment—e.g. a credit given for the goods—or if the goods have been sold and the proceeds passed in account before the principal makes his claim, he cannot then intervene. On paying the 2,000*l.* admitted to be due on the Beaconsfield consignment as having been specifically advanced, the plaintiffs have a right to hold the goods until they are deliverable to the purchasers. The defendants were aware that Meyer was acting as agent for undisclosed principals, certainly as regards the Comus, Lansdowne and Soteria shipments. The invoices were all from Kaltenbach & Co., the bills of lading were in Kaltenbach's name, and in each case Meyer told the defendants he was waiting for the duplicate bills of lading; and in the case of the advance on the Glen Callach, he gives express notice of agency by saying that he had power to sell it at 4⅝. Mus-

(1) 3 Sc. 521.; 3 Bing. N.C. 99.
(2) 50 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 433; Law Rep. 7 Q.B. D. 374.
(3) 42 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 151; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. 313.

pons v. Mildred (4) is an authority in favour of the plaintiffs' contention, both as to their right to sue for the goods, and also as shewing that the defendants have no lien on the proceeds of sale, or right of set-off for the balance of their general account due from Meyer. In that case the notice the defendants received from the policies of insurance as to the ownership of the goods was held sufficient.

No authority was conferred by the plaintiffs on Meyer to apply the proceeds of the plaintiffs' goods in paying his own debt; and here, even more than in Maspons' Case (4), the plaintiffs never led the defendants to believe that the goods were Meyer's goods.

It is, we submit, clear that they are not entitled to a lien or right of set-off against our claim in respect of the amount due to them from Meyer on the general balance of their accounts.

Then we say that the advances made by the defendants to Meyer upon the consignments of the Comus and Glen Callach were all made in respect of antecedent debts, and therefore fall within section 3 of the Factors Act, and are consequently not protected by that Act. The defendants, as purchasers of the shellac in their own names, were themselves liable to their vendors. It is true that Meyer was bound to indemnify them; but there was a direct liability on their part—not only a suretyship liability—and the advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* on the consignments of the Comus and Glen Callach were made to enable Meyer to discharge the liability which he was under as well as they—that is, to secure an antecedent liability of Meyer to the defendants, within the case of Macnee v. Gorst (5). That case shews that such liability need not have ripened into a debt. Here there was no real advance, but the understanding was that Meyer was to apply the money to discharge the liability, not only of Meyer, but of the defendants themselves, within the principle of Learoyd v. Robinson (6).

(4) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 604; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 530. Since affirmed by the House of Lords.

(5) Law Rep. 4 Eq. 315.

(6) 12 Mee. & W. 745.

The case of Jewan v. Whitworth (7) was different, and is fully explained in Macnee v. Gorst (5), which shews that the advance there was made by a person who was under no liability before, and had no antecedent claim against the factor.

Then as regards the consignments ex Lansdowne and Soteria, the defendants obtained the documents on a promise to pay 1,800*l.*—they only actually advanced 200*l.* The balance they can only claim either by general custom—but there is none—or by special bargain, of which there is no evidence, and which could not be set up as against the plaintiffs.

They referred to Portalis v. Tetley (8), the Factors Acts, 4 Geo. 3. c. 83, 6 Geo. 4. c 94, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, and Chitty's Statutes, 4th ed. vol. 2, p. 1080.

Sir F. Herschell (Solicitor-General) and Davey, Q.C. (Northmore Lawrence with them), for the defendants.—The advances which are impeached were bona fide advances, and are protected by the Act. They were not made to secure a past liability within the meaning of section 3. The contract for the purchase of shellac was Meyer's contract, and he was liable on it as principal, although there was also a liability on the defendants' part. If there had been no such additional liability, there could have been no question as to the validity of the advance.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—Do you say that, there being an existing liability on the part of Meyer, and Meyer wanting money to meet that liability, and the defendants supply him with that money, that advance is good?]

Yes; but Meyer's liability was not a liability to the defendants, but to the vendors of the shellac. The "antecedent debt," within the section, is a debt owing from the pledger of the goods to the person who makes the advances and with whom the goods are pledged. If Meyer had not paid when called upon, and the defendants had been obliged to pay the vendors, the case would have been different—there would then have been a debt due from

(7) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 127; Law Rep. 2 Eq. 696.

(8) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 139; Law Rep. 5 Eq. 140.

Meyer to the defendants; but the advance was made for the express purpose of preventing a debt arising. If Meyer had dealt with the defendants as principals, and they had sold to him as principals, then no doubt the advances made by them to him would have been in respect of an antecedent debt; but they have never acted as principals; and although they were liable as principals to their vendors, they were only sureties for Meyer, who was the real principal—and if A owes B money, and C guarantees its payment, there is no relation of debtor and creditor established between A and C until C has been compelled to pay for A. In Macnee v. Gorst (5) there was an antecedent debt, although in the affidavit the transaction was so muffled up as not to be called a debt, The Vice-Chancellor drew the inference that Gorst had paid Schemill Brothers before the date of the pledge, and that the bill was given for what the Vice-Chancellor treated as a debt. The argument in that case was that the bill was still current, and that till it fell due there was no debt; but the Vice-Chancellor held that the bill was drawn for an antecedent debt, and that though during the currency of the bill the right of action for the previous debt was suspended, still, if the bill was not paid when due, the debt again revived.

To bring this case within that, before Meyer pledged the goods the defendants should have paid the money due for the shellac and informed Meyer that they had paid; but if Macnee v. Gorst (5) is to be stretched so as to be an authority for the proposition that if A is a surety for payment of B's debt to C, and if before B pays, A lends him money to pay C, that is an antecedent debt from B to A, the case is wrong, and would be inconsistent with Jewan v. Whitworth (7), which is an authority in our favour.

[FRY, L.J.—Can the advance to Meyer be said to be made bona fide, within the meaning of section 1 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, when it was made to him to enable him to pay his private debt?]

The brokers knew nothing of Meyer's position; they always dealt with him on his own account. Brokers cannot enquire in every case what is the authority of the person who is bringing the documents of title. Meyer, for aught they knew, might have made advances to the plaintiffs against those goods in excess of the advances he himself obtained. It is necessary to shew breach of faith.

In Navulshaw v. Brownrigg (9) Lord St. Leonards says that under the statute it is necessary that it should be known that the agent was prohibited from pledging in order to endanger the taking a pledge—and see p. 457. The statute makes the agent the owner for the purpose of conferring a title by way of pledge, though he is known to be an agent—provided the person dealing is acting bona fide, and does not know that the agent has not power to pledge.

Apart from any question of law, on the facts of the case, the plaintiffs cannot claim the margin of the Beaconsfield consignment after allowing the 2,000*l.*—the balance had been carried to the credit of Meyer on his general account on the 23rd of March, 1880, and that is the same as if it had been paid to him. The margin stands in the same position as the Antenor consignment. As regards the Lansdowne and the Soteria, it is admitted that the pledge is effectual to the amount of 200*l.*; neither Meyer nor the plaintiffs could recover the bills of lading so pledged without paying the 200*l.* When the defendants had bills of lading placed in their hands by way of pledge or security for advances of 200*l.*, they were entitled to sell; and all that Meyer or the plaintiffs could claim are the proceeds of sale after paying his advance; and as regards the balance, the question must depend upon the agreement between Meyer and the defendants that any further advance should be secured on all his goods in their hands. If such an agreement exists, it would be protected, as such an advance would be a "further or continuing advance in respect thereof" within section 1 of the Factors Act.

It has been decided in Armstrong v. Stokes (10) that where a foreign principal deals with an English customer through an English agent, without express contract no credit is given to a foreign principal, and no privity is established between the foreign principal and English customer; as a foreign principal cannot be sued on a contract made by his agent as an undisclosed principal, so he cannot sue on the contract—and therefore, if a foreign principal intervenes, and claims goods or the proceeds of goods, he can do so, not by virtue of any privity of contract, but only on the footing of giving effect to any lien or equities or set-off which had attached to the goods in the hands of the agents. In The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2) it was urged that the foreign principal could not sue at all; but the Court said that he could come and claim his own property, but only on the terms of giving effect to all the rights which the defendant had as against the agent. That applies to the goods remaining unsold; he claims them as his own property, but subject to those conditions. When they are sold, the only claim is for a debt, and that only arises by privity of contract, and that doctrine is excluded when it is a foreign principal.

(9) 2 De Gex, M. & G. 441, at p. 454; 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 57, 908, 911.

(10) 41 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 253; Law Rep. 7 Q.B. 598.

In Maspons' Case (4), where the claim fell under the latter head, the foreign principal was dealing with an English customer, not through an English but a foreign agent, and the Court there held that there was privity of contract; but the Court in that case, as regards foreigners buying or selling through English agents, took the law as laid down in Armstrong v. Stokes (10).

The foreign principal who sends his goods over here to be sold subjects himself to all the liens and rights which exist as against the person whom he has authorised to sell, and in return for that liability he gets the benefit of personal immunity from being sued.

The true principle must be that in that case the English agent deals as absolute owner—there is privity of contract only between him and the person with whom he deals; but for the purposes of this case it is not necessary to go so far, because here the goods were sent by the plaintiffs to Meyer to sell. The plaintiffs say that Meyer had authority to put them into the hands of the defendants for sale, and so there was no breach of faith and no excess of authority by Meyer.

Everitt, Q.C., in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 5.—The judgment of the Court was delivered by

LINDLEY, L.J.—The plaintiffs are merchants carrying on business at Singapore. Their course of business was to consign foreign produce to Charles Meyer, a London merchant and commission agent, for sale on their account. Meyer did not make advances to the plaintiffs on the goods so consigned, but accepted bills drawn by the plaintiffs on him against such goods, and these bills were taken up by him if he had in his hands when the bills fell due sufficient funds of the plaintiffs to take them up; if he had not, the plaintiffs themselves met the bills, or arranged for their renewal until the goods against which they had been drawn were sold. Meyer, therefore, never had any lien on the goods for advances made by him. The defendants are colonial brokers in London, and were employed by Meyer to sell the goods consigned to him by the plaintiffs. They were also engaged in other transactions for Meyer, and made purchases and sales for him to a large amount, and in the course of these transactions made large advances to him; and the defendants allege that these advances were made upon an agreement or custom that they should have a general lien for the full amount of their advances to him on all goods and moneys for which they were accountable to him. On the 5th of May, 1880, Meyer died hopelessly insolvent, and he was then largely indebted to both plaintiffs and defendants. At the time of his death the defendants had in their possession various goods which had been consigned by the plaintiffs to Meyer, and placed by him in the hands of the defendants for sale. Of these goods, some had been agreed to be sold before Meyer's death, and the others have since been sold. The action was commenced by the plaintiffs on the 14th of May, 1880, for the purpose of recovering from the defendants the moneys arising from such sales. The action is defended on the ground that the defendants are entitled to a lien or set-off for the whole of Meyer's amount of indebtedness to them.

The controversy between the plaintiffs and the defendants relates to the right of the defendants to retain as against the plaintiffs the moneys arising from the sales by the defendants, as brokers for Meyer, of goods consigned by the plaintiffs to Meyer by the six undermentioned ships—namely, 1. The Beaconsfield; 2. The Comus; 3. The Glen Callach; 4. The Soteria; 5. The Lansdowne; and 6. The Antenor. The plaintiffs' counsel raised no controversy on the appeal as regards the goods consigned by the Antenor, and they admitted that the defendants were entitled to a lien under the Factors Acts for an advance of 2,000*l.* on the goods consigned by the Beaconsfield, and for an advance of 200*l.* on the goods consigned by the Soteria and the Lansdowne. All other rights of lien or of set-off were, however, strenuously contested.

Without examining in detail the various documents and accounts which are in evidence, it is necessary to state shortly the results which we consider established.

As regards the consignment by the Beaconsfield, the Soteria and the Lansdowne, there is no proof of any advances specifically on these goods beyond the 2,000*l.* and 200*l.* already referred to; and there are balances in the hands of the defendants, after repayment of those advances, arising from the sales of these consignments. As regards the goods consigned by the Comus and the Glen Callach, the defendants advanced 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* specifically on them under the circumstances which will be mentioned presently; and if these advances are to be allowed to the defendants there will be little or no balance in their hands arising from the sale of the goods ex Comus, but there will be a balance arising from the sale of the goods ex Glen Callach. The goods consigned by the Beaconsfield and by the Comus were all agreed to be sold by the defendants before Meyer's death, although only about 300*l.* had been received by them in respect of such sales before that time. The goods consigned by the other vessels were in the defendants' hands for sale, but had not been sold before Meyer's death.

This action was commenced on the 14th of May, 1880, so shortly after Meyer's death that it is not necessary to distinguish between the dates of that event and of the assertion by the plaintiffs of their claims against the defendants.

The advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* made by the defendants to Meyer on the goods ex the Comus and the Glen Callach respectively were the subject of much controversy. The facts relating to these advances are shewn by the evidence to be in substance as follows: The defendants had bought for Meyer large quantities of shellac, and, as between themselves and the vendors, the defendants were themselves liable to pay for it; whilst between themselves and Meyer, he was the person liable to pay.

Before the time for payment arrived, it was agreed between him and the defendants that they should advance him the money necessary to pay for the shellac, and that he should then pay for it.

This arrangement was carried out by the defendants giving him cheques for the sums of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* in question, and by his paying for the shellac, or putting them in funds to pay for it the next day. The defendants gave these cheques for 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* specifically on the security of the goods ex Comus and ex Glen Callach respectively. On the other hand, the defendants knew that, as to the consignment ex Glen Callach, Meyer was acting for a principal—whether they knew he was so acting with respect to the consignment ex Comus is not so clear.

The plaintiffs by their pleadings disputed the defendants' right to any lien or set-off whatever on the goods sold, or on or against the moneys arising from their sale; and the plaintiffs alleged that none of the advances made by the defendants had been made by them bona fide; and further, that all their alleged advances were in fact mere paper credits, made in respect of speculations in which they had engaged with Meyer. The plaintiffs claimed relief on this footing; and although they also claimed, in the alternative, relief on the footing of taking an account of what, if anything, might be due to the defendants in respect of their bona fide advances against particular goods, if any such should be established, yet it is impossible to read the amended statement of claim without coming to the conclusion that the case really made by the plaintiffs against the defendants was that their advances were not bona fide, but pretended, and that their dealings with Meyer were in the nature of speculations in foreign produce and settlements of differences in prices, and not purchases and sales as brokers for a merchant employing them in the ordinary course of business.

The case so made by the plaintiffs was completely abandoned by counsel before us, and it was then frankly admitted that no improper conduct was imputable to the defendants, and further that, to the extent already mentioned as conceded, they had established a right to a lien under the Factors Acts. But it was contended that the advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* on the goods ex Comus and ex Glen Callach, before alluded to, were made in respect of antecedent debts, and were not protected by the Factors Acts, and that, except so far as the Factors Acts were applicable, the defendants had no right of lien or of set-off as against the plaintiffs. The defendants, on the other hand, contended that the advances alleged to be made in respect of antecedent debts were not in fact so made, and were protected by the Factors Acts; and that, quite apart from the Factors Acts, the defendants were entitled to a lien or set-off for the whole amount due to them from Meyer. This last contention was based upon the ground that the plaintiffs were undisclosed foreign principals, and had no greater rights against the defendants than Meyer himself would have had; and that, even if this were not the case with respect to the goods unsold, it was the case as to the proceeds of goods sold before the plaintiffs made any claim against the defendants.

The Vice-Chancellor decided in favour of the defendants, and dismissed the action with costs, mainly on the ground that the charges made by the plaintiffs against the defendants were unfounded, and that all the defendants' advances were such as were protected by the Factors Acts. From this decision the plaintiffs have appealed.

It will be convenient to dispose of the question which has been raised respecting the advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.* on the goods consigned by the Comus and Glen Callach before dealing with the other and more general questions which have to be determined.

The plaintiffs contend that these advances fall within section 3 of the Factors Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, and are not protected by the 1st section of the Act, and the plaintiffs rely on Macnee v. Gorst (5) as an authority in their favour on this point.

It is not necessary to discuss the correctness of the inferences of fact drawn by the Court from the evidence in that case. The Court came to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, there was an antecedent debt due from the factor to the defendant Gorst, and that the defendant's advance was made to enable the factor to discharge that debt; and the whole of the reasoning of the Vice-Chancellor in Macnee v. Gorst (5) proceeded upon this view of the facts. Now in the present case, although the factor Meyer was bound to indemnify the defendants against the liability they had incurred by buying shellac for him, still he was not indebted to them in respect of such purchase when the advances in question were made. Those advances were not, in fact, in respect of any antecedent debt owing by him to them. If the defendants had not been themselves liable for the price of the shellac, this part of the case would be too clear for controversy. The circumstance that they were so liable, and that the advance was made to enable Meyer by one and the same payment to discharge both their liability and his own, does not make their advance an advance from them to him in respect of a debt owing by him to them. It is true that if the defendants had paid for the shellac, and so become creditors of Meyer, and had then made him an advance to enable him to repay them, the case would be undistinguishable from Macnee v. Gorst (5); but this is not what was done, and in this respect the two cases are not alike. The question, however, still remains, whether these advances were made bona fide and without notice that Meyer had no authority to pledge the goods for them: for unless they were, they will still fall within section 3 of the Factors Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 39), and not be protected, even although they may not have been made in respect of an antecedent debt. Now the defendants certainly knew what these advances were for—namely, to enable Meyer to pay for shellac which he had bought and for which the defendants were liable—and the defendants also knew, certainly as regards the goods ex Glen Callach, and perhaps as to goods ex Comus, that Meyer was selling for a principal. On the other hand, they did not know for whom he had bought the shellac, whether for himself, for the plaintiffs, or for any other principal; and did not know, in point of fact, that he was exceeding his authority, or was acting mala fide towards his own principals. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the advances in question ought to be treated as protected by section 1 of the Factors Act, and not as invalidated by section 3. The language of sections 1 and 3, and the decision in Navulshaw v. Brownrigg (9), which is very valuable on the question of notice of excess of authority or mala fides, seem to us not only to warrant, but to require, this conclusion. We moreover think it extremely important not to encourage the application of the equitable doctrines of constructive notice to honest mercantile transactions; and there being in this case no actual notice to the defendants that Meyer was acting improperly towards his own principals, and no reason to believe that the defendants were themselves acting otherwise than honestly in the ordinary course of business, we are of opinion that they are entitled to the protection of the Factor's Act with respect to the advances of 3,000*l.* and 800*l.*, which we have been considering. This conclusion might seem to conflict with Learoyd v. Robinson (6); but in that case, as we understand it, the advance was not made in the ordinary course of business, but solely to enable the factor to take up a bill on which he and the defendants were liable. The advances in this case were, in our opinion, made bona fide in the ordinary course of business to enable Meyer to pay for goods which he had bought for some unknown principal; and, although the defendants were themselves liable for those goods, we do not believe that, as a matter of fact, the advances in question were made solely to relieve the defendants from that liability; and upon this ground the case differs from Learoyd v. Robinson (6).

There remains for consideration the right of the defendants to retain the balances in their hands after repaying themselves the advances made expressly on the security of particular consignments, and which advances are protected by the Factors Acts. In other words, we have to determine the right of the defendants to retain the balances in their hands of the proceeds of the sale of the goods—ex Beaconsfield after retaining the advance of 2,000*l.*—ex Comus after retaining the advance of 3,000*l.*—ex Glen Callach after retainig the advance of 800*l.*—ex Soteria and Lansdowne after retaining the advance of 200*l.* The defendants' right to retain these balances has to be considered—first, with reference to the Factors Act; and, secondly, independently of it. Section 1 of the Factors Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 39) applies in terms to pledges not only for original advances on the security of goods, but also for any further or continuing advance in respect thereof; and the defendants contend that all their advances to Meyer were made upon the terms that they were to be secured on all goods in their hands on his account. We have no doubt that the defendants made all their advances to Meyer on the supposition that they would have a general lien of this kind, and they seem to rest their claim to such a lien partly on mercantile usage and partly on agreement with Meyer. The evidence, however, both of the alleged usage and of the alleged agreement is very slender, and we cannot hold either to be established in fact. Even if the evidence on this head had been stronger, Leuchart v. Cooper (1) shews that the usage could not prevail as the law then stood; and we should feel great difficulty in holding an agreement for a lien to be more effectual than a mercantile usage for such a purpose as that under consideration. In this respect the law does not appear to have been altered since Leuchart v. Cooper (1) was decided. The language of section 1 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, seems carefully guarded, in order to exclude general liens from the protection given by the Act to original or subsequent advances in respect of goods pledged by factors; and there is good reason for such a distinction. Advances against particular goods are naturally limited to their value, but advances under an agreement for a general lien may far exceed the value of any particular goods. The Factors Acts expose the owner of goods to the risk of having to pay advances on them up to their value if they have been improperly pledged by his factor; but the Factors Acts protect him from the risk of having to pay advances not limited by their value. By deciding in favour of the general lien set up by the defendants we should be exposing the owners of goods to risks far more extensive than the Legislature appears to us to have contemplated. We should, in fact, fail to give any practical effect to the words, which are all important, in section 1—"in respect thereof." So far, therefore, as the Factors Acts are concerned, we hold the general lien relied on by the defendants inadmissible as against the plaintiffs.

We pass now to consider the question whether, apart from the Factors Acts, the defendants can retain the balance in their hands after deducting the amounts of the liens they have acquired under the Factors Acts. The defendants maintain that they are entitled to do so upon the authority of The New Zealand Company v. Watson (2) and Maspons v. Mildred (4), both recent decisions of this Court. Both of these cases turned on the right of foreign undisclosed principals to sue persons employed in this country by their agent to sell goods.

In The New Zealand Company v. Watson (2) the plaintiffs had consigned goods to English del credere agents for sale. These agents employed the defendants to sell the goods; and the plaintiffs knew this. The defendants sold the goods, and the agents having become insolvent, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for the proceeds of the sale upon the theory that the plaintiffs had employed the defendants to sell. The jury found that this was not so in fact, and the Court decided—first, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue the defendants; and secondly, that, even if they were, the plaintiffs were in no better position as regards the defendants than the persons who actually employed them. No question was raised with reference to the Factors Acts; nor did the case turn on them; neither did the plaintiffs in that case sue as owners of the goods, and, as such, entitled to them or to the proceeds of their sale. But the Court alluded to these questions, and considered that the plaintiffs might have followed the goods and claimed them from the defendants before they had sold them, but that the plaintiffs could not after a sale follow and recover the proceeds, except subject to such right of set-off as the defendants had against the agents who employed them. The distinction thus drawn between recovering the goods and their proceeds was commented on by the Court in Maspons v. Mildred (4), and it was there intimated that the right of the New Zealand Company to follow their goods was by no means clear. It is to be observed that in The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2), the goods had been rightfully sold before their owner made any claim, and we do not see how, under these circumstances, the plaintiffs in that action could have succeeded on any theory of following the goods. Armstrong v. Stokes (10) shews that they could not. The remarks in Maspons v. Mildred (4) on The New Zealand Land Company's Case (2) must be understood as applying to the facts of that case, and not as throwing doubt on the right of an owner of goods to follow them so long as they have not been properly sold.

On looking at Lord Bramwell's judgment in The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2), we think that the Court in Maspons v. Mildred (4) must have misunderstood his observations, and have been under the impression that he was speaking of following goods sold — which, however, he was not. Maspons v. Mildred (4) itself has little, if any, direct bearing on the present case; but the defendants contend that the combined effect of the decision in The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2) and the observations upon it in Maspons v. Mildred (4) establish the following propositions—First, that the plaintiffs in the present case cannot sue the defendants at all; secondly, that if they can, they can only sue for the proceeds of the goods unsold by the defendants when Meyer died; thirdly, that even in respect of these, the plaintiffs are in no better position than Meyer himself, and that all rights of set-off available against him are equally available as against the plaintiffs. If these propositions are well founded, it seems to us that the Factors Acts will practically have ceased to have any application to foreign principals consigning goods to this country for sale; for if the defendants are right in their contention, it will follow that the protection afforded by those Acts to foreign merchants will have been destroyed by modern decisions, and that the limited protection given by those Acts to persons making advances to factors of foreign merchants will have been practically replaced by an unlimited protection given by judicial authority to all persons making advances to such factors, or otherwise becoming their creditors. This would certainly be a somewhat startling consequence, and the more so as the decisions alluded to did not proceed on the Factors Acts, or involve any consideration of them.

These observations are sufficient to shew that the defendants' contention cannot be supported to its full extent; but it is necessary to consider how far, if at all, it is well founded, and what the real principles are which ought to be applied to cases of this description.

First, then, as to the plaintiffs' right to sue the defendants in respect of the goods ex Beaconsfield and ex Comus, and which were sold by them before Meyer's death. These goods were consigned by the plaintiffs to him for sale; they were properly sold by the defendants by his order, and the plaintiffs could not either prevent delivery of the goods or recover them from the purchasers. The proceeds of sale became a debt owing by the defendants to Meyer, and he could have sued the defendants for such debt; but they could have successfully set off against his demand all debts owing by him to them. By our law the plaintiffs, being a foreign house, cannot sue the defendants for this debt; or, if they can, they can only sue them as representing Meyer and subject to all rights of set-off available against him. The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2) appears to be conclusive on this point; and although, as pointed out in Maspons v. Mildred (4), the doctrines relating to undisclosed foreign principals, and their inability to sue on contracts made by their English agents, were somewhat extended, we consider ourselves bound by the decision in the former case, and we are unable to distinguish it from this case. As regards, therefore, the proceeds of the sale of the goods consigned by the Beaconsfield and Comus, the plaintiffs' claim wholly fails, and the defendants are not driven to rely on the Factors Acts. If they were, they would still be entitled to succeed to the extent of their advances of 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.*, as already pointed out. Lastly, we have to consider the proceeds of the sale of the goods ex Soteria, Lansdowne and Glen Callach, all of which goods were unsold when Meyer died. On these goods the defendants had, as already pointed out, a lien under the Factors Acts for 200*l.* and 800*l.* respectively, and we are unable to see that they can retain the balances arising from the sales of these goods after reimbursing themselves those advances. The plaintiffs, being the owners of these goods, were entitled to have them redelivered to them by the defendants on payment of the advances for which they had liens. This right has never been released or extinguished, and it was in effect asserted before the sales took place. The sales having taken place, the plaintiffs are entitled to sue the defendants for the value of the goods sold or for the proceeds of their sale, and the defendants have no defence to such a claim except under the Factors Acts. The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (2) has no application to such a case as this. The defendants' counsel, it is true, relied on the observations on that case made in Maspons v. Mildred (4), already alluded to, as affording an answer to the plaintiffs' claim even to these unsold goods; but, as already pointed out, those observations are inapplicable to the case of unsold goods, and were never intended to apply to them.

The present case may, in our opinion, be shortly summed up in the following manner:—First, a person receiving goods from an agent can acquire from the agent (1) all such title as the agent had in the goods by reason of lien for advances or otherwise; (2) all such title as the agent had express authority, or (3) all such title as the agent had authority, to create by the law or custom of the country where the agency is to be exercised. But, as a general rule, the person taking such goods can get no better title than one or other of them. Here Meyer had no interest in the goods by reason of advances; he had no express authority to pledge the goods for his own debt; no custom has been proved authorising him so to do, even if it were valid; and, consequently, their only title as regards the goods is under the Factors Acts.

Secondly, although an agent authorised to receive money for a disclosed principal can only validly receive it in cash and disengaged from any other relations between payer and payee, an agent for sale, authorised to employ in his own name a broker or other sub-agent in effecting the sale, may be satisfied by set-off, or in any other manner in which a debt may be discharged as between the agent and sub-agent. Here Meyer was authorised to employ the defendants in his own name, and they are therefore entitled to satisfy by set-off the debt arising from the sale of the plaintiffs' goods during Meyer's lifetime.

Thirdly, that the authority given by Meyer to the defendants to sell the goods was withdrawn by his death and the commencement of this action; and, consequently, that, in respect of the moneys arising from the sales subsequent to those events, the defendants have no right of set-off.

The plaintiffs are therefore entitled to the moneys produced by the sale of the goods consigned by the Soteria, Lansdowne and Glen Callach, after deducting from those moneys respectively the sums of 200*l.* and 800*l.* advanced by the defendants on these goods respectively. As regards the claim of the plaintiffs to the proceeds of the goods consigned by the Beaconsfield, the Antenor and the Comus, the action must be dismissed. Having regard to the unfounded charges in the statement of claim, and to the failure of the plaintiffs to establish their case except to a comparatively small amount, they must pay the costs of the action up to and including the trial, and each party must pay his own costs of the appeal. The Vice-Chancellor's judgment must be varied accordingly, and an account must be directed in order to ascertain the amount due to the plaintiffs in respect of the moneys produced by the sale of the goods consigned by the Soteria, Lansdowne and Glen Callach; and the further consideration of the action and the subsequent costs must be reserved.

Solicitors—Michael Abrahams & Co., for appellants; Hollams, Son & Coward, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BRETT, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
July 6.

In re THE BLACKBURN, ETC., BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY.

Benefit Building Society — Investing Members—Notice of Withdrawal—Winding-up—Priorities of Investing Members inter se.

A rule of a benefit building society provided that any investing member might withdraw, "provided the funds permit," sums not exceeding 10*l. by giving seven days' notice, and sums exceeding* 10*l. by giving one month's notice, according to a printed form, and that no further liabilities should be incurred by the society until such member had been repaid. The society went into liquidation, and had assets which, when realised, would leave a surplus after payment of all outside creditors, and the question arose—the surplus being insufficient to pay all the investing members in full—whether those investing members who had given notice of withdrawal before the winding-up were entitled to be paid in priority to those investing members who had not given such notice. The latter class contended, first, that the rule applied only to a going concern, and that after the winding-up all investing members stood on the same footing; and, secondly, that if the rule applied, then, on its true construction, the withdrawing members were only to be paid out of a particular fund—namely, funds at bank, properly available for that purpose—that is, the monthly subscriptions of borrowing members; that no such fund* was in existence when the winding-up commenced; and therefore the withdrawing members were not entitled to any preferential payment out of the other assets when realised:—Held, that the rule applied not only to the society as a going concern, but must be applied in the winding-up to adjust and ascertain the rights of the members inter se in the surplus assets, and that the true construction of the rule was that withdrawing members were to be paid in priority to other investing members if the assets of the society upon realisation permitted, and consequently that the withdrawing members were entitled to the preferential payment they claimed.

In re The Blackburn Building Soc., App.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster on a representative case, which raised the question whether, in the winding-up of the society, those investing members who had given notice of withdrawal prior to the winding-up were entitled to be paid their moneys in priority to those investing members who had not given notice of withdrawal, or whether the assets were to be divided rateably between both classes of investing members. The claims of the investing members who had given notice of withdrawal amounted to about 45,000*l.*, and the claims of those investing members who had not given notice of withdrawal amounted to about 125,000*l.*

It was conceded that, after payment of all outside creditors and costs of liquidation, the balance of the realised assets of the society would amount to about 45,000*l.*

The material rules of the society were the following:—

"1. The value of each share shall be 10*l.* Payments of 6*d.* and upwards may be made by investing members fortnightly, or on any day during office hours, at 7 St. John's Place, Blackburn, or at any other place to which the business of the society shall be legally removed. Investors shall not be subject to fines. Members may subscribe for any number of shares."

"2. All subscriptions, when they amount to 1*l.*, upon investment accounts, shall bear interest at the rate of five per cent.; when they amount to 5*l.* they shall bear interest at six per cent. (provided the funds permit), to be added at the annual audit, but such interest or dividend shall not be paid until the shares are realised or withdrawn. The directors shall have power to alter the rate of interest to be divided. Any surplus profits which may arise shall be carried to a reserve fund to meet further contingencies, and, if not required for that purpose, a portion thereof may from time to time be divided amongst the members in such manner as the consulting actuary shall determine."

"3. Any member of this society shall be allowed to withdraw (provided the funds permit) sums not exceeding 10*l.* by giving seven days' notice, and sums exceeding 10*l.* by giving one month's notice, according to the printed form in the schedule annexed. No further liabilities shall be incurred by the society till such member has been repaid."

"6. On the death of any member the amount due to him shall be paid to his executors or other legal personal representatives on payment of the usual transfer fee, and they shall have and take as much benefit and advantage by, from and under these rules as the deceased member ought to have, or could or might have had, in case he had been living, and such executors or legal representatives may act and vote in all cases as fully as the deceased member. If two or more representatives claim to vote at any meeting of the society, the one first named in the probate or letters of administration shall alone be entitled to vote. If no probate or letters of administration be produced to the directors at any meeting within three months after the decease of the member, and the sum due be under 20*l.*, the directors shall be at liberty to pay or distribute such sum to or amongst his widow, children, next-of-kin, or such person or persons as they shall deem legally entitled to the same."

"7. On any member becoming bankrupt or making any assignment for the benefit of his creditors, the assignee or trustee of his estate and effects shall not, by virtue of such office, become a member of this society, but may withdraw, sell or transfer the shares of such member, subject to the rules of the society."

"8. In the event of any member, who shall not have obtained an advance, becoming lunatic or of unsound mind, a committee or guardian of such lunatic member, legally appointed, shall be entitled to withdraw the sum due to such member. But in case there shall be no committee or guardian appointed, then the directors may pay such sum to the wife, children or next-of-kin of such afflicted member, and such payment shall be made in such manner, and subject to such conditions, as the directors may deem necessary and proper."

"34. The directors may make advances, as the funds permit, to any amount, repayable by fortnightly contributions, according to the following table."

In the schedule the form of transfer was as follows:—"I, A B, one of the members of the Blackburn and District Benefit Building Society, do hereby assign and transfer £ s. d. (being the whole or part of my interest, as the case may be) in the said society to ." And the form of notice for withdrawal was addressed to the secretary, and was:—"I hereby give you notice that I desire to withdraw £ (or my shares, numbered) from the society, so soon as the funds will allow."

The Vice-Chancellor held that those members who had given notice of withdrawal were entitled to be paid their claim in priority to those who had not given notice of withdrawal.

Against this decision those investing members who had not given notice of withdrawal appealed.

Ince, Q.C., and H. Burton Buckley, for the appellants.—First, we say that all the investing members were on the same footing when the winding-up commenced, whether they had given notice of withdrawal or not, and are entitled, after payment of the outside creditors, to share pari passu in the assets that may be realised. They are all partners, in fact, and in just the same position as the partners in an ordinary partnership are when a dissolution of the partnership takes place.

[COTTON, L.J.—Is not the real question this—whether the investing members, on giving notice of withdrawal, ceased to be members?]

Yes; and that depends on the 2nd and 3rd rules of the society. We say that an investing member did not cease to be a member on giving notice of withdrawal unless and until he is repaid.

[COTTON, L.J.—Are not those who have given notice of withdrawal in the same position as the preference shareholders of a company in liquidation who are entitled to priority in the distribution of the assets after all creditors have been paid?]

In companies the articles always specially provide for the priority of preference shareholders, but there is nothing in these rules going to that, and no provisions as to a winding-up. The 3rd rule only applies to a priority which may arise in a going concern, and not to a winding-up. The decision of the late Master of the Rolls in In re The Mutual Society (1) is in our favour. The rule of withdrawal in that case was very similar to this, and the same question arose. There the withdrawing members were to be paid out of a particular fund, which did not exist when the winding-up commenced; and he held that after the winding-up the rule did not apply, and that there was no priority between the investing members. Here the words are, "provided the funds permit," which limit the right of withdrawal, and mean such time as funds will have come into the coffers of the society at their bankers from the monthly payments of the advanced or borrowing members, and then those funds are to be paid to the withdrawing members before any fresh investment is made by the society. Here, at the moment of the winding-up, the funds did not permit; the society had no available funds at bank for the purpose, although there are some assets which will, no doubt, be realised in the winding-up. Then we say that on the rules there has been no cesser of membership. The notice of withdrawal under rule 3 is not a withdrawal of membership, but a withdrawal of a sum of money—the whole or part of his interest in the society, as the case may be. This view is supported by the 6th, 7th and 8th rules, and by the forms of notice of withdrawal and transfer in the schedule to the rules. It is a sum going out of the coffers of the society, and there is no cesser of membership until all the money is paid out. There is, therefore, nothing in the contract contained in these rules giving the withdrawing members a priority over the other investing members; nothing amounting to such a preference, therefore the assets must be divided rateably amongst all the investing members. Lastly, the withdrawing members are not creditors. The ratio decidendi in the cases of In re The Queen's Benefit Building Society (2), In re The Norwich, &c., Provident Building Society (3) and In re The Doncaster Permanent Building Society (4), which were relied on by the other side in the Court below, is really in our favour. At any rate, they are not conclusive, if against us, on a question of construction like this.

(1) Not reported on this point.

Rigby, Q.C., and Rotch, for the principal respondents, the investing members who had given notice of withdrawal, were not called upon.

Snow, for the official liquidator.

Davey, Q.C., and Foard, for other parties interested.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case a building society is being wound up, and at the moment that the winding-up commenced it had property, which existed, although in a particular form, and which could be realised. At the moment of the winding-up there were three classes of persons who might be interested in that existing property: one was what is called outside creditors; another consisted of members who were entitled under the rule of the society to give, and who had given, notice to withdraw—that is, to withdraw certain moneys which they had subscribed to the society; and the third was, members of this society who had subscribed money to the society, but who had not given notice of withdrawal. Now, the existing property of the society is more than sufficient to pay the outside creditors, and the question in this case is, what is the mode in which that property which is in existence, and which is to be realised or which has been realised, is to be divided between the other two classes, if it is to be divided at all. That depends principally upon the construction of the rules, and after you have construed the rules, then, no doubt, comes the question, what is the principle of law to be applied. It was urged by Mr. Ince that, whatever might be the construction of the rules the moment before the winding-up, the rules are only made for and apply to what he calls the carrying on of a going concern; and that, inasmuch as the winding-up puts an end to the concern as a going concern, therefore nothing in the rules is applicable, or is to be applied, after the winding-up. That seems to me to be a prodigious contention, and one which, if it were true, would call upon the Court, whenever such a case as this comes before it, to throw the rules under the table—which nobody has ever suggested, although some of the Judges have sometimes used words saying that the rules are intended for a going concern. No doubt they are; but it does not follow, because the rules were made for a going concern, that therefore, when the concern is stopped, the rules are to be thrown into the fire. The consequence does not follow from the premises. Then it is said that, if you throw the rules into the fire, then all the persons who have subscribed to this society are partners without any rules, and if they are partners without any rules, then the principle of law is that they all share equally in the assets which can be realised. That proposition depends on the first, as to whether you are to throw the rules into the fire. It seems to me that you might as well say that, if they were partnership articles, and an end were put to the partnership, the partnership articles were made only for the partnership as a going concern, and that the moment the rights of the partners had to be settled at the end of the partnership, the articles of partnership were no more applicable. One proposition depends on the other, and neither can be supported. It seems to me the principle is this. In considering how such property as this is to be treated with regard to the persons who have been investing members—I decline to say they were partners—the question must be, first of all, whether those who have given the notice to withdraw are to be considered as creditors; secondly, suppose they are not,

40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 381; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 815.

(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 785.

(4) Law Rep. 3 Eq. 158.

what is the arrangement or contract between the two classes, assuming them to be members? What is the contract between them under the rules with reference to the property in existence, although it has not been realised? What are their rights under this contract with each other? The moment you come to that, that must be determined as if you were considering the matter the moment before the winding-up, and then those rights are to be applied to the division of the property, or to the mode in which it is to be treated after the winding-up.

Now, it was suggested in the Court below that these people who had given notice to withdraw are creditors, or are to be treated as if they were creditors, and for that the expression used by the learned Judges in the cases of The Queen's Benefit Building Society (2) and The Norwich Provident Building Society (3) were relied on. I do not think it necessary for us to decide in the present case whether these people are to be treated as if they were creditors or not, or to determine that they are creditors. That they would be creditors of the same kind as what have been called the outside creditors I do not suppose; that they are to be treated as creditors it is not necessary to determine; but I should be inclined to think very much that the real meaning of those Judges was that as between them and the other class they were to be treated as creditors.

Now, it has been strongly urged that they did not cease to be members. If they did cease to be members on giving notice of withdrawal, then they must be in the nature of creditors, whether you could say that they were the same as outside creditors or not. I do not think it is necessary to determine that they are not members. I will assume, for the purpose of my decision, that they remain members as between themselves and those persons who have not given notice. Then I say that the question is, what are their rights with regard to each other by mutual agreement between themselves, and are they to be construed as if we were construing the rules the moment before the winding-up? Upon that it has been said that the mutual agreement is that those who have given notice to withdraw shall be paid only out of a particular fund, and that the existence of that particular fund, therefore, is a condition precedent to their right to be paid, and that that fund did not exist the moment before the winding-up, and therefore there was no condition that they should be paid in any other way than the persons who had not given notice. And if the construction of these rules had been that they were only entitled to be paid out of a particular fund, and that fund had not existed at the time of the winding-up, then I am inclined to think that the condition not having been fulfilled which entitled them to payment any more than the others, there could not have been any priority with regard to them over the others under the winding-up. Then I should have thought that the principle applied by the late Master of the Rolls in In re The Mutual Society (1) would have been applicable in this case—that is to say, that if the construction of these rules is the same in effect as the construction of those rules, then his decision would have been followed. But the question is, whether the construction of this rule is in effect the same as the construction which he put upon those rules. With regard to that point, of course, that case cannot help us at all. The construction of one set of rules cannot help us in the construction of another set of rules which are not identical. We are therefore driven to construe these rules.

It has been very strongly argued that there are words in the 3rd rule which make the right of the withdrawing members to payment to be a right to payment only out of a particular fund, and therefore that the existence of that fund is a condition precedent to their right to payment. That depends on whether the words "provided the funds permit" mean funds immediately ready to be handed over—that is, funds at the bankers immediately available for the purpose—or whether they only mean provided the property of the society is such as would upon calculation or upon realisation permit payment. Accordingly, it was argued that, inasmuch as the same words are used in the second rule, they will bear the same meaning in the 3rd rule as they do in the 2nd. Then it was argued that, under the 2nd rule, they did mean a fund immediately applicable to payment. But the argument so put forward is unfortunately —the moment the first part of the argument is looked at, namely, that the rules are alike because the terms are alike, and that therefore the construction of the 2nd rule being one way, the construction of the 3rd rule must be the same—a fatal blow to the person who brings forward that argument, because it is perfectly clear under the 2nd rule that the terms do not mean a fund immediately applicable to be handed over. The 2nd rule says: "All subscriptions, when they amount to 1*l.* upon investment accounts, shall bear interest at the rate of five per cent." Then it says: "When they amount to 5*l.* they shall bear interest at six per cent., provided the funds permit." To my mind there was never anything more clear than that. That provision only applies to the question of the six per cent., and not the five per cent., "to be added at the annual audit, but such interest or dividend shall not be paid until the shares are realised or withdrawn." It is obvious to my mind that the interest is to be calculated, and is to be placed to the credit of the share before the time when the money is payable, or is in a fit state to be handed over. If that be so, the words "provided the funds permit" cannot mean funds at the bankers. It must mean provided the state of the company's property is such as to permit of a declaration of a dividend of six per cent. If that is the meaning of it in the 2nd rule, then the argument that the 3rd rule is to be construed according to the 2nd rule is fatal to the appellants' contention. But whether it is so or not, it seems to me it is impossible to say that "provided the funds permit" shall be construed so strictly as to mean funds at the bankers. It seems to me that no meaning at all, and no effect at all, can be given to this 3rd rule, as between the members who give notice to withdraw and members who do not, unless the meaning is that, as between them, it is an arrangement that those who have given notice to withdraw shall be paid, if the property of the company will permit it, out of the property of the company before the others. As between them, therefore, it is an agreement that the one shall be paid in priority to the other. That is the whole meaning of it, and it has no meaning unless it has that. Therefore, if I had to construe these rules at the moment before the winding-up began, I should say that there was an arrangement between those members who had given notice to withdraw and those members who had not given notice to withdraw, that the property of the company should be so divided that those who had given notice to withdraw were to be paid before those who have not given notice to withdraw. If that were so the moment before the winding-up, it seems to me that after the winding-up that agreed rule between those two sets of people is to be carried out under the winding-up, if under the winding-up there is any property that is to be divided between them. For these reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was right, and that there is nothing in the cases decided by the late Master of the Rolls which is in conflict with that decision or the decisions on which the learned Vice-Chancellor relied.

COTTON, L.J.—In this case it is conceded that there are funds enough to pay all those creditors who never were members of the society, and the only point we have to consider is one between those investing members who have given notice of withdrawal and those who have not given notice, the question being how are they to be paid out of the funds remaining after paying those creditors called outside creditors.

Now, as the outside creditors have been got rid of, and as the question is simply one of contract between the parties, one asks what contract did the members come to between themselves at the time when this society was formed? That is the question for us. That really turns on rule 3, which provides that the members of the society shall be allowed to withdraw, "provided the funds permit"; and then they are to be repaid; and no further liabilities are to be incurred by the society until they are repaid. It is said that that rule does not give those members who have given notice of withdrawal any priority as regards the other members, who, at the moment before they gave their notices, were in the same position as themselves, because the society is now being wound up. Before the society was being wound up undoubtedly they had a right, which those who had not given notice had not, to receive the repayment of their money. I will deal with the question as to "provided the funds permit" presently. To that extent they not only had a right to payment, but they had also a priority; and what the other members now desire to do in the winding-up is to put them in the same position as if they had never acquired any such right. It was argued generally in this way: that that gave them a right to payment when the concern is a going concern, which all members of course have, whether they have given notice or not when the concern is wound up, because then there must be an equal division of the assets amongst all the members. They were only to get a division in their favour of the assets if they gave notice and were repaid whilst the society was a going concern, and therefore in the winding-up they are in just the same position as if no such notice had been given. To my mind there is an essential fallacy in that. What is a partner, as such, entitled to, and why—I will say member rather than partner—when there is no contract regulating what are his rights on a winding-up of the partnership? He is entitled—not upon the contract, because I assume there is no provision in it, as there is none here—when all the liabilities, including contracts which he has made with his co-partner, have been fulfilled, to receive, in consequence of his position as a member of the partnership, an equal share of the remaining assets. He has no contract with his co-partners that he shall have that, but the law gives that to him in consequence of his being a partner, and gives it only when all the contracts which he has entered into, including those with his co-partners or fellow members, have been satisfied. Therefore, from that proposition, independently of the construction of the rules which I shall presently mention, it necessarily follows that when the winding-up took place the members were placed in exactly the same position as certain partners who have contracted in the same way as those members we are dealing with, and as to whom there is no contract, and who merely get what they are entitled to on a dissolution as the necessary incident of law from their position of members who have already paid all that which by the contract they have bound themselves to pay.

But then it was said that the 3rd rule on its true construction is one which applies only to a going concern, and does not apply to a winding-up. That depends on these words: "provided the funds permit." Let us see whether that can be the proper meaning of it. First of all, I refer to the last clause in the rule: "No further liability shall be incurred by the society till such member has been repaid." It was said very ingeniously by Mr. Buckley that that applied to their not making any further advances to members who wished to be advanced. That may be one liability on the contract, but the society might incur other liabilities; and this clause, as I understand it, fully recognises the fact that there might not be at the immediate moment when the notice to withdraw was given any cash in hand immediately available, because it in effect provides, in order that future sums coming into the hands of the directors should not be diverted, that until those who have withdrawn have been repaid what they are entitled to in consequence of their notice to withdraw, no liability shall be incurred which should have precedence over their claim. We must also look at the words "provided the funds permit." I will not refer again to the 2nd rule, which I think negatives by the use of those words, "where no payment has been made," the argument that they mean "provided there are funds in hand at the bankers; cash to meet and provide for it at the right moment." But they have to my mind this other obvious meaning: "provided there are assets of the society, available for the purpose, without making any call on the members for that purpose." That being so, this, in my opinion, is not in any way a rule which only applies to the case of a going concern. The solvency of the funds will be ascertained by the winding-up; and therefore it cannot be said when the funds are solvent, as they are in this case, to pay the withdrawing members, that that is a rule which cannot be carried out in this society in consequence of the winding-up.

It was also a little argued, I think, that all these rules must generally be rules only applying to a going concern. I do not, on a question of construction, wish to refer to any other authority, but the case of In re The Doncaster Permanent Building Society (4) is against that. It is true that there the provisions in the rules are very different to these. But there, although probably they did a little more point to a going concern than the rules do here, the Court after the winding-up regulated the rights of the parties, and said what, in their opinion, was the true construction of those rules, which were not more applicable to the time when the society had ceased to be a going concern than these are. There was another authority much relied on as against the construction I put on these rules. That was the case of In re The Mutual Society (1), before the late Master of the Rolls. In my opinion that cannot help us here, nor can it be considered as laying down any general rule, because there was in express terms a rule there that the sums which the withdrawing members desired to have should be paid solely out of a particular fund—money existing at the time of the notice of withdrawal, comprised exclusively of sums which had been paid as premiums upon or received in respect of the payment of appropriations. Of course those could not exist after the winding-up, and although it was provided that payment in all cases should be only made in rotation, I cannot see how that assists in making that case available here, because if payments in rotation were only to be made out of a fund which did not exist at the time the notice was given, and which could not be brought into existence after the winding-up, that shews conclusively that the rule could not have had any application, and could not be made available in support of the claims of those who said they were entitled to be repaid first in the winding-up as between themselves and the members who have not given notice. In my opinion the true construction of this rule is, that here there is a contract between the parties as to the repayment of those who gave the notice of withdrawal—not in any way limited or put an end to by the winding-up; and therefore this priority must prevail, as the Vice-Chancellor has ruled.

It is unnecessary to say whether these persons are creditors or not. If it were necessary to decide it, I should say that they were creditors—but of course creditors who cannot compete with those creditors who are not members; but still they are creditors, although from being themselves members, whose agents had contracted with the other creditors, they are not entitled to come in competition with them, when the society, of which they were members when the contract was made, is insolvent.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think this is the purest question of construction that ever came before the Court. There certainly is no question between the appellant and any outside creditor. The funds permit of paying outside creditors, and all we have got to determine is, under a rule which provides that persons who are members of a society may give a particular notice of withdrawing a particular sum, or a particular interest, from the common funds of the society, what is the effect of the rule upon the members who give the notice? The persons whose respective rights we have to consider are persons who have been members of that society, and who at a given moment have given this notice. In what position does that place them as regards the members of the society who have not given the notice?

It is a pure question of the construction of the rule. It is just as much a question of construction as if we were construing a partnership article in articles of partnership. The distinguished counsel who argued this case before us have drawn, I think, at least three red herrings across the path of the Court in the hope that we should be drawn off the scent. First, they discussed the question whether the effect of giving this notice was to make the persons who gave it no longer partners, or whether they did not still continue partners; then they discussed the question whether these persons who gave the notice were creditors; and lastly, whether they were members after giving the notice. That is to say, they began to consider with regard to the creditors, partners and members—each of which is a term classifying and categorising particular rights arising out of a contract —they began to invite us to consider what class these particular persons belonged to before they wished us to decide what the exact effect of the rule was, and what was the exact right it gave. The rights of a creditor depend upon the contract made between himself and the persons whose creditor he is. The rights of a partner depend upon the contract which he has made with the person whose partner he either is or was at one time. The right of a member of a society depends on contract. "Member" is not a term of art, and it may mean different things according as you apply the term to persons outside the society, or as you apply it to the rights which arise under the rules to persons within the society. But in every case it is a question of contract. I think the Court rightly declined to be led into a discussion as to which category this particular class belonged until we had considered the rule.

Then we come to the construction of rule 3, on which it all turns. There, again, the distinguished counsel who argued this case began by inviting us to look at four or five other cases. Four or five other cases decided upon different rules might be extremely useful if the principle of construction were not clear. But where is the ambiguity about any principle of construction to be applied to this case? When you construe articles of a mutual benefit society, it does not require an oracle to tell you you must construe them with reference to the subject-matter—that is to say, with reference to a mutual benefit society—any more than it requires an oracle to tell you, when you are construing articles of partnership, to be sure to bear in mind that you are dealing with the rights of partners. Both Mr. Ince and Mr. Buckley asked us to look at a particular case decided by the late Master of the Rolls, for the purpose of shewing that when you are dealing with articles which relate to giving notice of withdrawal in building societies you are to read those articles as if they were to be applied only to a going concern. I feel sure that no such preposterous proposition ever entered into so lucid and learned a mind as that of the late Master of the Rolls. It puzzled me very much, I confess, when I heard his judgment cited for that purpose. The late Master of the Rolls said, as every man of sense would say, that rules are made for a going concern, and that you must look at the rules. What has been suggested in argument cannot be the general principle of construction, because, as the present Master of the Rolls has well said, the moment there is a winding-up you might throw the rules under the table. Therefore, that principle could not be found in the case cited, and, what is more, it was not found there as soon as it came to be looked into. All that that case decided was that when there was a special fund pointed out for the payment of withdrawing members—a fund that did not and could not exist after the winding-up—the members who were only to be paid out of that fund, which could not exist in the winding-up, were not entitled to a preferential payment out of the assets in the winding-up.

Now, I have very little to add to what has been said about the construction of this particular rule. If Mr. Ince and Mr. Buckley could make out that the words "provided the funds permit" were to be construed in rule 3 as "provided the society as a going concern has at the moment money in its hands for repayment by borrowers which has not yet been re-invested," then, of course, if the withdrawal was only to take effect in an event of that sort, it could not apply to the general funds or assets of the company after the winding-up. But is there any reason for so deciding? Putting rule 3 side by side with rule 2, if we are to take the words as meaning the same in rule 3 as they do in rule 2, it certainly does not mean that. In any event, it does seem to me that, whatever those words may mean, the rule can only have any sensible effect if you construe it as giving a member an indefeasible right, on serving his notice of withdrawal, to be paid his money if the funds permit and as soon as the funds permit. What case may or may not fall within the words "provided the funds permit" it is not necessary, I think, to decide at the moment. Here the funds ex concessis do permit after the winding-up, and even if they did not permit before, these words, I think, apply. It seems to me the rule cannot have any sense at all, unless it gives the members of the society a right indefeasibly to be paid upon serving their notice of withdrawal.

Solicitors—Bolton, Robbins & Busk, agents for T. & R. C. Radcliffe, Blackburn, for appellants; Chester & Co., agents for H. M. Richardson, Bolton-le-Moor, for respondents; W. Danger, Liverpool, for the official liquidator; Robinson, Son & Gill, Blackburn, for other parties.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
May 24, 31.

Ex parte HILL; in re BIRD.

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent Preference—Statutory Definition of—Motive of Debtor—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 92.

In determining whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference the Court ought now to have regard simply to the statutory definition of fraudulent preference contained in section 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. It is not necessary to shew that the debtor's sole motive in making the conveyance was to prefer a creditor; but it is sufficient to shew that that was his substantial object or view. The mere fact that he may have had also some view of an advantage to himself does not prevent the application of section 92.

On the 2nd of October, 1882, A. A. Bird, who carried on business as a grocer, executed a bill of sale of all his stock-in-trade and other property, except his book debts, to one Feldman, a money-lender, as security for an advance of 140*l.* The deed was duly registered. At this time Bird was indebted to Messrs. Bennett & Hill, a wholesale firm, who supplied him with goods to the amount of 120*l.* This sum was not actually due, as under the arrangement between them Bennett & Hill allowed Bird ten weeks' credit on all transactions; but about 70*l.* of the 120*l.* was due in October. Upon becoming aware of the execution of the bill of sale to Feldman, Bennett & Hill, together with their solicitor, had an interview with Bird, and told him they were about to issue a writ against him. This led to the following arrangement. Hill was to advance to Bird 270*l.*, to be secured by a bill of sale upon all his stock-in-trade and other property, except book debts. Of the 270*l.*, 140*l.* was to go to pay off Feldman, 120*l.* to pay off the debt to Bennett & Hill, and 10*l.* for expenses of preparation of the deed, &c., and Feldman's bill of sale was to be transferred to Hill. This arrangement was duly carried out.

On the 20th of October, 1882, Bird filed a liquidation petition in the Norwich County Court, and on the 6th of November a trustee was appointed. On the 18th of October Hill had taken possession of the goods comprised in the bill of sale, and on his attempting to sell them the trustee paid him the 270*l.* under protest, and applied to the County Court to have the bill of sale declared void as against him.

Bird was examined for the purpose of shewing that his object in giving the second bill of sale was to pay off Feldman, who, he feared, was about to seize his goods. There was also evidence to shew that Bird was influenced by the threat of proceedings by Bennett & Hill, a writ being actually shewn to him at the interview which took place between them.

The County Court Judge held that the bill of sale was void as against the trustee, both as an act of bankruptcy and as a fraudulent preference, and ordered Hill to repay the 270*l.* to the trustee.

Against this decision Hill appealed. The appeal came on for hearing on the 26th of February, 1883.

R. Vaughan Williams, for the appellant. —Bird's motive in giving the bill of sale was not to prefer Bennett & Hill, but in order to stave off an impending seizure by Feldman.

Finlay Knight, for the respondent, was not called upon.

BACON, C.J.—In my opinion a more clear case, or one more totally unarguable, was never submitted to the Court. Mr. Williams's contention is without a shadow of support. His client himself says, in the affidavit which has been read, "Our object in taking the security was to get security for our debt." The case is quite plain. By a contrivance, this appellant, without parting with a shilling of his money, except what he paid off to the former bill of sale holder, and which sum the bill of sale holder, it seems, is now in a fair way of losing, changed a book debt which was due to him into a debt secured by a bill of sale, which was given to secure that debt, and nothing else. The farce of exchanging cheques, and drawing a cheque in favour of the debtor which he was induced to indorse to the firm and hand over, was a piece of mere acting—mere nonsense. The transaction was, in my opinion, a gross fraud. The order appealed from was perfectly right, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Against this decision Hill appealed.

R. Vaughan Williams, for the appellant.—The bill of sale is not void, either as a fraudulent preference or as an act of bankruptcy. To make it void as a fraudulent preference under section 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (1), it must be shewn that the debtor's sole motive was to prefer the creditor—Brown v. Kempton (2). The old law has not been altered in this respect by section 92 (1)—Ex parte Topham (3), Ex parte Hitchcock (4), Butcher v. Stead (5) and Ex parte Tempest (6).

In this case the object of Bird was to obtain in Hill a more lenient creditor than the money-lender was likely to prove.

[BOWEN, L.J., referred to Ex parte Griffith; in re Wilcoxon (7).]

At any rate, there was sufficient pressure by Hill, and he is protected by the latter part of section 92 (1). Then, as to its being void as an act of bankruptcy under section 6, sub-section 2, when that sub-section speaks of a "fraudulent conveyance," it refers to a fraud depending on the effect of the act of the debtor. The effect of his act must be to defeat or delay creditors. The sort of assignments which have been held to be fraudulent are those which of their nature must have the effect of defeating or delaying creditors—In re Wood (8). Here the debtor had put the whole of his legal estate in the property out of his power by the execution of the bill of sale to Feldman. The execution of the second bill, therefore, could not affect the legal remedies of the creditors.

[COTTON, L.J.—If you are right, there is nothing to prevent a man from assigning the whole of his property as security for a small advance, and then dealing with his equity of redemption in any way he pleases.]

The real test is whether the necessary effect of the deed is to produce insolvency—Smith v. Carman (9).

[COTTON, L.J.—If by the execution of a deed a man puts so much of his property out of his power that he is not able to pay his debts, the effect of the deed is to make him insolvent. Where was the present advance by Hill to Bird?]

An advance for the purpose of paying off an existing secured creditor is a present

(1) Section 92: "Every conveyance or transfer of property, or charge therein made, every payment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own moneys in favour of any creditor, or any person in trust for any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors, shall, if the person making, taking, paying or suffering the same become bankrupt within three months after the date of making, taking, paying or suffering the same, be deemed fraudulent and void as against the trustee of the bankrupt appointed under this Act; but this section shall not affect the rights of a purchaser, payee or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration."

(2) 19 Law J. Rep. C.P. 169.

(3) 42 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 57; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 614.

(4) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 79, sub nom. Ex parte Blackburn, Law Rep. 12 Eq. 358.

(5) 44 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 129; Law Rep. 7 E. & Ir. App. 839.

(6) 40 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 22; Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 70.

(7) Ante, p. 717; Law Rep. 23 Ch. D. 69.

(8) 41 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 21; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 302.

(9) 2 E. & B. 35; 22 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 290

advance—Whitmore v. Claridge (10). At all events, Hill is entitled, as transferee of Feldman's bill of sale, to retain the 140*l.*, for which it was a perfectly good security.

Winslow, Q.C., and Finlay Knight, for the trustee, on the question of the 140*l.*, on which point alone they were called upon to argue.—There is no evidence upon the question of the validity of Feldman's bill of sale, the point not having been taken in either of the Courts below.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—Are you prepared to accept an order for the repayment of the 130*l.*, without prejudice to any application which the trustee may think proper to make as to the 140*l.*]

Yes.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued:—Under those circumstances the County Court Judge held that the transaction was a fraudulent preference, and void under section 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and also an act of bankruptcy under section 6, sub-section 2.

I am bound to say that I entirely agree with the County Court Judge that the transaction was a sham and a blind to conceal the real truth, and I also agree with the Chief Judge that the whole thing was a farce.

The principles on which the 92nd section ought to be construed have been repeatedly considered by the Court of Appeal, and the books are full of reports of cases bearing on the subject; but it appears to me that, whatever may have been said by the Judges in the various cases, we are driven back to the simple words of the statute, which are as follows. [His Lordship read section 92.]

That is what the Act itself says. I do not intend to refer to any of the cases which have been cited, except Ex parte Topham (3). In that case Lord Justice Mellish no doubt adopted in general terms, as a correct description of the state of the law, the observations which had been made by the Chief Judge in Ex parte Blackburn (4). The Lord Justice quoted the language of the Chief Judge, including this sentence: "So that, unless it can be made clearly apparent to the satisfaction of the Court which has to decide, that the debtor's sole motive was to prefer the creditor paid to the other creditors, the payment cannot be impeached, even although it be obviously in favour of a creditor." As applied to the particular case then before the Court, the language used by the Chief Judge does not appear to me to be too strong. Lord Justice Mellish said that this, in his opinion, was a perfectly accurate description of the state of the law. If he meant to adopt the expressions of the Chief Judge without any qualification, I should say that, in my opinion, those expressions were too strong to be generally applicable. The Act says that the conveyance must be made "with a view of giving such creditor a preference"; it does not say with the sole view. I should say it means that the substantial view was the giving the creditor a preference; and the mere fact that besides that view there may have been also some view of an advantage to be gained by the person who makes the preference does not alter the case, or prevent the application of section 92. In the case before him, Lord Justice Mellish had no occasion to consider the nice distinction between the substantial view and the sole view of preferring the creditor, because he came to the conclusion that there was no intention to make a fraudulent preference at all. But in this case I am unable to discover any motive whatever on the part of Bird but that of giving a preference to Hill. The simple object was to obtain a security for the existing debt due to Hill's firm, or that which would soon ripen into a debt; and it was thought advisable, as a matter of prudence, that Hill should get in the debt due to the money-lender. I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the transaction amounted to a fraudulent preference. It is almost unnecessary to consider the other question, but I am of opinion that it is equally clear that it was an act of bankruptcy under section 6, sub-section 2. The effect of it was to place the whole of the debtor's property beyond the reach of his creditors. Mr. Williams says that, as the bill of sale dealt only with an equity of redemption, and not with the goods themselves, it did not affect the legal remedies of the creditors. I am unable to agree with this argument, for, on paying off Feldman, Hill had the whole of the debtor's property at his command, and the remedies of the other creditors were interfered with just as much as if his had been the original bill of sale. It only remains to consider what ought to be done as to that which I may call the money part of the order. The trustee says that he paid over the 270*l.* to Hill under protest; but this is denied. I think, however, that if it was improperly paid, it ought to be repaid. It appears to me that the trustee is clearly entitled to so much of the 270*l.* as went to pay the debt of Bennett & Hill, for they had no right to that money except under the deed, which I have already held to be fraudulent and void as against the trustee. If Hill has any right at all, it is as transferee of Feldman's bill of sale; but the materials at present before us are not sufficient to enable us to determine this question. Therefore I think the order should be only for the repayment of the 130*l.*, but without prejudice to any further application by the trustee for the 140*l.*

(10) 31 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 141; 33 ibid. 87.

COTTON, L.J. (after examining the evidence, and expressing his opinion that the bill of sale was, in fact, an assignment of all the debtor's property as security for an antecedent debt, without any fresh advance of which the debtor got the advantage), continued:—That is, of itself, enough to dispose of the case; but I do not wish it to be supposed that I do not think the transaction was also a fraudulent preference, and I will therefore deal with that point also. It is said that there was pressure on the part of Hill, and it is also said that there was another motive on the part of Bird besides that of preferring Hill. It is said that he wished to put in the place of Feldman the other creditor Hill, who was likely to be more lenient to him. Even if we were to refer to the old cases on the subject, I do not think the existence of that other motive would prevent the execution of the bill of sale from being a voluntary act on the part of Bird. Then it is said pressure was exercised by Hill, because a writ was shewn to Bird on the 12th of October. But it does not appear that any attempt was made to serve the writ; it was only taken by the solicitor in his pocket in order that he might shew it to Bird; and we cannot disregard the conclusion which was arrived at by the County Court Judge, who saw the witnesses, that the whole transaction was a sham; or that of the Chief Judge, that it was a farce. In my opinion, it is correctly so described. That being so, we must come to the conclusion that there was a fraudulent preference. We have to deal with the language of section 92. It is unnecessary to consider in the present case whether the right construction is that the sole motive of the debtor must be the desire to give a preference to the particular creditor; for here, in my view of the facts, there is no evidence of any other motive than a desire to prefer Hill. It is suggested that there was another motive, in the wish of Hill to obtain a more lenient creditor than Feldman as the holder of the first bill of sale; but, in my opinion, that will not do. The Act requires that the substantial motive of the transaction should have been the wish to prefer the creditor, and you cannot get rid of it by shewing the existence of some such other motive as that which is suggested. I doubt whether in Ex parte Blackburn (4) the Chief Judge intended to lay such stress on the word "sole." He decided that case upon its facts. And in Ex parte Topham (3) it was not necessary for Lord Justice Mellish to consider the point. I must, however, say that, in my view of section 92, it is not necessary to shew that the debtor's sole motive was to give a preference to the creditor; the section only says, "with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors." I agree, therefore, in the order proposed by Lord Justice Baggallay.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I only propose to add a very few words. I think that the transaction in question was an act of bankruptcy, and I am equally of opinion that it was a fraudulent preference under section 92. I am glad to find that the other members of the Court think, as I certainly do, that in construing section 92 we ought to look to the words of the Act, and to keep them in view as our compass by which to steer through the complications which may arise. I have said substantially what I wish to say in Ex parte Griffith (7). I think it is not necessary now to come to an absolutely final conclusion on all the points which have been argued, but still I should like to express my opinion. The Bankruptcy Act of 1869 codified the law relating to fraudulent preference. Whether it has or has not altered the old law is not of much moment, though there is considerable authority for saying that it has not. But what we have now to look at is the Act itself, and the words of section 92 are, "with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditor." There are only three conceivable meanings which these words can have: First, they may conceivably mean this, that the debtor had present to his mind this view among others, that one of his views was the giving a preference to the particular creditor. I do not think that this is the true interpretation of the words. Secondly, another possible construction of the words is, "with the view"; the real, effectual, substantial view of giving a preference to the creditor, the word "a" being equivalent to "the." I think that this is the correct interpretation. Thirdly, the other conceivable meaning is, "with the sole view or sole motive." I should prefer keeping to the word "view" instead of "motive," though in nine cases out of ten the two words may come to the same thing. Is, then, the expression "with a view" convertible into "with the sole motive"? My answer is that the latter words are not in the Act, and I do not wish to lay down that they mean the same thing as the words which are in it. It is an exceedingly difficult thing (it is possible, for juries have to do it) to arrive at an opinion as to what is the dominant or operative motive of a man in doing a particular act. But if we are to consider whether, amongst all the shadows which pass across a man's mind, some motive besides the dominant motive influences him to do the act, we shall be embarking on a dark and unknown voyage across an exceedingly misty sea. It is a very difficult matter to prove that the dominant motive was the sole motive, and I think the true test, under section 92, is this: First, had the debtor a view of giving a preference to the creditor? and, secondly, was that the operative effectual view? That appears to me to be the right construction of section 92, though it is not absolutely necessary to decide it now. Bankruptcy law, however, is a matter in which it is so important to keep the propositions of law distinct from their application to the facts, that I have thought it right to say what I have said, and I do not think I have said anything contrary to any of the decided cases. If that is the law, the question is one of fact, and I answer that question as I did in Ex parte Griffith (7). I think that this bill of sale was executed by Bird with the view (among others) of preferring Hill, and further that that was the dominant and substantial view. But I go further, and say that I can detect no other motive; and if it were necessary so to decide, I should say that Bird acted with the sole view of preferring Hill. An elaborate farce was devised to disguise the real truth, but the eyes of common sense can pierce through the film.

Solicitors—P. J. Burt, agent for Bavin & Daynes, Norwich, for appellant; C. F. Martelli, agent for Alfred Kent, Norwich, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
May 24.

Ex parte HALL; in re WOOD.

Bankruptcy — Receiver — Injunction — Undertaking as to Damages—Application to enforce—Delay.

The receiver in a bankruptcy had obtained an injunction restraining the holder of a bill of sale, comprising part of the bankrupt's property, from selling the same, and had given the usual undertaking as to damages. The bill of sale holder did not apply to enforce the undertaking until nearly four years after the damage had accrued:—Held, that, although the receiver had not obtained his discharge and the bankruptcy proceedings were still pending, the unexplained delay which had taken place in making the application was a sufficient answer to it.

Wood, who was a farmer, was adjudicated a bankrupt in the Chester County Court on the 20th of February, 1878. A petition had been presented on the 10th of January, 1878, and a receiver had been appointed by the Court.

On the 14th of August, 1876, Wood had executed a bill of sale of his crops, farming stock, &c., to Hall, to secure a debt of 1,800*l.* The deed was duly registered, and on the 27th of November, 1877, Hall took possession under it; and in January, 1878, he advertised a sale of the property to take place on the 29th and 30th of that month.

On the 22nd of January, 1878, the receiver applied ex parte for an order restraining Hall from proceeding with the sale until after the first meeting of the creditors had been held; and the County Court Judge made the order upon the receiver's undertaking to abide by any order which the Court might afterwards make as to damages, if the Court should think that Hall had sustained any by reason of the order.

The order was extended from time to time until the 25th of March, 1878, and before that date a distress was levied by the landlord of the farm for rent due on the 1st of March, and a great portion of the goods comprised in the bill of sale were seized and sold. The order against Hall did not prevent him from removing the goods, but only from selling them; accordingly, on the 22nd of February, 1878, he had endeavoured to remove the goods, but had been forcibly prevented from doing so by the receiver.

On the 25th of March, 1878, a trustee was appointed, and on the 28th of November, 1878, the bill of sale was declared valid by the Court of Appeal.

On the 23rd of July, 1882, Hall applied to the Court to enforce the undertaking of the receiver, who had not been discharged, against him. Hall claimed as damages the expenses of the sale, which had been rendered abortive, and the loss occasioned by the distress.

On the 13th of January, 1883, the County Court Judge made an order declaring that Hall had not sustained any damage by reason of the restraining order, which the receiver ought to pay.

This decision was partly grounded upon the delay which had taken place in making the application. It was also stated in the order that by consent of the parties, their counsel and solicitors, the Court had proceeded to a reference of the matters contained and referred to in the motion.

From this decision Hall appealed. The appeal was heard on the 26th of February, 1883.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and W. H. Clay, for the appellant.—Hall has clearly sustained damages by reason of the injunction, which are within the undertaking—Graham v. Campbell (1) and Ex parte Warren (2).

Winslow, Q.C., and F. Marshall, for the receiver, were not called upon.

BACON, C.J.—In this case I do not think it necessary to call upon the respondent. This subject of undertakings to be answerable in damages whenever injunctions are granted is no doubt an important one. The Court has reserved to itself in exacting an undertaking the power of dealing with the question of damages. It is not an undertaking to pay such damages as the party proceeded against may think he has sustained, but it is to pay such damages as the Court may think fit to award in respect of the injunction, or in respect of the subject-matter of the suit for injunction. Considering only the lapse of time that has occurred in this case, I should be strongly inclined to say that this application comes much too late. In 1878 all litigation between the parties had ended. There had been various proceedings, which have been recapitulated at length. Upon each one of those proceedings, when the parties were before the Court, an application might have been made by the present appellant to have, in addition to a reversal of the order of which he complained, an enquiry as to the damage he had sustained. That was his clear right up to March, 1878, and he never thought—or, if he thought, he never expressed the thought—that he had any claim in respect of damages. If the case, therefore, stood only on the lapse of time, I should be strongly inclined to say that this Court ought not to entertain the present application. But it is not necessary that I should rest my judgment upon any such ground as that, because I find that the parties themselves have dealt with that subject in a manner which to my mind is conclusive. The question of costs in the first instance is submitted to the discretion of the Court, and unless it is a very outrageous case this Court will not interfere with the discretion of the Court below in dealing with the question of costs in the course of the administration of the estate, when the latter Court is better informed of what the rights of the parties have been, and probably better able to take into consideration the conduct of the parties. However that may be, it is in the discretion of the Court to pronounce a decision upon the subject of damages. Mr. Willis has referred to two cases, in one of which the enquiry had been refused, and in which the Court of Appeal thought it wrong to refuse the enquiry. In the other case there was misconduct on the part of the respondent, who by following his own inclination had exposed some one else to loss, and there the Court thought there should be an enquiry as to damages. Neither of those cases has the slightest application to the case now before me; but besides the great lapse of time between 1878 and 1882, I find by the order which was made that the parties agreed and consented that the learned Judge who presided over the County Court should determine the question between them as to damages. The order is unequivocal; and after reciting what I need not now read, because it has been so often read already, the order goes on to say: "Upon hearing the counsel in support of the motion, and the counsel for the defendant, the trustee in opposition, and, by consent of the parties, their counsel and solicitors, this Court, having proceeded to a reference of the matters contained and referred to in the said motion, and having heard the said counsel and read the affidavits," and so on, "doth find and determine that" Hall had not sustained any damage by reason of the orders, or any of them, which the trustee had to pay. Such an order as that is not capable of being reviewed. The learned Judge has done that which according to law he was well entitled to do. I think he would not have been wrong if he had refused to entertain the application on the ground of lapse of time; but he did not; and, accordingly, that is not a subject to be considered for the purpose of the present decision. But he did, at the invitation and request and by the consent of all the parties, take upon himself the task of considering whether the undertaking to pay such damages as he in his discretion should think fit ought to be enforced in favour of the present applicant. He has exercised that discretion, and I do not feel myself at liberty to interfere. I might as well be asked to open up some award which has been made by an arbitrator. It seems clear from the very long litigation which has taken place that there have been various quarrels and disputes between the present applicant and the persons to whom the administration of the estate was entrusted, and that they entertained different views as to their respective rights. The receiver first, and the trustee secondly, endeavoured to protect the estate for the creditors. They failed in that attempt. The litigation came to an end on the hearing of the last appeal in 1878, and from that time until 1882 no one word or suggestion or demand on the part of the present applicant was made in respect of costs. On the grounds I have stated—not omitting to consider the lapse of time—not deciding upon that alone, but considering that this was an order of reference made by consent, I find that the County Court Judge, being in the nature of an arbitrator, and, besides that, having the authority which the statute and the terms of the undertaking vested in him, has come to a conclusion which I cannot disagree with, and have no right to interfere with. I therefore dismiss this appeal, which I think an unreasonable one, with costs.

(1) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 593; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 490.

(2) Law Rep. 10 Chanc. 222.

From this decision Hall appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and W. H. Clay, for the appellant.—The order of the County Court Judge was one from which an appeal would lie. The parties only consented that the amount of damages should be determined by the Judge himself instead of directing an enquiry by the Registrar —Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 71, Ex parte Streeter (3) and Ex parte Warren (2).

Winslow, Q.C., for the receiver.—I do not rely upon that ground.

Willis, Q.C. (on the merits).—We are clearly entitled to the costs of the abortive sale, and to damages for the loss caused by the landlord's distress. In an action where an undertaking as to damages has been given, the party for whose benefit it is given has a right to apply to enforce it at any time up to the close of the proceedings. The receiver has never been discharged.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—What explanation can you give of the delay?]

The receiver has in no way been damaged by it.

[COTTON, L.J., referred to Smith v. Day (4).]

Winslow, Q.C., and F. Marshall, for the receiver, were not heard.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—In February, 1878, Wood, who was a non-trader, was adjudicated a bankrupt. In the course of the proceedings a question arose as to the validity of a bill of sale. An injunction had been granted, at the instance of the trustee, restraining Hall from proceeding under the bill of sale, and the usual undertaking as to damages had been given. In November, 1878, the validity of the bill of sale was established, and then arose the right of the appellant to apply under the receiver's undertaking for an enquiry as to damages resulting from the injunction. He took no proceedings, however, until July, 1882, nearly four years after his right had accrued. He then applied to the County Court Judge for an order that the receiver should pay him such damages as he was entitled to under the undertaking, and, if necessary, for an enquiry as to the amount of such damages. The County Court Judge dismissed the application, on the ground that there were no damages for which the Court would hold the receiver answerable. He then appealed to the Chief Judge, who dismissed the appeal, and it now comes before us. The question of delay was raised before the County Court Judge. Perhaps the usual course has not been strictly followed, inasmuch as a preliminary application for an enquiry as to damages was not made. Only one application was made to the County Court Judge, and I think this was a very reasonable arrangement between the parties. The Chief Judge commented on the delay in making the application, and intimated that he should probably have considered that delay of itself a sufficient answer to the application. But he disposed of the application on the ground that no damages had been sustained by the applicant, and that the parties had agreed that the County Court Judge should himself prosecute the enquiry and decide the question once for all. Mr. Winslow does not rely upon the latter ground, so we have to deal with the case on its merits. On the question of damages I should be disposed to think that the appellant has made out a prima facie case; but I am of opinion that the appeal must fail on the ground of the delay, which is not in any way accounted for, no explanation whatever having been offered of it. It is of the greatest importance that any application of this kind should be made within a reasonable time after the happening of the facts which give rise to it. In Smith v. Day (4), in which the Judge of first instance had refused to enforce an undertaking as to damages, the Court of Appeal sustained the decision on the ground that the damages complained of were not the natural consequence of the injunction which had been granted; but the members of the Court, though they differed on another point, were of the same opinion on the question of delay. The Master of the Rolls said, "Then, again, the time at which the application is made is material. Having regard to the decisions, we are not entitled to say that the application for an enquiry must be made either when the injunction is dissolved or at the trial. One of these must be the most proper time. The application may be made when the injunction is dissolved,

(3) Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 216.
(4) Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 421.

but if made then it will probably be ordered to stand over till the trial. If made by motion subsequently to the trial the party moving is subject to some disadvantage, for the application is one which should be made speedily, and not after the Court has forgotten the circumstances. After a lapse of time, the statement of counsel is not enough; there must be evidence that damages have been incurred. In Newby v. Harrison (5) an enquiry was directed after four months, and I do not say that special circumstances might not induce the Court to allow more; but had it not been for that case I should have thought four months too long." Lord Justice Brett expressed himself in similar terms. It is true that Lord Justice Cotton did not take so strong a view on this point as the Master of the Rolls, but he said, "As regards the time of the application, there is no doubt that the failure to apply earlier does not deprive the Court of its jurisdiction founded on the undertaking. It is certainly desirable that the application should be made either at the time when the injunction is dissolved or at the hearing of the case. No rule, however, has been laid down that it must be made at one or other of those times, and I do not say that the Court ought to lay down any express limit as to time; still I think that a long delay might of itself be fatal to the application." I am of opinion, therefore, that the present appeal must fail on the ground of delay.

COTTON, L.J.—We have not had the judgment of the County Court Judge before us, but the Chief Judge apparently held that the case was one of consent, and that therefore the order of the County Court Judge could not be appealed from. If that was really the ground of his decision, I must dissent from it. The County Court Judge was exercising his ordinary jurisdiction under the Bankruptcy Act, and I think his decision was liable to appeal. I agree that the appellant has established a prima facie case for enforcing the undertaking—at least, so far as regards the expenses of the abortive sale. I do not see how he could be entitled to damages for the loss sustained by the landlord's distress, because that was the result of an unjustifiable act on the part of the receiver. The ground on which I think the Court ought not to enforce the undertaking is the delay. It is of the greatest importance, where an injunction has been obtained upon an undertaking as to damages, that if the injunction has been wrongly granted, the Court should be asked promptly to enforce the undertaking; and though I do not think the Court ought to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the time within which such an application ought to be made, yet as a general rule the Court ought to be asked to enforce the undertaking within a reasonable time after it is ascertained that the injunction has been improperly granted. The party wishing to enforce the undertaking ought to be prompt. In Smith v. Day (4) I said I thought a long delay might of itself be fatal to the application. Here the delay is quite unreasonable, and I think the undertaking ought not now to be enforced.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. For nearly four years after the validity of the bill of sale was established the bill of sale holder took no steps to enforce the undertaking. The undertaking is to abide by any order which the Court may think fit to make as to damages, in case it shall be of opinion that the bill of sale holder has sustained any by reason of the order which the receiver ought to pay. The County Court Judge decided that the bill of sale holder had sustained no damage which the receiver ought to pay. The application to him was an application to his discretion, though no doubt the discretion is to be exercised on legal lines. When a man applies to the discretion of a Judge to give him as damages the expenses to which he has been put by reason of an injunction, the greatest injury might be done if he did not come promptly. The Court has to consider all the facts of the case, and the application should be made before these facts have passed away from the recollection of the Judge. It is a reasonable presumption that if a man sleeps on his rights he has not got any. But for the delay I should have thought that the appellant had a prima facie case, but the delay of more than three and a half years leads me to think that there must be some answer to his claim. Then it is said that the injunction prevented him from selling the goods until a period at which the landlord was able to seize them under a distress for rent. The injunction, however, only prevented the bill of sale holder from selling the goods, and did not prevent him from removing them from the premises; he was prevented from removing them by the wrongful act of the receiver, and the receiver's undertaking did not extend to make him answerable for any wrongful act outside the restraining orders. It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to delay, but it seems to me marvellous that the appellant, if he had any real claim to damages, should not have brought it forward before. I can see no ground for disturbing the decision of the County Court Judge.

(5) 5 De Gex, F. & J. 287; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 863.

Solicitors—Denton, Hall & Burgin, for appellant; Chester & Co., agents for Walker, Smith & Way, Chester, for receiver.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
1883.
June 13.

In re THE MANOR OF LOWESTOFT.

Railway Company—Land taken for Undertaking—Title disputed by Crown—Purchase-money paid into Court—Petition for payment out by party in possession ordered to stand over—Lands Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 76, 78 and 79.

Where land is taken by a railway company under a notice to treat given to the party in possession, and the company having notice that the Crown assert a title to the land, the purchase-money is paid into Court under the 76th section of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the Court has jurisdiction, under the 78th section of the Act, on a petition by the party in possession of the land for payment out of the money to him, to direct the petition to stand over until the claim of the Crown has been disposed of.

Quære,—Whether, if the adverse claimant is a subject of the Crown, the matter ought of necessity to be disposed of on a petition for payment out under the Act.

This was an appeal from an order of Kay, J.

On the 19th of August, 1880, the Great Eastern Railway Company, under the powers contained in their special Act, with which the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 was incorporated, gave Mr. Reeve, the lord of the Manor of Lowestoft, in the county of Suffolk, the usual notice to take, for the purposes of their undertaking, certain pieces of land on the seashore, just above high-water mark, which he claimed as part of his manor, and which were then in his possession.

On the 25th of July, 1882, the company, having received notice that the Crown also claimed the land in question, paid the amount of the purchase-money, which had been settled by arbitration at 5,373*l.*, into Court, under section 76 of the Lands Clauses Act, to "the account of H. Reeve, as lord of the Manor of Lowestoft, or other the party or parties interested." The company also arranged to satisfy the claim of the Crown, if it should be established.

On the 28th of February, 1883, Mr. Reeve presented a petition, asking that the money in Court might be paid out to him.

On the 6th of March, 1883, the Attorney-General filed an information against Mr. Reeve to establish the title of the Crown to the pieces of land in question, on the ground that they had been originally below high-water mark, and had been left dry by the recession of the sea.

On the 9th of March, 1883, the petition was heard by Kay, J., who ordered it to stand over until the information had been disposed of.

Against this order Mr. Reeve appealed.

Hemming, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for the appellant.—This money was not paid in under section 69; but under section 76, and by section 79, the party in possession is to be deemed the owner of the land. I was the party in possession. The company took the land from me; and, as against the company, I am entitled to have my title argued and decided on this application. The Act does not touch the Crown at all, and they cannot be brought here. The company ought to have negotiated with the Crown and have taken the title from them, and that would have enabled me to interfere and claim payment to be made to me.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—How can the Court give you the money without hearing the Crown?]

Under section 79 possession is prima facie evidence of title. I was in possession, and am entitled to fight out this question in the absence of the Crown.

[BAGGALLAY, L.J.—That section says the Court may make such other order as to the Court shall seem fit. The Court hears of this other claim, and thinks fit that this petition shall stand over until the information has been decided.]

I submit that, as between myself and the company, I am entitled to have this question decided now. At any rate, I am entitled, under section 78, until my title is disproved, to have the dividends on the fund in Court paid out to me.

Kekewich, Q.C., and Smart, for the company, were not called upon.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The question involved in this appeal is, in my opinion, perfectly clear. The appellant, at the time of the formation of a portion of this railway, was, or alleged himself to be, the owner of certain land in the neighbourhood of Lowestoft, required by the railway company for the purposes of their undertaking. The 76th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act provides that, under certain circumstances, when land is purchased or taken for the purposes of a railway, the purchase-money—when the amount of it has been ascertained in the manner pointed out in the Act—may be paid into Court. That takes place where the parties refuse to convey, where the owner cannot be found, or where the owner being found, a title is not shewn to the land to the satisfaction of the company. In any one of those three cases the company have the power to pay the assessed value of the land into Court, and thereupon they acquire a right to take and use the land for the purposes of the railway. In the present case, Mr. Reeve, the appellant, alleges himself to have been the owner of the land so taken; but the land so taken was, at some previous period of the history of Lowestoft, a portion of the foreshore—at any rate, a claim is set up on the part of the Crown to the land so taken, on the ground of its having been formerly a portion of the foreshore, even if it is not at the present time a portion of the foreshore.

In consequence of the assertion of the right of the Crown to the land, the title in Mr. Reeve was not shewn to the satisfaction of the company; and they thereupon paid the assessed value of the land into Court, under the 76th section of the Act. Thereupon, as he was entitled to do, Mr. Reeve presented a petition to have the fund so paid into Court dealt with under the 78th section. When money has been so paid in, parties can apply, and upon an application by petition in a summary way the Court may order the money to be invested in the public funds, or it may order the distribution of it to the parties making claim to the money or to the land, or the Court may make such other order as the Court may think fit. If the appellant, at the time he presented his petition, had been in a position to prove he had a good title to the land, there would have been direct payment to him; but here the Crown has set up a title to the land. If the party setting up the title had been one of the subjects of the Crown, probably permission would have been given, in some form or other, to serve the petition on the party, and so bring him before the Court; but it is well known that you cannot, under any process under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, bring the Crown into Court as a litigant. Here, previously to the petition having been presented, it was known that the Crown set up a right to this land; and I understand that some arrangement was come to, by virtue of which the Crown gave their sanction to the company entering into possession of the land they took from Mr. Reeve, so that there might be no dispute on that part of the case; and practically that land was taken possession of, partly on payment of money into Court in respect of Mr. Reeve's claim, and partly on payment of money into Court to meet the claim of the Crown. These facts are all brought to the attention of the Judge when the petition has been presented asking for payment to Mr. Reeve; and not only that, but the Court is further informed that an information had been actually filed by the Crown against Mr. Reeve claiming a right to the whole of the foreshore, which claim includes the particular land of which Mr. Reeve asserts himself to be the sole owner. On those circumstances being brought to the attention of the Judge, I do not see what other course he could take than direct the petition to stand over until the information shall have been disposed of.

Then it is said that proceedings by information are sure to be dilatory. We cannot assume that. We must assume that the proceedings on the part of the Crown will be prosecuted with due and proper diligence. If there should be any delay, especially any delay caused by conduct of the railway company, possibly some application might be made with reference to the purchase-money; but unless there is reason to suppose the information will not be brought to a fair hearing in reasonable course of time, it appears to me the Court could not deal with the matter in any other way than that in which it did deal with it. I am of opinion, therefore, that it is convenient to postpone the hearing of the petition until such time as the information shall have been heard, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

COTTON, L.J.—I quite agree. It was hardly contended that the petitioner was at the present moment entitled to have the money paid out to him; but it is said he is entitled at least to have the question, upon which the Judge in the Court below thought the petition ought to stand over, decided under the Lands Clauses Act. I cannot accede to that view. Undoubtedly, in ordinary cases, where the adverse claimant is a person who can be dealt with under the Lands Clauses Act, the Court would direct the petition to be served (when the objection was taken by the railway company) on that adverse claimant, in order to see whether the matter could be decided on the petition. But here we are dealing with a claimant who cannot be brought in under the Lands Clauses Act. That is practically conceded by the petitioners, because they did not insist that the matter might stand over in order that they might serve the Crown, but they simply desired to go on and fight the question out, not with the Crown but with the railway company. In my opinion that would not be right. The railway company are quite willing to pay the money to whoever is entitled to the land, and it is the person who is entitled to the land who ought to have the money; but the railway company ought not to be compelled in any way to pay the money twice over when all they have to do is to pay the money to the person entitled to the land which they have taken. In my opinion there is no possible reason for making the railway company fight the battle of the Crown in the absence of the Crown, and take upon themselves the burden of shewing that the Crown, who cannot be brought here, are entitled to this land as against the petitioner.

It is said that the petitioner would be under this disadvantage, that in the information he would stand in a less advantageous position than he would occupy under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. That is simply saying this, that the claim is made by one who cannot be brought in under the Lands Clauses Act; and if, as against ordinary claimants, the Lands Clauses Act gives the petitioner an advantage, it does not give him an advantage as against the adverse claimant in the present case, and the Court will not feel it right to throw upon the railway company, which has no interest in the matter one way or the other, the burden of fighting the battle because the Crown is a claimant not bound by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. It was suggested by Mr. Joyce that the information did not raise the question to be decided. I cannot accede to that view. If that were so, it would shew that the Crown is not really claiming this land. The question is, who was entitled to the land at the time the railway company took it; and in that information there is undoubtedly a paragraph relating to this piece of land, saying that this piece of land ought still to follow the title of the foreshore in consequence of the mode in which it has become, not foreshore, but what may be called dry land. That is raised, I think, by the information. Undoubtedly that information involves other questions; but I see no reason, in consequence of that, for throwing upon the railway company the burden which would be thrown upon them, by causing them to litigate the question on behalf of the Crown, or rather in defence of their own pockets. In my opinion they ought not to be put in the position of being bound to pay the money twice over, as they would have to, if, having first paid Mr. Reeve, they had to pay the Crown afterwards when they established their title.

In re The Manor of Lowestoft, App.

I think the course taken was a reasonable course, and I by no means say that it would be unreasonable in all cases to direct the petition to stand over, where the claimant was a subject who could be brought in under the Lands Clauses Act. It might well be that where an action was brought by an adverse claimant the Court might say, "This is a matter which cannot be dealt with under the Lands Clauses Act so well as in the action; let the petition stand over"—even although the party might be brought in—"until the litigation is determined in the ordinary way between the parties to the action." In the present case it is not necessary to determine that point, and I merely mention it in order that it may not be supposed that where the adverse claimant is a subject the matter ought of necessity to be disposed of on a petition under the Act.

Solicitors – W. F. Fearn, for the railway company; Gregory, Rowcliffes & Co., agents for W. H. Reeve, Lowestoft, for petitioner.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BRETT, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
July 10, 13.

GREER v. YOUNG.

Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), section 28—Charge for Costs—"Property recovered or preserved."

The charge to which the Court is empowered, by section 28 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1860, to declare a solicitor entitled for his costs upon the property recovered or preserved, is not confined to the interest in that property of the person who employs the solicitor, unless it is only that particular interest which is recovered or preserved, but extends to the whole property recovered or preserved.

The fact that an infant is interested in property recovered or preserved does not prevent the Court from declaring a charge upon that property; but the infant should be properly represented before the Court at the time when the application for the charging order is made.

Berrie v. Hewitt (39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1) overruled.

This was an appeal from an order of Chitty, J., giving a charging order, under the Solicitors Act, 1860, section 28, for solicitors' costs incurred in this suit upon a fund alleged to have been recovered in the suit.

Messrs. Young and Pollock were trustees under the will of W. J. Greer. Pollock, who was a solicitor, died in 1873, and after his death it was discovered that he had been guilty of great breaches of trust, and was largely indebted to the estate of W. J. Greer. The action of Middleton v. Pollock was brought for the administration of Pollock's estate, and in the course of the administration his co-trustee, Young, carried in a claim for 3,419*l.*, due to Greer's estate, which was allowed.

The present action of Greer v. Young was instituted in 1874 by the widow of W. J. Greer an annuitant, and his daughter, the tenant for life under his will, against Young and the administratrix of Pollock, for a declaration that Young and Pollock's estate were jointly liable for the breach of trust, and that the estate of Greer was entitled to what Young might recover against Pollock's estate in Middleton v. Pollock, and for the appointment of new trustees. By a judgment made in this action on the 11th of February, 1876, it was declared that Young and Mrs. Pollock, as administratrix of Pollock, were liable to repay the 3,419*l.*, and an order was made against Young for repayment, and Fanshawe and Harper were appointed new trustees of the will. These new trustees subsequently obtained payment direct of a dividend, amounting to 1,035*l.*, in the action of Middleton v. Pollock, on the said sum of 3,419*l.*

Shortly afterwards Young became bankrupt, and a small dividend had been declared on his estate.

On the 23rd of November, 1882, Mr. Blyth, who had acted for the plaintiffs in the suit of Greer v. Young, at first in conjunction with two other partners, and subsequently by himself, took out a summons in Greer v. Young, asking for a charging order on the dividends recovered by Fanshawe and Harper, and on all future dividends which might be received by them in Middleton v. Pollock, and in Young's bankruptcy, for his costs in Greer v. Young, which amounted to 254*l.*

Chitty, J., made the order in chambers, and the trustees moved to discharge it; but Chitty, J., made an order that the solicitors were entitled to a charge upon all funds recovered in the suit of Greer v. Young, including the dividends which had been paid, or might become payable, to the trustees Fanshawe and Harper in the suit of Middleton v. Pollock, and in the bankruptcy proceedings of the defendant Young, for the costs as between solicitor and client properly incurred in the recovery of the trust funds by means of this suit, and that the trustees should pay the costs, when taxed, out of the sum of 1,035*l.* in their hands.

There was no allegation of any fraudulent conduct or intention on the part of Young.

The trustees appealed.

Whitehorne, Q.C., and Underhill, for the appellants.—The order is wrong, for two reasons—first, the Solicitors Act gives the Court no power to charge property belonging to an infant; and, secondly, the dividends received by the trustees from Pollock's estate were not recovered or preserved in this action at all.

The statute only gives a charge on the property of the person who employs the solicitor—Berrie v. Howitt (1), In re Keane (2) and Emden v. Carte (3)—and the persons who employed the solicitors here were the plaintiffs, and their respective interests can be charged, and to that extent we do not dispute the order; but, so far as it affects the interest of the infants, it cannot stand. Infants cannot employ solicitors, and it has been decided that the Act does not apply to infants—see Bonsor v. Bradshaw (4) and In re Keane (2). In the case of an infant a solicitor cannot enforce his claim for costs under the Act; he must establish it in an action—Pritchard v. Roberts (5).

[BOWEN, L.J., referred to Bulley v. Bulley (6).]

But there the solicitor had been employed by the defendant, the trustee who represented the whole estate for all purposes.

The employment of the solicitor is an essential condition precedent to his obtaining a charge; any other construction might have the effect of enabling strangers to institute actions, and then, if property is recovered, enforcing charges against that property.

No doubt, if an action is commenced on behalf of infants by a next friend, the solicitor employed by the next friend will, by a roundabout way, obtain payment out of the infants' property; and that was Pritchard v. Roberts (5); but that was not the case here.

Then, secondly, the fund here charged, which almost entirely represents the divi-

(1) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1.

(2) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 617; Law Rep. 12 Eq. 115.

(3) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 371; Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 311.

(4) 4 Giff. 260; 7 Jur. N.S. 231; 10 W.R. 481; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 159.

(5) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 129; Law Rep. 17 Eq. 222.

(6) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 841; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 479, 488.

dends received from Pollock's estate, is not property recovered or preserved in this action at all. The dividends were paid direct to the new trustees. This action was commenced with full knowledge of the action of Middleton v. Pollock and of the state of Young's affairs.

They also referred to and commented upon Bailey v. Birchall (7), Twynam v. Porter (8), Scholefield v. Lockwood (9) and Pinkerton v. Easton (10).

Warrington, for the respondents, was called upon on the second point alone.—I submit that all the property has been recovered or preserved in this action within the meaning of the section. The Act must be construed liberally, and the judgment obtained in this action was necessary for the proper administration of the funds, even if the dividends themselves were recovered in another suit. This case falls within Scholefield v. Lockwood (9) and Catlow v. Catlow (11), in which latter case the solicitor was held entitled to a charge for his costs of an action of detinue brought by his client, upon funds which were really recovered, not by that action, but by a totally distinct action for administration brought by one of the defendants in the detinue action against the plaintiff in that action. But the property, if not "recovered," has at least been preserved in this action by the appointment of the new trustees.

[COTTON, L.J.—Do you make any suggestion by the claim that Young, unless prevented, meant to do away with the property?]

No. But the appointment of new trustees is an act protective of the property.

In Pinkerton v. Easton (10), although the decree directed the appointment of a new trustee, it does not appear that any was appointed; and in Bailey v. Birchall (7) an order for the appointment of a receiver was held to have constituted a preservation of the property within the section. At all events, the solicitors are entitled to a charge upon all that may have been or may be recovered from Young's estate.

(7) 2 Hem. & M. 371.

(8) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 30; Law Rep. 11 Eq. 181.

(9) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 232; Law Rep. 7 Eq. 83.

(10) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 878; Law Rep. 16 Eq. 490.

(11) Law Rep. 2 C.P. D. 362.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case Young and Pollock were joint trustees of the will of W. J. Greer. Pollock committed breaches of trust whereby the trust property was lost, and his estate has since been administered in the action of Middleton v. Pollock. Young carried in a claim in the administration of Pollock's estate for 3,419*l.*, which was the amount due from Pollock to Greer's estate, and a dividend was declared on that claim. For those breaches of trust Young, although not morally guilty, was liable as if they had been committed by himself, whereupon this action was brought by the testator's wife and daughter, and conducted by the solicitors who are now asking for the intervention of the Court against Young and others for relief as against the breaches of trust for which Young was liable. The relief which would be obtained in that action would be a judgment by which Young, in respect of those breaches of trust, would be declared liable to make good the money lost to the trust. No judgment in that action could assist any one in obtaining dividends on Pollock's estate; it was not necessary for that purpose; and the dividends on that estate would have been recovered whether the action of Greer v. Young had been brought or not. But everything recovered in that action will be for the benefit of the infants entitled in remainder, who were infants when the judgment was given, and are now infants.

Under these circumstances the solicitor applies to the Court for a charging order on the property recovered by reason of his exertions, and has obtained an order from Mr. Justice Chitty, which charges, not only the fund which has been recovered from Young's estate, but also the dividends which have been and may be recovered from Pollock's estate. The question is whether that order can stand.

It has been argued elaborately that, even assuming that by reason of the exertion of this solicitor dividends had been recovered from Pollock's estate in this action, and that the infants would ultimately get the benefit of the dividends as well as of the action against Young, yet, because the funds recovered and sought to be charged go to persons who are now, and at the time of the charge being made were, infants, therefore the order could not be made. It was argued that the solicitor must be employed by the person whose property is sought to be charged; and it was said that that of itself would shew that anything recovered for an infant could not be charged, because a solicitor could not be employed by an infant. That is true. It is admitted that, although the infant did not employ a solicitor, but some one did on his behalf, if on attaining twenty-one the infant approved of what had been done, the order could be made, but that it could not be made while he was an infant.

The whole question depends on the meaning of section 28 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act. I take the view of the theory of the Act which was enunciated by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the case cited of Bulley v. Bulley (6). I do not accept the idea of salvage as being an accurate analogy in all respects; but I agree that the fundamental theory of the section is the idea that what has been recovered by the action of the solicitor is to be treated as if it were salvage—I do not say marine salvage—and to be paid for on the theory that a salvage service has been rendered. And in the case of Pinkerton v. Easton (10) the Lord Chancellor, without using the actual word "salvage," uses expressions which describe all the theory of salvage. He says, "The Legislature has given, not a charge, but a power, to the Court to create a charge for a solicitor's costs upon property recovered or preserved, when meritorious services of the solicitor have resulted in such recovery or preservation." You cannot more accurately describe the doctrine of salvage. Salvage consists of "meritorious services resulting in recovery or preservation."

Those services are not by virtue of any contract; they are wholly independent of contract—contract does away with the notion of salvage. The whole doctrine of salvage depends on "something in danger saved by meritorious services"; and if that is the case, it is immaterial that an infant cannot employ a solicitor; it is immaterial whether the person whose property is recovered is the person employing the solicitor or not. Of course it is not to be supposed that the Court would allow a solicitor to go in as a mere volunteer, and bring an action and obtain a charge for his costs; it is sufficient if any person interested has bona fide employed him. He must be a solicitor, but there is nothing in the Act which says that he must be employed by, in the sense of being the solicitor of, the person whose property is preserved or recovered; but if by the action, and by reason of the employment of the solicitor, property has been preserved or recovered of anybody, then I think such employment and agency, on the doctrine of salvage, enables the Court to give a charge to the solicitor on the property preserved or recovered. It is difficult to imagine property being recovered by a solicitor unless he is in some way employed in the suit.

Whether the property was or not recovered or preserved by reason of any particular suit is stated by the Lord Chancellor to be a question of fact—and so it is; but it is not a question of fact in the sense that it can be submitted to a jury, because it depends on a question of law which the Judge must decide.

But the moment the Court has come to the conclusion that the property has been preserved by reason of the suit, it is no objection that the solicitor was not employed by the person to whom the property recovered belonged; and it is no objection that the person whose property is recovered or preserved could not employ a solicitor. Therefore the fact that the person was an infant at the time that the order was made is no objection to the order being made.

I do not, however, think that the order could be made upon the infant's property unless the infant has been properly represented at the time the order has been applied for; but in this case the infants were properly represented by the trustees, who were heard in opposition to the order.

The second point is, assuming that the infancy of the children is no objection, are we prepared to say as a matter of fact that this suit, by reason of the exertions in the suit in which alone the solicitor was engaged, resulted in the recovery or preservation of the fund that is obtained from the dividends on Pollock's estate?

The suit of Greer v. Young is a suit which could only result in obtaining from the estate of Young compensation for the loss incurred by the breach of trust of Pollock; and, so far as anything has been recovered from Young's estate, I think that this suit is an action in which that has been recovered within the meaning of the section.

But it is impossible to say that any part of the dividends on Pollock's estate has been "recovered or preserved" in the suit of Greer v. Young. It is suggested that property has been preserved in this way—that a new trustee has been appointed in the place of Young, Young being a bankrupt. It might have been urged, and perhaps successfully, if Young had been a fraudulent trustee, and it could be shewn that by his removal the dividends recovered from Pollock's estate came into the hands of the present trustees, which would never have come if he had not been removed, that the dividends were recovered in this action; but there is nothing to shew that Young was fraudulent, nothing to induce any one to say that if money had come into his hands he would have misappropriated it. It is not brought within the case I have suggested; therefore the order, so far as it affects to charge any of the dividends which have been received from Pollock's estate, or which may hereafter be received from his estate, must be set aside; the order may stand so far as it charges anything that may be recovered from Young's estate. But that is so small a part of the order that, although the order stands to that extent, the appeal substantially succeeds, and the appellants are entitled to the costs.

As regards the case of Catlow v. Catlow (11) I am not prepared to say that on the facts of that case the decision was one with which I should not agree.

COTTON, L.J.—The substantial point of litigation on this appeal is that which refers to an order directing payment of costs out of a fund recovered from the estate of Pollock. Section 28 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1860, enables the Court to make a charge in favour of a solicitor on property recovered or preserved by litigation in which he is employed; and, in my opinion, it cannot be said that the fund recovered from the estate of Pollock has been in any way recovered or preserved by this action of Greer v. Young. Before that action was commenced, a proof had been carried in by Young in Middleton v. Pollock, and, under that proof, the amount of the fund, so far as that estate was sufficient, would have been recovered without this action. But it is said that when recovered it would have got into Young's estate, and that a new suit was necessary, and that in that suit the fund has been preserved. That is a fallacy; it has not been preserved within the meaning of section 28.

If it had been suggested in the pleadings, and proved as a fact, that Young, if he had received the dividends when paid, would have misappropriated them, it might have been said that that property was preserved in this action; but there is no suggestion to that effect; and it is wrong to say that this action, which merely at the time was an action to obtain a declaration of Young's liability in respect of his co-trustee's breaches of trust, is a suit in which this property was recovered or preserved within the meaning of the section.

The suit was instituted for a different object; and I will not say that the suit was improper. But as the proof by means of which this fund has been recovered was carried in before Greer v. Young was instituted, and as that suit was unnecessary for that purpose, and no loss of the fund has been avoided by reason of the suit, this property cannot be said to have been recovered or preserved by it.

There is another point. If anything has been recovered from Young's estate, that would be property recovered in this action; it is an action which declared the liability of Young for the default of his co-trustee, and it was necessary that that liability should be established; and anything recovered from Young by way of dividend or otherwise will be recovered by reason of this action which established his liability and directed proof against his estate.

Greer v. Young, App.

I now come to the point which has been elaborately argued, which is that, assuming the fund to have been recovered by reason of this action within the meaning of the section, the Court has no power to make a charging order upon it. The argument on this objection took two lines—one that the Court had no power to make a charging order in favour of a solicitor, except upon the property of the person who employed him. That is contrary to the section; the section does not say it is to be on the property recovered, &c., of the person who employed the solicitor, but on the property recovered or preserved; and to construe it in the way in which it has been argued that it should be construed would be to contradict the Act.

Undoubtedly the quantum of the interest of the person who employed the solicitor is an important element for the purpose of considering what has been recovered or preserved. As a general rule, what is recovered or preserved is the interest of the plaintiff or defendant; and it is most material to look to the interest of the defendant in considering what has been preserved; and in considering what it was that has been recovered it is most material to see what the interest of the plaintiff was—that is, to see whether the fund recovered or preserved by the suit was the whole fund, or only the particular interest of the plaintiff or defendant. But to say that the charge is to be only a charge on the plaintiff's interest, although he may have recovered a fund for all the parties, would be wholly inconsistent with the section.

It has been argued that a different construction would encourage strangers to institute actions respecting the property of others in which they have no interest, with a view to obtaining a charge upon that property for the costs. But I have yet to learn how a stranger can bring an action to recover property in which he has no interest.

In the next place, it was said that in the present case infants are entitled to the property recovered or preserved, and no charge can be given upon infants' property. As a matter of principle, I fail to see the force of this objection. When infants are interested in funds in administration actions, it is not unusual to order payment out of the fund in which infants, and even unborn infants, are interested.

I think a good deal of argument has turned on cases where the Courts have held that a solicitor who acts for an infant in a suit is not really employed by the infant. Here there is no such difficulty. The solicitor was undoubtedly properly employed in this suit; and all we have to decide is, not by whom he was employed, but whether he has recovered or preserved the infants' property, and whether it is right for that reason to give him a charge upon it.

The mere fact that there is an infant interested does not, in my opinion, prevent the Court giving a charge, if otherwise it would be right so to do. It is true that the infant should be properly represented when the application for the order to charge is made; but when the order was made, trustees appeared on behalf of the infants, and the objections to this application were argued on their behalf.

Therefore, in my opinion, the solicitor is entitled to a charge on any funds which may be recovered from Young's estate, but not on the rest of the property.

BOWEN, L.J. — I am of the same opinion. I agree that the only charge to which the solicitor is entitled is a charge on what may be recovered from Young's estate, and that the funds recovered from Pollock's estate were not funds "recovered or preserved," in the meaning of the section, by this action.

I do not think that any light can be thrown on this case by considering other cases in other litigations the facts of which were different from those in the present case; but I only desire to add a few words on this section, because there has been a good deal of argument upon it—and, allowing that the construction we put upon it covers only a small part of the fund, it is necessary for the purpose of charging that amount of property to put a construction upon the section.

There seems to me to be this difficulty in Mr. Whitehorne's way, and that is, that he is endeavouring to read into the Act words which are not there. The words of the section are plain, and, if they are read in their natural sense, they mean that a charge can be made on the property of an infant, whether the infant had anything to do with the suit or not, or whether he employed a solicitor or not.

Greer v. Young, App.

The section is a very general one, it applies in terms to every case where a solicitor has been employed. In general terms it enables the Court to give a charge, not merely on the interest of the plaintiff, but on all the property which has been recovered, whether for the special benefit of the plaintiff only, or of the plaintiff in addition to others. It is a salvage section. The solicitor employed lawfully in an action is a salvor who has recovered or preserved something in the hour of danger by his work and labour, and he is entitled to a reward; into whatever hands the property may fall, it is charged with the salvage.

Mr. Whitehorne argued that because the appellants are infants, therefore their interest ought not to be bound, principally because they were no parties to the employment of the solicitor; but the words of the section are not confined to cases where the person whose property is recovered is himself the employer of the solicitor.

Take the case of a remainderman. Is there any reason why the property recovered for the benefit of a remainderman should not be charged merely because he was no party to the action? It may be that he could not be made a party, he may have known nothing of the action being instituted, or he may have had no power to interfere with the prosecution of the plaintiff's rights. Still, if the property has been recovered for him in that action, there is nothing in the words of the section which prevents the Court from making a salvage charge upon it. If it is true that the property would be charged whether the remainderman employed the solicitor or not, it follows as a logical conclusion that the charge will bind property in the hands of an infant. If being an adult he could not have prevented the imposition of a charge, even if he had no notice of or part in the action, I do not see for what reason he should not be bound, although an infant.

Two further points ought to be noticed. In the first place, the section only gives a discretionary power to the Court, it does not give the solicitor an absolute right to the charge, but only the power to ask the Court in the exercise of its discretion to make the charge.

In the next place, I also agree in thinking that the person against whose property a charge when made will operate should have the opportunity of being heard in opposition to it at some time or another when the charging order is applied for. It is not necessary to decide at what time, for here the infants were heard before the order was made.

Therefore I think that the order, so far as it relates to the funds recovered from Young's estate, is authorised by the section, and must stand; but that as regards the other property recovered from Pollock's estate, it was wrong, as that property was not recovered by the merits of the solicitor. Therefore the appeal succeeds to the greater extent, and I agree that the appellants are entitled to the costs of the appeal.

I do not think that it is necessary to consider the decisions which have been referred to, but I think that their general current is in favour of the liberal construction treating the solicitor as a salvor.

Bulley v. Bulley (6) and Pinkerton v. Easton (10), although they do not decide the exact point, justify me in saying that the authority of the High Court is in favour of our construction.

Solicitors—Wilkins & Fanshawe, for appellants; F. Dutton, for respondents.

NORTH, J. 1883. July 23, 24, 30.

In re SMITH. GREEN v. SMITH.

Bankruptcy—Undischarged Bankrupt—Close of Bankruptcy—Death of Bankrupt within Three Years—After-acquired Property—Rights of Old Creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 12 and 54.

S., a bankrupt, died in June, 1881, having since the close of his bankruptcy (in December, 1880) acquired property more than sufficient to pay the debts which he had contracted since that date. He never obtained an order of discharge. An action

In re Smith.

having been brought by one of the new creditors to administer his estate,—Held, that the surplus, after paying these debts, belonged to the administratrix, and was not applicable to the payment of the debts of the old creditors.

Further consideration.

On the 30th of October, 1877, Richard Smith was adjudicated a bankrupt.

On the 10th of December, 1880, an order was made by the Court of Bankruptcy closing the bankruptcy.

On the 15th of June, 1881, Richard Smith died intestate. He never obtained an order of discharge.

On the 2nd of December, 1881, the action (an ordinary creditor's administration action) was commenced; and on the 20th of December, 1881, the usual administration decree was made.

On the 19th of February, 1883, Messrs. Bell, Nott & Co. (who had proved in the bankruptcy for a sum of 2,193*l.*) paid into Court, to a separate account, to the credit of the action, a sum of 238*l.*—being a sum admitted to be due from them to the bankrupt in respect of certain cotton transactions with him since the date of the bankruptcy: see the judgment of Fry, J. (1).

It appeared from the chief clerk's certificate that the debts of the plaintiff, and the other creditors of the bankrupt, contracted since the bankruptcy amounted to 340*l.*; that the admitted claims of the old creditors under the bankruptcy (including the said claim of Messrs. Bell, Nott & Co.) amounted to 6,600*l.*, upon which they had received a dividend of 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound under the bankruptcy; and that there was a sum of about 600*l.* in Court, representing personal estate, acquired subsequently to the close of the bankruptcy, paid into Court by the defendant, the administratrix.

It thus appeared that the after-acquired personal estate was more than sufficient to pay the costs of the action and the new creditors in full, and to leave a surplus.

A question now arose, on further consideration, whether this surplus belonged to the old creditors or to the administratrix.

(1) Ante, p. 411; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 586.

Yate Lee, for the plaintiff and the old creditors.—The question is, how far the death of the bankrupt within three years after the close of the bankruptcy, without having obtained his discharge (Bankruptcy Act, 1869, section 54), affects the rights of the old creditors to have this surplus divided amongst them.

Under the old Insolvent Debtors Acts a creditor could maintain a suit in equity, after the death of an insolvent debtor, for the purpose of realising his after-acquired property—Barton v. Tattersall (2), Ward v. Painter (3) and Ex parte Kelly (4). The latter case conclusively establishes the jurisdiction of the Court to distribute the after-acquired assets of a bankrupt, in an administration suit, after his death. He also referred to Galsworthy v. Durrant (5), the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 47, and the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and E. Brodie Cooper, for the administratrix.—The decisions under the old Insolvent Debtors Acts have no application. In Barton v. Tattersall (2) and Ward v. Painter (3) judgment had been entered up during the lifetime of the debtor. That gave the assignee a lien on the after-acquired property. But if, through the carelessness of the assignee, no judgment was entered up during the debtor's lifetime, the creditors could have no lien against the after-acquired property, as no judgment could be entered up after the death of the debtor—Harden v. Forsyth (6).

The old creditors can have no remedy against the after-acquired property, "except in manner directed by the Act" (section 12). The right to take the debtor's after-acquired property is "not one of those remedies"—In re Pettit's Estate (7).

They have no remedy, unless they can bring themselves within section 54; and that section does not apply to the property

(2) 1 Russ. & M. 237; 1 Tam. 378.

(3) 5 Myl. & Cr. 298.

(4) 47 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 30; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 161.

(5) 29 Beav. 277; 2 De Gex, F. & J. 466; 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 402.

(6) 1 Q.B. Rep. 177; 10 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 132.

(7) 45 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 63; Law Rep. 1 Ch. D. 478.

In re Smith.

of a debtor who dies within three years from the close of the bankruptcy.

[NORTH, J., referred to Ex parte Welchman (8).]

Yate Lee, in reply.—We are not seeking any remedy against "property" vested in the trustee under the bankruptcy; but only against property acquired after the close of the bankruptcy.

[NORTH, J., referred to Ex parte The Lancaster Banking Corporation (9).]

Judgment reserved.

NORTH, J. (on July 30).—The point which arises in this case is, so far as I am aware, a new one. The surplus is claimed, by the administratrix of the intestate on the one hand, and by the old creditors on the other. In order properly to raise this question, I think that a summons should be taken out by Messrs. Bell, Nott & Co. (who are creditors under the bankruptcy, and appear by the same solicitors and counsel as the plaintiff) asking to have the surplus divided among the old creditors. The summons will be adjourned into Court, and treated as before me now on further consideration; and the order will be made on the summons, as well as on the further consideration. The question is, to whom does this surplus belong? The material sections are the 12th, 15th, 47th, 48th, 49th and 54th sections of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Section 52 and rule 125 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, provide for the subsequent application of such part of the bankrupt's estate as has not been realised at the close of the bankruptcy. [His Lordship, after reading sections 47, 48 and 49, continued:] Then section 15 provides that the property of the bankrupt divisible amongst his creditors shall comprise (inter alia) the following particulars: "All such property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or may be acquired by or devolve on him during its continuance." And under these sections it has been decided that property which has been acquired by a bankrupt after the bankruptcy has been closed, but before he has obtained his discharge, belongs to the bankrupt individually, and not to his trustee or his creditors—In re Pettit's Estate (7).

The 12th section provides that, where a debtor shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, no creditor to whom he is indebted in respect of any debt provable in the bankruptcy shall have any remedy against his property or person in respect of such debt except in manner directed by the Act. I see no reason, and none was suggested in argument, why the remedy against "the property of the bankrupt," given by the 54th section, is not a remedy against the property of the bankrupt within the express exception of the 12th section. Now section 54 is as follows: "Where a person who has been made bankrupt has not obtained his discharge, then, from and after the close of his bankruptcy, the following consequences shall ensue:—(sub-s. 1) No portion of a debt provable under the bankruptcy shall be enforced against the property of the person so made bankrupt until the expiration of three years from the close of the bankruptcy." The object and effect of this section are clearly stated by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the case of Ex parte The Lancaster Banking Corporation (9). His Lordship says: "I find the words of the Act of Parliament clear that debts provable under the bankruptcy shall for the period of three years not be enforced against the debtor. The reason of that is perfectly obvious. If I were to seek for a reason, it is that, during the three years, by the exercise of his industry, he may pursue his calling, whatever it is, free from the pressure of debts existing at the time of the bankruptcy or provable under the bankruptcy. If during that time he pays ten shillings in the pound, which he would not be able to do unless he were a free man, he shall have his discharge. If the bankruptcy was not closed, all that he acquired during the three years would be by law vested in the trustee; but the law alters that, and says that after the close of the bankruptcy and for three years thereafter the debtor shall be a free man. All that he earns, gains or acquires in any way shall be his. If he is honest enough out of what he acquires, and if it is enough for the purpose, to pay his creditors ten shillings in the pound, he is to have his discharge; but if he fails to do that, the second provision of the 54th section comes into effect." The mode of granting an order of discharge after the close of the bankruptcy is the subject of General Rules 172–5. The effect of these rules is pointed out by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the same judgment. He says: "Then it is said that the rules point out a different course of procedure. The rules are perfectly consistent with the statute. The rules recognise the fact that, the bankruptcy being closed, for three years the creditors are to keep their hands off the bankrupt. The statute gives him a privilege during those three years, and the opportunity of paying ten shillings in the pound; but if he does not avail himself of that opportunity, then, under the 54th section, a creditor who has proved his debt is a judgment creditor, entitled to enforce his judgment against any property of the bankrupt upon the terms mentioned in the statute." The debtor in the present case died long before the end of three years from the close of the bankruptcy.

(8) Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 48.

(9) 48 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 89; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 776.

In re Smith.

Now it is obvious that the word "property" is, in the section I have just read, used in two totally different meanings. The property vested in or acquired by the bankrupt before the close of the bankruptcy has already been devoted to the creditors in a different way, and is referred to in this section as the source from which dividends to an amount of less than ten shillings in the pound have already been paid. The property protected for three years by this section can only be that acquired subsequently to the close of the bankruptcy, as the bankrupt cannot have any other property capable of or requiring protection.

[His Lordship, after reading sub-section 2 of section 54, continued:] The mode of giving effect thereto is regulated by General Rules 183–5. It is obvious that the "property" there referred to, as that against which execution could issue, is that acquired by the debtor after the close of the bankruptcy. That sub-section does not affect the present case, for the three years have not yet expired; and, if they had, the section could only be put in force with the sanction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and no such sanction could be given after the death of the bankrupt—see Ex parte Kelly (4).

There is not any remedy, that I am aware of, given or directed by the Act in favour of creditors under a bankruptcy (other than creditors whose rights are preserved under section 49) against property acquired by a bankrupt after its close, except as provided by section 54. It appears to me that the scheme of the Act was to give the creditors certain rights against the bankrupt and his property, present and future; but, subject to the exercise of the rights so created, to leave him a free man, and to leave his future property under his own control. The words of section 12 seem to me clear upon the point; and if it had been intended that the creditors should have the additional remedy of being able after the bankrupt's death to prove in or commence a suit to administer his estate, I think the Act would have said so.

In Ex parte Williams (10) a liquidating debtor, whose liquidation had been closed, presented a second petition for liquidation; and Vice-Chancellor Bacon decided that no notice of the meeting under the second petition need be given to the unpaid creditors under the first liquidation, as they had no rights against or interest in the debtor's after-acquired property, except under the provisions of section 54; and again, in In re Pettit's Estate (7), the Vice-Chancellor pointed out that the subsisting remedies of creditors under a bankruptcy, after its close, against the bankrupt and his property are defined by the Act and Rules. The observations of Lord Justice Fry in deciding a different point in this very case are strongly confirmatory of the same view of the construction of the Act.

Counsel for the plaintiff relied upon Barton v. Tattersall (2) and Ward v. Painter (3) as shewing that, after the death of a person who had become insolvent under the Insolvent Debtors Acts, the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to administer his estate still continued. But, as pointed out by the Lord Chancellor in Ward v. Painter (3), those Acts

(10) 44 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 132; Law Rep. 20 Eq. 743.

In re Smith.

did not destroy or release the debts of the insolvent; and means were provided for giving effect to the rights of the creditors against his after-acquired property by requiring, under one Act, judgment to be entered up; under another a recognisance to be given; and, under a third, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment to be signed—these means to be put in force under the order of the Court. In the two cases above mentioned, I gather that judgment had been entered up, but no order made authorising execution under the judgment, in the lifetime of the insolvent. The judgment itself, however, would be sufficient to give an existing charge or security upon the debtor's property in respect of debts not extinguished by the insolvency; which, if the debts were still subsisting, would warrant an administration decree in respect of such debts. That the existence of the judgment was material to establish the right of the creditor in the insolvency against the administratrix of the insolvent is shewn by Holsgrove v. Hedges (11). There an insolvent, upon obtaining his discharge, assigned all the property to which he should become entitled to his assignees, and executed a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, in pursuance of the provisions of the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57. Judgment was never entered up during the life of the insolvent. It was held that the personal representative, and not the assignees, was entitled to the after-acquired property. Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in giving judgment, said he "considered that the entering up of judgment was necessary for completing the title of the assignees; and, as that had not been done before the death of the insolvent, the personal representative" was entitled to the after-acquired property. Again, in both Thomas v. Pinnell (12) and In re Moylan (13), a warrant of attorney to confess judgment had been signed by an insolvent, who died, having subsequently acquired assets, but judgment had never been entered up; and in each case the Master of the Rolls held that the rights of the creditors were confined to what the Acts gave them, and that in the absence of such a judgment an unpaid creditor of the insolvent had no remedy for his debt, and could not file a bill to administer the insolvent's estate. In Galsworthy v. Durrant (5) judgment had been entered up, and the Lord Chancellor (Lord Campbell) followed Barton v. Tattersall (2) and Ward v. Painter (3), though obviously with some reluctance. So, again, in Ex parte The Lancaster Banking Corporation (9), Vice-Chancellor Bacon recognised the fact that it was the judgment which gave the creditors of the insolvent a charge on the property he might afterwards acquire. Ex parte Welchman (8) was the case of an insolvent under the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, under which no judgment was necessary. That Act provided (section 9) for the vesting of the after-acquired property of the insolvent in the assignee, on his "filing a copy of his claim, served upon the insolvent personally." After his discharge the insolvent became entitled to a share of a trust fund under a settlement. He died, and a suit having been instituted to execute the trusts of the settlement, his share was carried over to a separate account. The assignee then filed a copy of his claim, but, of course, could not serve any copy on the deceased insolvent; and then obtained a rule from the London Bankruptcy Court calling on the administratrix to shew cause why the fund should not be transferred to him. The Court of Appeal decided that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction, and the application was dismissed; but it was suggested in the course of the judgment (Barton v. Tattersall (2) having been cited) that the creditors under the insolvency possibly might have filed a bill to have the estate of the deceased insolvent applied in payment of his creditors in a due course of administration. But their right to do so was not before the Court at all; and this right, when it arose for decision, would have been obviously dependent upon the question whether the plaintiffs in such action were creditors of the intestate whose remedies for their debts had not been exhausted.

In the present case I am of opinion that the cases under the Insolvency Acts have not any application; and that the right

(11) 3 Drew. 74; 24 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 456.
(12) 15 Beav. 148.
(13) 16 Beav. 220.

In re Smith.

of the present claimants turns upon the language of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, alone.

I ought to refer again to the case of Ex parte Kelly (4). That case was, in some respects, very like the present. Kelly was a creditor of Simmons, who was adjudicated bankrupt. The bankruptcy was closed, but no order of discharge was obtained. The bankrupt died more than three years after the close of the bankruptcy, leaving considerable property. After his death, Kelly applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an order (under section 54, sub-section 2) declaring that his debt "should be deemed to be a subsisting debt in the nature of a judgment debt," and be enforced against the property of the deceased bankrupt in the hands of his executors, or that Kelly might be at liberty to take proceedings in the Chancery Division to administer the bankrupt's estate. The motion was refused by the Registrar, and an appeal was dismissed with costs by the Court of Appeal, on the ground that nothing could be done, under section 54, after the bankrupt's death. In the judgment, however, Lord Justice James is reported to have used these words: "In Ward v. Painter (3) the question was whether a suit could be maintained in the Court of Chancery. I do not see why you should not commence an administration action without any leave from the Court of Bankruptcy." Counsel for the creditors relied strongly on those words, and any remark of that eminent Judge is deserving of careful consideration. But it is obvious, on reading the whole case, and especially the portion of the argument immediately preceding the judgment, that the observations relied on were merely disposing of that part of the motion which asked for leave to commence an administration action. The question whether such action would succeed or fail was not in any way under consideration; and the remarks above mentioned meant no more than this, that no leave from the Court of Bankruptcy was necessary before commencing an administration action; and the application for such leave was, therefore, refused.

The question has been fully argued before me. I have, for the reasons above given, come to the conclusion that the creditors under this bankruptcy are, under the 12th section of the Act, expressly precluded from any remedy against the property of the bankrupt, except in manner directed by the Act; and that this section applies to after-acquired property, as well as to that which vested in the trustee, because the 54th section does give a remedy against after-acquired property, in case the course prescribed by the Act is followed. The course prescribed does not include the carrying in of a proof by such a creditor in an administration action; and such proof appears to me clearly to be a "remedy" against the property of the bankrupt, and, as such, forbidden by section 12.

Although it is not necessary to decide the point, I am further of opinion that, under the Act of 1869, these creditors would not have any right to administer the bankrupt's estate in Chancery, even if the bankrupt had lived more than three years after the close of the bankruptcy, and the creditors had, in his lifetime, obtained the sanction of the Court to enforce their debts under section 54.

Under these circumstances, I must direct the payment of the balance to the administratrix of the bankrupt.

One other matter remains to be mentioned. The order directing Messrs. Bell, Nott & Co. to pay in the sum of 238*l.* to a separate account, reserved to them liberty to apply—see (1). They now waive all right to apply under the leave so reserved. The order must recite this, and direct this sum to be placed to the general credit of the action.

Solicitors—G. L. P. Eyre & Co., agents for Garnett & Tarbet, Liverpool, for plaintiff; J. J. & C. J. Allen, agents for George Smith, Tunstall, for defendant.

BACON, V.C.
1883.
July 6.

HARRISON v. LEUTNER.

Practice—Costs—Higher or Lower Scale—Fraudulent Misrepresentation—Discretion of Taxing Master—Additional Rules, August, 1875, Order VI. rules 1 and 3—Judicature Act, 1875, Appendix A. Part II. s. 4.

An action against directors and a company by a shareholder for rescission of his contract to take shares, on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation, and to recover 40*l. paid for shares, with interest, damages and costs, having been dismissed with costs,*—Held, that the Taxing Master had exercised a proper discretion in taxing the costs on the higher scale, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff had at the commencement of the action taken out a certificate for the lower scale.

Adjourned summons.

The above action had been brought in the Chancery Division by a shareholder against the directors of the Wreck Recovery Salvage Company, Limited, and the company, in which, after making numerous specific allegations of fraud and misrepresentation, the plaintiff claimed—first, rescission of his contract to take ten A. 10*l.* and ten B. 1*l.* shares in the company; secondly, removal of his name from the register and list of contributories; thirdly, an injunction restraining the company or its liquidator from prosecuting any actions for recovery of the unpaid balance on the said shares; fourthly, a declaration that the defendants were jointly and severally liable to pay to the plaintiff the 40*l.* paid by him in respect of the said shares, with interest, damages and costs, and that the plaintiff might be at liberty to prove in the winding-up for the said sum of 40*l.*, interest, damages and costs.

The plaintiff's statement of claim contained 114 folios, and the action, after a five days' hearing, was dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff, when he issued the writ, took out a certificate for "lower scale" of costs; and several of the defendants took and paid for, on the lower scale, copies of this certificate.

When the defendants' bill of costs went in for taxation the Taxing Master overruled this certificate, and taxed the costs on the higher scale, stating that he could not refer the relief claimed by the plaintiff to any of the definitions in the Additional Rules, August, 1875, Order VI. rule 1, of cases to which the lower scale was applicable.

The plaintiff thereupon took out the present summons to review the Taxing Master's certificate.

Chadwyck Healey, for the summons.—The utmost that could have been recovered in this action, besides damages and costs, was 110*l.*; therefore this was eminently a proper case for taxation on the lower scale. "Fraud" is one of the forms of indorsement of claims chargeable on lower scale as mentioned in Rules of August, 1875, Order VI. rule 1, and Judicature Act, 1875, Appendix A. Part II. s. 4. The fact of the issue of fraud being raised is not sufficient for directing the costs to be taxed on the higher scale—In re Terrell (1). There was nothing special in this action, nor any exceptional skill or labour required to take it out of the rule as to lower scale, for which the plaintiff had on the issuing his writ taken out a certificate.

Fishbourne, for the defendants.—The indorsement on the writ is as long as the claim at the end of the statement of claim, and in the same terms, and in no way follows any of the forms of indorsement given in Appendix A. Part II. s. 4. It is a long and intricate claim. The Court has full discretion, under Order VI. rule 3, to allow costs on the higher scale, even if, strictly, the action is taxable on the lower scale, which I submit it is not—Pooley v. Driver (2). The object of the suit was not limited to 110*l.*, but serious charges were made which the defendants were obliged to meet; this alone—under the old practice—would have entitled us to costs on the higher scale—Grimes v. Harrison (3), The Earl of Stamford v. Dawson (4), and Flockton v. Peake (5).

(1) Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 473.
(2) Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 458.
(3) 27 Beav. 198; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 828.
(4) 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 749; Law Rep. 4 Eq. 352.
(5) 12 W.R. 1023.

Harrison v. Leutner.

Chadwyck Healy replied.

BACON, V.C.—The case here raised is of great importance; for if it is the law that a plaintiff may bring an action to recover 40*l*., and at the same time make all kinds of charges of fraud and misrepresentation, and then by taking out a certificate of lower scale escape the full penalty of costs, I am afraid the present plaintiff's course of proceeding will at once be imitated, and we shall have more of these kinds of actions than we have had before.

The object of these rules was of course to proportion the costs to the magnitude of the action; but Order VI. rule 3, distinctly says that "the Court or Judge may in any case direct the fees set forth in either of the said two columns"—that is, either higher or lower scale—"to be allowed to all or any or either of the parties, and as to all or any part of the costs," thereby giving a wide discretion. Now I find in this action that a number of wholly unfounded charges were made against honest and respectable men by this plaintiff, who claimed to be relieved of certain shares on the ground that he was induced to take them by misrepresentation; and, considering the time it took at the hearing and the nature of the case generally, I am of opinion that the Taxing Master has exercised a very proper discretion under this rule in taxing the costs on the higher scale. This is eminently a case in which the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to slip away without paying the full costs. The summons must be dismissed, and with costs.

Solicitors—G. Whale, for plaintiff; John Ellerton; Johnsons, Upton, Budd & Co.; Blachford & Co.; and Lowless & Co., for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
June 25.

In re WARREN'S SETTLEMENT.

Married Woman—Restraint on Anticipation—Power of Court to remove—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 39.

Section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, confers no general power of removing the restraint on anticipation, but only enables the Court to make binding some particular disposition of her property by a married woman, notwithstanding a restraint on anticipation, if the Court is of opinion that such disposition is beneficial to her.

Application by husband and wife and trustees of a settlement for the removal of the restraint on anticipation for the purpose of rendering the capital of the trust fund—which stood limited upon the death of the survivor of husband and wife in trust for the children of the marriage—available for the benefit of the husband and wife, who were fifty-three and fifty years old respectively, there being no issue of the marriage, refused, chiefly on the ground that the Court ought not to assume that there would be no children, although the parties had been married for twenty-eight years and had never had any children, and there was medical evidence that it was almost, if not entirely, impossible that there could be any issue.

This was an application, by summons, on behalf of Emma Jane, the wife of Charles Henry Warren, asking that such order might be made by the Court binding the interest of Mrs. Warren in the trust funds settled by the indenture of settlement of the 18th of May, 1854 (the settlement made on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Warren), as to the Court might seem fit; and, in particular, that the restraint on anticipation by Mrs. Warren on her life interest in the trust funds might be removed.

By the settlement, certain leasehold properties and other funds were vested in the trustees upon trust (inter alia) as follows:—As to the income to arise from the trust stocks, funds and securities, during the life of Mrs. Warren, to pay the same as it should fall due into the hands of herself, or of such person or persons as she should (but not by way of anticipation) from time to time authorise to receive the same, for her use, and so that she might have and enjoy the same to her separate and inalienable use during her coverture and without power of anticipation; and after her death to pay the income to Mr. Warren, if the survivor, for his life; and after the death of the survivor upon trusts for their children of the marriage as therein mentioned; and, in default of children, for Mr. Warren absolutely.

Mr. Warren had mortgaged his reversionary interest in the fund and property, subject to the trusts of the settlement; and ultimately, by an indenture in 1873, he assigned absolutely the whole of the said reversionary interest to A. C. Thompson; but under the will of A. C. Thompson, who died in June, 1878, Mr. Warren had the option of repurchasing the interest at a price fixed by the testator.

There had been no issue of the marriage. Mrs. Warren had attained fifty years of age, while Mr. Warren was fifty-three years old. They were both in delicate health, Mrs. Warren having suffered for many years from anæmia. Mr. Warren was also incapacitated by ill-health from increasing their income.

There was an affidavit by a surgeon to the effect that Mrs. Warren was in a delicate state of health, and was slowly recovering from a long-continued anæmia; and that, having regard partly to those facts, but more especially to her present age and that of her husband, and to the fact that they had been married for twenty-eight years without having had any children, he stated it as his opinion that it was almost, if not entirely, impossible that Mrs. Warren should now have any children by her said husband. He further stated that, in his opinion, the deprivation of the comforts which the increased income would be able to give her would operate most prejudicially to her health.

The trust property now consisted of certain leasehold houses, of the value of 500*l.* and 830*l.*, Great Indian and Peninsula Railway Stock.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren, with the exception of the income of a sum of 600*l.* East India four per cent. stock, and 425*l.* Scinde, Punjaub and Delhi Railway five per cent. stock, payable to Mrs. Warren under her father's will, were entirely dependent upon the income derived by the trust property.

That income had been recently reduced to the extent of 40*l.* per annum arising from two leasehold houses, the lease having been forfeited; and to the extent of another 40*l.* per annum, from the fact that the trustees had had to borrow money for the purpose of repairing others of the leasehold houses, the loan being repayable by yearly payments of 40*l.*

The intention was, if the restraint were ordered to be removed, to sell the leasehold property, and with the proceeds to repurchase the husband's reversionary interest, so as to enable Mrs. Warren during her life to avail herself of the capital of the trust fund so far as it might be necessary.

The application was refused by Fry, J., but with reluctance, stating that he had no objection to the matter being taken to the Court of Appeal, and he granted his certificate.

The husband and wife and trustees accordingly appealed.

Warrington, for the appellants, offered, in the event of the Court declining to make a general order as asked, to give an undertaking to purchase an annuity for the life of the wife.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I think that the difficulty in this case arises from the fact that the Court cannot assume that it is impossible for this lady to have children, or that she is, within the meaning of the legal phrase, past child-bearing. It may very probably be the case that she will never have any children; but she is only fifty, and has been suffering for a long time from an illness, and it is very possible that she may recover from it, and then she may have children.

On that ground your application must be refused.

In re Warren's Settlement, App.

COTTON, L.J.—We are asked to make an order in this case, which is framed in two ways—binding the interest of the lady in the settlement funds; and, in particular, that the restraint on the anticipation by the lady of her life interest in the trust funds may be removed. But the Court is not given any power to do that. All that the Conveyancing Act authorises the Court to do is, notwithstanding a restraint on anticipation, to bind by an order a disposition of a married woman—that is, if a married woman has made a disposition which the Court thinks for her benefit, the Court makes that particular disposition binding; but the Act did not give the Court power generally to remove the restraint.

Next, the Court is asked to sanction and make binding on a married woman an arrangement whereby she shall assign her life interest in the settled property in a way which is inconsistent with the trusts of the settlement, so as to destroy the settlement as regards the children of the marriage, if there should be any. We are not, in my opinion, justified in assuming that there is no possibility of there being children of the marriage.

The Court has, no doubt, in certain cases allowed funds to be parted with on the ground of a woman being past child-bearing, but in those cases security had been given for the property to be refunded, if necessary. Latterly, the Court has discouraged that sort of arrangement. The Court would be setting a bad example if, in a case like this, it were to sanction any disposition by a married woman which would defeat the interests of any children who might be born.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors—Wilkins, Blyth & Dutton, for all parties.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BRETT, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
July 9.

BUTCHER v. POOLER.

Practice—Partnership Action—Costs of Unsuccessful Claim—Order to pay out of Partnership Estate—Appeal for Costs—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 49—Rules of Court, 1875, Order LV. rule 1.

Where in a partnership action the plaintiff, who had obtained a judgment for taking the accounts of the partnership, took out a summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate, which summons was refused,—Held, that an order that the costs of that summons should nevertheless be paid out of the estate was an order within the discretion of the Court as to costs; that such order did not amount to an order appropriating to the payment of costs a fund not properly attributable to that purpose—within the decision of Jones v. Chennell (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 583; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 492); and that no appeal would lie from that order.

In re Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 233; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 515) distinguished.

By a judgment in the action, dated the 23rd of November, 1876, the Court declared that the partnership between Charles Butcher deceased (husband of plaintiff) and the defendants was dissolved by the death of C. Butcher, and that the goodwill of the business carried on by such partnership ought to be treated as part of the assets of the partnership, and directed the usual accounts, including an account of all dealings and transactions, and an account of the credits, property and effects of the partnership at the death of the said C. Butcher, and of what the same consisted at the date of the judgment, and what was the value thereof including the goodwill of the business; and further consideration was adjourned.

The three partners were interested in equal shares. In taking the accounts under the judgment, in answer to the account of the value, the plaintiff carried in an account in which the interest of a leasehold wharf was set down at 3,565*l.*, of other leasehold premises at 7,576*l.*, and of the goodwill of the business at a sum of 4,600*l.* These items, Nos. 9, 10 and 12 in the account, were the only items in dispute.

The chief clerk, by his certificate, held that the two items 9 and 10 were of no certain value, and put the value of the goodwill at 3,661*l.* 4*s.* The plaintiff brought a summons in chambers that the certificate might be varied; that instead of no amount or value being certified in respect of items 9 and 10, the sums of 3,247*l.* and 6,696*l.*, and instead of 3,661*l.* 4*s.*, the sum of 4,657*l.* 10*s.*, might be substituted.

This summons was adjourned into Court, when the Vice-Chancellor dismissed it, but ordered the costs to come out of the partnership estate.

From this order the defendants appealed, asking that the order as to costs might be discharged, that in lieu thereof such costs might be taxed and paid out of the plaintiff's share of the partnership assets or by the plaintiff personally, and also that so much of the order on further consideration as directed that the costs of the action might be taxed and paid by the defendants out of the partnership assets might be varied by directing that the costs of the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the value of the leasehold interest of the partnership in the warehouses might be taxed and paid out of the plaintiff's share of the partnership assets or by her personally.

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, for the appellant.—This is not an order as to costs from which by section 49 no appeal lies; it was not an order which was within the discretion of the Judge. The case comes within Johnstone v. Cox (1), where an order was made to pay the costs of an unsuccessful defendant out of a fund. A man who brings forward an unfounded claim should pay for it, and a Judge has no right to make the successful party pay his costs; and although there is no appeal when a plaintiff or defendant is ordered to pay the costs, there is when the costs are ordered to be paid out of a fund which belongs to other parties. These are not costs within the discretion of a Judge—Farrow v. Austen (2), Turner v. Hancock (3), In re The Silver Valley Mines (4) and The Rio Grande Do Sul Steamship Company (5).

[BOWEN, L.J., referred to In re Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6).]

The rule as to costs of partnership suits has been settled for a long time by the practice of the Courts. The rule, as stated in Seton (4th ed.), p. 1206, is that no order is made in partnership actions as to costs up to the hearing, and the only case against that is Hamer v. Giles (7). If there is a settled rule of practice as to costs of such actions, the costs are no longer in the discretion of the Judge; and see Jones v. Chennell (8) and Cooper v. Vesey (9).

Millar, Q.C. (Abraham with him).—The appellants are in error in saying that two thirds of the costs are to be paid out of their fund; it is not their fund. Here it is necessary that the accounts must be taken and the partnership assets ascertained and the debts paid before it can be known what is the interest of any partner. In Hamer v. Giles (7), Jessel, M.R., says, where there has been no fault on either side, but the partnership accounts have to be taken, the costs of the action for taking the accounts from the beginning ought to be dealt with as all other costs of necessary administration, and come out of the partnership assets.

[He was stopped.]

BRETT, M.R.—In this case, on the

(1) Law Rep. 19 Ch. D. 17.

(2) Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 58.

(3) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 517; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 303.

(4) Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 381.

(5) 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 277; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 282.

(6) 51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 233; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 515.

(7) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 508; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 942.

(8) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 583; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 492, 502.

(9) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 862, 869; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 611 635.

death of one of the partners of a firm, an action was instituted in the Chancery Division, in which it became necessary to administer the partnership estate. In the course of that administration disputes arose; and a question as to the value of three items found to form part of the estate was argued before the chief clerk, and adjourned from him to the Vice-Chancellor in Court.

The judgment in the action was in favour of the plaintiff, but on the particular question brought into Court from chambers the declaration was against the plaintiff. The Vice-Chancellor, nevertheless, ordered the costs of the enquiry to be paid out of the partnership estate; whereupon an appeal has been brought against that order.

Now it cannot be denied that the order is an order affecting costs alone; the appeal, therefore, is an appeal against an order affecting costs alone. Have we any jurisdiction to entertain this appeal? First, was the order of the Vice-Chancellor as to costs a discretionary order? It is an order made in the administration of the partnership property, that the costs should be paid out of that property. It is said that the general rule of practice in the Chancery Division in partnership actions is that the costs should be paid out of the fund or the estate, unless there has been misconduct on the part of one of the partners. But, even if that be the case, I do not understand but that on the whole there is a discretion in the Court as to making the order—namely, that the costs be paid out of the fund. If so, it is obvious that an order to pay the costs is a discretionary order; therefore it is a discretionary order as to the payment of costs. If that is so, and if there was nothing else that could be urged, it is clear that under the Judicature Act there could be no appeal.

Can the case then be brought—assuming the order to be discretionary—within any exception, so as to allow the Court of Appeal to entertain the appeal? The case to which this seemed most dangerously like was the case of In re Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6). The Court of Appeal there held that in a case where a plaintiff in an action had wholly failed, so that the whole judgment was in favour of the defendant, an order that nevertheless the defendants should pay the costs was not a discretionary order as to costs, but that it was an order which no Court could legally make. If an order be such that under no circumstances a Court could legally make it, the order is not a discretionary order, not being within the jurisdiction of the Court which made it. Can the order in this case be brought within that rule? It is said, although the plaintiff here has not wholly failed, but has succeeded on the whole, still, as on this particular enquiry the Judge found him in fault, he could not order the defendants to pay the costs; and is it not within the principle, if not within the decision, of that case? I answer that it is not that case, because the plaintiff succeeded on the whole.

In the next place, when the Chancery Division are administering a partnership estate, it is not true to say that that estate which is the subject of the enquiries belongs to one partner or another; it is not true to say that one third belongs to the plaintiff and two thirds to the defendant. The whole fund at that stage belongs to all the partners, and it has to be determined at that stage what part or parts of that fund will go to each partner. Before the fund can be divided, it must be ascertained what it consists of; and before determining to what each partner is entitled, the costs of ascertaining that whole fund, and the costs of determining what is to be the fund to which each partner is entitled, must be provided. Therefore it is not true to say that this case is within the principle of Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6). I should say that that was an extreme case, and I should feel little inclined to push it further than the extreme case to which it applies. The argument, if good at all, would lead us to this—that where there is an order that costs should be paid out of a fund or an estate, if any one point is decided in favour of one party, an order cannot be made that the costs of the other should be paid out of the fund or estate, without an appeal being allowed from that order.

Butcher v. Pooler, App.

I am therefore of opinion that the order as to costs was one which it was within the discretion of the Judge to make; that it falls within none of the exceptions allowed in Order LV. rule 1, and that therefore, by section 43, no appeal lies against it.

COTTON, L.J.—I agree that we cannot entertain this appeal. The present is not a case where the plaintiff has entirely failed, and therefore it differs from the case of Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6). The plaintiff, upon the dissolution of a partnership by the death of her husband, who was one of three partners, asks to have it declared what is the amount to which she, as representing her husband, is entitled out of the partnership estate. She has raised a question with a view to ascertaining to what she is entitled, and upon that question she has failed. But the question was raised for the purposes of the administration of the estate, to ascertain the ultimate balance to be divided; and the costs of that enquiry are costs with reference to a matter as to which the Court of Chancery have always exercised a discretion.

These costs were the costs of administration—that is to say, of deciding what is the ultimate balance after providing for all the debts and liabilities of the partnership; and the general rule is in a partnership action that the costs of taking the accounts—that is, the costs of ascertaining what, after the debts have been paid, is the fund to be divided—are ordered to be paid out of the partnership assets, and no one is entitled to anything till the costs of ascertaining that fund have been paid. That being so, it was within the discretion of the Court to say that all the costs of the enquiries in the present case, even though the plaintiff failed on those enquiries, were to be paid out of the partnership estate. It is a different matter when a party comes to Court and fails as being entitled to no relief; therefore the present is a different case from Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6). The case of Jones v. Chennell (8) was most pressed upon us. It is said that the appeal in that case was allowed, on the ground that the costs of the two mortgagees had been paid in priority to the first mortgagee, who, by such payment, failed to obtain payment of his principal, interest and costs; but there the Court thought itself competent to entertain the appeal, on the ground that the first mortgagee was entitled as of right to his principal, interest and costs as part of the security; and therefore the case fell within the exceptions of Order LV. rule 1.

Here all that the appellants are entitled to are two thirds of the ultimate balance after payment of the debts of the partnership and the costs of ascertaining that ultimate balance.

Therefore this is an appeal as to costs within the discretion of the Judge who made the order, and we cannot entertain the appeal.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The first point to be decided is whether the question of costs raised before us is a question of costs within Order LV. rule 1 [reads the Order]. The appellants do not fall within the exception in that order, as the Order does not deprive them of any right to costs. Are they within the rule which allows an appeal when the order made was not within the discretion of the Court? Has the Court that made the order made an order which is within its discretion, or was the order made one which goes further than the rules warrant?—was it more than exercising a discretion as to costs which were properly subject to such discretion?

The argument of the appellants was this—here is a fund in Court, to one third of which the plaintiff is entitled, to two thirds of which the defendants are entitled; the plaintiff has made a claim which has failed, but yet gets the costs of that claim paid out of the fund; and so the defendants will pay two-thirds of the costs of the unsuccessful plaintiff's claim.

To shew that this order was beyond the discretion of the Court which made it, counsel must shew that money is being taken to pay the costs from a fund which is not capable of being lawfully taken for the purpose; and they say, as in the case of Jones v. Chennell (8), that the Court will not allow a fund to be appropriated to the payment of costs, on the ground that that is not an exercise of the Court's discretion as to costs, but over other person's property; and that here the Court below has been taking money which cannot be properly taken for costs at all.

A case that is more important is the case of Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (6), which may be cited as illustrative of the kind of point which the appellants wish to make, in which the Court held that to make a successful defendant pay the costs of an unsuccessful plaintiff would not be making an order within its discretion; that such was not a discretionary order of costs, but an order extra vires. That case, however, was an extreme case, and the order of the Commissioners was based on a view which the Court thought was wholly unreasonable and outside the meaning of section 28 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, which enacts that "the costs of and incidental to any proceeding before the Commissioners shall be in the discretion of the Commissioners."

Does that principle apply here? In my opinion it does not. In the first place because this is not an order directing payment of costs out of a fund incapable of being lawfully appropriated to them; on the contrary, it is capable of being so appropriated. I should also base my decision on this—the question of costs arises in the administration of a partnership fund for the purpose of ascertaining the ultimate balance to be distributed. When a claim arises in an administration action it may be rendered reasonably necessary either by reason of the partnership deed or conduct of the partners. On the other hand, a claim may be wholly unreasonable. When it is reasonable as arising from the obscure wording of the deed or the conduct of the partners, it is certainly reasonable that the costs of settling such claim should come out of the assets; and who is to decide whether a claim is reasonable or unreasonable? Clearly the Court that decides the claim; and therefore it is within the discretion of the Court, and therefore it is a discretionary order as to costs and within Order LV.; and, if so, an appeal from that order does not lie. For these reasons I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

Solicitors—C. M. Roche, for plaintiff; C. J. Mander, for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
June 27, 28.

In re THE CHAPEL HOUSE COLLIERY COMPANY.

Company — Winding-up — Creditor's Petition—No Available Assets—Opposition by Majority of Creditors—Discretion of Court—Petition dismissed—Costs—The Companies Act, 1862, s. 91.

A creditor of a company who cannot get his debt paid is not entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order, where it appears that he will not get paid by means of the order, if made.

The colliery of a company was in the hands of its mortgagee, who, under the powers contained in his mortgage-deed, was working the colliery at a profit, and therewith was reducing the principal and interest due on the mortgage. Subject to this mortgage, all the assets were vested in trustees for debenture-holders to the amount of 40,000*l. A debenture-holder having, with knowledge of these facts, presented a winding-up petition, which was opposed by the company, by all the debenture-holders other than the petitioner, and by all the unsecured creditors, his petition was dismissed with costs.*

This was an appeal from an order of Kay, J., directing a winding-up petition presented against the above company by a debenture-holder to stand over for six months.

The petitioner, the Rev. Miles Atkinson, was a holder of ten debentures of 10*l.* each in his own right, and a holder of twenty debentures of 10*l.* each as executor of his brother, and there was due to him on the debentures a sum of 112*l.* 10*s.*, being five years' arrears of interest.

The company, which was incorporated in December, 1873, held their colliery under a lease which contained a clause of forfeiture, with power to the lessor to re-enter in the event of any order being made to wind up the company.

By deed dated the 31st of July, 1874, all the property of the company was mortgaged to the lessor for securing payment of the sum of 65,000*l.* and interest. The colliery proving unsuccessful, and the interest on the mortgage falling into arrear, the mortgagee, under the powers contained in his mortgage-deed, entered into possession of the colliery, and was working it at a small profit, such profits being applied in reduction of the principal and interest due on the mortgage, and the mortgage-debt had thus been reduced to 48,000*l.*

By deed dated the 1st of December, 1875, all the property of the company had been vested in trustees (subject to the mortgage) for securing the due payment of a debenture loan of 40,000*l.*, divided into 4,000*l.* debentures of 10*l.* each, with interest thereon. This deed conferred all usual powers on the trustees to enable them to enforce and recover payment of the loan.

Each debenture contained a covenant in common form by the company to pay the principal sum named in the debenture, with interest at 7½ per cent.; and also referred to the trust-deed, and provided that the debenture-holder should be bound by all the provisions in the trust-deed.

The petitioner's debentures formed part of this loan.

On the 5th of May, 1883, the petitioner issued a writ against the company in the Queen's Bench Division to enforce payment of the arrears of the interest due on his debentures, to which they entered an appearance. On the 9th of May the secretary wrote him the following letter:—

"Dear Sir,—I send you these few lines to inform you that the company has been served by Mr. A. C. Lewis with a writ for 112*l.* 10*s.*, being five years' interest at 7½ per cent. on bonds you hold in the company.

"Permit me to say that you will obtain nothing whatever by the pushing forward of this action, the property being at the present time in the hands of its mortgagees, who in the event of hostile action will undoubtedly take possession altogether, and the company would immediately go into liquidation. As the chairman of the last meeting explained, the property is being worked by the mortgagees, and the balance profit, which now amounts to 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* per annum, goes to the reduction of the mortgage, and when this is entirely cleared off the property will again come into the hands of the shareholders. Should trade remain in its present state, it will necessarily take a long time before the mortgage can be liquidated, but should an improvement take place in the coal trade it would be matter of but a very short time.

"I think in the above I have written you sufficient to shew that it will be to your interest, and also in that of all other debenture- and share-holders, to permit the company to go on as at present, hoping that the future may bring us a return. The proceeding with your action merely means the ruin of the company and the throwing away of the chance there may be of either you or your brother debenture-holders obtaining any return. When I tell you that one of the directors alone had advanced some 6,000*l.* or 7,000*l.* from his own pocket in order to make the concern as successful as possible, and as, moreover, that gentleman has no security, I think you will see that there is some belief by the executive that the concern will eventually prove successful, and also that by continuing your present proceedings you will be adopting a course which, while prejudicial to yourself, cannot be but injurious to your brother share- and debenture-holders.

"I may inform you that all your cc-share- and debenture-holders are exercising in a cheerful manner that patience which I now ask you to share with them."

On receipt of this letter Mr. Atkinson abandoned his action, and on the 16th of May presented his petition to wind up the company.

After the presentation of the petition meetings of the shareholders and debenture-holders were held, at which resolutions were unanimously passed to oppose the petition.

The petitioner's solicitor presented himself at the meeting of the debenture-holders with a proxy from the petitioner, but was excluded.

On the 8th of June the petition was heard before Kay, J., and was opposed by the company and the debenture-holders, and also by all the unsecured creditors, whose debts amounted to about 11,000*l.*

KAY, J., being of opinion that, in the interests of the company and of all its creditors, he ought to follow the decision of Fry, J., in In re The Great Western (Forest of Dean) Coal Consumers' Company (1), and to order the petition to stand over for six months, ordered accordingly. Against this order all the opposing parties appealed.

Rigby, Q.C., and Grosvenor Woods, for the appellants.—The petitioner is not entitled to a winding-up order, for two reasons. First, the debenture-deed here, although it would not be an answer to an action at law, is, we submit, an answer to a winding-up petition by a debenture-holder. It is a bargain between the debenture-holders and the company, and provides how the debenture-debt is to be paid. The form of debenture is scheduled to the deed, and the debenture refers to the deed, and each debenture-holder is bound by the provisions of the deed. The petitioner, therefore, is in a different position to an ordinary outside creditor, and cannot insist on a winding-up order against the wishes of all the other debenture-holders.

Next, we say that the petitioner will get nothing at all by a winding-up order. All the assets are in the hands of a mortgagee, and the debenture trustees will sweep away all that the mortgagee leaves; not a penny will be left for the liquidator. The petitioner, therefore, cannot get paid by means of his petition. It is an attempt to put an irregular pressure on the company and debenture trustees, and ought to be dismissed with costs. We rely on the decision of the late Master of the Rolls in In re Uruguay, &c., Railway Company of Monte Video (2). His dictum on the second point in that case entirely governs this case. Kay, J., thought he was following the decision of Fry, J., in In re The Great Western (Forest of Dean) Coal Consumers' Company (1), which was based upon the case of In re The St. Thomas's Dock Company (3), on the assumption that it was advantageous to the debenture-holders that this winding-up petition should stand over for six months. But in In re The St. Thomas's Dock Company (3) it was the company and debenture-holders who asked that the petition might stand over. Here they ask it to be dismissed, for it is absolutely impossible to carry on such a business as this in the face of a pending winding-up petition. No one would deal with or give credit to a company placed in such a position. The ratio decidendi, therefore, of those decisions is a ground for dismissing this petition; and, further, the Court, under section 91 of the Companies Act, 1862, will have regard to the wishes of the majority of the creditors. Here the whole body of creditors oppose this petition.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and H. Greenwood, for the respondent.—The order of Kay, J., was entirely a discretionary order, and this Court, unless satisfied that he went quite wrong, will not interfere.

[COTTON, L.J.—He did not assume to exercise his discretion, but to follow a certain decision cited to him.]

We submit that an order directing a matter before him to stand over is a discretionary order, and not appealable. There is nothing to shew that, if this petition is dismissed, a friendly petition may not be at once presented, and a winding-up order made, thus placing the liquidation of the company in the hands of those who have created it and carried it on.

[COTTON, L.J.—Mr. Justice Kay appears to have come to the decision that there was no case for a winding-up, but to have thought that on the authorities he ought to direct the petition to stand over. You

(1) 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 743; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 769.

(2) 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 540; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 372.

(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 304; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 116.

must shew that there is a case for a winding-up order.]

He thought there was no case for an immediate winding-up order; but the company is hopelessly insolvent, and a winding-up is a mere matter of time. There is no case in which such a petition as this has been dismissed. They are always ordered to stand over.

[COTTON, L.J.—Then it is high time that there should be such a case.]

All the authorities are in our favour. In re The St. Thomas's Dock Company (3) is exactly on all fours with this. There there were no assets which could possibly come into the hands of the liquidator. The case of In re The Uruguay, &c., Railway Company of Monte Video (2) is distinguishable on the ground that it was decided on the special terms of the trust-deed. Here there is no occasion to look at the trust-deed, because each debenture contains a separate covenant with the holder of it to pay principal and interest; it is not material for us to shew that there are assets available for the purposes of the winding-up, but we are entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order—In re The Brighton Hotel Company (4) and In re The Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5). Then as to costs—if the petition is dismissed, we submit that, having regard to the correspondence, it is not a case to give costs against us. In fact, the secretary's letter was an invitation to us to present a winding-up petition—In re The London and Suburban Bank (6), In re The West Hartlepool Ironworks Company (7) and In re The Flagstaff Silver Mining Company of Utah (8).

Grosvenor Woods, in reply, as to costs.—The secretary's letter gave the petitioner full information as to the position and property of the company, and to present the petition after that, was unjustifiable and oppressive.

BAGGALLAY, L.J., said,—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Kay, directing the petition presented by the Rev. Miles Atkinson for an order to wind up this company to stand over for six months. The petitioner is a debenture-holder of the company, and his views have not been adopted by the other debenture-holders, who therefore join in this appeal with the company and unsecured creditors, and ask for the dismissal of the petition with costs. The petitioner holds ten debentures in his own right and twenty debentures as executor of his brother, amounting altogether to 300*l.* out of a debenture debt of 40,000*l.*, and he is opposed by the whole body of the debenture-holders, who, at a general meeting summoned for that purpose, by a unanimous vote passed a resolution requesting and authorising the debenture trustee to oppose this petition. It is said that that must not be regarded as a unanimous vote, because the petitioner was not present, and his solicitor, who held his proxy, was excluded from the meeting; but, with that exception, the meeting was unanimous. Also, almost the whole of the unsecured creditors, amounting to 13,000*l.*, oppose the petition. The position of the company is this. There is an overriding mortgage, which would practically swallow up the whole of the assets if a winding-up order is made, and what little was left by the mortgagee would be swept away by the trustees for the debenture-holders. The petitioner, however, relies on the general rule that a creditor is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order, which is grounded on the dictum of Lord Cranworth in Bowes v. The Hope Mutual Life Assurance Society (9), where he says (p. 402), "I agree with what has been said, that it is not a discretionary matter with the Court, when a debt is established and not satisfied, to say whether the company shall be wound up or not—that is to say, if there be a valid debt established, valid both at law and in equity. One does not like to say positively that no

(4) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 915; Law Rep. 6 Eq. 339.

(5) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 184; Law Rep. 17 Eq. 1.

(6) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 174 Law Rep. 6 Chanc. 641.

(7) 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 668; Law Rep. 10 Chanc. 618.

(8) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 138; Law Rep. 20 Eq. 268.

(9) 11 H.L. Cas. 389; 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc 574.

case could occur in which it would be right to refuse it; but, ordinarily speaking, it is the duty of the Court to direct the winding-up." That is a strong expression of opinion, and the principle thus enunciated was adopted by Lord Selborne, when sitting for the late Master of the Rolls, in In re The Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5). He said there (p. 6), "I entirely agree with the doctrine of Lord Cranworth—that if a creditor cannot get paid without winding up, it is ex debito justitiæ that he should have a winding-up order." Now no doubt that is a very general assertion of right, but that refers to the right of a creditor as between himself and the company. But when the interests of the creditors are concerned, and there is a conflict of interest between them, then the Court must have regard to the 91st section of the Companies Act, 1862, which says, "The Court may, as to all matters relating to the winding-up, have regard to the wishes of the creditors or contributories, as proved to it by any sufficient evidence, and may, if it think it expedient, direct meetings of the creditors or contributories to be summoned, held, and conducted in such manner as the Court directs, for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes." In the case of The Brighton Hotel Company (4) Vice-Chancellor Malins seems to have underrated that dictum of Lord Cranworth, and to have thought that the 91st section of the Act qualified the rights of the creditors, and gave the Court an overriding discretion; and in The Great Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5) it was urged that the section only applied to cases where a winding-up order had been made; but Lord Selborne said, "If the 91st section applies, as I think it does, the duty which I have at this moment to perform is quite clear. A very large majority of the debenture-holders think that their interests would be better promoted by delay, and the delay appears to me in the circumstances not unreasonable. I have no doubt that the 91st section is a part of the Act which is applicable before making any winding-up order, and when the petition for winding up is before the Court; and that it does not presuppose a winding-up order, or relate only to the manner in which that shall be made, or the terms upon which it shall be made." Now what has taken place here? The opinion of the debenture-holders has been ascertained, and the petitioner stands alone, and he presents his petition after receiving the information contained in the secretary's letter. Well, then, the question is, whether the Court, on hearing the petition, is to have regard to the wishes of the majority of the creditors. The petitioner says that, having regard to the authorities, he is entitled to an order directing the petition to stand over for a time. But in the case of The St. Thomas's Dock Company (3) that was done at the instance of the company and on their entering into a very full undertaking. Then in The Great Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5), the Court thought that some assets might be forthcoming if the petition stood over, and the debenture-holders supported that view, and it was ordered to stand over; but when it ultimately appeared that there would be no assets, the winding-up order was made. Then comes the case of The Great Western (Forest of Dean) Coal Consumers' Company (1). There Mr. Justice Fry postponed the petition at the request of the debenture-holders. He says:—"That the Court may have regard to the wishes of the creditor in the matter of a winding-up is part of the statutory enactments which regulate the Court in this jurisdiction. That it ought so to have regard to those wishes is apparent from the statute itself, as well as from a series of decisions. As against the company I conceive that, prima facie, a person who is shewn to have a debt which the company does not satisfy has a right ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order. But that prima facie right may be rebutted, and especially as against other creditors, the moment it is shewn that there is a large mass of other creditors who are opposed to the winding-up. That is the inevitable result of section 91. And, in my judgment, the Court ought to consider, not merely the number of the opposing creditors and the value of their debts, but ought to have some regard to the reasons which they adduce for the conclusions at which they have arrived"; and then, after dealing with the evidence, he says, "Ought I to dismiss the petition at once, or ought I to delay my decision and order the petition to stand over? I think the latter is the better course for the creditors, and for the company also." With that decision I fully agree. You must deal with each case according to its special circumstances. Now the circumstances of the present case are quite different to that case. Then there is the case of In re The Uruguay, &c., Railway Company of Monte Video (2), where the late Master of the Rolls enunciated a doctrine with which I entirely agree. I will read it from the headnote of the case:—"As a general rule, an unpaid creditor of a company is entitled to a winding-up order ex debito justitiæ; but that rule is subject to exceptions—e.g., where all the other creditors oppose the petition, and it appears that the petitioning creditor will not be in a better position by obtaining a winding-up order." To that proposition I fully assent. Here all the other creditors oppose the petitioner, and I am satisfied that he will not be in any better position by obtaining a winding-up order—there is no possibility of his being the better for it. Then it is said that by postponing the petition no harm will be done; but, in my opinion, it will do very great harm. It will utterly paralyse the business of the company and its efforts to right itself. There is a provision in the article enabling the company to raise further capital. That power cannot possibly be exercised in the face of a winding-up petition. It appears to me, therefore, that no advantage whatever can accrue to the petitioner in making a winding-up order, and therefore his petition ought, in my opinion, to be dismissed. As to the costs—the petitioner has embarked in a hazardous undertaking; if I thought that he had done so without knowledge of all the circumstances of the case, I should have been disposed to have given him his costs as against the company; but in the face of the letter he received from the secretary he persisted with his petition, and must, I think, be ordered to pay costs.

COTTON, L.J., said,—In this case the petitioning creditor is a debenture-holder; but all the other debenture-holders, and also all the unsecured creditors, desire that the company shall not be wound up. When I say all the debenture-holders, of course I recollect that some of them did not attend the meeting; but all who did attend, or have expressed any opinion on the subject, are unanimous in opposing the petition. Then it is also admitted that the whole assets of the company are comprised either in the mortgage or in the debenture trust deed, and that if a winding-up order is made none of those assets would come into the hands of the liquidator. In fact, the counsel for the petitioner have not attempted to shew that there are any assets whatever available, even to pay costs. Mr. Justice Kay thought the proper order was to direct the petition to stand over; but if such an order were made no one would for a moment think of taking a share in the company or of dealing with the company; the order would, in my opinion, completely paralyse the company, and harass it in the conduct of its business. But it was said that the order was in the nature of a compromise, because the petitioner, as an unpaid creditor, was entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order. Now I understand that to mean this—that as against a company a winding-up order is the means by which a creditor can obtain payment of his debt; but that assumes that the winding up order will be the effectual means of paying the debt—in other words, that the winding-up will produce assets that will be available for payment of the debt; but when it appears that no assets will be produced by a winding-up order, then that proposition, in my opinion, entirely fails. But it is said that the cases lay down a contrary principle, and that the Court is bound to make the order; and for that the dictum of Lord Cranworth has been referred to, and its adoption by Lord Selborne in the case of The Great Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5) is relied on; but all that Lord Cranworth says is, that as a general rule a creditor will be entitled to the order; and Lord Selborne says: "Beyond all doubt it is my opinion that, unless the petitioners get paid after giving proper and reasonable time within which they may be paid, if the company is able to do it, there ought to be a winding-up order." So that he there clearly assumes the principle I have stated, that where the company has assets which can be made available for the payment of the debt, there the creditor is entitled to a winding-up order. Then in the case of The St. Thomas's Dock Company (3), the late Master of the Rolls, referring to the judgment of Lord Selborne from which I have been quoting, says this: "I agree that it is ex debito justitiæ, using the words of Lord Selborne, by which I should be bound if I did not agree (for it is a decision of a Lord Chancellor), in the case of The Western of Canada Oil Lands and Works Company (5), and he only agreed with an expression of opinion in the House of Lords by Lord Cranworth. He says: 'I entirely agree with the doctrine of Lord Cranworth, that if a creditor cannot get paid without winding up, it is ex debito justitiæ that he should have a winding-up order'—that means when he can get something under the winding-up. It is not that he cannot get paid without, in the sense that he cannot get paid with either; but it is that he cannot get paid without, and there is some chance of getting paid with. That is the meaning of the sentence, as I understand it. Then he goes on to say: 'But so far am I from thinking that it would be a certain consequence of delaying this case until November that the creditors would be denied payment, that I think there is at least a fair, possible, and reasonable chance of their getting paid by means of that delay very much earlier than they would be under a winding-up order.' He is, therefore, looking at a case where there were assets of the company which might by possibility be made available under the winding-up order, not to a case where there were no assets which could be made available, because, as I said before, it is not suggested for a moment that the sale of the dock, which is all he could have, would improve the petitioner's prospect of payment." Those two cases therefore clearly deal with the ex debito justitiæ doctrine in the way that I have stated, and the Court, in directing a petition to stand over, is merely doing that which it considers is the best means for getting the creditor early payment of his debt. To that extent, therefore, the standing over of the petition is really an infringement on his right. But, in my opinion, a winding-up petition ought not to be presented where the creditor knows that the winding-up order cannot be made available for the purpose of paying his debt. As a general rule, a winding-up order is the only means of obtaining payment from the company; but here it is clear that the petitioner cannot obtain payment by a winding-up order, and in such cases a winding-up order should not be made. There may be cases, however, in which a winding-up order should be made, even although there are no available assets for the purposes of the winding-up. But in the present case the company and all the debenture-holders and all the unsecured creditors oppose the petition, and, in my opinion, it must be dismissed with costs. I should have been glad if no costs could be given to either side; but as the petitioner has chosen to file his petition with full knowledge of the position of the company, he cannot be relieved from costs, because, in my opinion, such petitions ought to be discouraged.

BOWEN, L.J., said,—I am of the same opinion. I think that a winding-up order should not be made when it is clear that no earthly object can be gained by it. But it is said that the petitioner is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order, which is equivalent to equitable execution. That I think is fallacious, if there is no property on which the equitable execution can take effect. Great reliance has been placed on the phrase, that a creditor ex debito justitiæ is entitled to the order, which has been used by the Judges in the cases that have been cited to us; but there it was used in a special sense. It does not mean that every creditor, simply because he is a creditor, is entitled as of right to a winding-up order; but it was only used in this sense—that the Legislature has devised a procedure for the benefit of the creditors of a company, by which they can obtain payment of their debts in a particular manner. That procedure is entrusted to the Court, and in such cases the power vested in the Court is generally couched in permissive language; but the Court ought to give the relief intended if the petitioner is entitled, and in that sense he is entitled, to it as of right; but it does not follow that he is entitled to put this judicial machinery in motion for no conceivable object and when no results can follow. That would be an abuse, and not a use, of the procedure of the Court. Therefore I think it follows that a creditor is not entitled ex debito justitiæ to have a winding-up order as an absolute right. Secondly, there is this further qualification of the right; the 91st section enables the Court to consider the wishes of the other creditors. In this case I think the Court ought to dismiss the petition on both grounds; but the first is quite sufficient, because I think it is so obvious that the petition can result in nothing. For these reasons I think this appeal must be allowed.

Solicitors—Snell, Son & Greenip, for appellants; A. Calkin Lewis, for respondent.

[IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.]

1883. June 14, 15. TUCKER v. LINGER.

Farming Lease—Reservation of Minerals—Custom for Tenant to sell Surface Flints.

A custom for farm tenants to collect flints turned up in ploughing, and properly removed in the course of good husbandry, and to sell them for their own benefit, is reasonable.

In a district where such a custom prevailed, a farm was let with a reservation to the landlord of "all mines and minerals":—Held, that the reservation was not inconsistent with, and did not exclude, the custom.

Quære,—Whether flints lying on the surface of land are "minerals" within the meaning of such a reservation.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal affirming one of Kay, J. The case is reported below 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 713; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 18.

The questions of law raised on the appeal were—whether a custom for farm tenants to sell for their own benefit flints brought to the surface in ploughing was valid; and whether, if valid, it was excluded by a reservation to the landlord of mines and minerals in a written agreement for a tenancy.

Davey, Q.C., and C. H. Anderson, for the appellant.—The alleged custom has not been proved; the judgment of Cotton, L.J., suggests the true explanation of the facts—5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. ss. 51 and 54. If proved, it is unreasonable and bad. It would be a custom to take profits à prendre in alieno solo, tending to the destruction of the inheritance—The Attorney-General v. Mathias (1).

[LORD BLACKBURN.—A copyholder was originally but a tenant at will, yet a custom for copyholders to sell clay was held good in The Marquess of Salisbury v. Gladstone (2).]

Whatever he may have been originally, the copyholder now holds a position altogether different from a tenancy at will. Thirdly, the custom is excluded by the agreement. The words "mines and minerals" in the reservation extend to flints, and prevent their removal. "Minerals" have been held to include freestone—Bell v. Wilson (3)—and china clay—Hext v. Gill (4). The Attorney-General of the Isle of Man v. Mylchreest (5) is distinguishable. The reservation excepted the flints from the demise, and they remained vested in the lessor—The Duke of Hamilton v.

(1) 4 Kay & J. 579; 27 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 761.

(2) 9 H.L. Cas. 692; 34 Law J. Rep. C.P. 222.

(3) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 337; Law Rep. 1 Chanc. 303.

(4) 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 761; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 699.

(5) 48 Law J. Rep. P.C. 36; Law Rep. 4 App. Cas. 294.

Graham (6). See Myers v. Sarl (7) and Wigglesworth v. Dallison (8) as to the effect of a written agreement in excluding a custom.

Fullarton and Burleigh Muir, for the respondent, were not called upon.

LORD O'HAGAN.—In this case the question is a very short one, and, to me, appears to be capable of being very easily determined. In the first place, has there been a custom established here—a clear, distinct, reasonable custom, such as ought to be maintained by the law? In the next place, if there is such a custom, is there anything in the contract of the parties, anything in the reservation, to interfere with that custom and prevent its operation?

The custom which is alleged is to take these flints as they are thrown up from the land in the course of husbandry, and to deal with them for the tenant's own profit, and for the benefit of the land at the same time, and thus for the benefit of the reversioner of the land. The tenant takes those flints, and, according to the universal and open custom, he sells them to whomsoever he pleases. [His Lordship proceeded to examine the evidence, and continued:]

In my opinion, there is such a preponderance of evidence as makes it the duty of your Lordships to hold that the custom, as a matter of fact, has been conclusively established.

With the greatest respect for that very learned and able Judge, Lord Justice Cotton, I cannot follow the reasoning of his judgment. Whatever may have been the case in 1835, or afterwards, with reference to the condition of an agricultural country of this kind; whatever may have been the right of highway surveyors, or the practice of the tenantry, all that is totally beside the question now, because if in the intervening years a custom has grown up by the universal assent of all parties, that custom appears to me not to be affected by the circumstances which may have existed forty or fifty years ago. Therefore, the only ground that I can see upon which Lord Justice Cotton has founded his judgment appears to me to be fallacious.

Nothing has been urged upon the second branch of the case, as to whether this is a reasonable and a legal custom. Nobody can contend that it is anything else. We have proof that the removal of the flints is a necessity for the proper management of the agricultural operations.

Therefore, both upon the fact and upon the legality and reasonableness of the custom there can be no doubt. The only remaining question is whether the reservation of "mines and minerals" in the agreement is sufficient to overbear in any way the clear and conclusive evidence to which I have referred. The words are "mines and minerals"; and you must take the ordinary course, and read the custom into the lease, and see whether the custom is reconcilable with the words. The custom being what I have described, is the word "mineral" so clear and of such absolute meaning that it applies to these flints, and that its reservation cannot be reconciled with the custom? It appears to me that it is no such thing. You must take the whole matter together. I asked the learned counsel for the appellant for a definition of the word "minerals"; and according to his definition it would absolutely cover everything under the earth. Now this reservation is not merely of "mines and minerals," but of "brick-earth," and other things, which it would have been wholly unnecessary to insert at all if "mineral" had the universal operation which it would be necessary to attribute to it to make this argument well founded.

Upon the whole, I see no contradiction between the reservation and the custom, and I move your Lordships to dismiss the appeal with costs.

LORD BLACKBURN.—I am of the same opinion. There has been a lease, or rather heads of agreement for a lease, in writing, of a farm in a district that has been, and for convenience may well be, called "the flinty district"; and it is shewn upon the evidence beyond all controversy that when the fields are ploughed flints are turned

(6) Law Rep. 2 Sc. App. 166.
(7) 3 E. & E. 306; 30 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 9.
(8) 1 Sm. L.C. (5th ed.) 529.

up to the surface, and that some at least of those flints must in the ordinary course of good husbandry be removed from the land and placed somewhere or other. There must not be an excess of removal, because you may remove so many flints as to do mischief; but in the ordinary course of good husbandry you must remove some of them and place them somewhere; and such has been the case in this district, I suppose, ever since it was first cultivated—at all events, it is the general course of business there. The respondent not only removed the flints from the field where they had been turned up, but sold them. There was, as I understand, in the first instance a controversy as to whether or not he had removed more flints than in the course of good husbandry he should have done. That point was debated below, but has not been brought by appeal to this House; we are to take it now that he has removed no more flints than in the course of good husbandry, on being turned up by the plough, ought to have been removed from the surface of the field and put somewhere. But he has sold them, and the question upon that has come before us. The referee has found that there was in this district a custom so generally known that it would be considered as tacitly incorporated in all leases—that custom being that a tenant might sell for his own benefit, without stint, all such flints as in the ordinary course of good husbandry he turned up and removed from his field in order to get them off the field and out of the way. It extended no further.

Now, is this custom excluded by the terms of the agreement? The custom, when proved, is to be considered as part of the agreement; and if the agreement be in writing, though the custom is not written, it is to be treated exactly as if that unwritten customary clause had been written out at length. But if upon the face of the written agreement there is some clause which expressly says, "We exclude the unwritten customary incident," of course it is excluded; and if there is any written clause which is inconsistent with it to such an extent as impliedly to exclude it, then, too, the unwritten clause must yield to and is excluded by the written one. Now what is meant by inconsistency within that rule of law? It must be taken that under this lease the lessee is to manage the land upon the most approved system of husbandry; that, amongst other things, he is to plough it well, and that the custom of husbandry implies that in ploughing it and turning up flints he is to remove some of those flints from the surface of the land. When such flints have been removed from the land the custom is that the lessee shall be at liberty to sell them to whom he pleases for the best price he can get, without stint. Then comes the clause which is said to exclude that:—"The lessor reserves all timber, trees, and tellers, and all bodies of pollards, and all mines and minerals, sand, quarries of stone, brick-earth, and gravel-pits, with liberty to enter to fell, cut down, dig, take, convert and carry away the same, doing no unnecessary damage." Now, neither the mines, nor the minerals, nor the sand, nor the quarries of stone, nor the brick-earth, nor the gravel-pits, in the sense of having gravel, would pass to the tenant with the surface of the land. But it was necessary for the landlord, if he meant to work them whilst the tenant's lease existed, to reserve to himself "liberty to enter to fell and cut down" (that is, as to the trees), "dig, take, convert and carry away the same" (that is, as to all these matters), "doing no unnecessary damage." That was in order that he might come in and utilise his stone, his gravel, and so on.

Now, whilst the flints were under the surface I think Hext v. Gill (4) shews that they were minerals; but I am assuming (which is by no means clear) that flints turned up and lying on the surface would be minerals within the meaning of this reservation. What is there in this inconsistent with the custom? When the tenant has picked up the flints in the course of good husbandry and taken them off the field, he may, says the custom, sell them. Says the express term, "the landlord reserves such flints, and liberty to enter, take, convert and carry them away, doing no unnecessary damage." What is there inconsistent with the tenant selling them if he so pleases, or the landlord if he wants them coming in and taking them too? There is no necessity to construe this clause as having the effect—and I do not think that it has the effect, if it was intended—of excluding this custom. Intended it was not in one sense, for those who drew it thought that there was no such custom, and of course did not intend to exclude it. But was it inconsistent with the custom, so as to have the effect of excluding it, even upon the supposition which I have made (which is not at all to be taken as a point that has been decided) that flints lying upon the surface of the land are minerals within the meaning of this clause? I think not.

That disposes of the first point; I now come to the other. It is not contended that the custom, if proved, is unreasonable at all. It being, then, admitted that the custom, if it exists, is reasonable, and it being incorporated in the agreement (for, in my opinion, there is nothing in the reservation to exclude its operation), the question is, whether the custom is sufficiently proved. Now as to that, I own, with great respect to Lord Justice Cotton, that I think he went a little astray. [After referring to the evidence, he proceeded:] There is certainly evidence (I should have said overwhelming evidence) that such a custom exists. But the ground upon which it is disputed, and which the judgment of Lord Justice Cotton makes it necessary to enquire into, is this: Two witnesses said, what was probably quite true, that some thirty or forty years ago there was no market at all for flints in this district. As it is now, and was then, the necessary course of good husbandry to plough up the flints, they were piled up in rows along the hedges and left lying there, a nuisance to everybody, or at least of no use to anybody; and there then being no market for them, when it happened that there was use for them upon farm-roads, or in building walls, or in repairing the buildings, or anything of that sort, they were used for that purpose; and also if the highway surveyor wanted flints he got them and used them for his purposes, paying something for them—what it was does not appear. Now these witnesses do not seem to have understood the matter. They thought that the highway surveyor had a right to come and take the flints by force from the land; and Lord Justice Cotton seems to have thought that it was a matter of evidence to be proved. I cannot agree with him. It depends upon the true construction of the Highway Act; and when you look at the Highway Act it is clear that there is no such power. [His Lordship read sections 51–55 of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50.]

Now those sections do not, as it appears to me, at all authorise the surveyor, of his own will, without an order of Justices, to take these flints lying at the side of the hedges and carry them away. I think it is extremely probable that when the surveyor found those flints lying there which were of no use to any one, he, instead of exercising his powers, said to the occupier, "I will not exercise my powers and take you before Justices, and so forth; but if you, the occupier, will let me have these flints at a price I will pay you something for them." But it was not a matter of right. It may have been that while the flints were of very little or no value he paid very little for them, and probably the farmers at that time would be glad to get them out of their way. Then when there came to be a change, and when, principally owing to the introduction of railways, flints gathered in this way had a mercantile value, there arose quite a new state of things—the surveyor could no longer get them for little or nothing, he had to compete with the flint-jobbers and others who bought them; and it came to pass then that flints were in fact sold, and the principal buyer, as we are told, was the highway board, which consisted of the landlords of the district, and as to whom therefore their buying in that way was the strongest and best evidence which could be given that such a practice and such a custom, to the extent to which it has been shewn, were notorious, as the referee has observed.

Now Lord Justice Cotton, as I think, quite misapprehends what is the state of the law as to the surveyor taking the stones. The law being as I have pointed out (as it seems to me clear under the Highway Act that it is), and the surveyors of highways having been at first the only buyers, and being now necessarily the principal buyers, but having others to compete with them, and the fact being that the prices are considerably higher now, so far from that disproving the custom it seems to me a very strong argument indeed in favour of saying that the custom is really proved. Upon that point I agree with, I think, every one who has had to do with the case except Lord Justice Cotton; and I must own that, to my mind, with all respect for that learned Judge, his reasons for thinking the custom not proved are not good.

LORD FITZGERALD.—I am entirely of the same opinion upon all the questions which have been raised in this case.

Upon the question whether this custom has been established in evidence, I adopt the view of the referee.

Upon the question whether the custom is reasonable or not, I must confess I think that Lord Justice Cotton has fallen into error. He seems to have had the thought pressing itself upon his mind that this custom was not even established, and that in fact it was not a reasonable custom. I rather gather from his statement that if it had rested with him alone, even though there had been evidence to sustain the usage, he would have decided against it as unreasonable. He says that it is unreasonable because it enables the tenant to sell a part of the inheritance. That, in one sense, is literally true; but when you look at it in its reality it is unsound. According to the contract, the tenant is obliged to use and cultivate his farm in the best and most husbandlike manner. In the course of the cultivation he must plough it, and the plough brings up to the surface flints of various sizes, and it is absolutely necessary that he should pick and remove some of these flints. What is to be done with them? Are they to be left lying upon the farm? If they are it is doing further mischief; it is leaving them to encumber the ground, and to occupy a space which otherwise would be used for cultivation. It is obvious, then, that for the proper use of the farm the flints so picked should be removed from the farm. When once they are taken off the farm they cease to be a portion of the inheritance, and they become mere chattels. At one time they were probably of no value, or of little value; and probably the origin of this custom was that the tenant acquired the privilege of removing them; and in order to recoup him for the expense, or for a portion of the expense, of removing them, when removed he was allowed to sell them. I think that Mr. Anderson properly gave up, as one would expect from him, the argument that this was an unreasonable custom.

The only question then remaining is, whether upon the true construction of the agreement it excludes this custom. I quite agree with the view of the late Master of the Rolls (Sir G. Jessel) and of Lord Justice Lindley, that there is nothing at all in the existence of this custom inconsistent with this reservation of mines and minerals, but that, on the contrary, it would be repugnant and absurd if one were to come to the conclusion that under the reservation of mines and minerals here, with the object for which that reservation is made, it is intended that you are to reserve for the landlord as minerals the flints brought up by the plough to the surface, which the tenant is under an actual obligation in the course of good husbandry to remove from the surface. I quite concur in the construction given by the Court below, as well as by my noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Blackburn), to this clause of the agreement. There is no inconsistency between it and the custom, and I think that the custom must prevail.

Now with reference to the agreement being explained by the evidence, Mr. Pym, the chairman of the Highways Committee, and a farm and land valuer, speaks of the custom as a matter beyond any doubt, and he adds this, which is very important: "The usual clause as to mines is in all leases——" (By "clause," I suppose him to mean "reservation," and I will read it "reservation.") "The usual reservation as to mines is in all leases, and the custom of picking flints co-exists." Therefore it is quite established that in the interpretation of that reservation as regulating the rights of landlord and tenant, where there is such a reservation, nevertheless the custom goes on.

Tucker v. Linger, H.L.

Upon none of the points in this case do I entertain the slightest doubt, and I concur in the judgment of the Court below.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors—Mercer & Mercer, for appellant; Morrisons, agents for G. C. Morrison, Reigate, for respondent.

CHITTY, J. 1883. June 22.

UPMANN v. FORESTER.

Injunction — Infringement of Trade-mark—Innocent Consignee—Costs.

The defendant, a manufacturer of earthenware, ordered 5,000 cigars to be consigned to him by a foreign dealer. He bought the cigars for family use, and, until he was served with the writ, had not only been unaware of the plaintiffs' name as manufacturers of cigars, but had not even seen the boxes consigned to him, nor even known that they had any brand. The cigars were forwarded to this country in boxes bearing a spurious brand purporting to be that of the plaintiffs. In an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling the cigars, for destruction of the boxes, and for damages, the defendant, immediately after service of the writ, offered the plaintiffs all the relief asked for; and, at the hearing of a motion for an interim injunction, assented to an undertaking in the terms of the writ, the question of costs being reserved:—Held, that the defendant had committed an infringement of the plaintiffs' trade-mark, and must therefore pay the costs of the action.

The plaintiffs, manufacturers and vendors of cigars, claimed an injunction restraining the defendant, an earthenware manufacturer, from selling or dealing with 5,000 cigars contained in boxes bearing a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' registered trade-mark or brand; an account of profits, the delivery up of the boxes for destruction, and damages. From the evidence, it appeared that the plaintiffs, having learnt that the boxes in question were standing to the order of the defendant at the docks, at once, and without previous communication, served him with the writ in the action, together with notice of motion for an interim injunction. The defendant immediately wrote to the plaintiffs, alleging his innocence of any intention of infringing their trade-mark or of selling the cigars; and in the same letter expressed his willingness to have the trade-marks or brands removed from the boxes, and to give any information that might be required of him with reference to the purchase. The plaintiffs wrote in reply that they were willing to stay proceedings upon the defendant carrying out the terms contained in his letter, and upon payment of costs already incurred; and it was proposed that the motion should stand over, to allow these terms to be carried out. The motion was accordingly arranged to stand over until the trial, upon undertakings given, but which were without prejudice to any question as to the costs of the action.

A motion was now made by the plaintiffs that the defendant might be ordered to pay the costs of the action.

The defendant stated in his affidavit that he purchased the cigars, when on the Continent for his annual holiday, at a shop in Tournai, Belgium, and that he ordered cigars of no particular brand, nor did he see the cigars or boxes until the commencement of the present action; and although, at the time of purchase, he received an invoice with the name of "Upmann" appearing on it, he was at the time wholly unaware that that was the name of any cigar manufacturers; and, in fact, never was aware that there were any cigar manufacturers of the plaintiffs' name until he was served with the writ; and he further stated that the cigars were never intended for sale, but for family use.

Romer, Q.C., and E. Cutler, for the plaintiffs.—The Court has no discretion to refuse the plaintiffs their costs, the action having been brought to enforce a legal right, and the plaintiffs not having been guilty of any misconduct—Cooper v. Whittingham (1). The plaintiffs' right of exclusive user in their trade-mark arises, not only from registration under the Trade Marks Registration Acts, but is also a common law right. This right the defendant has infringed, and whether he has done so knowingly or in ignorance does not signify—Millington v. Fox (2). Nor is there any rule binding the plaintiffs to give notice before issuing their writ—Upmann v. Elkan (3).

F. H. Colt, for the defendant.—The defendant has neither done nor shewn any intention of doing any legal or statutory wrong, and cannot be said to have used the plaintiffs' trade-mark. User of a trade-mark must be by sale or distribution. The material act is representation that the goods are the plaintiffs'. The Trade Marks Registration Acts confer no new protection upon the owners of trade-marks; the plaintiffs, therefore, must be proceeding either under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 88. s. 3, or by virtue of their right at law to have a remedy for a wrong committed. If they are proceeding under the Act, they must fail, because there has been no intent to defraud. If they are proceeding by virtue of their common law right, they must equally fail, not only because there has been no fraud committed by the defendant, but also because, even granting user, there has been no damage done.

In Upmann v. Elkan (3) the defendant was a cigar-dealer. In Cooper v. Whittingham (1), what the Master of the Rolls says is, that if a person commits a wrong he cannot be allowed to say that he committed it innocently; but the defendant says here that he has committed no wrong; therefore the remark of the Master of the Rolls has no application. The defendant had no intention of selling, and at the most what he intended to use was the boxes and not the brand. If the plaintiffs have any right of action at all it is against the dock company, as being persons, within the decision of Upmann v. Elkan (3), actively engaged in distributing the spurious goods.

No authority can be shewn in the books for saying that the Court has ever granted an injunction in respect of infringement of a plaintiff's common law right of user, unless the wrong complained of has done actual damage to the plaintiff.

In Millington v. Fox (2) the plaintiffs had been caused loss by the sale of the spurious goods. In The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Loog (4), recently decided by the House of Lords, trade invoices and circulars, describing the defendant's machines as "Singer" machines, were held not to be calculated to mislead, as they were not intended for and not likely to fall into the hands of the general public.

In any result, we submit that, as the defendant has committed no fraud, and there is no evidence of any intention on his part to distribute the cigars, the Court will not order him to pay the costs of an action the nugatory nature of which is shewn by the fact of the defendant having given the plaintiffs the earliest and fullest redress as soon as their complaint was brought to his notice.

E. Cutler, in reply.—A right to an injunction carries costs—Burgess v. Hill (5) and Cooper v. Whittingham (1). The absence of any intention on the part of the defendant to sell does not affect the question. It is sufficient that he is a consignee—Upmann v. Elkan (6).

CHITTY, J.—The only question I have to decide is, who is to pay the costs of this action? The plaintiffs say that they are entitled to costs; and the defendant says that, even if he does not get costs, he should not be called upon to pay the plaintiffs' costs. [His Lordship here stated the facts, and continued:] The plaintiffs are, both at common law and under the statutes, entitled to the exclusive user of

(1) 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 752; Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 501.

(2) 3 Myl. & Cr. 338.

(3) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 475; 41 ibid. Chanc. 246; Law Rep. 12 Eq. 140; ibid. 7 Chanc. 130.

(4) Since reported, ante, p. 481.

(5) 26 Beav. 244; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 356.

(6) Per Romilly, M.R., 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. at p. 479; Law Rep. 12 Eq. at p. 146.

their trade-mark. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendant has, beyond a doubt, used their trade-mark, and, having knowingly or unknowingly infringed their right, must bear the consequences of having done an illegal act.

The first point is, has there been an infringement? The defendant has imported into this country 5,000 cigars in boxes bearing a spurious trade-mark. He says that he was not aware of any infringement of the plaintiffs' right until he was served with the writ, and that he never intended to sell or distribute the boxes. Although it may be the defendant's misfortune that the boxes should bear a spurious trade-mark, yet, according to the authorities, he must be held to have committed a clear infringement of the plaintiffs' right sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction. For the purposes of this action the infringement of a patent and of a trade-mark may be treated on the same footing, the question being one and the same—namely, whether the right of exclusive user has been infringed. In the case of Adair v. Young (7) the question was whether the master of a ship, fitted up with pumps which were an infringement of letters patent, was liable for the infringement, although he had nothing to do with putting the pumps on board, and had never used the pumps in British waters. It was held by the Court of Appeal that he was so liable, the ground of the decision being, not that he had used the pumps in the sense of having put them in active use, but that the fact of the pumps being upon the ship constituted sufficient evidence of an intention to use them; and the Court held that an injunction granted in the Court below must be sustained. The case of Neilson v. Betts (8) affords a like decision on similar grounds. The plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to an injunction; and they are also entitled to something more, as, indeed, the defendant has, by assenting to the order, admitted — they are entitled to have the spurious trade-marks removed from the boxes.

(7) Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 13.

(8) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 317; Law Rep. 5 E. & Ir. App. 1.

Now the next question is, ought I to deprive the plaintiffs of their right to costs because they have not given the defendant notice before commencing their action? I do not think that this is a case where it would be just for me to deprive the plaintiffs of their costs. A plaintiff in these cases is placed in circumstances of difficulty, because, if he were to give notice, there is a great probability of the defendant at once getting rid of the spurious articles before the plaintiff could interfere; and the plaintiff, therefore, by giving notice, would in many instances be affording the defendant an opportunity of doing that which an injunction would have prevented. I well remember that the late Master of the Rolls stated that in these cases when at the bar he was accustomed to advise his client not to give any notice, but to move at once. In Upmann v. Elkan (3) Lord Hatherley (p. 247), referring to the argument that mere carriers of goods bearing a fraudulent trade-mark are guilty of no offence which could support an injunction, says, "I cannot conceive a doctrine more dangerous or mischievous or fatal to the authority of the Court with respect to trade-marks." His decision in that case, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to costs, rested upon the fact that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had given notice and obtained all possible redress, they had no occasion to file a bill for injunction. Had the plaintiffs given no notice, but forthwith commenced their suit, the decision as to costs would have been the other way. In the same case in the Court below (3) Lord Romilly, M.R., takes the same view, where he says (p. 478), "It has never been laid down that a plaintiff entitled to relief must before filing a bill apply to the defendant and ascertain previously whether he will do without suit all that is required—although such a rule might and probably would be a very useful one; and I remember Sir James Wigram regretting that no such rule prevailed. . . . It is, in my opinion, a mistake to say that the person at whose order the goods stand can complain if a suit is instituted against him; it arises from the misfortune of his having a dishonest correspondent." He then goes on to say, "It does not, in my opinion, make any difference whether the goods are sent to a person who does not deal in the articles consigned, and whose duty is simply to distribute the goods to other persons, or whether the goods are sent to him as consignee for his own purposes. In either case they are sent to the dock to be at his disposal, and without his signature the goods cannot be disposed of." This is the short case here. The goods are at the defendant's disposal; he was also the importer of the goods, for he bought them abroad, and brought them here. I have heard the late Master of the Rolls say that if you give notice before action, and get an undertaking from the defendant, as you have the defendant's submission you are wrong in moving; therefore, if the plaintiff moves after notice and submission, he would not get his costs. I therefore hold that it is clear on the authorities that it is not necessary in a case like the one before me to give notice. I have also held that there has been an infringement. The plaintiffs, therefore, are clearly entitled to their costs. The result of my decision, however, will not be as the defendant has suggested, that every purchaser of a small parcel of spurious goods incurs a liability to pay the costs of an action in the Chancery Division for infringing a patent or trade-mark, for it is impossible for me in this case to pass over the fact that there is in the present case a large consignment of goods. 5,000 cigars is rather a large order for personal consumption, and the plaintiffs were justified in suspecting that so large a consignment was intended for distribution. The defendant, too, merely says that they were intended for family use. The term is not very definite, and one which might easily cover a distribution of the goods sufficiently wide to establish clear evidence of user. But even if the cigars were given away to friends and relations, and not sold, there would be a large distribution, and one calculated to do the plaintiffs material injury, for the persons who smoked the cigars would give the plaintiffs the credit of making an inferior article.

In the case of Cooper v. Whittingham (1) the Master of the Rolls held that the defendant must pay the costs of the action, because the importation of the spurious articles was an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright and an unlawful act, for the consequences of which the defendant must be held liable, notwithstanding that he determined not to sell the articles as soon as he recognised that their importation was an infringement. It has been argued that the plaintiffs can only obtain an injunction shewing damage done, because their right of action is the old common law right. Whether the act complained of is wrong by statute or common law, or is an infringement of equitable right, is immaterial. It is sufficient that there be wrongful user. As I have already said, there had been a wrongful user prior to commencement of the action, and the plaintiffs therefore were entitled to an injunction or undertaking. They were therefore also entitled to costs. Although, as against the defendant, the case may be a hard one, the defendant must not on that account be excused from payment of costs. As the late Master of the Rolls said in Cooper v. Whittingham (1), he cannot be allowed to escape by saying, "I never intended to do wrong"; and to use an observation of the same learned Judge, as there is no fund out of which successful plaintiffs can receive costs, their costs must be paid by the defendants, although such defendants may be innocent.

Solicitors—Lumley & Lumley, for plaintiffs; H Tyrrell, agent for Clarke & Hawley, Longton, Staffordshire, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BRETT, M.R.
COTTON, L.J.
BOWEN, L.J.
1883.
Aug. 8.

In re KEMP'S ESTATE.

Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 2, 44, 45 and 46 —Settlement—Sale by Tenant for Life—Notice to Trustee—Solicitor of Tenant for Life—Appointment of, as Trustee for purposes of Act.

The solicitor acting for the tenant for life is not a fit person to be appointed a trustee for the purpose of receiving the notice required by the Act to be given on a proposed sale by the tenant for life, the object of the Act being that the trustees should act as a check on the tenant for life.

Nor does the fact that such solicitor is a trustee of the instrument constituting the settlement make any difference.

This was an application by way of appeal from a refusal of Kay, J., to discharge an order made by him in chambers.

Sir R. H. Kemp, Bart., was tenant for life of certain real estate under the will of Sir W. Kemp, made in 1861. The present trustees of that will were Charles Edward Gibbs and J. Richard Wood.

The trustees had no power of sale, nor any power of consent to or approval of the exercise of any power of sale, but there was a clause empowering the trustees to lay out the money "arising from any such sale" in certain investments. The tenant for life was desirous of selling certain parts of the settled land, under the powers of the Settled Land Act; and as there were no trustees within the definition in that Act to whom the notice required by section 45 had to be given, an application was made in chambers, on behalf of the tenant for life, that the two present trustees of the will might be appointed trustees under the settlement made by the will for the purposes of the Act.

J. R. Wood was a solicitor, and had been for many years, and was still, the solicitor for the family, and was now acting on bebalf of the tenant for life, and had advised the sale.

On the 12th of July, 1883, Kay, J., following his decision in In re Walker's Estate (1), refused to appoint J. R. Wood a co-trustee with Gibbs, and a motion being brought in Court on the 19th of July, 1883, to discharge the order, was refused.

The tenant for life appealed.

Robinson, Q.C., and Bramley, for the appellant, contended that Mr. Wood being a fit person in every way, the fact that he had been appointed by the testator himself should induce the Court to appoint him—In re Tempest (2).

In Forster v. Abraham (3), Jessel, M.R., pointed out that the discretion which the Court exercises in appointing new trustees is not an arbitrary one, but to be applied according to settled rules.

In the case of In re Walker's Trusts (1), which the learned Judge followed, the appointment was opposed.

Woodhouse, for the proposed trustees, supported the appeal, and called attention to the clause empowering the investing of the proceeds of sale as impliedly giving the trustees of the will a power of sale.

COTTON, L.J., said that this application was necessary under the provisions of the Settled Land Act. Two trustees had been proposed, and that while no objection was made to one, objection was made to Mr. Wood—not that he was not a fit person to be appointed a trustee, no suggestion whatever being made against him, but he was acting as the solicitor for the tenant for life. Now the trustees were, by the Act, intended to be a check upon the tenant for life, and the 44th and 45th sections clearly shewed that differences between the tenant for life and the trustees were contemplated as possible. No doubt Mr. Wood would give the best advice he could to the tenant for life, both in his interest and in that of all parties; but he might make a mistake; and how could he afterwards, as trustee, object to the course taken by the tenant for life, after having advised him to take it? That would place him in a wrong position, namely, the position of opposing as trustee what he had already advised as solicitor. As to the fact of the testator himself appointing Mr. Wood trustee, so far as the Court were informed, there was nothing in the will which put the trustees in opposition to the tenant for life, and therefore there was nothing in the will to shew that the testator wished him to be appointed in order to oppose the tenant for life. The present decision was no slur whatever on Mr. Wood; but, looking at his position, the Court were of opinion that Mr. Justice Kay's discretion had been well exercised, and that some other person ought to be appointed.

(1) Law J. N.C. 1883, p. 76.
(2) 35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 632; Law Rep. 1 Chanc. 485.
(3) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 199; Law Rep. 17 Eq. 351.

BRETT, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Wainwright & Baillie, agents for J. R. Wood, Woodbridge, for appellant.

[IN THE COURT OF APPEAL.]

BANKRUPTCY.
BAGGALLAY, L.J.
COTTON, L.J.
LINDLEY, L.J.
1883.
June 21.

Ex parte LOVERING; in re MURRELL.

Bankruptcy — Reputed Ownership — Order and Disposition—Articles not connected with Debtor's Business—Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 15. sub-s. 5.

A member of a firm of woollen manufacturers kept at the place of business a quantity of pictures. The trustees in the liquidation of the firm claimed them as part of the partnership assets:—Held, that the pictures being articles not connected in any way with the legitimate business of the firm, the inference was that they were not the property of the firm, and could not therefore be held to be in the reputed ownership of the firm, and that, on the whole of the evidence, they were the separate property of the partner.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Hazlitt sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

The bankrupts were a firm of woollen manufacturers, consisting of a father, William Murrell, and two sons, S. and H. Murrell, who carried on business in partnership under the name of Williams & Murrell.

On the 8th of June, 1882, they filed a liquidation petition, and the question then arose whether certain pictures which at the commencement of the liquidation were hanging upon the walls of the warehouse and counting-house formed part of the joint estate of the firm or belonged to the separate estate of the father. The trustees of the joint estate claimed them as being in fact joint estate, or as having been in the order and disposition of the firm as reputed owners. One of the separate creditors applied to the Registrar to have them declared separate estate, and the Registrar made the order, against which the trustees of the joint estate now appealed.

Various creditors of the firm deposed that the pictures had always been held out by the father as part of the partnership property, and that they had in consequence given the firm longer credit than they would have done if they had known that the pictures did not belong to the firm.

There was, on the other hand, evidence to shew that the pictures were the separate property of the father, who was in the habit of constantly buying and selling pictures, and used to hang them up sometimes at the place of business for the sake of convenience.

Winslow, Q.C., and Swinfen Eady, for the appellants, referred to Ex parte McKenna (1) and Ex parte Hare (2).

Horton Smith, Q.C., and Horne Payne, for the separate creditors, were not called upon.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The only question on which I have felt some little doubt is, whether, inasmuch as the pictures were kept in the warehouse or in the counting-house of the firm, they must not be taken to have been in the reputed ownership of the firm. I think there would have been a great deal in that argument, if instead of pictures the articles in question had been ready-made coats, or something else connected in some way with the business of the firm. It might well have been thought by the creditors that the firm were dealing in ready-made coats as well as in woollen goods not made up. But there is no connection whatever between pictures and woollen goods, and I can see nothing to shew that the pictures were ever treated as the property of the firm. There was nothing to lead the public to believe that the pictures formed part of the partnership assets. I agree that it is not necessary to shew that any particular creditor was deceived; it is enough to prove that the way in which the property was dealt with was calculated to deceive the creditors as to the ownership. But there is no evidence of that kind, and, acting as a juryman, I arrive at the conclusion both that the pictures were in fact the separate property of the father, and that they were not in the reputed ownership of the firm.

(1) 3 De Gex, F. & J. 645; 30 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 25.
(2) 1 Deac. 16; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 478.

COTTON, L.J., and LINDLEY, L.J., concurred.

Solicitors—Rooks & Co., for appellants; H. Montagu, for respondents.

KAY, J.
1883.
July 31.
August 1.

In re KIRWAN'S TRUSTS.

Power of Appointment — Conditional Appointment—Fraud on Power — Defective Execution—Aid—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 10—24 & 25 Vict. c. 114.

The donee of a power of appointment by will or deed amongst his children, having a son and a daughter, by his will, in 1862, appointed the whole fund to his daughter M. absolutely. By the marriage settlement of M. in 1866 he affected to appoint the whole fund to her, reserving to himself the faculty of disposing in favour of his wife of the reversion of 10,000 francs during her life. By a codicil to his will, dated in 1871, and made in France, after reciting an arrangement between himself, his daughter and her husband, by which if the whole fund were appointed to the daughter the father's widow was to have 10,000 francs for her life, he declared, "In the case that my said daughter and her husband should respect my memory and their signature, then it is my will and desire that my daughter and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum;" but in case they should not respect their signature, then he desired that one-half should go to the son. This codicil was written and signed by the testator, but was unattested. It was, however, admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114:—Held, that as the codicil was intended to take effect as a testamentary instrument, the Court could not aid the defective execution of the appointment contained in it by treating it as an imperfect appointment by deed; nor, in view of the language of section 10 of the Wills Act, could the appointment be upheld as testamentary, for that the negative provision in the section that no testamentary appointment can be made unless attested by two witnesses is not affected by the later statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114. Held, further, that there was apparent on the face of the codicil an intention that the appointment contained in the will should be revoked if the daughter and her husband did not abide by their engagement, and that this was sufficient to bring that appointment within the controlling power of a Court of equity, and to render it invalid. Held, therefore, that the fund went as in default of appointment.

Kennard v. Kennard (42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 280; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 227) observed upon.

George Saint Lo Kirwan, under the will of his father, Clement Kirwan, had power by will or deed to appoint to his son or daughter, or sons or daughters, after his decease, in such proportions as he might think fit, the principal share, wherein he took a life interest, in the residuary estate of his father.

George Saint Lo Kirwan was first married on the 15th of December, 1839, and there was issue of such marriage two children only, the petitioner, Felix George Kirwan, and Mathilde Cesarine Kirwan, who, in June, 1866, intermarried with one Flavien Breton.

George Saint Lo Kirwan died in France, in March, 1880, having, on the 3rd of April, 1862, made a will in the French language, but duly executed according to English law, by which, after reciting that he had then two children only—namely, Felix and Mathilde—and reciting the power of appointment given to him under the will of his father, Clement Kirwan, he, by virtue of that power, appointed that the share of the residue to which he was entitled should after his death go to his daughter Mathilde, her executors, administrators and assigns; but if she should die in his lifetime, which did not happen, then to Felix absolutely.

On the occasion of the marriage between Mathilde Cesarine Kirwan and Flavien Breton a settlement was executed, dated the 24th of June, 1866. The sixth article of this settlement was as follows :—"Previous to the appointment to be hereafter made Mr. Kirwan has explained as follows: that he is creditor in London, England, of a sum of 60,000 francs, or thereabouts, in reversion, the life interest whereof being alienated; this amount comes to him from the succession of his father and mother. According both to English law and to the testamentary disposition of the father and mother of Mr. Kirwan the latter cannot make over the reversion of this claim. He has only the right to appoint to which of his children he intends it should go at his death. Taking advantage of this faculty, Mr. Kirwan declares by these presents, in consideration of the intended marriage, to appoint Mademoiselle Kirwan (the future wife), his daughter, to receive this amount on the death of Mr. Kirwan alone, and to the exclusion of the other claimants to the latter's estate, and on account of the right of the said future wife in this estate. If necessary, he by these presents, and always in contemplation of the proposed marriage, appoints to the future wife, his daughter, who accepts all claims and personal securities he may have at the time of his death in England. He only reserves to himself the faculty of disposing of these securities and claims in favour of Mrs. Marie Vitaline Breton Kirwan, his second wife, of the reversion of 10,000 francs during the life of this lady, and which 10,000 francs ought to be invested in the name of Madame Kirwan for the life interest, and of the future wife for the reversion. Madame Kirwan (née Breton) will have the right to choose the mode of investment which will be made, provided it presents all guarantees for the capital."

On the 9th of May, 1871, George Saint Lo Kirwan made a codicil, by which he provided as follows :—"When I married my daughter, Mathilde Cesarine Kirwan, I expressed the desire of leaving to my wife, Marie Vitaline Breton Kirwan, a small revenue at my death through gratitude for having taken care, as a good mother, of my children during their infancy until their majority; but not having it in my power to do so, my daughter and her husband, Flavien Breton, proposed to me as follows: that if I would consent to leave them the whole of the sum of my share of the residue of my father's estate, Clement Kirwan, which I have the power to dispose of in favour of my children, that they would take the engagement at my death to have placed in my said wife's name for her life the sum of 10,000 francs at five per cent., so as to make her 500 francs per annum for her life, and at my wife's death the said sum to return to my said daughter. I have not the least doubt that they will execute their engagement; but in case they should not respect their signature, then I desire that one-half of the said sum shall be given to Felix George Kirwan; but in case that my said daughter and Flavien Breton, her husband, should respect my memory and their signature, then it is my will and desire that Mathilde and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum of my aforesaid share in a will signed by me in the year 1862, in the office of Mr. Allaire, notaire, at Evreux, in which all these conditions are mentioned, and also in her marriage contract."

This codicil was entirely in the handwriting of George Saint Lo Kirwan, and was signed by him, but was unattested. It was, however, admitted to probate under the Act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114.

The share of George Saint Lo Kirwan in the residuary estate of his father,

In re Kirwan's Trusts.

Clement Kirwan, having been paid into Court under the Trustee Relief Act by the trustees for the time being of the will of Clement Kirwan, this petition was presented by Felix George Kirwan, the only son of George Saint Lo Kirwan, asking that the fund might be paid out in equal portions to him and his sister, Mathilde Cesarine Breton, on the ground that the power of appointment given to George Saint Lo Kirwan, under the codicil of his father, Clement Kirwan, had not been validly exercised, and that therefore the fund must go as in default of appointment.

In a joint affidavit, filed on the 24th of May, 1883, by Flavien Breton and Mathilde his wife, the wife stated as follows, par. 1:—"At the date of the will of my late father, George Saint Lo Kirwan, dated the 3rd of April, 1862, I was under the age of eighteen years. I did not, prior to or at the time of the execution of the said will, enter into any bargain, agreement or arrangement with my said father to the effect that I would out of the moneys to be bequeathed thereby to me or otherwise make a provision for or confer any benefit upon his wife, Vitaline Victoire Breton Kirwan, or any bargain, agreement or arrangement to the like effect." And in par. 2 both the deponents stated as follows:—"No agreement or bargain for the benefit of the said testator's said wife was ever entered into or made by us or either of us until shortly before our marriage, which took place in the year 1866."

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and C. L. Chubb, for the petitioner.—There has been no valid exercise by George Saint Lo Kirwan of the power of appointment given to him by his father's will; consequently the fund must go as in default of appointment—Quinn v. Butler (1), In re Marsden's Trusts (2) and Topham v. The Duke of Portland (3).

Kekewich, Q.C., and J. G. Wood.—The appointment made by the codicil is perfectly good. Even if it is bad as an appointment by will, under the terms of the instrument creating the power, it may be exercised by will or deed, and the Court will treat the codicil as a valid execution by deed—Kennard v. Kennard (4). Moreover, the codicil is only bad for want of attestation, and the Court will aid its imperfect execution—Roach v. Trood (5), Palmer v. Locke (6) and Onions v. Tyrer (7).

Hastings, Q.C., in reply.

Horsbrugh, for the trustees.

KAY, J.—This case certainly raises some very curious and perplexing questions. The facts, shortly stated, are these: [His Lordship read the will and codicil of Clement Kirwan, and continued:] It seems that he died in 1831. He left six children, of whom one was George Saint Lo Kirwan, whose share is now in question. The widow died in March, 1847. George Saint Lo Kirwan was first married on the 15th of December, 1839, and there was issue of such marriage the petitioner Felix, and another child, Mathilde, who in June, 1866, intermarried with, and is now the wife of, Flavien Breton. George Saint Lo Kirwan died in March, 1880, in France. The sixth share, of which he was tenant for life under the codicil, is in Court, and what appears to have taken place as to that share is this: he made a will, dated the 3rd of April, 1862, executed according to English law. [His Lordship read the will, and continued:] Then he afterwards made a codicil, dated the 9th of May, 1871. [His Lordship read the codicil, and continued:] Stopping there, it is quite plain that this codicil proceeds upon a bargain which Flavien Breton and Mathilde had entered into with him, if he would appoint the whole to them they would make a provision out of it for the widow—a very proper thing in itself, but not a competent or proper execution of the power of appointment amongst children. Besides

(1) Law Rep. 6 Eq. 225.
(2) 4 Drew. 594; 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 906.
(3) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 513; on app. 39 ibid. 259; Law Rep. 5 Chanc. 40.
(4) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 280; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 227.
(5) Law Rep. 3 Ch. D. 427.
(6) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 113; Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 294.
(7) 1 P. Wms. 343.

that, there is another document which I must refer to, dated earlier than this codicil, but after the will of George Saint Lo Kirwan, which I have read—namely, a settlement of the 24th of June, 1866, on the marriage of Mathilde and Flavien Breton; and, after providing for other matters, the 6th article is this: [His Lordship read the article, and continued:] Now, in addition to that, I have the affidavit of Flavien Breton and Mathilde, filed on the 24th of May, 1883. [His Lordship read paragraphs 1 and 2 of the affidavit.] Therefore, the state of things is this: when the will of the 3rd of April, 1862, was made, there was an absolute appointment of the whole fund to the daughter Mathilde, which was not in pursuance of any bargain, but was a perfectly good appointment. Then, in 1866, this bargain is made, which may be shortly stated thus: that if Mathilde and her husband will make certain provision out of the fund for the widow of the appointor, he will appoint the whole fund to Mathilde; and thereupon he makes, first, the provision which I have read in the marriage settlement of the 24th of June, 1866, which purports to be, if necessary, an appointment; and, secondly, the codicil of the 9th of May, 1871. Now the codicil was not attested, and therefore it did not fulfil the requisites either of a power or of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26); but it was a good testamentary document, and has been admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, which provides "that every will or other testamentary instrument made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever may be the domicile of such person at the time of making the same, or at the time of his or her death, shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed for the purpose of being admitted in England or Ireland to probate, and in Scotland to confirmation, if the same be made according to the form required, either by the law of the place where the same was made, or by the law of the place where the person was domiciled." This being a good testamentary instrument by the law of the domicile of George Saint Lo Kirwan—which I understand was France at the time—although not executed as required by the Wills Act, has, under the Act which I have referred to, been admitted to probate in England; and the documents admitted to probate are two, being the will of the 3rd of April, 1862, and the codicil of the 9th of May, 1871.

Now I have to consider what is the effect of all this. In the first place, it is clear that the codicil is a void appointment in equity—that is to say, supposing it to be otherwise a good appointment, equity would not allow it to stand, because it proceeds upon a practice which is contrary to the creation of a power. The same is to be said of the appointment made by the settlement. Then the first question is, can the appointment be aided? Now it is clear that an appointment before the Wills Act, although purporting to be by will, if not made with the formalities there required to make a perfect will, and not made with the formalities required by the terms of the power, would yet be aided in equity, if it were in favour of a child. For that I need only refer to the case of Wilkes v. Holmes (8), and the later case that has been referred to of Lucena v. Lucena (9). But then, in this case, before this codicil was made the Wills Act had passed, and the Wills Act provides, by its 10th section, "that no appointment made by will in exercise of any power shall be valid unless the same be exercised in manner hereinbefore required." Then a will executed as required by the Act shall be a good appointment, and shall be a valid execution of the power of appointment. Of course, the manner thereinbefore required was attestation by two witnesses, and here there is no attestation at all. It is said that, nevertheless, as this power might be executed by deed or will, the Court may treat it as a valid execution by deed. For that the case of Kennard v. Kennard (4) was referred to, where the power was in effect by deed or will, and a memorandum was left by the appointor which contained the words, "If I die suddenly, I wish my eldest son, Robert Bruce Kennard, to have it"—which is explained to be "the money which I had with my sister, Mrs. Mann, which was left to me"—meaning the money over which he had a power of appointment. "My intention was to make it over to him legally if my life is spared." That is a memorandum dated in 1870, and after the Wills Act; and therefore the question was, whether that memorandum, not being attested at all, was a good execution of the power; and it was held to be a good execution of the power, being in favour of a child. But then I am a little in doubt upon what ground. Was it a good execution of the power because the instrument was not a will at all, but a memorandum with the formalities of a deed being supplied, or was it a memorandum which was considered to be a will and yet was treated as a deed? It seems to me a very strong thing, indeed, if the memorandum was really a testamentary document, to say, after the provision in the Wills Act that "no appointment made by will in exercise of the power shall be valid unless the same be" in effect attested by two witnesses, that the defect could be possibly supplied; and I must really read this as meaning, not that the memorandum, being considered to be a testamentary document, was then in effect in equity turned into a deed, so as to supply defective execution, but that the Court really did not consider that the document was a testamentary one at all, but treated it as a mere memorandum, which might possibly, by aid of the Court of equity, be turned into a deed by supplying the defective execution. I think that appears to be the case from the language of both the judgments, but more especially from the language of Sir George Mellish. Lord Justice James says:—"Here the lady had the power to give the property by an instrument sealed and delivered. By an instrument not sealed and delivered she expresses her intention that her son shall have the property which is subject to the power, and the case is one in which a Court of equity will relieve against defective execution." Sir George Mellish says:—"I am of the same opinion. A doubt I felt whether this instrument was not intended to be a will, and whether an instrument intended to operate as a will, but incapable of doing so could operate in another way, has been removed during the argument. The donee of the power expresses an intention to give the property by a more formal instrument, but still shews her intention to give it. She means in any event to give it, but to do so by a more formal instrument if her life is spared." Now I really must take that as meaning: "I have come to the conclusion"—I am paraphrasing Sir George Mellish's words—"that the document is not intended to be a will, and therefore the negative words in the 10th section of the Wills Act do not apply to the case." I must say I should require a good deal of consideration before I could possibly come to the conclusion that a document plainly intended to be a will in a testamentary form, but without the express requisites required by the Wills Act, or by the terms of the power, is to be aided in a Court of equity by in effect turning it into a deed. Therefore I do not think it would be possible to treat this codicil as being a deed, for the purpose of supplying a defective execution. It is a codicil; it is a testamentary document, and has been admitted to probate as such. But then it was said the defective execution may nevertheless be supplied, because it is a testamentary instrument. It is a good testamentary instrument, and its only defect is its want of attestation. But the Wills Act says that "no appointment made by will in execution of any power shall be valid unless the same be executed in manner hereinbefore expressed"—that is to say, attested by two witnesses.

(8) 9 Modern Rep. 485.

(9) 5 Beav. 249.

The later Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, does not refer to that clause, nor indeed does it refer to a power of appointment at all. It only does this: it makes a will executed abroad by a British subject a good will, if it be such a document as is recognised as a will by the law of that place. But it does not at all touch or interfere with the negative provisions in the Wills Act—namely, that no testamentary appointment can be made unless it is attested by two witnesses. Therefore I do not think it would be possible in any way to treat this codicil as being a good and valid appointment either at law or in equity. Then comes this difficulty, and it is a very considerable difficulty. If the codicil could be treated to any extent as a good appointment, it is an appointment which is in some respects inconsistent with the appointment made by the will of the 3rd of April, 1862. Therefore, although there are no words of revocation in it, it being an inconsistent provision, it might be held to revoke the will, and it might possibly be held to revoke the will if it were a good appointment at law, although the appointment may be void in equity, because it was in fraud of the power, and that might probably still operate as a revocation. I do not give any opinion on that subject at present. But being void, both at law and in equity, as an appointment, I do not see how it can be treated as a revocation of the prior will. However, there is, since the prior will, an appointment by the settlement, and that is an appointment which most certainly might be aided in a Court of equity and made into a good appointment; and if the appointment be inconsistent with the will, as in truth it would be (it is an appointment of the whole, no doubt, to Mathilde, but in terms which are not contained in the will), that appointment would be, of course, a revocation of the will, because it is dealing with the absolute interest; still it is not a revocation at law, because it is not an appointment at law. It is a bad appointment at law, and can only be made into a good appointment in equity. And then arises this curious question. The appointment being clearly an improper appointment in equity, because it is a fraud on the power, can equity aid it so as to destroy the previous good appointment by the will of 1862, and yet set it aside because it is a fraud upon the power? I must say it seems to me extremely difficult to say that the Court of equity could come to that conclusion. But there remains this point: Supposing that none of the appointments can be treated as appointments which revoke the will of 1862, is the will of 1862 now, in the eye of the Court of equity, a good appointment? The argument is this: The will of 1862 was clearly not intended to operate. That is beyond all question; and if it were in any way left to operate, it would be left to operate upon this principle, that since it was made there was a bargain with Mathilde that if she took the whole property she would dispose of part of it for the benefit of the widow. That would be, of course, an improper bargain, and would invalidate any appointment made upon such a bargain. Now the argument is that the will is an ambulatory instrument, and from that I can say there was such a bargain, and that the will was intended to operate and carry the whole fund by way of appointment to Mathilde, but upon the terms that she was to make out of it this provision; and therefore, this will being an ambulatory instrument, the bargain must be treated as containing a term of this kind, "If you do not do this, I will revoke the will." If one can arrive at the conclusion that there was such a bargain, I think it might well be aided in equity, remembering always that it is equity which aids the appointment, and equity will not allow itself to be defeated by a mere technicality. But I think the Court of equity has ample power to say (although I do not remember any case of the kind, nor has any been cited to me) that the appointment, if allowed to remain on these terms, would be a valid appointment in equity, because it is just the same as if a new appointment had been made at the time the language was used, and the new appointment had been made upon those terms. I conceive the arm of the Court to be quite long enough to reach a case of that kind. Is this such a case here? I think it is, for this reason: In the codicil which I have read there are these words:—"In case my daughter and Flavien Breton, her husband, shall respect my memory and their signature" (that is, shall carry out this bargain which I have made with them), "then it is my will and desire that Mathilde and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum of my aforesaid share in a will signed by me in the year 1862." That means the will which I have read I can read on the face of this codicil this bargain:—"My intention is that she shall have that which I have appointed to her by a will of 1862, if she carries out this bargain." That makes the appointment by the will of 1862 come within the controlling power of the Court of equity, and

In re Kirwan's Trusts.

I must hold that it is an invalid appointment in equity, and consequently the fund will go as in default of appointment.

Solicitors—Russell, Son & Scott, for petitioners; A. F. & R. W. Tweedie, for respondents; Charles Rogers, Sons & Russell, for trustees.

CHITTY, J. 1883. June 23.

In re THE EARL OF CHESTERFIELD'S TRUSTS.

Administration — Tenant for life and Remainderman—Power to postpone Conversion — Unconverted Personalty subsequently falling in—Apportionment between Capital and Income—Compound Interest.

Where a will contains a power for trustees at their discretion to postpone conversion, and outstanding personal estate of the testator has, together with arrears of interest thereon, fallen in many years after the date of the testator's death, the proper mode of apportionment between tenant for life and remaindermen is to ascertain what sum put out at compound interest at four per cent. from the date of the death of the testator would have, less income tax, produced at the date of the receipt the amount actually received; and the sum so ascertained is to be treated as capital, and the difference as income.

Beavan v. Beavan (ROMILLY, M.R., February 22, 1869) reported and followed.

By a deed dated the 18th of March, 1850, and made between Colonel Tynte of the one part, and George, sixth Earl of Chesterfield, of the other part, Colonel Tynte covenanted with the earl that, in case he (Colonel Tynte) should be living at the date of the death of his father C. K. K. Tynte, he (Colonel Tynte) would, within six calendar months after the death of his said father, pay to the earl, his executors, administrators or assigns, the sum of 18,310*l.*, with interest for the same at the rate of five per cent. per annum from the day of such death until payment of the principal sum; and further, that he (Colonel Tynte) would, during the joint lives of himself and his said father, and, in case he should survive his said father, until payment of the said principal sum and the interest thereof, upon the request and at the expense of the earl, his executors, administrators or assigns, do all acts for enabling him or them to effect and keep on foot any assurance or assurances on his (Colonel Tynte's) life to the extent of 18,310*l.*; and Colonel Tynte conveyed his life interest in remainder expectant on the death of his said father in the Tynte family estates (subject to certain prior incumbrances) to the earl, by way of mortgage for securing the repayment of the 18,310*l.* and interest.

Two policies of insurance for 5,000*l.* each were effected by the sixth earl upon the life of Colonel Tynte.

In November, 1860, Colonel Tynte's father died.

On the 1st of June, 1866, the sixth earl died, having by his will given all his property to his son the seventh earl.

The seventh earl died on the 1st of December, 1871, having by his will, after certain specific bequests and legacies, devised and bequeathed unto and to the use of the Hon. Edward Chandos Leigh and Earl Howe his real and residuary personal estate, upon trust, as to his real and residuary personal estate in Derby, to pay the income to the persons therein mentioned; and as to all other his real and personal estate, upon trust that his trustees should, at such times or time after his decease as they should, in their absolute discretion, think fit, and with power to postpone such conversion at such discretion, get in, receive and convert into money, so much of his personal estate as should not consist of money, and, out of the money arising thereby, pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies; and, in the next place, pay all the debts of his late father then remaining unpaid; and, after such payments, lay out the surplus of such personal estate in the purchase of lands and hereditaments in England or Wales, to be settled upon the uses thereinafter declared of his real estate, or as near thereto as circumstances would permit; and the will went on to declare limitations of the testator's real estate in favour of his sister Evelyn, Countess of Carnarvon, during her life, to her separate use, and after her decease to hold or convey the same to the uses therein mentioned, being uses for the benefit of his nephew Lord Porchester, and his issue in strict settlement. And the testator appointed the said Edward Chandos Leigh and Earl Howe executors and trustees of his will; and he declared that all pecuniary legacies and bequests of personalty, and all annuities under his will, should bear interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum from his death until payment.

The will of the seventh earl was in part inoperative, and by a deed of resettlement of August, 1874, all the hereditaments subject to the will of the seventh earl, and also his residuary personal estate until invested in land as directed by his will, were limited to the use of the said Countess of Carnarvon during her life, with remainder, subject to a rent-charge in favour of Lord Porchester on his attaining twenty-one, to the use of her husband the Earl of Carnarvon during his life, with remainder to the use of Lord Porchester during his life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainders over.

On the 25th of January, 1875, the Countess of Carnarvon died, having by her will appointed the Earl of Carnarvon her executor.

The trustees of the seventh Earl of Chesterfield, in exercise of the discretion conferred upon them by his will, postponed the conversion of the debt due from Colonel Tynte and the policies.

After the death of Colonel Tynte's father in 1860, various suits were instituted by prior incumbrancers on Colonel Tynte's life interests, and numerous incumbrances were discharged, and it was not until the year 1878 that the trustees of the seventh Earl of Chesterfield received anything in respect of their charge. In the year 1881 the trustees had received, in full discharge of the debt, the sum of 36,641*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* (hereinafter referred to as "the Tynte moneys"), of which 18,310*l.* represented principal, and 18,331*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* accumulations of interest from the date of the death of Colonel Tynte's father.

The premiums on the two policies of 5,000*l.* each effected on the life of Colonel Tynte were paid by the sixth and seventh earls and the Countess of Carnarvon during their respective lifetimes, and, after the death of the countess, by the Earl of Carnarvon.

On the 6th of March, 1879, the trustees of the will of the seventh earl, out of the Tynte moneys, repaid to the Earl of Carnarvon the aggregate amount of the premiums paid by himself and the countess on the policies, and thenceforward themselves, out of the same fund, paid the premiums on the policies down to Colonel Tynte's death.

In September, 1882, Colonel Tynte died, and the trustees received the 10,000*l.*, the amount of the policies. They had also received the sum of 539*l.* in respect of bonuses. The whole sum of 10,539*l.* is hereinafter referred to as "the policy moneys."

The trustees invested the Tynte and policy moneys, amounting together to 47,181*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*, in Exchequer bills, and from time to time sold out and applied the proceeds of such Exchequer bills in payment of past and current premiums on the policies, and in discharge of certain charges and incumbrances on their testator's estate, the balance remaining in their hands being represented by 15,000*l.* Exchequer bills, and 1,428*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* cash.

The question had arisen whether the balance was distributable as between capital and income, and, if so, upon what principle. The trustees had been advised that the Tynte and policy moneys formed part of the residuary personal estate of the seventh earl, and should be treated accordingly; and that they, the trustees, having, in exercise of the power conferred in the will of the seventh earl, postponed the conversion of the Tynte and policy moneys for the benefit of the estate, should, for the purposes of adjusting the equities between the persons successively entitled, ascertain how much thereof was attributable to capital and how much to income; and that the proper course in order to arrive at such result was to take separately each amount received by the trustees (deducting in the case of the policy moneys the total accumulated premiums chargeable against the same), and to calculate what principal sum invested on the 1st of December, 1871 (the date of the death of the seventh earl), at four per cent. interest with yearly rests, would at the date of the receipt have produced the amount actually received; and that the aggregate of the principal sums arrived at by such calculation should be treated as capital, and the residue as income, such income being further apportionable between the successive tenants for life.

The trustees had incurred certain costs in recovering the Tynte moneys and in administering the estates of the sixth and seventh earls. Certain legacy duty was also payable. The trustees presented this petition under Lord St. Leonards' Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), for the opinion of the Court upon the following questions:—

1. Whether the Tynte and policy moneys should be apportioned as between capital and income.

2. Whether, if so, the principle above stated was the right principle for ascertaining how much of the Tynte and policy moneys respectively was attributable to capital and how much to income.

3. Whether the trustees, out of the Exchequer bills and cash now in their hands representing the unapplied balance of the Tynte and policy moneys, might properly pay to the Earl of Carnarvon, in right of, and as representative of, the Countess of Carnarvon, such proportion of the amount so found to be attributable to income as should have accrued in respect of the time down to her death.

4. Whether the trustees, out of the Exchequer bills and cash, might properly pay to the Earl of Carnarvon, in his own right, the balance of the amount so found to be attributable to income.

5. Whether the trustees should apply the ultimate residue of the Exchequer bills and cash, after such payments thereout as aforesaid, in payment of such legacy duty and costs as above mentioned, and then in or towards the further discharge of the incumbrances and charges affecting the estates subject to the seventh earl's will; and

6. In what manner the costs of the application should be paid or provided for.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and Douglass Round, for the petitioners.—There should be an apportionment between capital and income. The power to postpone conversion was exerciseable for the benefit of the estate, and its proper exercise is not to be allowed to prejudice the tenant for life—Wilkinson v. Duncan (1).

The real question is, upon what principle the amounts respectively attributable to income and to capital are to be arrived at. It is submitted that the proper mode is that each item of receipt should be taken separately, deducting in the case of the policy moneys the amounts repaid on account of the premiums; and, as regards each item of receipt, it should be calculated what sum, invested at the death of the seventh earl at four per cent. interest with yearly rests, would have produced the amount actually received; then the aggregate of the principal sums arrived at by this calculation ought to be treated as income, and, as such, payable to the Earl of Carnarvon, partly in his own right and partly in right of his deceased wife. The tenant for life should be allowed compound interest, and not simple interest. In the reported cases this point does not seem to have been raised; but it has been assumed that simple interest only was allowable—Cox v. Cox (2), Wright v. Lambert (3) and Jarman on Wills, 4th ed., p. 609; but in the unreported case of Beavan v. Beavan (4), which occurred before the cases cited, it was held by Romilly, M.R., in 1869, that compound interest should be allowed.

It is also right that the calculation should be made as from the testator's death, and not from the expiration of a year.

[CHITTY, J., referred to In re Grabowski's Settlement (5), which was not followed in Cox v. Cox (2)].

Romer, Q.C., and Bromehead, for the respondents, the Earl of Carnarvon and Lord Porchester, the tenant for life in remainder, an infant, also relied upon Beavan v. Beavan (4).

CHITTY, J., after observing that he failed to see upon what grounds the re-

(1) 23 Beav. 469, and per Romilly, M.R., at p. 472; 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 495, at p. 496.
(2) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 569; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 343.
(3) Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 649.
(4) See note, p. 961.
(5) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 926; Law Rep. 6 Eq. 12.

In re Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts.

maindermen, rather than the tenants for life, could be entitled to what was in substance attributable to income, said that it appeared to him that Beavan v. Beavan (4) laid down the more correct principle for calculating an apportionment in a case like the present.

The order stating the opinion of the Court was, so far as material, in the following form:—

"Upon the petition, &c., this Court is of opinion that the said Tynte moneys are apportionable between principal and income by ascertaining the respective sums which, put out at four per cent. per annum on the 1st of December, 1871, the day of the death of the seventh Earl of Chesterfield, and accumulating at compound interest, calculated at that rate, with yearly rests, and deducting income tax, would, with the accumulations of interest, have produced at the respective dates of receipt the amounts actually received, and that the aggregate of the sums so ascertained ought to be treated as principal, and be applied accordingly, and the residue should be treated as income, and that the amount apportioned in respect of income is payable to the Earl of Carnarvon in his own right, and as representing his wife, Evelyn, Countess of Carnarvon, deceased; and that the policy moneys, including bonuses, after deducting and repaying the sums advanced for premiums, with simple interest at four per cent., are apportionable and distributable in the same way; and this Court is also of opinion that the legacy and other duty is payable out of capital and income, according to their respective liability thereto, and that the costs of the petitioners and respondents of this petition ought to be apportioned between capital and income, according to their respective amounts."

Solicitors—Bowlings, Foyer & Hordern, for petitioners; Frere, Forster & Co., for respondents.

ROMILLY, M.R.
1869.
Feb. 22.

BEAVAN v. BEAVAN.

Adjourned summons in an action for the administration of the estate of the testator, H. W. Beavan, deceased.

The testator, by his will dated the 8th of March, 1849, after certain specific devises and legacies, devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife, Joanna Beavan, and T. P. Anderson (since deceased), upon trust that they should sell his real estate at such times and in such manner as they, he or she should, in their, his or her uncontrolled discretion, think most advantageous to his estate, and should, with all convenient speed after his decease, and in such manner as they, he or she should, in their, his or her discretion, think most beneficial, sell, call in and convert into money all the said residuary personal estate (except such part thereof as should consist of ready money), and should, out of the moneys which should come to their hands by virtue of the said residuary devise or bequest and the trusts, pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, and, subject thereto, should invest the same residuary moneys in Government or real securities in England or Wales, and should pay the income of the said residuary real and personal estates and trust funds and premises to his said wife during her life or widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage should hold the said trust premises in trust for his children who should attain twenty-one, or marry, as therein mentioned, and the testator appointed his said wife sole executrix of his will.

The testator died on the 23rd of June, 1852, leaving his widow, the defendant Joanna Beavan, and five children, the plaintiffs, all of whom had attained the age of twenty-one years.

Part of the testator's residuary personal estate consisted of, first, a moiety of an annuity of 675*l.*, payable quarterly, with interest at five per cent. per annum on any quarterly payment remaining unpaid, granted by Colonel Tynte on the 10th of March, 1847, for ninety-nine years, if three persons who were still living, or any of them, should so long live, secured upon estates and trust funds to which Colonel Tynte was entitled for life in remainder, expectant on the several deceases of his father and others, subject to incumbrances, and redeemable at any time on payment of 4,668*l.* 15*s.*, and arrears, if any, of interest and costs; secondly, a mortgage by Colonel Tynte on the same estates, dated the 31st of March, 1848, for securing the sum of 3,000*l.* and other sums therein mentioned, with interest at five per cent. per annum.

Nothing whatever was paid in respect either of the annuity or of the mortgage until 1865, and by the chief clerk's certificate, dated the 23rd of February, 1858, it was certified that, having regard to the nature of the mortgage and the testator's moiety of the annuity, which securities were certified as part of the testator's estate outstanding or undisposed of, it was fit and proper, and for the benefit of all parties interested under the will, that the same should not be sold, but allowed to remain in their then present state during the life of the colonel's father, the tenant for life of the greater part of the estates comprised in the securities, and who was then eighty-two years of age, or until further order.

In re Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts.

In November, 1860, Colonel Tynte's father died. At his death various suits relating to the family estates were pending, and others, including a suit of Ford v. Tynte, were shortly afterwards instituted relating to the same estates.

On the 8th of August, 1865, under orders made in the suits, a sum of 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* was paid in respect of the arrears and interest of the testator's moiety of the annuity, and of this sum 1,949*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* represented arrears and interest due at his death.

In 1868, under orders made in the same suits, the sum of 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* was, by five separate instalments, paid in respect of the mortgage of 1848, being 3,000*l.* for principal, 616*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* for arrears of interest thereon due at the testator's death, and 2,334*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* for interest at five per cent. accrued subsequent to his death.

The question having arisen as to the apportionment of the two sums of 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* and 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* between the tenant for life and the remaindermen under the testator's will on the 23rd of December, 1868, the present summons was taken out by the defendant Joanna Beavan, to determine, amongst other things, first, the principle on which the said sum of 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, received thirteen years after the testator's death for arrears of the said annuity granted by Colonel Tynte to the testator and interest, ought to be divided, the tenant for life of the residue of the testator's estate having received no payment for income on the fund during the above period; and, secondly, to determine the principle on which the sum of 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, received for principal and interest in respect of Colonel Tynte's mortgage dated the 31st of March, 1848, ought to be divided as between the tenant for life and those in remainder.

Jessel, Q.C., and Archibald Smith, for the defendant Joanna Smith, the tenant for life.—The conversion of the moiety of the annuity having been postponed for the benefit of all parties interested, the sum received in respect of the annuity should be apportioned as between capital and income, the capital as at the date of the testator's death bearing interest from that date at the rate of four per cent.—Wilkinson v. Duncan (1) and Gibson v. Bott (6). It is also submitted that in apportioning the 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* between capital and income, compound and not simple interest should be calculated. Secondly, as regards the sum of 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* received in respect of the mortgage, the 3,616*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* due for principal and interest at the testator's death should be considered as capital, and the balance of 2,334*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* as arrears of income, and, as such, paid to the tenant for life.

Sir R. Baggallay, Q.C., and Macnaghten, for the plaintiffs, the remaindermen.—With regard to the testator's moiety of the annuity, the proper mode is, first, to treat the 1,949*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, due for arrears and interest at his death, as capital to be made good to his estate. On this sum four per cent. per annum from the day of his death to the 8th of August, 1865, when the arrears and interest were received, should be paid to the tenant for life. The value of the moiety of the annuity as on the 23rd of June, 1853, being the date of the expiration of a year from the testator's death, should be ascertained, and interest at four per cent. upon the estimated value at that date should be paid out of the residue of the sum of 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* to the tenant-for-life, extending over the period from the testator's death to the 8th of August, 1865. The balance of the 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, and any further payments in respect of the annuity, should then be invested, and the tenant for life receive the interest on the investments. With regard to the 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* received in respect of the mortgage, as the mortgage in respect of which it was received was not strictly within the investments authorised by the will, the tenant for life is entitled to four per cent. only, and the surplus interest should be treated as capital. In the apportionment of both sums, but especially that received in respect of the annuity, simple and not compound interest should be allowed. In Wilkinson v. Duncan (1) the annuity had fallen in, whereas here it is still subsisting.

ROMILLY, M.R., held that the 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* and the 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* ought to be apportioned on the principle laid down in Wilkinson v. Duncan (1), but that in making such apportionment the several amounts should be calculated at compound and not simple interest.

The order was, so far as is material, drawn up in the following form (Entry Book of Decrees and Orders (Chancery), 1869, A. fol. 462):—"On the application of the defendant Joanna Beavan, &c., his Lordship is of opinion—First, that the 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* received by the defendant Joanna Beavan on the 8th of August, 1865, in respect of the arrears of the testator's moiety of the annuity of 675*l.* and interest, ought to be apportioned as on that day as between corpus and income by ascertaining the sum which, put out at interest at four per cent. per annum on the 23rd of June, 1852, the day of the death of H. W. Beavan, the testator in the cause, and accumulating at compound interest calculated at that rate with yearly rests, and deducting income tax, would with the accumulations of interest amount on the 8th of August, 1865, to 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.*, and that the sum so ascertained ought to be treated as corpus on that day, and the difference between 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* and the sum so ascertained ought to be treated as income payable on that day to the defendant Joanna Beavan, as tenant for life. Secondly, that each of the instalments of the said moiety of the annuity of 675*l.*, with or without interest, received after the 8th of August, 1865, or to be hereafter received, ought to be apportioned between corpus and income as on the day on which such instalment was or shall be received, on the same principle on which the 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* received on the 8th of August, 1865, is hereinbefore directed to be apportioned. Thirdly, that each of the several sums making up the sum of 5,950*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* received by the defendant Joanna Beavan on account of principal and interest on the sum of 3,000*l.*, part of the sum secured by the mortgage of the 31st of March, 1848, ought to be apportioned between corpus and income as on the day on which each such sum was received, on the same principle on which the said 8,656*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* is to be apportioned as aforesaid.

(6) 7 Ves. 89.

In re Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts, App.

Solicitors—C. J. & H. Shoubridge.

CHITTY, J. 1883. Feb. 27. } In re THE DRONFIELD SILKSTONE COAL COMPANY (NO. 2).

Company — Liquidation — Costs — Liquidator's Remuneration and Costs—Litigation in the Liquidation—General Costs —Priorities.

When the assets of a company are insufficient for the payment in full of the costs of winding up, and of internal litigation in the winding-up, the liquidator is not entitled to any remuneration; but he is entitled to his costs of realisation out of the assets in priority to the costs of internal litigation; and the costs of such litigation, and all other costs ordered to be paid out of the assets, will be paid rateably without regard to order of date.

Ex parte Percival (Law Rep. 6 Eq. 519), The Cape Breton Company v. Fenn (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 321; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 198), and The Home Investment Society (Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 167) considered.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons taken out by the official liquidator of the company, which was being wound up by an order made in 1879, to obtain an order for the application of the assets of the company in payment of the costs, charges and expenses of the winding-up, and of such dividend as could be paid upon the debts incurred in the winding-up, and that the costs of the application might be costs in the winding-up.

The existing assets were insufficient to pay the liquidator's costs and remuneration in full, and the costs of certain litigation which had arisen in the winding-up, and, consequently, certain questions of priority had to be decided by the Judge.

On the 23rd of March, 1880, an order was made at chambers in the winding-up, on a summons by Messrs. Overend & Barker, mortgagees of a colliery belonging to the company, upon which an order was made, "That the official liquidator should, out of the assets, pay to the applicants the rents under the lease; and that the costs of the applicants of this application, and of the summons taken out on behalf of the said official liquidator on the 19th of March, 1880, ascertained at the sum of 28*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, and the costs of the Sheffield and Rotherham Joint Stock Banking Company, and the said summons of the 19th of March, 1880, ascertained at the sum of 2*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, be paid by the official liquidator out of the assets of the said company; and that the costs of the said official liquidator of both the said applications be costs in this matter."

Another order in the winding-up was made on the 8th of April, 1880, upon a summons by the official liquidator for the delivery up of certain securities held by the Sheffield and Rotherham Banking Company, on the ground of fraudulent preference—"that the official liquidator do, out of the assets of the above-named company, pay and retain the costs of the said applicant, and of the said respondents of the said application, such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master." Mr. Wake, a director of the company, was, with the bank, a respondent in the application.

On the 10th of April, 1880, Mr. Frederick Ward had been settled on the list of contributories of the company by an order made by Jessel, M.R. Against that order Ward appealed, and the order was, on the 21st of December, 1880, reversed, and the Court of Appeal ordered the company to pay Ward his costs of the order of the 10th of April, 1880, and of the appeal motion—such costs to be taxed. Ward's costs were taxed at 172*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, and were paid by the official liquidator in June, 1881.

In re The Dronfield Coal Co.

The net assets of the company available for distribution were about 2,200*l.*; and out of that sum certain preferential payments had to be made. The balance was insufficient for payment of costs and the liquidator's remuneration.

The liquidator claimed the following as costs and remuneration: Untaxed costs, exclusive of costs under the orders of the 23rd of March, 1880, and of the 8th of April, 1880, about 1,100*l.*; costs of the several summonses in Overend & Barker's Case, The Sheffield and Rotherham Bank's Case, and Wake's and Ward's Cases, about 500*l.*; remuneration about 650*l.* The costs in Overend and Barker's summons had not yet been paid by the liquidator; nor had those in the summons against the Sheffield and Rotherham Bank and Wake. The bank's costs had been taxed at 191*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, and Wake's at 166*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.*

In the present summons the liquidator filed an affidavit, in which he stated that he considered that, under the order of the Court of Appeal, he was liable personally for Ward's costs, amounting to 172*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, which he had paid out of the assets of the company. He disclaimed at the Bar any priority for his remuneration; but the assets, even after deducting the amount of such remuneration, were barely sufficient for payment in full of the several amounts of costs above mentioned.

Romer, Q.C., and H. Burton Buckley, for the liquidator.—We admit, on the authority of Massey's Case (1), that the liquidator cannot claim remuneration. But we claim priority for his costs of realisation over other costs in the liquidation. —In re The Oriental Hotels Company (2) and Ex parte Grissell (3). The liquidator's costs of the several applications in the winding-up rank rateably with the costs of other parties, without regard to order of date—Ex parte Percival (4) and The Cape Breton Company v. Fenn (5).

[CHITTY, J., sent for the order in In re The Marlborough Club (6), and found that the order directed the taxed costs of the official liquidator and of the other parties "to be paid by the official liquidator out of the assets of the company."]

Ince, Q.C., and Gould, for the Sheffield and Rotherham Bank and for Overend & Barker.—We admit the claim for priority for the costs of realisation. But we claim priority over the liquidator for the costs of the order of the 23rd of March, 1880, and of the liquidator's unsuccessful application of the 8th of April, 1880. When there is external litigation by a company which is unsuccessful, the company, like other litigants, must pay the costs—Bailey and Lectham's Case (7), Ex parte Smith (8), The Madrid Bank v. Pelley (9) and In re The Home Investment Society (10). In such cases the liquidator is also personally liable for costs—Ferrao's Case (11). The rules applicable to external litigation also apply to internal litigation. Certainly the liquidator must be postponed in respect of his costs in Ward's Case.

Kenyon Parker, for Wake.—The rule of Ferrao's Case (11), which makes the liquidator personally responsible for the costs of unsuccessful litigation, is similar to the rule in bankruptcy—In re Angerstein (12).

Romer, Q.C., in reply.—The liquidator has been guilty of no misconduct, and is entitled to his costs in Ward's Case, which will rank rateably with the other costs.

(1) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 492; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 367.
(2) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 420; Law Rep. 12 Eq. 126.
(3) 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 620; Law Rep. 3 Ch. D. 411.
(4) Law Rep. 6 Eq. 519.
(5) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 321; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 198.
(6) 37 Law J. Rep. 296; Law Rep. 5 Eq. 365.
(7) 38 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 485; Law Rep. 8 Eq. 94.
(8) 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 185; Law Rep. 3 Chanc. 125.
(9) Law Rep. 7 Eq. 442.
(10) Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 167.
(11) 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 482; Law Rep. 9 Chanc. 355.
(12) 43 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 131; Law Rep. 9 Chanc. 479.

In re The Dronfield Coal Co.

CHITTY, J.—In this case there is a fund of about 2,000*l.*, in the shape of assets, in the hands of the liquidator; but it is agreed upon all hands that the result of the liquidation has been so unfortunate that this fund, so far as it is applicable for costs, is barely, if at all, sufficient for payment of all the costs that would rightly fall upon it, and the questions raised before me are with reference to the priority of the various costs.

I will mention at the outset that the liquidator does not claim any priority for his remuneration. In fact, he admits, on the authorities, that his remuneration must be postponed to the payment of costs. It is unnecessary, therefore, to deal with that question. The fund has been realised by the efforts of the official liquidator, who is the officer appointed by the Court for the purpose of assisting the Court in getting in the assets, and it appears to be unquestionable that there can be no fund, properly speaking, out of which you can pay any costs until you have paid the costs of getting that fund in. I hold, therefore, that the costs which ought first, in the order of priority, to be paid out of the fund, are the costs of the liquidator properly incurred in getting in and realising the assets.

It is said that the amount of costs in the case is very large. I know not whether it will turn out to be large or not, because that is a question for the Taxing Master. Again, the costs payable out of the fund are only such costs as have been properly incurred. I know that official liquidators are attacked, sometimes justly, and sometimes unjustly, about the costs of liquidation; but it is forgotten that the real cause of expense is very often this, that persons who ought to pay and contribute to the assets use every means within their power to avoid and postpone the payment, the result being that costs are often very much increased by the steps that the liquidator necessarily, in pursuance of his duty, is bound to take in order to get the assets in. The costs of realising and getting in the assets are larger proportionately where the persons who have to pay and contribute to the estate are numerous than where they are few in number, because the demands instead of being confined to a few persons are spread over a great many.

The next point is this. Certain orders have been made in the proceedings which I will proceed to state. They stand in one respect upon the same footing, though there is some little difference in the language. The liquidator instituted in the liquidation what may be called internal litigation against certain parties, one being The Sheffield and Rotherham Bank, who held a security from the company which he attacked. The other litigation was in the case of Overend & Barker, who were claimants for rent against the company. In The Sheffield and Rotherham Bank Case, to which Mr. Wake was also a party (and there is no distinction so far as this matter is concerned between Mr. Wake and the bank), the order was that the liquidator "do, out of the assets of the above-named company, pay and retain the costs of the said applicant, and of the respondents of the said application: such costs to be taxed"—the costs being the costs of the application. That is to say, there is an order of the Court that both the costs of the liquidator and adverse party shall be paid out of the assets.

The order in Overend & Barker's Case, which also relates to The Sheffield and Rotherham Bank, is very much to the same effect.

That order, which was made in chambers, is that the costs of the adverse parties of that application, and also of another application mentioned in the body of the order, all of which costs were ascertained at certain fixed sums, be paid by the official liquidator out of the assets of the company, and that the costs of the official liquidator himself of both the applications be costs in the matter.

But it is said that the right mode of dealing with these orders is to construe them in this way—that a preference and a priority, which is not mentioned on the face of them, is given to the adverse party. The principle, it is asserted, is this, that for all purposes the liquidator is treated as an adverse litigant, and that if he fails he must pay costs, and that the fund which he can have recourse to is a fund merely for the purposes of indemnity, and nothing more. I entertain not the slightest doubt that the Court, whether the Court of first instance, or the Court of Appeal, has in every case jurisdiction to order the official liquidator personally to pay the costs. The practice in the Court of Appeal has been to order him personally to pay the costs. That has been really put upon two grounds—the first being that he is an adverse litigant; and the second, which is perhaps the minor ground, that the Court of Appeal is not the Court which superintends the liquidation. That is to say, it is left to the Judge to whose Court the liquidation is attached to deal with the costs as he may be advised. But I think it is an established practice that the order of the Court must be read according to the ordinary meaning of its terms; and if this were the whole case, and there were nothing more in it, I should decide (and, so far as this point is concerned, I do decide) that there is no priority given by any of these orders to the adverse litigant as against the liquidator, nor, indeed, any priority given to the liquidator as against the adverse litigant. Suppose I had only a fund of 200*l.* to be dealt with, and there were no other costs but those of the litigation, and that the costs of the adverse parties were taxed at 200*l.*, and the costs of the liquidator at 200*l.*, I should not have the slightest doubt that the right mode of working out the order would be to pay the costs, according to the well known principle of equity, rateably out of the fund; and I propose in this case, as far as those orders are concerned, to follow that principle.

But there are other points which have arisen; the Court of Appeal in Ward's Case, which was another case that arose in this liquidation, reversed the order of the late Master of the Rolls, the Judge of first instance, who had made an order adverse to Mr. Ward and favourable to the liquidator. The liquidator had, in fact, succeeded before the Master of the Rolls wholly. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed the decision of the Master of the Rolls, and ordered the Dronfield Co. to pay Mr. Ward's costs, and there it stopped short, saying no more. It seems to have been admitted by the liquidator, that under this order he was liable to pay these costs personally. If so, it is clear Mr. Ward has no right to be paid out of the fund, but he gets these costs paid to him by the liquidator, leaving the liquidator to take his chance of being paid out of the assets the costs which he, the liquidator, has himself incurred, and the costs paid by him to Mr. Ward.

A point has been argued before me with reference to the dates of the orders. I take it now to be established that, where in the course of a liquidation various orders are from time to time made for payment of costs out of the assets, no priority on account of date is given to the various persons in whose favour (whether it be liquidator, or claimant, or otherwise) these orders are made. That was the decision of Lord Romilly, Master of the Rolls, in the case of Ex parte Percival (4). I have sent for the order in In re The Marlborough Club (6), upon which Mr. Percival's application was made, and I find it was an order under which the liquidator was to pay and retain both Mr. Percival's and his own costs out of the assets. The Master of the Rolls held in Ex parte Percival (4) that the dates of orders for payment of costs did not give priority, and, as far as my experience goes, that rule has never been questioned. In the case of The Cape Breton Company v. Fenn (5), the late Master of the Rolls stated his view of the practice (and he had a large experience in these matters) in this way. He says (13), "A Mr. Rooney had petitioned in the winding-up to remove the liquidators. Upon that application an order was made that Mr. Rooney's costs should be paid to him out of the assets of the company. It is well known that such an order does not create a charge upon the assets; it limits the right of the person in whose favour it is made to payment out of the assets, but it does not create a charge upon them. If it did, the persons in whose favour such orders were made would have priority according to the dates of their order; but that is not so. In many cases the liquidator has priority over all these orders, even for subsequent costs. The order does not create a charge upon the assets, but gives a right to get paid out of the assets in a due course of administration, and nothing more, and this was the right given to the petitioner." But it is said that is a mere dictum. The point that the Master of the Rolls was dealing with, no doubt, was, whether there was a charge created on the assets with reference to the question as to whether leave ought to be given to use the company's name in instituting certain proceedings; but, whether it be a dictum or not, I take it to be a correct statement of the practice of the Court with reference to orders of this class.

(13) 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 325; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 205.

In the case before me, the liquidator has, up to the present moment, obtained no order for payment of his costs of his summons against Ward, and he now comes and asks for an order for payment of those costs out of the assets. If a liquidator, who, as I have said, is the officer of the Court, was in the position of a trustee, he would be entitled, as every trustee is in an administration action, when he has done his duty and conducted himself properly, to his costs in priority.

A trustee, if he is an adverse litigant—that is to say, if he commences an action against third parties—stands in the position of any ordinary litigant, and he cannot protect himself against costs by saying he is a trustee. If he wants an indemnity, he, as is well known, institutes proceedings for the administration of the trusts, and then asks the Court for leave to bring or defend particular actions. The effect of that is that he is then allowed, whether he succeeds or fails, all the costs he has properly incurred in the external litigation.

For some purposes the liquidator is in the same position as the trustee; but the liquidator stands in a different position in this respect, that, as a rule, the trustee in an administration action, where he is well advised, does little or nothing actively. He generally remains passive; claims are brought in and he defends them, and he thus acts generally in a defensive character and not in the offensive. But the official liquidator, in a liquidation under the Companies Acts, does not bring before the Court the various claims he proposes to make. He institutes the proceedings at his own risk. Generally speaking, if he is a prudent man, he first obtains the opinion of counsel. But if he desires to institute external litigation—that is to say, to bring an action—he cannot do that without first obtaining the sanction of the Court under the 95th section of the Companies Act, 1862. But in instituting proceedings such as those in the present case, the liquidator does so entirely on his own motion and at his own risk.

I make these observations because I wish to state the case of both sides with the utmost fairness. It is not asked at the Bar that the liquidator's costs, except the costs of realising and getting in the assets, should have any precedence. So far I think his counsel are right in not asking to have him put in the position of a trustee in an action for executing or administering the trusts of the estate of which he is trustee, and for this reason—that the liquidator is, as I have already stated, an actor to a much greater extent than the trustee is, and he embarks in litigation with his opponents in the first instance at his own risk and without obtaining any leave—I mean, of course, when the litigation is what I have called internal—the Companies Act, 1862, having provided a scheme whereby substantially all questions in relation to the company under the winding-up can be decided in the winding-up itself.

But now there remains this question: Where the liquidator has not in any way misconducted himself, and he comes (after special orders have been made as to costs, such as the orders of the 23rd of March and the 8th of August, 1880, which I have read) to ask for his costs of an application, the order on which, as in Ward's Case, does not provide for his costs, ought he to be postponed in respect of these latter costs? I think not. The arguments I have heard on behalf of those who obtained the other orders, and who assert that the liquidator, as to the costs in respect of which he has obtained no order at present, ought to be postponed, seem to proceed on the footing that the liquidator had misconducted himself.

In re The Dronfield Coal Co.

Now the first point I have to decide is, whether there is anything in the special nature of the costs of which the liquidator now asks an order for payment which renders it equitable or just that, in respect of those costs, he should be postponed. I have said before that, with regard to the costs which have already been allowed him, he ought not to be postponed. As regards the case of Mr. Ward, the liquidator has a duty to discharge towards the various persons interested in the fund—creditors, contributories and others; and in this case the liquidator, in discharge of his duty, instituted these proceedings against Mr. Ward, and was successful before the Master of the Rolls. I think it would be a harsh conclusion to say that the officer of the Court, who has only done his duty, and who had so substantial a case to bring before the Court that he succeeded before the Master of the Rolls, ought not to be allowed his costs out of the fund. I think, therefore, that he ought to be allowed these costs. That is the first proposition. Then I think he ought not, in respect of these costs, to be postponed. I think I ought to make an order now for payment of them; but this order, although posterior to the other orders in point of date, will, according to the principle which, as I have endeavoured to explain, is to be derived from the judgment of Lord Romilly and of the late Master of the Rolls in the case to which I have referred, stand in the same position as the others. I think, therefore, the right order with regard to the liquidator's costs in that case is to give him his costs out of the assets, subject, of course, to taxation.

Inasmuch as the assets are deficient, the liquidator will only stand rateably with the other claimants in respect of all his costs, in which costs I include those he has incurred in Ward's Case, the costs he has paid, and any other costs which have not been specially brought to my attention. In other words, he is in the same position as if he had come, as he might have done, the day after Mr. Ward's case had been decided, and had then asked for an order for payment of the costs in that case out of the assets. The Judge would then have considered whether they were proper or not; and I now think, in the exercise of my discretion, that if the matter had been brought before me I should have said, as I say now, that those costs were properly incurred. The order would then have been made some months ago, and I should have had before me three orders for payment of costs instead of two. I have already said I do not think I ought to draw any material distinction between the forms of the two special orders that have been made, the difference in the language being that in the one case the order was for payment of the liquidator's own costs out of the fund, and in the other case the order was merely that his costs should be costs in the matter. But if there is any possible doubt as to the meaning of the order, I can remove it now by making an order giving the liquidator his costs that were made costs in the matter, he being, in my opinion, entitled to them. These costs, therefore, will now be ordered to be paid out of the fund.

The result, therefore, is this—that the costs of realisation and getting in will stand first; the costs which are ordered to be paid out of the assets will all stand next, and share rateably. To avoid any misapprehension, I will now order the liquidator's costs which I have mentioned—namely, the costs he has paid to Mr. Ward, and the costs which he has incurred in Mr. Ward's case, and the costs which were made costs in the matter in the order of the 23rd of March, 1880, and his general costs of the liquidation—to be paid out of the assets. But inasmuch as the assets appear to be insufficient, then I put all the various claimants on the same footing—that is to say, they are to rank rateably, subject, of course, to the payment of those costs which I have said were to rank in priority—namely, the costs of realising and getting in the assets.

In coming to this conclusion I consider I am acting consistently with all the authorities. I do not purpose to go through them. In the course of my judgment I have stated as clearly as I can what my views are. In the principles I have adopted I do not think I have departed from those which Lord Justice James and Lord Cairns have laid down. They said that the liquidator ought to be treated as an adverse litigant. But I think the Court must always look in each particular case to the orders which have actually been made. Of course, in the present case, if I thought it right to do so, I could make an order now which would postpone all the liquidator's costs—including his general costs, and including the costs which he has paid and incurred in Ward's Case, and the costs of the other cases—to the costs of the other claimants. But, in my view of the matter, for the reasons I have endeavoured to state, that would not be proper. The costs of this application, of all parties, will stand upon the same footing.

In re The Dronfield Coal Co.

It might seem a little disrespectful to Vice-Chancellor Malins if I did not mention the case of In re The Home Investment Society (10). In that case the order was for the costs to be paid by the liquidator out of the assets. In his judgment the Vice-Chancellor states the terms of the order. There is no order there in favour of the liquidator; and the Vice-Chancellor, and I say it in all sincerity, was justified, no doubt, in the view which he took of the facts of the case, in saying that he would treat the liquidator as an adverse litigant. On the facts of the case before him he treated the liquidator as an adverse litigant who had made an unfounded claim, and who ought, therefore, to pay the costs personally as between himself and his adversary. Perhaps there are some words towards the end of the judgment which may look as if the Vice-Chancellor was laying down a general principle. But I do not think, in reading the judgment fairly, that that was the Vice-Chancellor's intention. At the end of the judgment he says (14): "Mr. Brabant must be paid out of the assets all the costs to which he has been improperly put by adverse litigation in priority over the official liquidator, who has entered into this litigation at his own peril; and the order will be as asked for." He was dealing with the particular case before him, and not with any general principle.

Solicitors—Emmet, Sons & Stubbs, agents for Wavell & Co., Halifax; Geare & Son, agents for B. Wake & Co., Sheffield.

(14) Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 170.

BACON, V.C. 1883. May 30. } In re C. R. JONES'S SETTLED ESTATES.

Settled Estate — Tenant for Life — Limited Owner—Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 44 and 58 (1), (ix.).

A person entitled to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his life, subject to expenses of management, can exercise the powers of a tenant for life, although, owing to incumbrances, he is not actually in receipt of any income from the settled estate.

Adjourned summons.

The Rev. Calvert R. Jones, of Swansea, by his will dated the 2nd of October, 1877, devised his freehold estates to his wife and his son-in-law, Colonel Alfred Grey, for a term of 2,000 years from the day of his death, upon trust to raise two sums of 30,000*l.* and 15,000*l.*; and subject thereto and to the trust thereof to the use of his trustees Henry de la Beche Dillwyn, Thomas Falconer, and Henry Leigh Pemberton, during the life of Colonel Grey, upon the trusts thereinafter declared, with divers remainders over to the use of the children of Colonel Grey by the testator's daughter for life and in tail. The testator declared that his freehold estates were devised to his said trustees as aforesaid, upon trust that they the said trustees, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor, or other the trustees or trustee for the time being, should enter into the possession or receipt of the same devised premises, and, during the life of the said Alfred Grey, continue in such possession or receipt, and manage, or superintend the management, of the same, and for that purpose might employ such receivers, bailiffs, accountants, agents, workmen, and others as they should think fit, and might cut timber and underwood from time to time in the usual course of sale or repairs or otherwise, and erect, pull down, and repair houses, and other buildings and erections, and drain or otherwise improve all or any part of the said premises, and lay out the same or any part thereof for building upon, and for streets, squares and roads, and dedicate the same respectively to the use of the public, and insure houses, buildings, and other property against fire, and make allowances to and arrangements with tenants, and accept surrenders of leases and tenancies, and generally might deal with the premises as they or he might do if they or he were the absolute beneficial owner thereof, without being answerable for loss or damage which might happen thereby; and should, during the life of the said Alfred Grey, by and out of the rents and profits of the said devised premises (including the produce of the sale of timber and underwood), pay and discharge the expenses incurred in or about such management or in exercise of any of the powers aforesaid or thereinafter conferred in relation to the management of the same premises or otherwise in respect of the premises, and all outgoings which they or he should think fit to pay, and keep down the interest of any principal sum or sums of money which for the time being might be charged by way of mortgage or otherwise upon the same premises or any part thereof; and should, during the life of the said Alfred Grey, pay out of the residue of such rents and profits an annuity of 400*l.* to the son of his said deceased daughter by the said Alfred Grey for the time being entitled to the first estate for life, or in tail male or in tail next after the decease of the said Alfred Grey, as and when such son should attain the age of twenty-one years; and should pay the balance of such rents and profits to the said Alfred Grey and his assigns during his life. The will also contained a power of sale at the discretion of the trustees or trustee. The testator died in November, 1877. Henry Leigh Pemberton disclaimed the trust of the will, and Thomas Falconer was dead.

In re Jones's Settled Estates.

At the testator's death the estates were subject to mortgages amounting to nearly 80,000*l.*, and there was in consequence, at the date of the present summons, no income payable to Alfred Grey. The surviving trustee did not consider it advisable, in the interests of the persons entitled in remainder after Alfred Grey's life, to exercise the power of sale given by the will. Alfred Grey, however, was anxious to have some portion of the settled estates sold, to pay off the encumbrances; and accordingly took out a summons under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 44, for the opinion of the Judge, asking: first, whether he was, under the will, a person entitled to the income of land thereby settled under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his own life, subject to expenses of management, within the meaning of section 58 (1) (ix.); and, secondly, whether, as such person or otherwise, he had the powers of a tenant for life under the said Act.

Marten, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, for the summons.—The object of the Settled Land Act was to meet just such a case as this, where the outgoings swallow up the whole available income. Colonel Grey is a limited owner, as defined by section 58 (1), (ix.), and therefore has the powers of a tenant for life under the Act. The Act nowhere says that actual receipt of income is necessary before a limited owner can exercise the powers given by the Act; section 58 (1) (ix) says "entitled" to the income of land. Colonel Grey is entitled to this surplus income, if there is any. The fact that his eldest son receives an annuity of 400*l.* cannot make any difference.

Oliver A. Saunders, for the surviving trustee, contra.—The powers of the Act are conferred upon two classes: first, Tenants for life; and secondly, Limited owners, or quasi tenants for life who have by section 58 (1) the powers of tenant for life. The test imposed on the first class is being "beneficially entitled to possession," section 2, sub-section 5; the test imposed on the second class is possession and the right to income. Colonel Grey cannot, under the circumstances, be entitled to any income for some years to come, therefore is not within the definition of a quasi tenant for life, and cannot now exercise the powers conferred on limited owners by section 58 (1).

Bacon, V.C.—No doubt it is necessary to proceed with caution under this Act, because it creates a wholesale revolution of the existing law, and gives to tenants for life, and other limited owners, powers which they would not otherwise possess, amongst others a power of sale. Counsel for the surviving trustee has attempted in his argument to draw a distinction between tenants for life and quasi tenants for life. No such distinction, in my opinion, exists. A tenant for life is a tenant for life as defined by the Act, whether in the actual receipt of income or not; and the fact that an estate is heavily charged and encumbered does not abrogate the powers conferred on a tenant for life, or other limited owner who under section 58 (1) is to have the powers of a tenant for life. Colonel Grey is therefore, under this will, a person entitled to the income of the land thereby settled under a trust for payment thereof to him during his own life, subject to expenses of management, within the meaning of section 58 (1) (ix.), and, as such, has all the powers of a tenant for life under the Act.

Solicitors—Hunters, Gwatkin & Haynes, for the summons; Tamplin, Tayler & Joseph, agents for Stricks & Bellingham, Swansea, for the respondent.

NORTH, J. 1883. July 13, 14, 16. } CHARLTON v. CHARLTON.

Solicitor—23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28 —"Property recovered or preserved"—Charge for Costs—Extent of Charge.

Under section 28 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, the Court can declare a solicitor entitled to a charge for costs on the whole of the property recovered or preserved through his instrumentality, and not merely on his own client's interest in that property.

Berrie v. Howitt (39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 319; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1) not followed.

Petition.

This was a petition by Messrs. Francis H. Jackson and Gilbert B. Jackson, solicitors, for a charging order in respect of their costs under the statute 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28.

Thomas Charlton, the testator in the action, died, in the year 1872, possessed of extensive collieries in the county of Durham; and having by his will devised this property to three of his sons, the defendants Edward Charlton, Robert Hedley Charlton and Thomas Charlton, upon trust to sell, and to pay the income to his wife Charlotte Charlton for her life, with remainder to his children, as therein mentioned.

The trustees, instead of selling the property, carried on the colliery business themselves. In 1876 they went into liquidation, the business having proved unsuccessful.

In February, 1877, the above-mentioned action was commenced by two of the children of the testator against the trustees of his will for the administration of his estate, and for (amongst other things) a declaration that the trustees had been guilty of a breach of trust.

In April, 1878, a decree was made in the action; and shortly afterwards Charlotte Charlton, spinster, and William Charlton, two of the children of the testator, obtained liberty to attend proceedings.

On the 29th of August, 1879, Charlotte Charlton, the widow, died. Up to this time Mr. H. W. Chatterton was the solicitor of all the parties to the action.

By an order dated the 7th of July, 1880, the petitioners Messrs. Jackson were appointed solicitors to all the parties to the action; and by an order made shortly afterwards they were appointed solicitors to the two persons having liberty to attend.

It appeared that the most valuable portion of the assets of the testator consisted of certain collieries in the county of Durham; that on the 4th of July, 1878, an order had been made in the action that the then receiver in the action should be at liberty to abandon the collieries; that in the early part of the year 1882, by the exertions of Messrs. Jackson, an agreement was entered into between William Charlton and Alfred Charlton, on behalf of themselves and the other beneficiaries, of the one part, and W. B. Peat of the other part, containing the terms upon which Mr. Peat was willing to take charge of the collieries, and provide the moneys required to keep the same going, which agreement was, on the 22nd of May, 1882, approved by the Court; and that, as the result of the agreement, the collieries were sold for a sum of 17,300*l.*, which, after payment thereout of the charges thereon, would leave a balance of about 4,500*l.* for the estate.

In July, 1882, Messrs. Jackson ceased to act as solicitors for the defendant Robert H. Charlton.

On the 23rd of October, 1882, letters of administration to the estate of Charlotte Charlton, the widow, were granted to Janet Charlton, the wife of the defendant Robert H. Charlton, the value of her estate being sworn under 100*l.*

In the months of March and April, 1883, Messrs. Jackson ceased to act as solicitors for the plaintiffs in the action and the defendant Edward Charlton. They still continued to act for the defendant Thomas Charlton and for William Charlton.

They now presented this petition, stating that the whole of the different proceedings taken by them on behalf of the parties to the action had hitherto been successful, and had resulted in the preservation to the estate of the collieries and the purchase-money thereof, and also in the recovery and preservation of the sums of money therein mentioned, and that in the course of such proceedings they had incurred heavy costs; and prayed a declaration that, as the solicitors employed by the plaintiffs and defendants, and Charlotte Charlton and William Charlton, parties attending proceedings in the action, they were entitled to a charge upon the said sums of money, and the balance of the sum of 17,300*l.* remaining after payment thereout of the moneys due to Mr. Peat, for their taxed costs, charges and expenses.

The main question in argument was whether, under section 28 of the Act, the solicitor's costs are a charge on the whole of the "property recovered or preserved," or only on his own client's interest therein.

Cookson, Q.C., and Seward Brice, for the petition.—The proceedings which the petitioners took were undoubtedly beneficial to the estate.

Under section 28 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, the solicitors are entitled to a charge upon the whole of the "property recovered or preserved," and not merely upon the interest in it of the parties who employed them—Bailey v. Birchall (1), Pinkerton v. Easton (2), Bulley v. Bulley (3), Catlow v. Catlow (4) and Greer v. Young (5).

The decision in Berrie v. Howitt (6) is, "no doubt, directly opposed in principle to Bailey v. Birchall" (1)—per Wickens, V.C., in In re Keane (7). But Berrie v. Howitt (6) was disapproved of in Bulley v. Bulley (3), and must now be considered as overruled.

Everitt, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for Janet Charlton, the administratrix of the tenant-for-life.—From the death of Charlotte Charlton in August, 1879, down to October, 1882, there was no representative of her estate. She is, therefore, in no way bound by what was done under the order of the 22nd of May, 1882, with reference to the collieries, as she was not represented at the time.

She was not a party to the action, and cannot be said to have employed the solicitors. "What the statute gives is only a charge on the property of the person who employs a solicitor, and that cannot be extended to the property of other persons who have not employed the solicitor"—per Lord Romilly in Berrie v. Howitt (6). Her interest, therefore, must not be affected by the charging order.

Glasse, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell; and Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Northmore Lawrence, for other respondents.

NORTH, J. [after stating the facts, and coming to the conclusion that—first, two sums, amounting together to 433*l.*; secondly, a sum of 750*l.* payable by Mr. H. W. Chatterton for costs overpaid to him; and thirdly, the balance of the sum of 17,300*l.* (the proceeds of sale of the lease-

(1) 2 Hem. & M. 371.
(2) 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 878; Law Rep. 16 Eq. 490.
(3) 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 841; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 479.
(4) Law Rep. 2 C.P. D. 362.
(5) Ante, p. 915.
(6) 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1.
(7) 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 617; Law Rep. 12 Eq. 115.

hold collieries), after deducting certain charges thereon, were "property recovered or preserved" by the petitioners, continued]:—

It is said that there is no power to charge the interest of Janet Charlton, because the charge can only be given upon the share or interest of the person who employs the solicitor. The Act does not say that the charge is to be upon the share of the person employing the solicitor who recovers or preserves the fund. That may be the meaning of the Act, but there are no words in the Act which say so in clear terms.

Looking at the question as one of principle, this state of things might happen. One of several residuary legatees brings an action to administer an estate; and in the course of that administration has to take proceedings to recover an outstanding fund, and succeeds in obtaining that fund for the estate. The solicitor of the plaintiff has, beyond all question, some claim on the fund. Is it to be a claim limited to the share of his own particular client in the fund, or something more? It seems to me, on principle, that it ought to be something more. Therefore, if the matter were free from authority, I should say that in that case the solicitor would be entitled to have a charge on the fund recovered, although he only acted on the instructions of one of several persons entitled to share in the fund when it was recovered.

But the matter is not untouched by authority, for four or five cases have been cited to me which bear upon it. Bailey v. Birchall (1) was cited by counsel for the petitioners. Lord Hatherley, in giving judgment, says, "Even were I to assume that the plaintiff (Bailey) in the first suit wrongly claimed an interest in the property in question, he yet did so with such a shew of right as to authorise the appointment of a receiver, and the payment of the costs of that appointment out of the estate." The result was that, although the petitioner did not represent the persons entitled to the whole fund, but only some of the persons interested in the fund, an order was made that there must be "a charge upon the estate of the testator Joseph Barnes for what is due to him (the petitioner) in respect of his costs against the several parties mentioned in the order of the 27th of February, 1862, for whom he acted as solicitor." Therefore that is an express decision that there may be a charge for the costs of the solicitor upon the whole fund. Then it is said that that suit resulted in, amongst other things, the appointment of a receiver, which was for the benefit of all parties concerned; and that the order was made with the concurrence of all parties, and that it was therefore right that the solicitor should have his costs against the estate. But the Act says there is to be a statutory right; and the question is, to what extent is it to go? If the true construction is that the costs are to be paid only out of the share of the person or persons employing the solicitor, then he could not have a legal charge on the whole fund, notwithstanding the concurrence of the other parties to the action. That case, therefore, is an express decision in favour of this application.

The next case is Berrie v. Howitt (6). There, by a settlement, certain real estate was assured to the use of A for life, with remainder to his children as he should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment to the use of his children as tenants-in-common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail. By the decree made in the action it was decided that the appointments made by the will of A, subsequent to certain life estates given to his children, were void for remoteness. Nothing was said in the decree about costs, the Court being of opinion that each party ought to pay his own costs. By virtue of this decree, B, one of the defendants, became entitled to an estate-tail in possession in certain undivided shares in the property. He died a bachelor, and after his death his solicitor presented a petition to have his costs declared a charge upon these shares, and the Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly) decided that he could not have a charge. He says, "I think there cannot be any charge. What the statute gives is only a charge on the property of the person who employs a solicitor, and that cannot be extended to the property of other persons who have not employed the solicitor. Here there are a number of successive tenants-in-tail. The first tenant-in-tail employs a solicitor to defend him in the suit, and that solicitor gets a charge on the estate of his client, but not on the estates in remainder. If the client bars the estate-tail, and gets the fee, the solicitor gets a charge on the fee; but if he does not, then the interest of the client is gone, and it is only on his interest that the solicitor has a charge. I think that is the meaning of the Act—though it ought to be construed liberally; it would be a very strong thing to make one man pay another's costs." It was suggested by Mr. Cookson that the decision in Berrie v. Howitt (6) might be put on this ground, that it was impossible, in the face of the decree in that suit, to throw the costs of one party upon the share of another. But that does not appear to have been the ground of the argument, and it certainly was not the ground of the judgment. There may have been some good reason why that point was not raised. In fact, it was not raised; and it was not the ground upon which the Master of the Rolls decided the case. That case, certainly, is an express authority for Janet Charlton. I cannot reconcile the two cases of Bailey v. Birchall (1) and Berrie v. Howitt (6). In In re Keane (7) Vice-Chancellor Wickens said that the two cases struck him as being directly opposed in principle.

The next authority is the case of Pinkerton v. Easton (2), decided by Lord Selborne, sitting for the Master of the Rolls. In that case the petitioner failed, because his Lordship thought that the property had not been, as a matter of fact, recovered or preserved; but the case was cited for this passage in the judgment. The case of Bailey v. Birchall (1) and other cases having been cited, his Lordship says, "Here"—that is, in this Act—"the Legislature has given, not a charge, but a power to the Court to create a charge for a solicitor's costs upon 'property recovered or preserved,' when meritorious services of the solicitor have resulted in such recovery or preservation. This has, undoubtedly, received a liberal interpretation, and has been held to apply even to property not belonging to the client by whom the solicitor has been employed. has also been applied to a case in w property was deemed to have been served by the appointment of a rece upon an interlocutory motion before cree." In that case the Lord Chanc had fully before him the decision in B v. Birchall (1), and he quotes it, appare with approbation, certainly not with approbation.

The next case—Bulley v. Bulley (is a more important one. In that Vice-Chancellor Bacon, in giving j ment, says, "It is of great import that the statute which has been so referred to should be well understood, not carried beyond its true meanin though the Courts have said occasio that it must be liberally construed. not know any more liberal or more just of construing it than by considering the words of the statute are, and be in mind what the policy of the la The law of salvage is well enough kn depending upon plain principles, not subject of any particular statute (e the Shipping Acts), nor depending any statutory enactment. A ship at about to founder is saved by some c vessel. Then there comes the questic the right of the salvors to be paid money coming to them out of that and its contents. There is no enquir to who is the owner of the ship. No ever heard of such a thing. The la if you save a sinking ship, you shal paid what is just out of the value of ship. That I take to be the princip the Solicitors Act referred to, for words are distinct and clear, and c into effect plainly that principle." [T after reading the words of the sectio continues:] "The words of the sta appear to me to be beyond doubt, and only question I have to ask mysel what is the property that has been served? It is quite indifferent who the owner of it; if the property has preserved, the solicitor is entitled, acc ing to the words of the statute, charge upon it for his costs." The then came before the Court of Appeal. the course of the argument the Mast the Rolls says that he doubts the so ness of the decision in Berrie v. H

(6). Then, in giving judgment, he says, "The whole of the property was preserved by the solicitor of John Bulley from the attack made upon it by the plaintiff in the suit of Bulley v. Bulley (3), who claimed the whole; and even if we are to construe the Act as contended on the part of the appellant, by saying that the property to be preserved must be the property of the client of the solicitor—even in that narrow view of the Act, to which I am by no means prepared to assent, still this order would be right, because the whole estate was the property of the defendant as trustee, and as being the person who was to defend it in the suit." Then Lord Justice Cotton says, "The question turns upon the construction of section 28 of the Solicitors Act, with reference to the particular facts of the case. That section does not say that a charge is to be given against the interest of the parties by whom the solicitor is employed, but that when the solicitor is employed to prosecute or defend any suit, it shall be lawful to the Court to give him a charge for his costs, charges and expenses on any property recovered or preserved through the instrumentality of any such attorney or solicitor."

Then there is the very recent case of Greer v. Young (5), before the Court of Appeal. If this case had turned upon that authority, I should have taken time to consider my judgment, in order that I might see a detailed report of that case.

I might choose between Bailey v. Birchall (1) and Berrie v. Howitt (6). Bailey v. Birchall (1) is the earlier decision; but it was approved of by Lord Selborne in Pinkerton v. Easton (2) and by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in Bulley v. Bulley (3); and when that case came before the Court of Appeal, Berrie v. Howitt (6) was expressly disapproved of by the Master of the Rolls. Looking at all these authorities, I have no doubt that the conclusion I must come to is that the charge need not be confined to the share of the person employing the solicitor.

A suggestion was made that there could not be any charge in respect of untaxed costs. But the answer to that seems to me to be that, although the amount to be charged can only be in respect of taxed costs, the order for taxation may be made now; and, in fact, the section expressly says that the Judge, in making the charging order, may order taxation.

Under these circumstances there must be a declaration that the petitioners are entitled to a charge upon the sums I have mentioned for their costs, charges and expenses properly incurred of and in relation to the action, with a direction for taxation and other consequential directions; and there must not be any words in the order to except the interest (if any) of Janet Charlton from its operation.

Solicitors—Jackson & Evans, for petitioners; H. W. Chatterton, for the respondent Janet Charlton and others; Bolton, Robbins & Co., for other respondents.

PEARSON, J. 1883. May 7. } WILSON v. COXWELL.

Executor of One of Two Executors—Retainer—Claim to retain by Deceased Executor in his Lifetime.

A, one of two executors, was a simple contract creditor of his testator. A died, having in his lifetime claimed a right to retain in respect of his debt, leaving his co-executor surviving:—Held, that the executors of A had a right of retainer, out of assets of the testator in Court, as against the simple contract creditors.

Further consideration.

This was a creditor's suit instituted to administer the estate of J. R. Stebbing, who died in June, 1874. In November, 1874, the plaintiff obtained the usual administration decree. The defendants were Edward Coxwell and Henry Sandy, the two executors of the will of J. R. Stebbing.

On the 22nd of June, 1878, an order was made in the action that the defendant Edward Coxwell (a simple contract creditor) should rank as a creditor of the testator for a sum of 364*l.*, without prejudice to

INDEX

TO THE SUBJECTS OF THE CASES IN

THE CHANCERY DIVISION,

AND IN BANKRUPTCY.

AND ON APPEAL THEREFROM IN

THE COURT OF APPEAL AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW JOURNAL REPORTS.—VOL. LII.

Account—reopening: defaulting liquidator: surety. See COMPANY, 7.

—— wilful default. See ADMINISTRATION, 3.

Acknowledgment of Debt. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, 1.

Acknowledgment—deed: married woman: concurrence of husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2.

Acquiescence. See COVENANT, 2.

Action—tort: survival of cause of action. See PRACTICE, 16; SOLICITOR, 1; TRESPASS.

Ademption—specific bequest. See WILL, 22.

Adjudication. See BANKRUPTCY, 6, 15.

Administration—devise of real estate contracted to be purchased by testator: unpaid purchase-money: vendor's lien: conversion: Locke King's acts, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34: rescission of contract after death of testator: compromise: rights of devisees of real estate]—A testator having in his lifetime contracted to purchase certain real estate, by his will dated in 1881 (after Locke King's Acts) devised it specifically to his daughter M., with remainder to her children, and died without having completed the purchase or paid all the purchase-money. His personal estate, which was barely sufficient to pay the purchase-money, was undisposed of, so that it devolved upon his next-of-kin; but he did not in his will either expressly or impliedly intimate any intention that the unpaid purchase-money should be paid out of his personal estate. After his death a compromise was effected between the vendor of the property and the executor and trustee of the will, resulting in the rescission of the contract; and this compromise was duly confirmed by an order made in an action for the administration of the testator's estate. The devisees of the real estate claimed to be entitled to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the purchase-money of the land contracted to be bought, on the ground that there was a conversion by the testator of his personal estate, and that the provisions of Locke King's Acts did not apply:—Held, that this was a case of vendor's lien, and came within the provisions of Locke King's Acts Amendment Act (40 & 41 Vict. c. 34); that all that the devisees could have been entitled to was the purchased property charged with the unpaid purchase-money; and that therefore, the personal estate being of less amount than the unpaid purchase-money, they were not entitled to anything. Held also, that if the claim had been otherwise good, the compromise would have been fatal to it. In re Cockcroft. Broadbent v. Groves, 811

2. —— practice: executors: misconduct: trial: order XXXVI. rule 6]—Where in an administration action against executors misconduct by them was alleged, and special declarations and accounts claimed, at the trial the Court refused to reserve the question of the plaintiff's right to special relief. In re Armitage. Smith v. Armitage, 711

3. —— practice: wilful default: order XXXIII. rule 6: order XL. rule 11] -An ordinary administration order had been made under

Order XL. rule 11, in an action in which wilful default was alleged, and an account on that footing claimed. Such account was ordered on the further hearing. In re Symons. Luke v. Tonkin, 709 —— annuity: insufficient estate: tenant-for-life and remainderman. See WILL, 2.

—— costs of bankrupt trustee. See COSTS, 1.

—— domicil: Scotch testator. See JURISDICTION, 1.

—— practice: discretionary powers of trustees. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 5.

—— retainer: executor's. See EXECUTOR.

—— right of residuary legatee to have fund brought into Court. See WILL, 23.

—— tenant-for-life and remainderman: power to postpone sale. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 2.

—— trustee carrying on business: right of creditor against trust estate. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 3.

—— undischarged bankrupt: after-acquired property. See BANKRUPTCY, 37.

Administrator—right of retainer. See EXECUTOR.

Agent—sale of house: false representation. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1.

Alien—statute: construction: 7 Anne, c. 5: 4 Geo. 2. c. 21: 13 Geo. 3. c. 21]—By the common law a person born in a friendly foreign country, where his father is in the military service of the British Crown, is not a British subject. De Geer v. Stone, 57

The status of a British subject is not extended by statute beyond grandchildren of the last ancestor born in British territory. Ibid.

Annuity. See WILL, 1-4.

Appeal. See BANKRUPTCY, 23; PRACTICE, 1-4.

—— costs, for. See COSTS, 5; VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.

Appointment. See POWER.

Apportionment—capital and income. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 2.

—— charity income. See CHARITY, 1.

—— costs of. See COSTS, 2.

Arbitration—Building Societies Act, 1874. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 1.

—— costs of award: "creditor." See COMPANY, 11.

—— finality of order of reference: discovery. See PRACTICE, 21.

Artisans and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 36), s. 20: easement: extinguishment of easement affecting land purchased by local authority: right to compensation]—The effect of section 20 of the Artisans and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875, is that upon the purchase of land by a local authority for the purpose of carrying into effect a scheme under the Act, all easements whatsoever affecting the land become thenceforth extinguished, subject only to this, that compensation is to be paid by the local authority to persons injured in manner provided by the section. Swainston v. Finn and The Metropolitan Board of Works, 235

A local authority, under the powers of the above Act, purchased and took a certain house for the purposes of an improvement scheme. The plaintiffs, the owners of adjoining land, claimed to be entitled to a right to support to a building thereon from the house so purchased, and brought an action to restrain the local authority from removing the house in such a way as to interfere with the plaintiffs' right to support. The local authority had taken no proceedings to purchase the alleged easement of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the only right the plaintiffs could have was to receive compensation under the above section, and that their action must therefore fail. Ibid.

2. —— easement: right to light]—A right to light over lands is an easement within the meaning of section 20 of the Artisans and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875. Badham v. Marris, 237*n*

Attachment—defaulting trustee: inability to pay, when not a ground for refusing attachment: debtors act, 1869, s. 4, sub-s. 3: debtors act, 1878, s. 1]—The exception contained in section 4, sub-section 3, of the Debtors Act, 1869, was intended for the punishment of fraudulent trustees, not merely in order to inflict personal inconvenience on the defaulters, but to deter other trustees from committing fraudulent breaches of trust. In re Knowles. Doodson v. Turner, 685

Where, therefore, a trustee has committed a fraudulent breach of trust, the fact that he is unable to pay the moneys in respect of which he is in default is not a sufficient ground to induce the Court, in the exercise of its discretion under the Debtors Act, 1878, to refuse to allow an attachment to issue against him. Ibid.

—— service. See PRACTICE, 7.

Attorneys Act—(6 & 7 Vict. c. 73). See COSTS, 10.

Attornment. See MORTGAGE, 1.

Attornment Clause—validity and effect of. See BANKRUPTCY, 34, 35; MORTGAGE, 2.

Auction—sale by tenant-for-life: commission to solicitor for conducting sale. See SOLICITOR, 5.

Banker—shares in bank: equitable mortgage: fraud of mortgagor: banker's lien: estoppel] —In January, 1878, B. was a customer of and a shareholder in the defendant bank, and was also secretary of a club having an account there. B. fraudulently altered a cheque for 600*l.*, drawn by the club in favour of S. or order, by striking out the word "order" and adding the word "bearer," and then induced the bank to place the 600*l.* to the credit of his own account. In November, 1878, the plaintiff lent B. 1,000*l.* upon the security of the deposit of a share certificate for fifty shares in the bank. The certificate gave the holder thereof notice that the bank had a paramount lien on the shares of any shareholder for whatever might be due from him to the bank. On the 17th of March, 1880, the plaintiff gave notice to the bank of the deposit of the certificate, and was told by the bank manager, in answer to his enquiry, that the bank had no claim on the shares. In May, 1880, the bank got notice of B.'s fraud. They then settled with the club, debited B.'s account with the 600*l.*, which they had paid to him on the irregular cheque; and gave the plaintiff notice that they claimed a lien on the shares for that amount. In an action by the plaintiff claiming a declaration that the shares were subject to his equitable mortgage,—Held, that the bank, on discovering B.'s fraud, were entitled to set the account right as between themselves and him, by debiting him with the amount of the cheque. Held also, that as the plaintiff was in no way prejudiced by the statement made by the bank manager on the 17th of March, 1880, the bank were not estopped from setting up their lien on the shares; and action dismissed. Horsfall v. The Halifax and Huddersfield Union Banking Co., 599 —— building society: deposit of deeds with bankers to secure overdrafts. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 3.

Bankruptcy—act of bankruptcy: assignment by debtor of all his property to secure existing debt: agreement to make further advances: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 6, sub-s. 2]—Where a debtor assigns the whole of his property as security for an existing debt, and the assignee makes a bona fide promise to make further advances, the deed will not necessarily be fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 6, sub-s. 2, although the agreement to make further advances be not technically binding at law or in equity. Ex parte Wilkinson; in re Berry (App.), 657

If there is a bona fide arrangement to enable the debtor to continue his business, the deed will not be declared void as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the debtor. Ibid.

Ex parte Dann (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 290; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 26) distinguished. Ibid.

2. —— act of bankruptcy: assignment by debtor of the whole of his property: past debt: previous agreement: non-registration: bills of sale act, 1878, ss. 4, 8 and 9: bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 6. sub-s. 2]—A bill of sale which enables the grantee to seize, not only all the grantor's property existing at the date of its execution, but also all the property to be thereafter acquired by him, including that which may be acquired by means of the advance then made to him, is not necessarily void as an act of bankruptcy. Ex parte Hauxwell; in re Hemingway (App.), 737

Graham v. Chapman (12 Com. B. Rep. 85; 21 Law J. Rep. C.P. 173) overruled. Ibid.

Where the holder of a bill of sale, which is impeached upon the ground of its being an assignment of all the grantor's property for a past consideration, attempts to support it on the ground that it was given in pursuance of a prior parol agreement, the onus is upon him to shew, not only that such prior agreement did in fact exist, but that it was in all respects bona fide. Ibid.

Ex parte Kilner; in re Barker (Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 245) distinguished. Ibid.

3. —— act of bankruptcy: debtor's summons: compromise: "act of bankruptcy available for adjudication": protected transaction: the bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 94, sub-s. 3]—Although non-compliance with a debtor's summons is an act of bankruptcy only available for adjudication on the petition of the particular creditor who issues the summons, it will nevertheless avoid any bona fide contract or dealing between such debtor and creditor, if the debtor is subsequently adjudicated bankrupt, and if such act of bankruptcy is an act of not be restrained from enforcing her judgment by sequestration. In re Sneyd; ex parte The Bishop of Oxford, 724

11. —— debtor's summons: dismissal: legal or equitable defence to action: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 7]—Unless a debt is exigible it will not support a debtor's summons under section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; if the debtor would have any legal or equitable defence to an action for the debt, the summons ought to be dismissed. Ex parte Foster; in re Foster (App.), 577

H. was a creditor of F. & Co., who, being in difficulties, summoned a private meeting of their creditors. The meeting was attended by nineteen out of twenty-seven creditors, whose debts amounted to 2,400*l.*, out of a total of 2,628*l.* A resolution was passed by the meeting, and signed by the chairman, that the debtors' estate and effects should be assigned to trustees for the benefit of the creditors. In pursuance of this resolution, the debtors gave up possession of their property to the trustees nominated by the meeting; but the deed of assignment, although prepared, was never executed. H. was present at the meeting, and assented to the resolution:—Held, that the resolution did not constitute a binding agreement; but that it was only a preliminary step, intended to be binding if the deed was executed by all the creditors, which had not been done; and that H. was not, therefore, precluded from issuing a debtor's summons for the amount of his debt. Ibid.

12. —— jurisdiction: debt incurred by fraud or breach of trust: debtor an undischarged bankrupt or insolvent: jurisdiction of chancery division: enforcement of judgment for the debt suspended: bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 49]—The Court has jurisdiction, during the bankruptcy or insolvency of a debtor, and before he has obtained his discharge, to give judgment against him for a debt which he has incurred by fraud or breach of trust, but the judgment cannot be enforced until after discharge obtained. Ross v. Gutteridge, 280

In a case of this description judgment for the debt and interest was given against a liquidating debtor, but it was ordered not to be enforced until after discharge obtained, or until further order, liberty being given to the plaintiff to apply in case of the debtor unduly delaying to apply for his discharge. Ibid.

Cobham v. Dalton (44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 702; Law Rep. 10 Chanc. 655) and Ex parte Hemming; in re Chatterton (49 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 17; Law Rep. 13 Ch. D. 163) explained. Ibid.

13. —— jurisdiction: discretion as to exercise: fraudulent deed: 13 Eliz. c. 5: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 72]—A bankrupt had, about eighteen months before his bankruptcy, conveyed to his father, in consideration of 100*l.*, property worth about 500*l.* The trustee applied to the County Court to have the deed set aside, on the ground that it was executed with intent to defeat and delay creditors. The father objected to have the question tried in the County Court, but wished to have it tried in the High Court:—Held, that as serious questions of character were involved, and the amount at stake was large, the case was not one in which the Court of Bankruptcy ought to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction under section 72 of the Bankruptcy Act, but the matter ought to be left to the ordinary tribunals. Ex parte Price; in re Roberts (App.), 131

14. —— jurisdiction: receiver and manager: railway company: lien for freight]—A trader entered into an agreement with a railway company, by which the company were to render a monthly account of their charges for freight of goods carried by them for the trader, and the company were to have a general lien for all moneys due to them on all goods belonging to him in their hands. He afterwards filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver and manager of his business was appointed, who, in order to carry on the business, bought goods with his own money, and sent them by the company's railway. The company detained the goods under their lien, and only delivered them on payment of 50*l.*, which was due to them for freight. The receiver paid the 50*l.* under protest, and the Court of Bankruptcy ordered the company to repay it:—Held, that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to make the order. Ex parte The Great Western Rail. Co.; in re Bushell (App.), 734

15. —— liquidation: adjudication: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 125, sub-s. 12]—The Court has power, under section 125, sub-section 12, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to make an adjudication against a debtor who has filed a petition for liquidation, even though the creditors have passed no resolutions for liquidation by arrangement or composition. Ex parte Walker; in re McHenry (App.), 653

16. —— liquidation petition: debtor in partnership: statement of affairs: sufficiency: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 125 and 126]—A debtor who carried on two businesses, one by himself and the other in partnership, filed a liquidation petition, his partner being solvent. His statement of affairs, besides shewing his assets and liabilities on his separate estate, gave the names of th partnership creditors with the amount of the debt due to each, and stated that upon balancing the books of the firm there appeared to be a certain surplus due to him:—Held, that the names of the debtors to the firm should have been stated and the amount due from each, together with an account between the debtor and his partner shewing clearly the balance due to him; and, this not having been done, that the statement was insufficient. Ex parte Amor; in re Amor (App.), 138

If for any reason a debtor is unable to make a proper statement of his affairs, he must submit to be made bankrupt and lose the benefit of the Act as to liquidation or composition. Ibid.

17. Bankruptcy (continued)—liquidation: trustee: disclaimer: determination of lease: distress: forfeiture for breach of covenant: entry: effect of action to recover possession: set-off: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 23, 34 and 39]—A landlord, whose tenant had filed a liquidation petition, before trustees were appointed, distrained for a year's rent, which had accrued due before the filing of the petition; and after the appointment of the trustees he distrained for another half-year's rent, which had accrued due after the filing of the petition, but before the appointment of the trustees:—Held, that the second distress was void under section 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Ex parte Dyke; in re Morrish (App.), 570

The liquidation petition was filed on the 5th of September, 1881. On the 13th of October the trustees were appointed. On the 14th of October the landlord issued a writ in an ejectment action, and on the 14th of November the trustees disclaimed the lease:—Held, that it was immaterial whether the commencement of the action by the landlord had put an end to the lease, because it vested in the trustees on their appointment, and was put an end to by the disclaimer, so that neither the trustees nor the landlord could benefit by any clauses in the lease which were to take effect at the expiration or sooner determination of the lease. Ibid.

18. —— practice: debt of petitioning creditor: trader: order directing enquiry as to moneys received: act of bankruptcy: "being a trader": bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 6. sub-s. 3]—An order, dated the 27th of June, was made in the bankruptcy of A., declaring a settlement void against G., his trustee in bankruptcy, and directing enquiries as to the moneys received by the trustees under the settlement, and payment thereof to G. The debtor was one of the trustees of the settlement, and when examined in the bankruptcy of A. had admitted the receipt of funds under the settlement but no enquiry had been made under the order of the 27th of June. G. presented a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor:—Held, that till the amount which the debtor had received was ascertained by enquiry, and default made in payment on a day named, there was no sufficient petitioning creditor's debt. In re Reynolds; ex parte Reynolds (Bankr.), 431

The debtor, an auctioneer and valuer, by deed assigned his business, goodwill and premises to a purchaser, and covenanted not to carry on business within certain limits, and afterwards on the same day departed from his dwelling-house:—Held, that on the execution of the deed of assignment, the debtor had ceased to be a trader. Ibid.

19. —— practice: debtor's summons: bona fide dispute as to debt: solvent debtor: stay of proceedings: security: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 7]—Where a debtor, against whom a debtor's summons has been issued, is solvent, and there is a bona fide dispute as to the debt, the Court will not necessarily order the proceedings to be stayed without security, pending a trial of the validity of the debt. One of the questions which the Court will consider is, whether the creditor has a probability of success in an action. Ex parte Jacobson; in re Pincoffs (App.), 561

20. —— practice: petition: rules of stock exchange: defaulter: amount of differences fixed by official assignee of stock exchange: liquidated sum: bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 6.] —The amount fixed by the official assignee as the amount of the differences due by a defaulter on the Stock Exchange upon the premature closing of his accounts, in accordance with the rules of the Stock Exchange, must be treated as fixed for all purposes, and constitutes a liquidated sum within section 6 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, upon which a petition in bankruptcy can be presented. In re Ward; ex parte Ward (App.), 73

21. —— practice: receiver and manager: charges: taxation: bankruptcy rules, 1871, rules 5, 6 and 7]—Under rule 5 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1871, the charges of a receiver for disbursements out of pocket, such as travelling expenses and salaries paid to assistants, are liable to taxation. Ex parte Izard; in re Bushell (App.), 678

A receiver and manager of a business should not advance money out of his own pocket for the purposes of the business without first obtaining the authority of the Court to do so. If he applies for such authority, the Court will, as a rule, allow him interest at five per cent. on the amount authorised to be advanced, and give him a charge on the assets for the advance and interest. Ibid.

If he advances money without such authority, he can only look to the estate for indemnity. Ibid.

22. —— practice: receiver: injunction: undertaking as to damages: application to enforce: delay]—The receiver in a bankruptcy had obtained an injunction restraining the holder of a bill of sale, comprising part of the bankrupt's property, from selling the same, and had given the usual undertaking as to damages. The bill of sale holder did not apply to enforce the undertaking until nearly four years after the damage had accrued:—Held, that, although the receiver had not obtained his discharge and the bankruptcy proceedings were still pending, the unexplained delay which had taken place in making the application was a sufficient answer to it. Ex parte Hall; in re Wood (App.), 907

23. —— practice: rehearing: limit of time: debtor's summons: judgment debt: statement of consideration: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 71: bankruptcy rules, 1870, rule 143: rules of Court, 1875, order LVIII. rule 15]—As a general rule, in granting a rehearing of a matter in bankruptcy, the Court will be guided by the analogy of the time limited for appealing from an order, but on special grounds a rehearing will be granted after the expiration of such time:—So held on an application to rehear a bankruptcy petition which had been dismissed. Ex parte Ritso; in re Ritso (App.), 535

Where a debtor's summons is founded on a judgment debt it is not necessary that the consideration for the judgment should be stated in the summons; and if it is wrongly stated, the summons will not necessarily be invalidated thereby. Ibid.

24. —— practice: witness: examination as to dealings with bankrupt: jurisdiction to require witness to furnish an account: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 96 and 97]—The Court has no jurisdiction under sections 96 and 97 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to order a witness to furnish an account in writing of his dealings with the bankrupt. Ex parte Reynolds; in re Reynolds (App.), 223

25. —— practice: witness: examination of creditor as a witness under bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 96: right to copy of depositions: bankruptcy rules, 1870, rules 9 and 12]—Where a creditor was examined as a witness under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869,—Held, that he was entitled, subject to the discretion of the Court to refuse it, to a copy of the shorthand notes of his deposition. Ex parte Pratt; in re Hayman (App.), 120

26. —— proof: admission: delay: right to expunge: bankruptcy rules, 1870, rules 72 and 73]—A trustee in bankruptcy, who has admitted a proof, is entitled under rule 73 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, as he would have been under the old practice, at any time afterwards, to apply to expunge it on the ground that it was wrongly admitted. The expunging, however, only affects the right to receive future dividends, the creditor being entitled to retain any which have been paid before the proof is expunged. Ex parte Harper; in re Tait (App.), 117

27. —— proof: 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71. ss. 12, 31 and 49: infringement of patent: account of profits: account directed against trustees of bankrupt: proof for amount of profits: liability of trustees to costs]—The right of a patentee to an account of profits made by an infringer is not a demand in the nature of unliquidated damages within section 31 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the amount of such profits is provable in the bankruptcy of the infringer. Watson v. Holliday (App.), 543

The sole defendant becoming bankrupt, his trustees were added as defendants, and an order made that the action proceed against the trustees. The trustees did not move to discharge the order, and on the hearing appeared and cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses:—Held (affirming KAY, J.), that they were liable to the costs of the action, but the account of profits was limited to an account of the profits received by the bankrupt. Ibid.

Semble,—The order making the trustees parties was improper, and should have been discharged, if an application had been made for that purpose at the proper time. Ibid.

28. —— proof: provable debt: contingency: mortgage: ancillary covenant: discharge: bankruptcy act, 1861, ss. 153 and 161]—A covenant in a mortgage-deed not to revoke a will whereby a fund had been appointed in favour of the mortgagee,—Held not to be ancillary to the mortgage debt so as to be discharged by the bankruptcy of the mortgagor which discharged the debt. And the mortgagor having some time after her discharge in bankruptcy revoked the will, an action against her executor for damages for breach of the covenant was held to be maintainable. Robinson v. Ommanney (App.), 440

29. —— proof: secured creditor: bankruptcy rules, 1870, rules 99 and 100: administration]—Secured creditors of an insolvent estate claimed for 400*l.* and interest; they valued their security at 500*l.*; their names were struck out from the schedule of creditors in the chief clerk's certificate. The security valid as against the trustee in bankruptcy. Ex parte Voisey; in re Knight (App.), 121

Ex parte Williams (47 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 26; Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 138), In re Stockton Iron Furnace Company (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 417; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 335) and Ex parte Jackson (Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 725) considered. Ibid.

36. —— trustee: reputed ownership: order and disposition: articles not connected with debtor's business: bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 15. sub-s. 5]—A member of a firm of woollen manufacturers kept at the place of business a quantity of pictures. The trustee in the liquidation of the firm claimed them as part of the partnership assets:—Held, that the pictures being articles not connected in any way with the legitimate business of the firm, the inference was that they were not the property of the firm, and could not therefore be held to be in the reputed ownership of the firm, and that, on the whole of the evidence, they were the separate property of the partner. Ex parte Lovering; in re Murrell (App.), 951

37. —— undischarged bankrupt: close of bankruptcy: death of bankrupt within three years: after-acquired property: rights of old creditors: bankruptcy act, 1869, ss. 12 and 54]——S., a bankrupt, died in June, 1881, having since the close of his bankruptcy (in December, 1880) acquired property more than sufficient to pay the debts which he had contracted since that date. He never obtained an order of discharge. An action having been brought by one of the new creditors to administer his estate,—Held, that the surplus, after paying these debts, belonged to the administratrix, and was not applicable to the payment of the debts of the old creditors. In re Smith. Green v. Smith, 921 —— administration action: costs of bankrupt executor or trustee. See COSTS, 1.

—— bill of sale: affidavit: registration. See BILL OF SALE, 5.

—— fraudulent settlement: intent to defeat creditors. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

—— order and disposition: registration of bill of sale. See BILL OF SALE, 4.

Bill of Sale—bills of sale act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 8: statute: construction]—Section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, is not retrospective. Hickson v. Darlow, 453

2. —— non-registration: bankruptcy of grantor: execution creditor: extent of avoidance of unregistered bill of sale as against execution creditor: bills of sale act, 1854 (17 and 18 Vict. c. 36), s. 1; 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 8.—The taking in execution of goods comprised in an unregistered bill of sale does not, under section 8 of the Act of 1878, avoid the bill of sale altogether, but only to the extent necessary to let in the claim of the execution creditor: consequently, where, by the doctrine of relation back of the title of the trustee in bankruptcy, an execution is avoided, the execution being swept away as if it never existed, the title of the holder of the unregistered bill of sale, which but for the execution would have been good as against the trustee, continues good as against him. In re Toomer; ex parte Blaiberg (App.), 461

Richard v. James (36 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 116; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 285) distinguished. Ibid.

3. —— registration: agreement not to register: additional bonus: statement of consideration: defeasance or condition: misdescription of grantor: bills of sale act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 8 and 10]—The consideration for a bill of sale was stated to be 242*l.* advanced by the grantee to the grantors, the advance to be repaid by instalments, together with 100*l.* by way of interest and bonus. It was also verbally agreed that the bill of sale should not be registered, in consequence of which the bonus was higher than it would otherwise have been. The grantors, a father and his son, were described as mantle-makers, carrying on business in partnership. They had in fact been partners, but at the date of the deed the partnership was dissolved, and the son was employed by the father as a clerk. Both father and son joined in the assignment, but the property comprised in the bill of sale belonged to the father alone. The father filed a liquidation petition:—Held, first, that the agreement not to register was collateral, and not therefore a part of the consideration for the deed; secondly, that it was not a "defeasance or condition" to which the deed was subject under section 10, sub-section 3, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878; thirdly, that there was not a sufficient misdescription of the grantors to render the registration invalid. In re Storey; ex parte Popplewell (App.), 39

4. —— registration: order and disposition: bills of sale acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 20; 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3 and 15: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 15. sub-s. 5]—On the 18th of September, 1882, a debtor executed a bill of sale of his furniture, &c. The deed was registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. The debtor remained in possession of the goods until the 2nd of November, 1882, when he filed a liquidation petition. By section 15 of

Court, the society advanced to a borrowing member the amount of his shares, charging him a premium calculated on the basis of the advance being for fifteen years; and a mortgage-deed of the property in respect of which the advance was made was executed, by which the premium was added to the principal, and repayment by monthly instalments provided for in accordance with the rules; the instalments for each year being made applicable in paying interest charged on the whole principal sum, made up of the sum advanced and the premium, and in reduction of that principal sum. The borrower claimed to redeem the mortgaged property before the expiration of the fifteen years, on the basis of an account in which, in calculating the extent to which the monthly instalments which had been paid were to be considered as having gone in reduction of principal, and the amount by which the principal remaining repayable had thereby been reduced, he was charged with only a part of the premium, proportioned to the shorter period for which the loan was retained, and no interest was charged upon the premium:—Held, that the borrower could only redeem on the basis of an account in which the whole premium was charged at the outset and added to the actual sum advanced, and interest was charged on the principal sum so constituted. Harrey v. The Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society, 349

3. —— borrowing in way of business: ultra vires: deposit of deeds with bankers to secure overdrafts: 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32]—A society formed under the above Act had by its rules no express power of borrowing, nor was it expressly prohibited from borrowing. All payments by or to the society were to be made through the society's bankers. The bankers from time to time allowed the society to overdraw their account, the society depositing with them title-deeds of the properties belonging to its members. In 1876 a written memorandum was signed by the solicitors and secretaries of the society, stating that the deeds deposited were so deposited not only for safe custody, but also as a lien to secure the sums from time to time owing by the society to the bankers on the balance of the banking accounts. A petition for winding up the company was presented in 1881, and an order made therein appointing official liquidators. At the date of the presentation of the petition, the balance due to the bank, which had been of very considerable amount, had been reduced to 2,734*l.* This was subsequently, before the date of the action, reduced to 1,302*l.*, chiefly by payments made by borrowing members in payment of the advances made to them by the society on the security of their property. In an action by the official liquidators, claiming delivery up of the title-deeds deposited with the bank, and for a declaration that the bank had no lien upon them, and for repayment by the bank of money received by the bank from borrowing members since the presentation of the petition,—Held, by BRISTOWE, V.C. (of the Duchy of Lancaster), that the transaction amounted to a loan, and was ultra vires the society. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the memorandum shewed that a course of dealing was intended not authorised by the rules, and that the claim of the bank, so far as it depended on the memorandum, must fail; but so far as the money advanced by the bank went to pay the legal liabilities of the society, the claim must, in accordance with the equitable principle enunciated in In re The Cork and Youghal Railway Company (39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 277; Law Rep. 4 Chanc. 748), be allowed; but the burden of proving what was so applied lay on the bank, who could not for the purpose of satisfying that burden have the benefit of the rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572). The Official Liquidator of the Blackburn and District Benefit Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks & Co. (App.), 92

The consistency of this equitable principle with the general law that persons having no borrowing powers cannot by borrowing contract debts to the lenders, may be shewn by the following test: Has the transaction added to the liabilities of the borrowers, for if the amount remains the same, but there is merely for convenience of payment a change of creditors, there is no substantial borrowing within the prohibition of the general law. Ibid.

4. —— rules: unlimited borrowing: equitable mortgagees: unsecured creditors: preference shareholders: investing or unadvanced members: priorities: 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32*: the building societies act* (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), 1874, ss. 7, 8 and 15*: the building societies act* (38 & 39 Vict. c. 9), 1875, s. 1]—A rule of a benefit building society enrolled under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, conferred on the society an unlimited power of borrowing, and under it the society borrowed large sums of money by way of equitable mortgage on title-deeds with a memorandum of deposit in the usual way. Another rule empowered the society to issue deposit or paid-up shares of the value of 30*l.* each, bearing interest at five per cent., and allowed the depositor, on giving a month's notice, to withdraw the whole or part of his deposit in preference to all other shares. This rule was struck out by the certifying barrister; but, nevertheless, the society retained it in its printed book of rules, and under it issued many paid-up 30*l.* shares. Afterwards the society amended the rule by substituting 1*l.* for 30*l.*, and the barrister certified the rule as altered. Many 1*l.* paid-up shares were issued under the amended rule, and also those who held 30*l.* shares exchanged them for 1*l.* shares. After the Building Societies Act, 1874, came into operation, the society borrowed moneys on the security of promissory notes, but such notes had not printed on them the 14th and 15th sections of that Act, as required by the 15th sub-section of section 5 of the Act. On the winding-up of the society, questions arose as to the validity of the above transactions, and as to the priorities of the parties after payment of the outside creditors and the costs of the liquidation, and it was held:—First, that an unlimited power of borrowing being invalid and ultra vires, the equitable mortgagees held no valid securities for their advances, and must give up to the official liquidator the deeds that had been deposited with them. Secondly, that the issuing of paid-up or preference shares was not a disguised borrowing, nor contrary to the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 32, and therefore not illegal; and that such of the holders of such shares as had given notice of withdrawal prior to the winding-up were entitled to be paid in priority to other investing members. Thirdly, that the omission to print the 14th and 15th sections of the Act of 1874 on the promissory notes did not invalidate the notes, the directors of the society being the persons, if any, liable for such omission; and therefore that the holders of the notes were in the position of secured creditors, and entitled to rank as though they were outside creditors. The order of priorities, therefore, was as follows:—First, the holders of the promissory notes; next, the preference shareholders; and then the residue of the assets to be divided pari passu between the equitable mortgagees whose securities were invalidated and the other investing members. In re The Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society. Crace Calvert's Case. Hawkins's Case. Scott's Case (App.), 857

5. Building Society (continued)—winding-up: investing members: notice of withdrawal: priorities of investing members inter se]—A rule of a benefit building society provided that any investing member might withdraw, "provided the funds permit," sums not exceeding 10*l.* by giving seven days' notice, and sums exceeding 10*l.* by giving one month's notice, according to a printed form, and that no further liabilities should be incurred by the society until such member had been repaid. The society went into liquidation, and had assets which, when realised, would leave a surplus after payment of all outside creditors, and the question arose—the surplus being insufficient to pay all the investing members in full—whether those investing members who had given notice of withdrawal before the winding-up were entitled to be paid in priority to those investing members who had not given such notice. The latter class contended, first, that the rule applied only to a going concern, and that after the winding-up all investing members stood on the same footing; and, secondly, that if the rule applied, then, on its true construction, the withdrawing members were only to be paid out of a particular fund—namely, funds at bank, properly available for that purpose—that is, the monthly subscriptions of borrowing members; that no such fund was in existence when the winding-up commenced; and therefore the withdrawing members were not entitled to any preferential payment out of the other assets when realised:—Held, that the rule applied not only to the society as a going concern, but must be applied in the winding-up to adjust and ascertain the rights of the members inter se in the surplus assets, and that the true construction of the rule was that withdrawing members were to be paid in priority to other investing members if the assets of the society upon realisation permitted, and consequently that the withdrawing members were entitled to the preferential payment they claimed. In re The Blackburn, &c., Benefit Building Society (App.), 894

—— mortgage to: attornment clause. See BANKRUPTCY, 32, 33.

Charity—jurisdiction: church building act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70. s. 22): Sir S. Romilly's act (52 Geo. 3. c. 101): district parishes: charity income: apportionment: discharge of order]—Where, under the Church Building Acts, district parishes have been severed from an original parish, and the income of a charity belonging to the original parish has been apportioned by an order of the Court among such district parishes and the remainder of the original parish, such order is not final, and may be discharged or altered from time to time by the Court when changes in the distribution of population or other circumstances shall make such alteration desirable. In re The Campden Charities (No. 2), 780

2. —— mortmain: bonds secured on rates: pure personalty: 9 Geo 2. c. 36: interest in land]—A testator bequeathed ten 100*l.* Norland Estate bonds to various charitable institutions. These bonds were securities for money raised for the improvement of the Norland Estate, and by the Norland Estate Act (6 Vict. c. xxxiii.) were secured by a rate charged upon and leviable by distress, if necessary, on the goods and chattels of the owners or occupiers on the estate:—Held, that the bonds did not create an interest affecting the land, and that the bequest was consequently valid. Jerris v. Lawrence, 242

Attree v. Hawe (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 863;

Law Rep. 9 Ch. D. 337) and In re Harris; Jacson v. The Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty (49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 687; Law Rep. 15 Ch. D. 561) followed and considered. Ibid.

3. —— scheme: foreign charity]—Where an application to the Scotch Court to settle a charitable scheme was necessary, because the trustee, an executor, declined to act, the Court directed the application to be made by the Attorney-General. In re Fraser. Yates v. Fraser, 469 —— scheme: costs of re-investment. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 3.

China—residence in: Anglo-Chinese domicile. See DOMICIL.

Church Building Acts—district parishes: apportionment of charities between. See CHARITY, 1.

Codicil. See WILL, 8.

Colonial Will—appointment of funds in court in England: English probate necessary for payment out to appointee]—A testator died in New Zealand, having by his will appointed to his son, in exercise of a power, the proceeds of sale of certain English leaseholds, which had been taken by a local board of works, and the proceeds paid into Court. The will appointing the proceeds of sale was proved in the Supreme Court of New Zealand:—Held, that the will must also be proved in England before payment out of Court to the appointee could be directed. In re Vallance's Trusts, 791

In re Tootal's Trusts (ante, p. 664) distinguished. Ibid.

Commission—solicitor to, on sale by auction. See SOLICITOR, 3.

—— stipulation for, in mortgage. See MORTGAGE, 3.

Committal. See ATTACHMENT; CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845—remuneration of directors. See COMPANY, 2.

Company—debentures: irregularity in issue of: debentures issued to contractor to obtain money: estoppel by conduct: company not permitted to set up invalidity as against equitable transferee]—A company, having power to issue debentures transferable at law, issued certain debentures to their contractor to enable him to obtain an advance for the purposes of the company. There was an irregularity in the issue of these debentures of which the contractor was aware, but the debentures on the face of them purported to be regularly issued for valuable consideration, and to be legally transferable. The debentures subsequently came into the hands of transferees for value who had no notice of the irregularity, but whose transfers were never registered:—Held, that as the original conduct of the company in issuing the debentures was such that the public was justified in treating it as a representation that the debentures were legally transferable there was an equity on the part of the equitable transferees to restrain the company from pleading their invalidity, although the irregularity in their issue might have been a defence at law to an action against the company by their transferors. But, held, that the right of the transferees being only equitable, relief must be given to them on equitable terms, and that they ought to be allowed, in the winding up of the company, to prove, not for the nominal amount of the debentures, but only for such sum, not being greater than that amount, as each of them might be able to prove he bona fide advanced upon the security of the debentures he received, such proof however being allowed to them in the character of debenture-holders, with all the advantages attaching to that position. In re The Romford Canal Co.: Carew's, Pocock's and Trickett's Claims, 729

2. —— directors: general meeting: powers of: remuneration for past services: compensation to dismissed officials: gratuitous payments: companies clauses consolidation act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), ss. 90 and 91: regulation of railways act, 1868]—Directors of a trading company have, incidental to their office, the power of doing that which is ordinarily and reasonably done with a view to getting either better work from their servants or to attract customers. Hutton v. The West Cork Rail. Co. (App.), 689

The test whether a majority can bind the minority in voting the company's money, must be whether the proposed payment is reasonably incidental to and within the scope of carrying on the business of the company for the company's benefit. Ibid.

Remuneration of directors for past services, and compensation to meritorious officials on dismissal (both of which are gratuitous payments), are justifiable, provided that they are likely to conduce to the advantage of a company in the future. Therefore, to justify any such payments, the company must be a going concern. Ibid.

Where, therefore, a company had ceased to exist as a profit-making company, and only continued for the purpose of regulating their internal affairs, of winding up the same, and distributing when received the sums which had been fixed by arbitration as the purchase-money for their undertaking,—Held (by COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J.; dissentiente BAGGALLAY, L.J.), that it was not within the power of the directors themselves, or of a general meeting of the company, to pass a resolution voting remuneration to the directors for their past services prior to the transfer of the undertaking, and compensation to officials who had been discharged in consequence of such transfer. Ibid.

But held by the Court, that the company could in general meeting vote a reasonable sum for remuneration for services during the winding-up. Ibid.

Semble, a resolution voting the distribution of a sum of money, first in paying certain expenses properly payable thereout, the amount of which can only be estimated, and the balance among the directors by way of remuneration, even though remuneration is properly payable, is bad. Ibid.

The resolution should take the form of a vote of a sum not exceeding an ascertained amount to be paid out of the balance—per COTTON, L.J. Ibid.

The winding-up of a company is as much a part of the business of a company as its formation—per BAGGALLAY, L.J. Ibid.

Decision of FRY, J. (ante, p. 377), reversed on appeal. Ibid.

3. Company (continued)—directors: payment of dividends out of capital: tort or breach of trust: joint and several liability of directors: set-off: separate debt against joint liability: statute of limitations: companies act, 1862, s. 165]—On a summons under the 165th section of the Companies Act, 1862, by the liquidator, asking that the directors of the company might be declared jointly and severally liable to repay the amount of dividends declared and paid out of capital during their directorship,—Held, that the directors had committed a breach of trust, not a tort, that the claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations as to dividends declared and paid more than six years previously, and that they were jointly and severally liable to repay such dividends, with interest at four per cent. Held also, that the directors could not set off debts due to them from the company against their liability to make good the amount of the dividends. In re The Exchange Banking Co. (Lim.) (App.), 217

4. —— memorandum of association: articles: capital: division of, into A and B shares: provision in articles that B capital should form guarantee fund for holders of A shares: ultra vires: variation of memorandum: companies act, 1862, sections 6, 7, 12 and 38]—A company was formed for the purpose of acquiring, cultivating and farming land in Ireland, with a nominal capital, as stated in the memorandum, of 1,050,000*l.*, divided into 140,000 A shares of 5*l.* each, and 3,500 B shares of 100*l.* each. By one of the articles of association it was provided that the capital produced by the issue of the B shares should be paid to trustees to invest and apply the income and the proceeds of sale of capital, if necessary, in paying the holders of the A shares a preferential cumulative dividend of five per cent.—the balance of the income, after replacing any capital sold, to be paid to the B shareholders; and in the event of a winding-up (subject to liability for the company's debts), both capital and income of the trust fund were to be distributed among the B shareholders rateably and exclusively—and it was provided that the trust fund and income should in no event be used as working capital. There was no suggestion of any concealment or mala fides:—Held (affirming the decision of CHITTY, J.), that the article of association was ultra vires, as being a contradiction of the memorandum of association in one of the matters (capital) required to be stated in the memorandum, and that the article could not be allowed to vary or add to the memorandum; that the proposed application of the B capital was a misapplication of part of the capital, to which the creditors would have to look, for an object not being one of those stated in the memorandum, and could not be said to be conducive to the business of the company within the meaning of the usual clause to that effect stated in the memorandum. Guinness v. The Land Corporation of Ireland (Lim.) (App.), 177

It is only as regards matters affecting shareholders inter se, and which are not required by the Act to be stated in the memorandum, that the articles can be read as a contemporaneous document with the memorandum for the purpose of adding to the memorandum. Ibid.

5. —— winding-up: jurisdiction: companies act, 1862, s. 102: contributory: indemnity]—Under section 102 of the Companies Act, 1862, the Court can only adjust the rights of contributories inter se, qua contributories. In re The Alexandra Palace Co.; ex parte Goodson and others, 428

Where the governing object of a summons by directors was to obtain indemnity from co-contributories, joint tort-feasors, but some matters asked for were within the jurisdiction in the winding-up, the Court refused to make any order. Ibid.

6. —— winding-up: liquidator: costs: liquidator's remuneration and costs: litigation in the liquidation: general costs: priorities]—When the assets of a company are insufficient for the payment in full of the costs of winding up, and of internal litigation in the winding up, the liquidator is not entitled to any remuneration; but he is entitled to his costs of realisation out of the assets in priority to the costs of internal litigation; and the costs of such litigation, and all other costs ordered to be paid out of the assets, will be paid rateably, without regard to order of date. In re The Dronfield Silkstone Coal Company (No. 2), 963

Ex parte Percival (Law Rep. 6 Eq. 519), The Cape Breton Company v. Fenn (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 321; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 198), and The Home Investment Society (Law Rep. 14 Ch. D. 167) considered. Ibid.

7. —— winding-up: liquidator, default by: surety: right to reopen accounts: practice]—In the winding-up of companies, where the surety for a defaulting liquidator becomes liable upon his bond, it is not the practice to give notice to the surety of the taking of the accounts as against the liquidator; but if the surety becomes aware of the taking of the accounts and applies for leave to attend, such leave will be granted at his own expense. In re Birmingham Brewing, Malting and Distilling Co. (Lim.), 358

H. was appointed liquidator in a winding-up. The G. Society became his sureties for 3,000*l.*, and for that purpose entered into a bond, which provided that the certificate of the chief clerk should be conclusive evidence as between all parties that the bond had been forfeited to the amount stated in the certificate. On the bankruptcy of H. a fresh liquidator was appointed in his place. The accounts of H., which were carried in and vouched without any notice having been given to the society, shewed a probable deficit of 4,500*l.* The society, on receiving notice of the date fixed for the final passing of the accounts, attended and asked to have them reopened in their presence. The Court allowed the society to have the accounts reopened, on the terms that they should pay into Court the whole of the 3,000*l.* for which they were liable, together with 100*l.* for the costs of such reopening, and should undertake to pay interest on the amount to be found due from them, and pay the costs of the application. Ibid.

8. —— winding-up: petition: commencing business within a year of incorporation: business abroad: companies act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79. sub-s. 2]—Where a company was established to carry on business in the United States and in other parts of the world, and had commenced carrying on business abroad, and where, according to the evidence, the company intended when able to start business in this country,—Held, that, although the company had not actually commenced carrying out in this country the objects for which it had been established within a year from its incorporation, still that was not a sufficient ground for ordering the company to be wound up under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 79. sub-s. 2. In re The Capital Fire Insurance Association, 20

Princess of Reuss v. Bos (40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 665; Law Rep. 5 H.L. Cas. 176) discussed and distinguished. Ibid.

9. —— winding-up: petition: companies act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 40: shares held by petitioner and registered in his name: bankruptcy act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71)]—A shareholder was placed on the register in May, 1881, and remained on it at the time when he presented a winding-up petition in February, 1882. On the 26th of August, 1881, he filed a liquidation petition, under which a trustee was appointed. On the 28th of October, 1881, he executed a composition deed, and on the 7th of January, 1882, the trustee reassigned the shares to him:—Held, that the petitioner's shares had been held by him and registered in his name for a period of at least six months during the eighteen months previously to the commencement of the winding-up, within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1867, s. 40. In re Wala Wynaad Indian Gold Mining Co., 86

10. —— winding-up petition: creditor: no available assets: opposition by majority of creditors: discretion of court: petition dismissed: costs: the companies act, 1862, s. 91]—A creditor of a company who cannot get his debt paid is not entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order, where it appears that he will not get paid by means of the order, if made. In re The Chapel House Colliery Company (App.), 934

The colliery of a company was in the hands of its mortgagee, who, under the powers contained in his mortgage-deed, was working the colliery at a profit, and therewith was reducing the principal and interest due on the mortgage. Subject to this mortgage, all the assets were vested in trustees for debenture-holders to the amount of 40,000*l.* A debenture-holder having, with knowledge of these facts, presented a winding-up petition, which was opposed by the company, by all the debenture-holders other than the petitioner, and by all the unsecured creditors, his petition was dismissed with costs. Ibid.

11. —— winding-up: petitioning creditor: unpaid vendor: award: costs of arbitration: companies act, 1862, s. 82: lands clauses act, 1845, ss. 34, 49 and 50]—Unpaid vendors of land taken by a company under their compulsory powers are not "creditors" within the Companies Act, 1862, s. 82, until their title has been duly made out and accepted, even though the amount of the purchase and compensation money to be paid by the company has been ascertained and fixed by award; neither are they "creditors" in respect of the costs of the arbitration, unless such costs have been taxed. In re The Milford Docks Company; ex parte Lister, 774

12. Company (continued)—winding-up: practice: appeal: security for costs]—Where a company, which has been ordered to be wound up on the ground that it is unable to pay its debts, is the sole appellant from the winding-up order, security for the costs of the appeal must be given. In re The Photographic Artists' Co-operative Co. (Lim.) (App.), 654

13. —— winding-up: practice: misfeasance by directors: affidavit by official liquidator embracing distinct cases against different directors: right to compel official liquidator to make affidavit of documents: companies act, 1862, s. 165]—In the winding-up of a company the official liquidator took out a summons, under section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, against a number of persons who were or had been directors, seeking to make them responsible for certain alleged acts of misfeasance, which were 107 in number. In support of his application he filed a long affidavit embracing the cases of all the directors. E. had been a director for a short period only, and the liquidator only sought to make him liable for 11 out of the 107 acts of misfeasance. E. appeared by a separate solicitor, and applied for an order upon the liquidator to state the particular paragraphs of the affidavit on which he intended to rely as against him:—Held (affirming the decision of CHITTY, J.), that the application must be refused, on the ground that there were no special circumstances to take the case out of the general rule that a defendant must ascertain for himself what part of his opponent's evidence relates to him. In re The Mutual Society (App.), 621

An official liquidator is not in the position of an ordinary litigant; he is an officer of the Court, and will not, except under special circumstances, be ordered to make the usual affidavit as to documents, although he is bound to shew a hostile litigant all the documents in his possession on which he relies or which the litigant desires to see. Ibid.

14. —— winding-up: proof: set-off: assignment of chose in action: debt or damages: rules of court, 1875, order XIX. rule 3]—T. purchased some debts due by a company from H., who purchased them from the original creditors. Before the debts were assigned to T. the liquidator took out a summons in the winding-up of the company to make H. liable for a misfeasance, and subsequently to the assignment an order was made that H., who was an original director of the company, should pay the liquidator 2,000*l.*, "the nominal value of the eighty-five shares in the company received by H. from the promoter of the company":—Held, that as the company had elected to take the value of the shares, their claim against H. was not a debt but damages, and that therefore the 2,000*l.* could not be set off against the dividends payable to T. in respect of the debts. In re The Milan Tramways Co.; ex parte Theys, 29

Rule 3 of Order XIX., Rules of Court, 1875, is only a rule of procedure, and was not intended to give rights against third persons which did not exist before. It was held, therefore, not to affect the question of set-off. Ibid.

15. —— winding-up: rates made subsequently to commencement of winding-up: right of rating authority to payment in full: beneficial occupation]—The right of a rating authority to payment in full of rates on the property of a company in liquidation made subsequently to the commencement of the winding-up, is not necessarily governed by the same principle as that of a landlord in respect of rent. In re Watson, Kipling & Co., 473

In order to entitle the rating authority to payment in full it must be shewn that there has been an actual beneficial occupation or enjoyment of the property by the liquidator on behalf of the company. Ibid.

Where the property of a company in liquidation consisted of chemical and other works and blast furnaces which had ceased to be used for manufacturing purposes or purposes of profit, but the liquidator kept some of the furnaces alight with a view to a sale of the property, and had used part of the works for the storage of plant,—Held, that there was no such beneficial occupation or enjoyment of the property by the liquidator as would entitle a rating authority to payment in full of rates made subsequently to the winding-up of the company. Held also, that the Court, in exercising its discretion on the matter, was at liberty to have, and would have, regard to the fact that the amount of the rates was excessive. Ibid.

16. —— winding-up: rent: distress: companies act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 163]—Where a company had taken possession under an agreement for a sublease, the superior landlord was allowed, after the commencement of a winding-up, to distrain on goods of the company, though he had taken from them a promissory note for the rent due to him. In re The Carriage Co-operative Supply Association; ex parte Clemence, 472

17. —— winding-up: resolution for voluntary liquidation: compulsory order: B contributories: commencement of winding-up: companies act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 38, 84 and 130]—A company passed a special resolution for voluntary liquidation, and was afterwards ordered to be wound up under a compulsory order. Shareholders transferred their shares less than a year before the passing of the special resolution, but more than a year before the presentation of the petition on which the compulsory order was made:—Held, that they could not be placed on the list of B contributories. In re The Taurine Co. (Lim.), 688

—— borrowing powers. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 3, 4.

—— building society: withdrawing members. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 5.

—— cost-book mine: relinquishment of shares. See MINE.

—— evidence: admissions by director. See EVIDENCE.

—— security for costs by company, plaintiff in action. See COSTS, 6.

—— shares: mortgage by deposit: power of sale: transfer in blank. See MORTGAGE, 7.

—— shares: trustee of: right to indemnity. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 6.

Composition. See BANKRUPTCY, 7–10.

Compromise—in administration action: effect of. See ADMINISTRATION, 1.

—— sale of partnership interest by executrix and trustee. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 1.

Condition—precedent. See COVENANT, 1.

—— uncertainty. See WILL, 9.

Condition of Sale. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 2.

Conflict of Laws—action in foreign Court: stay of proceedings in this country. See PRACTICE, 27, 28.

Consolidation of Charges. See POWER, 5.

Contempt of Court—jurisdiction: injunction]—An injunction was granted on motion in an action, to restrain a party to the action from a threatened publication of circulars abusive of a party to, and tending to prejudice the fair trial of, the action. Kitcat v. Sharp, 134

—— And see ATTACHMENT.

Contingent Remainder. See WILL, 11.

Contract—stipulations of varying importance: substantial breach: penalty or liquidated damages: forfeiture of deposit]—A contracted with B to buy an estate for 70,000*l.*, which sum A was to expend in building on the estate, and to pay a deposit of 5,000*l.* on the purchase-money: 500*l.* of the deposit was to be paid on the execution of the contract, and the balance within seven months. The contract contained numerous stipulations of varying importance; and, amongst others, that if B failed to make a good title, the 500*l.* was to be returned, and he was to pay A 5,000*l.* as liquidated damages; and that, if A should commit a substantial breach of the contract, either in not proceeding with due diligence to carry out the works, or in failing to perform any of the provisions of the contract, then, and in either of such events, the 5,000*l.* should be forfeited, and if it had not been paid A should forfeit and pay to B 5,000*l.* by way of liquidated damages, and the agreement should be determined. A neither paid the 500*l.*, nor in any way attempted to perform the contract. On action brought by B to recover 5,000*l.* as liquidated damages,—Held (affirming FRY, J.), that the forfeiture clause did not apply to the non-payment of the 500*l.*, which was intended to be paid on the execution of the contract, but to a substantial breach of any of the other stipulations; and, therefore, that B was entitled to enforce payment of the 5,000*l.* as liquidated damages. Wallis v. Smith (App.), 145

Astley v. Weldon (2 Bos. & P. 346), Kemble v. Farren (6 Bing. 141), Magee v. Lavell (46 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 57; Law Rep. 9 C.P. 107) and In re Newman (43 Law J. Rep. C.P. 131; Law Rep. 4 Ch. D. 724) discussed and considered. Ibid.

—— injunction: negative clause. See INJUNCTION.

—— seal, when necessary. See PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 2.

—— subsequent conveyance, effect of. See RAILWAY COMPANY.

—— whether complete: deed prepared but not executed. See BANKRUPTCY, 11.

ordered to pay the costs of the action. The Attorney-General v. The Vestry of Bermondsey (App.), 567 —— production of documents by: place of production. See PRACTICE, 22.

Corrupt Practices Act, 1863. See PARLIAMENT.

Cost-book Mine. See MINE, 1.

Costs—administration action: practice: breach of trust: bankrupt executrix: bankruptcy act, 1869, s. 49]—A defaulting executor or trustee indebted to his testator's estate who subsequently to the commencement of an administration action becomes bankrupt is not entitled to his costs subsequent to the bankruptcy until he has made good his default, unless he is kept before the Court at the express instance of the beneficiaries. In re Basham. Hannay v. Basham, 408

Lewis v. Trask (Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 863) approved. Ibid.

Clare v. Clare (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 553; Law Rep. 21 Ch. D. 867) disapproved. Ibid.

2. —— apportionment: claim and counter-claim: costs where both succeed]—The principle of taxation laid down in Saner v. Bilton (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 545; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 416) applies equally to a case where both claim and counter-claim have been successful, as where they have both been dismissed with costs. The successful plaintiff is, in the absence of any special direction to the contrary, entitled to the general costs of the action, notwithstanding that the result of the whole litigation is in favour of the defendant; and there is to be no apportionment of those costs which would have been duplicated if the counter-claim had been the subject of an independent action. In re John Brown; Ward v. Morse (App.), 524

3. —— disclaiming mortgagee, of]—A puisne mortgagee disclaiming is entitled to all costs incurred subsequent to offer to disclaim. Green v. Foster, 470

4. —— mortgagee: costs of adjournment to judge: practice: contested claim in suit]—A mortgagee bringing in his accounts, who bona fide and honestly, under a mistake in law, makes a claim which is disallowed, ought not to pay the costs of the claim. In re Watts; Smith v. Watts (App.), 209

An adjournment from the chief clerk to the Judge in person is not in the nature of an appeal. Ibid.

Only one party should attend to oppose a contested claim in an administration action—General Order XVI. rule 12*a*. Ibid.

5. —— partnership action: costs of unsuccessful claim: order to pay out of partnership estate: appeal for costs: judicature act, 1873, s. 49: rules of court, 1875, order LV. rule 1]—Where in a partnership action the plaintiff, who had obtained a judgment for taking the accounts of the partnership, took out a summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate, which summons was refused,—Held, that an order that the costs of that summons should nevertheless be paid out of the estate was an order within the discretion of the Court as to costs; that such order did not amount to an order appropriating to the payment of costs a fund not properly attributable to that purpose—within the decision of Jones v. Chennell (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 583; Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 492); and that no appeal would lie from that order. Butcher v. Pooler (App.), 930

In re Foster v. The Great Western Railway Company (51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 233; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 515) distinguished. Ibid.

6. —— security for: time to apply: limited company plaintiff: companies act, 1862, s. 69: rules of court, 1875, order LV. rule 2]—Under Rules of Court, 1875, Order LV. rule 2, the Court has a judicial discretion to direct security for costs to be given at any time:—Held, therefore, that in a proper case, the Court will order security for costs to be given on an application made by a defendant, even after notice of trial. The Lydney and Wigpool Iron Ore Co. (Lim.) v. Bird, 640

7. —— set-off: solicitor's lien]—Trustees who had recovered judgment for money due to the trust against a defendant were not allowed to set off costs payable by them to the defendant in respect of a petition in the matter of the trust. In re Harrald. Wilde v. Walford, 435

8. —— shorthand notes of evidence and judgment: printed copies: rules of the supreme court, 1875, order VI., schedule (costs): agreement to share printer's bill]—Under the common order of the Court of Appeal giving the costs of the appeal and of the shorthand-writer's notes of the evidence and of the judgment in the Court below, the solicitor of the successful party, when the shorthand notes have been printed in the first instance, is entitled on taxation of the costs to be allowed, in addition to the printer's bill, 3*d.* per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the evidence supplied to each of his counsel on the appeal, and 3*d.* per folio for one printed copy of the shorthand notes of the judgment supplied for the use of each Judge of the Court of Appeal. The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Loog (App.), 288 thereof respectively" a fine of 1,000*l.*; and every such new lease was to contain a covenant for renewal, "it being the intention of the parties that the lease should be renewable for ever at the option of the lessees, in pursuance of the covenant in the lease." The lease also contained a covenant by the lessees that if they should not "before the expiration of the term avail themselves of the option of requiring a new lease, and on the execution of the new lease pay the fine of 1,000*l.*," then the lessees would, previous to the expiration of the term, perform certain works upon the demised premises, so as at the expiration of the term to render up a good dwelling-house: —Held, that the payment of the fine and the execution of the new lease before the expiration of the existing term were not conditions precedent to the lessees' right to a renewal, but that a requisition by the lessees within the term was a condition precedent, and that a letter from the secretary of a company and of trustees of a guarantee fund, such company and trustees being the persons interested in the lease, written to one of several trustees of one moiety of the freehold being also tenant-for-life of the other moiety, was a sufficient compliance with this condition to entitle the lessees to renewal. Nicholson v. Smith, 191

Lennon v. Napper (2 Sch. & Lef. 682) considered, and not followed. Ibid.

2. —— restrictive covenant: waiver: benefit of covenant at law: non-existent person: 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106. s. 5]—On a sale of part of the C. estate, the purchasers entered into a covenant with the vendors, "their and each of their heirs and assigns, and also separately with the owners and owner, lessors and lessees for the time being, or other the persons or person for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of any part of" the C. estate, against (inter alia) keeping a beershop on any part of the premises sold. In an action brought by subsequent purchasers of the C. estate to restrain a breach of this covenant,—Held, on the evidence adduced, that they had lost their right to bring an action by long-continued acquiescence in breaches of the covenant both by the defendant and other similar covenantors, and consequently were not entitled either to an injunction or to any damages. Semble, also, that they were not entitled to sue on the covenant at law, even for nominal damages. Kelsey v. Dodd, 34

3. —— restrictive covenant: residential estate: alteration in character of property: injunction]—By a deed dated the 17th of April, 1878, a certain lot of a particular block of building land was conveyed to A (the defendant's vendor), and A thereby covenanted "with the owners or owner of any other" lot to which the benefit of such covenant was attached, that no building on his land should be used as a shop, nor should any trade be carried on thereon. In March, 1882, the plaintiff, the owner of one of these lots, brought an action to restrain the defendant from using his house as a beershop with an off-licence. It appeared that some of the houses on this block had been used as shops notwithstanding the covenant, and that several of them were occupied, not by a single tenant, but by two families at a weekly rent:—Held, that the character of the property having been completely changed, the covenant could no longer be enforced for the purpose for which it was originally entered into; and action dismissed with costs. Sayers v. Collyer, 770

4. —— running with the land]—Semble,—A covenant to build on request does not run with the land; but the liability to allow others to enter and fulfil such covenant does. Andrew v. Aitken, 294

5. —— running with the land: landlord and tenant: agreement by landlord to pay tenant for unexhausted improvements at the expiration of the tenancy]—Under a parol agreement for a lease of a farm for a term of years the tenant went into possession. The lease was to contain a covenant by the landlord to pay the tenant for unexhausted improvements at the expiration of the term, but it was never executed. During the term the landlord died, having devised the farm to the plaintiff for life, with remainders over. On the expiration of the term the tenant gave up possession and the plaintiff went into possession. The question then arose, who was to pay the tenant for the valuation of the unexhausted improvements: —Held, that the obligation to pay for unexhausted improvements was in the nature of a covenant running with the land; and, consequently, that the valuation was payable not out of the testator's estate, but by the plaintiff, as the landlord for the time being. Mansel v. Norton (App.), 357

—— for payment of interest: judgment, effect of. See MORTGAGE, 4.

—— not to revoke will: not discharged by bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, 28.

—— to pay mortgage debt. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, 3.

—— to settle after-acquired property. See SETTLEMENT, 1, 2.

District Parishes—apportionment of charities between. See CHARITY, 1.

Domicil — "Anglo-Chinese": extra-territorial jurisdiction: legacy duty]—Notwithstanding the constitution of the Supreme Court of China and Japan, and the jurisdiction conferred on that Court by the Order in Council of China and Japan, 1865, over British subjects having a "fixed place of residence in China," a native of this country cannot acquire by residence in the empire of China an Anglo-Chinese domicil analogous to that known as Anglo-Indian, and the estate of a British subject whose fixed place of residence is in the Empire of China is, on death, within the operation of the Legacy Duty Acts. In re Tootal's Trusts, 664

A person cannot become domiciled as a member of a community which is not a community possessing supreme or sovereign territorial power. Ibid.

—— legitimacy of children: law of father's domicil. See WILL, 12.

—— Scotch: administration: appearance of Scotch executors without protest. See JURISDICTION, 1.

Easement—fascia on wall of adjacent house: common landlord: parcel of grant]—A fascia of cement was plastered on the front wall of two adjoining houses in a street, for the purpose of exhibiting the name and business of the occupier of buildings forming a court behind, and the number in the street by which these buildings were known. The court communicated with the street by an entry and gate under the fascia, the gate being fastened by staples to the wall of one of the houses. The fascia had been used for the above purpose for nearly thirty years. All the premises belonged to one landlord. In 1855 a lease was granted for twenty-one years (which eventually vested in one Bull) of the buildings in the court, with the easements and appurtenances as then occupied. In 1874, one of the houses was let to the defendant "as then in his occupation." In 1876, the buildings in the court were let to the plaintiff, with the appurtenances as then or lately in the occupation of Bull; and in 1878, the defendant's tenancy was renewed in the former terms:—Held (affirming the decision of KAY, J., ante, p. 12), that on the terms of the lettings, coupled with the circumstances, the plaintiff held the fascia itself, by grant from the common landlord, as parcel of one tenement with the buildings in the court, and that the defendant was not at liberty to interfere with it. Francis v. Hayward (App.), 291

—— extinguishment of: land purchased by local authority. See ARTIZANS AND LABOURERS' DWELLINGS IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1875.

—— local board: sewage. See NUISANCE; PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

—— reservation of, by agreement: subsequent conveyance not reserving. See RAILWAY COMPANY.

—— statutory. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 6.

Ejectment—discovery in action of. See PRACTICE, 10.

Election—married woman: election to confirm settlement: infant: jurisdiction of court to elect for person of unsound mind]—By the settlement made on the marriage of H. S., an infant, and executed by her, she purported to assign to trustees all property derived by her under her father's marriage settlement, and the husband covenanted for himself and his wife to bring into settlement all after-acquired property. The marriage took place; and H. S. afterwards attained twenty-one, and thereupon executed an acknowledged deed indorsed upon the settlement, by which she purported to assign all the personal property expressed to be assigned by the settlement, which had not become vested in possession, to the trustees upon the trusts thereof. At the date of the settlement she was entitled to a contingent reversionary interest under her father's marriage settlement, which did not come within Malins's Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57), and was therefore not assignable by her. On the reversionary interest subsequently becoming vested in possession, a portion of it was, by the written direction of the husband and wife, invested in the names of the trustees of their settlement. The husband afterwards died, and H. S. had since become of unsound mind, but had not been so found by inquisition:—Held, that H. S. was competent to elect, and had, in fact, elected, so as to make the settlement as binding and operative in equity as it would have been if she had been of full age at the time when she executed it. Held, further, that if this had not been so, the Court would have had jurisdiction to elect for her, she being of unsound mind. Wilder v. Pigott, 141

2. —— will: construction: appointment]—A testator having power to appoint among children of his first marriage, purported to appoint, subject to charges, partly in favour of the children of his second marriage, and gave benefits out of his own property to children of his first marriage:—Held, that the latter were put to their election. In re White; White v. White, 232 —— onerous property. See WILL, 26.

Equitable Mortgage—deposit of share certificates. See MORTGAGE, 7.

Estoppel—banker's lien: fraud of customer. See BANKER.

—— issue of debentures by company. See COMPANY, 1.

Evidence—admissions: company: directors]—The statement of the chairman of directors to a meeting of his company cannot be used as an admission against the company. In re The Derala Provident Gold Mining Company, Limited; ex parte Abbott, 434

—— cross-examination on affidavit. See PRACTICE, 9.

—— legitimacy, presumption of. See PRESUMPTION.

—— probate: colonial will. See COLONIAL WILL.

Exchequer Bills—investment: cash under control of Court. See PRACTICE, 11.

Executor—retainer: solicitor: receiver: security]—A member of a firm, solicitors to the plaintiff in an administration action, was administrator to, and creditor of, the intestate in the action:—Held, that he could not retain money belonging to the estate which had come to his hands after a receiver had been nominated but had not given security. In re Birt. Birt v. Burt, 397

2. —— retainer: executor of one of two executors: retainer: claim to retain by deceased executor in his lifetime]—A, one of two executors, was a simple contract creditor of his testator. A died, having in his lifetime claimed a right to retain in respect of his debt, leaving his co-executor surviving:—Held, that the executors of A had a right of retainer, out of assets of the testator in Court, as against the simple contract creditors. Wilson v. Coxwell, 975 —— bankrupt: costs of, in administration action. See COSTS, 1.

—— charge of debts: will: power of executor to sell. See WILL, 6.

—— option to purchase lease devolving on. See LEASE, 2.

—— power of, to compromise. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 1.

—— purchase by solicitor of. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 9.

—— tort: survival of action. See PRACTICE, 16; SOLICITOR, 3; TRESPASS.

—— undisposed-of residue: legacy to executors for trouble. See WILL, 15.

Executory Devise. See WILL, 11.

Factors Acts—4 Geo. 4. c. 83. 9 Geo. 4. c. 94. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39. ss. 1 and 3 : foreign principal: goods consigned to agent in England for sale: brokers employed by agent: lien for advances made by brokers: set-off]—A person receiving goods from an agent can acquire from the agent—(a) all such title as the agent had in the goods by reason of lien for advances or otherwise; (b) all such title as the agent had express authority, or (c) all such title as the agent had authority to create, by law, or custom of the country where the agency is to be exercised. Kaltenback v. Lewis (App.), 881

Although an agent authorised to receive money for a disclosed principal can only validly receive it in cash and disengaged from any other relations between payer and payee, an agent for sale authorised to employ in his own name a broker or other sub-agent to effect the sale, may be satisfied by set-off or in any other manner in which a debt may be discharged as between the agent and sub-agent. Ibid.

The authority given by the agent for sale to the broker or sub-agent is withdrawn by the death of the agent; and as regards the moneys arising from sale subsequent to his death, the set-off which otherwise would have been allowable cannot be maintained. Ibid.

The plaintiffs, foreign merchants, consigned foreign produce to M., a London merchant and commission agent, for sale on their account, the arrangement between them being that M. should accept the bills drawn by the plaintiffs against the goods, and take up the bills if on maturity he had funds of the plaintiffs in his hands sufficient to do so; if not, the plaintiffs themselves should take them up or arrange for their withdrawal. M. employed the defendants, colonial brokers in London, to sell the goods so consigned. The defendants were also engaged in other transactions with M., in the course of which they made advances to M. M. died on the 5th of May, 1880, hopelessly insolvent, indebted to the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants had been employed to sell the cargoes of ships consigned by the plaintiffs for sale. Two of the cargoes had been agreed to be sold before M.'s death, but only a small portion of the purchase-money had been actually received. The other cargoes were unsold at the time of the plaintiff's demand:—Held, that an alleged agreement between M. and the defendants for a general lien for advances on all goods in their hands on his account was not given by section 1 of the Factors Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39. Ibid.

But held, that, independently of the Factors Acts, the defendants had a general lien on all the proceeds of the goods sold before M.'s death, while as regards the goods unsold at M.'s death, the plaintiffs, claiming by a right of property, could recover them subject only to the advances specifically made against them. Ibid.

The New Zealand Land Company v. Watson (50 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 433; Law Rep. 7 Q.B. D. 374) and Maspons v. Mildred (51 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 604; Law Rep. 9 Q.B. D. 530) discussed and explained. Ibid.

The defendants had purchased, as brokers for M., shellac, for which they were, as between themselves and their vendors, liable, but, as between themselves and M., M. was primarily liable. To enable M. to pay for the shellac, the defendants made two advances to him upon the security of the cargoes of two ships, being aware, in the case of one cargo at least, that he was acting for a principal:—Held, that the advances were bona fide advances under the Factors Acts, and the fact that the defendants were themselves liable to their vendors did not make them advances in respect of antecedent debts within section 3 of the Act. Ibid.

The antecedent debt within that section is a debt due from the person making the pledge to the person making the advance; and a suretyship liability, which has not ripened into a debt, is not within the section. Ibid.

Macnee v. Gorst (Law Rep. 4 Eq. 315) distinguished. Ibid.

Fascia—right to. See EASEMENT.

Fines Recoveries Act—acknowledgment of deed. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2.

Foreclosure. See MORTGAGE, 1, 5, 6; PRACTICE, 24.

Foreign Charity. See CHARITY, 3.

Foreign Court—action pending in: stay of proceedings in this country. See PRACTICE, 27, 28.

Foreign Law—jurisdiction: title to land abroad. See JURISDICTION, 2.

Forfeiture—deposit of. See CONTRACT.

Fraud—action for damages: judgment in county court: second action for subsequent damages] —The plaintiff, the lessee of a farm, brought an action in the County Court against the defendant, the lessor, for damages for the loss sustained by reason of the fraudulent representation of the defendant that the farm was thoroughly drained; and in July, 1880, obtained judgment for 50*l.* and costs. In March, 1881, the plaintiff brought this action against the defendant for damages for the loss sustained since the commencement of the County Court action by reason of such fraudulent representation:—Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action was completely exhausted by the judgment of July, 1880; and action dismissed with costs. Clarke v. Yorke, 32

—— banker's lien: fraud of customer: right of bank to set account right on discovering fraud. See BANKER.

—— debt incurred by: judgment for: bankruptcy of debtor. See BANKRUPTCY, 12.

—— on power. See POWER, 2.

Fraudulent Conveyance—13 Eliz. c. 5: delay] —A conveyance fraudulent against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5, was set aside after a lapse of ten years. The Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever, 733

2. —— intent to defeat or delay creditors: 13 Eliz. c. 5]—In 1877 R. R. made a voluntary settlement of leasehold property worth about 200*l.* a year, held by him at a rent of 3*l.* 10*s.*, his only other property being some furniture worth 200*l.* and a debt of 1,500*l.* due to him from his son R. H. R. His only liability was that incurred under a guarantee which he had previously given to the W. Bank to secure R. H. R.'s account to the extent of 1,000*l.* At the date of the settlement R. H. R.'s account was overdrawn to the amount of 1,515*l.* In 1880 R. H. R. filed a liquidation petition, and paid a dividend of 3*s.* in the pound, his debt to the bank being 1,337*l.* On the death of R. R. the bank endeavoured to set aside the settlement:—Held (reversing the decision of BACON, V.C.), that, under the circumstances, the settlor ought to have treated his liability under the guarantee as being an actual debt of 1,000*l.*; that he ought not to have treated the 1,500*l.* due from his son as assets available for the payment of such debt; that the effect of the settlement, therefore, was to leave the settlor with assets insufficient to discharge his existing liabilities; and that the settlement was therefore invalid as tending to defeat or delay his creditors. In re Ridler. Ridler v. Ridler (App.), 343

The doctrine of Price v. Jenkins (46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 805; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 619) does not apply to cases under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Ibid.

—— bankruptcy jurisdiction: discretion as to exercise of. See BANKRUPTCY, 13.

Fraudulent Trustee—attachment against. See ATTACHMENT.

Fraudulent Preference. See BANKRUPTCY, 1–5.

Friendly Society. See BUILDING SOCIETY; CUSTOMS ANNUITY AND BENEVOLENT FUND.

Goodwill—mortgage of: right to use trade name. See TRADE MARK, 3.

—— solicitor's business. See PARTNERSHIP.

Grant—fascia on one tenement parcel of grant of another tenement. See EASEMENT.

Heirlooms—gift of: condition: defeasance: uncertainty. See WILL, 9.

—— tenant-in-tail not indefeasibly entitled. See WILL, 10.

Husband and Wife—agreement to settle after-acquired property: exception of property settled to wife's separate use: the married women's property act, 1882, ss. 5 and 19] —By a settlement made in 1862 upon the marriage of A and B, any property "settled to B.'s separate use" was excepted from the agreement to settle after-acquired property contained in the settlement. C., who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by her will gave the residue of her personal estate to B. Section 5 of the Act provides that every woman married before the commencement of the Act shall be entitled to hold as her separate property all property her title to which shall accrue after the commencement of the Act:—Held, that as section 19 of the Act provides that nothing therein contained shall affect any settlement, section 5 must be omitted in construing the agreement; and that therefore the residuary bequest was not within the exception. In re Stonor's Trusts, 776

2. —— deed acknowledged: fines and recoveries act (3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74. s. 77): prior bankruptcy of the husband: concurrence of the husband in deed acknowledged]—A married woman was entitled to a share in the proceeds of real estate subject to the life interest of the testator's widow. During the lifetime of the tenant-for-life the husband executed a deed assigning all his property to his creditors, and subsequently became bankrupt. After the death of the tenant-for-life the husband joined with his wife in executing deeds, which were acknowledged by the wife under the Fines and Recoveries Act, creating charges on the wife's share of the testator's estate:— Held, that the creditors' deed and the bankruptcy of the husband did not preclude him from joining with his wife in executing the acknowledged deeds, and that the persons claiming under those deeds were entitled according to their priorities in preference to the trustee of the creditors' deed and the assignee in the bankruptcy. In re Jakeman's Trusts, 363

3. —— life assurance: policy: premiums: salvage: lien: reversion]—A husband paid the premiums on a policy on the life of his wife taken out by her before marriage. The policy was assigned by the husband and wife to secure an obligation of the husband. The wife survived:— Held, that the husband's estate had no lien on the policy for the premiums. In re Leslie. Leslie v. French, 762

4. —— life assurance: policy effected by husband "for the benefit of his wife and children": married women's property act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), s. 10*: married women's property act*, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 11*: "separate use": form of order*]—A husband having under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, effected a policy of assurance on his own life, "for the benefit of his wife and the children of their marriage," died insolvent. The wife and one of the children of the assured predeceased him. A petition under the Act having been presented by the surviving children for the appointment of a trustee to receive the moneys payable under the policy, and for a declaration of the children's rights and interests,—Held, that the Court had under the Act no jurisdiction to make the declaration asked for. In re Adam's Policy Trusts, 642

In re Mellor's Trusts (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 246; Law Rep. 6 Ch. D. 127; ibid. 7 Ch. D. 200) dissented from. Ibid.

Semble,—The words "for her separate use" in the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, indicate an intention that the wife is to take a life estate; and therefore the effect of the policy, when read together with the Act, was to constitute a trust for the wife for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants. Ibid.

Under the circumstances above mentioned, the Court being of opinion that the trust was either for the wife for life with remainder to the children as joint tenants, or for the wife and children as joint tenants, did not require the legal personal representatives of the deceased wife and child to be served with the petition, but made an order for the appointment of a trustee, prefaced with the opinion of the Court that the wife took no interest and that the children took as joint tenants. Ibid.

5. —— restraint on anticipation: power of court to remove: conveyancing act, 1881, s. 39] —Section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, confers no general power of removing the restraint on anticipation, but only enables the Court to make binding some particular disposition of her property by a married woman, notwithstanding a restraint on anticipation, if the Court is of opinion that such disposition is beneficial to her. In re Warren's Settlement (App.), 928

Application by husband and wife and trustees of a settlement for the removal of the restraint on anticipation for the purpose of rendering the capital of the trust fund—which stood limited upon the death of the survivor of husband and wife in trust for the children of the marriage—available for the benefit of the husband and wife, who were fifty-three and fifty years old respectively, there being no issue of the marriage, refused, chiefly on the ground that the Court ought not to assume that there would be no children, although the parties had been married for twenty-eight years and had never had any children, and there was medical evidence that it was almost, if not entirely, impossible that there could be any issue. Ibid.

—— election by married woman. See ELECTION, 1.

—— gift to a man and his wife and a third person. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882.

—— will of married woman: lapse: appointment. See WILL, 21.

Illegitimacy—presumption of legitimacy rebutted. See PRESUMPTION.

Implication—gift by. See WILL, 17.

Income Tax—annuity whether given free of. See WILL, 3, 4.

Inconsistent Gift. See WILL, 18.

Indemnity—contributories, between. See COMPANY, 5.

—— right of trustee of shares to. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 6.

Infant—income: defeasance: Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), s. 26]—Section 26 of Lord Cranworth's Act does not apply to a defeasible interest. In re Buckley's Estate, 439 Property was bequeathed in trust for an infant, but given over in case of his death under twenty-one. The infant died under age:—Held, that accumulations of income up to his death were estate of the infant. Ibid.

2. —— maintenance: trust for, or power of: marriage settlement: contract: ability of father]—There is no distinction upon principle between a provision in a marriage settlement and that in a will as to the application of income to which children are entitled for their maintenance, irrespective of the father's ability to maintain them. Wilson v. Turner (App.), 270

Where the words gave a discretion to the trustees, and there was no evidence of want of ability of the father or of the exercise of any discretion, the payments were disallowed. Ibid.

Ransome v. Burgess (36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 84; Law Rep. 3 Eq. 773) not followed. Ibid.

The principle of the cases founded upon Mundy v. Earl Howe (4 Bro. C.C. 223) is not to be extended. Ibid.

3. —— settled estate: jurisdiction: costs of application to parliament]—Where an estate was settled on legal limitations in favour of one for life, with remainder to an infant tenant-in-tail, the Court declined to order that the costs of an application to Parliament for a private Act to carry into effect a proposed sale which was beneficial to the estate should be borne by the estate whether such application were or were not successful. But the tenant-for-life consenting, the Court, being of opinion that the proposed application to Parliament would be for the benefit of the infant, sanctioned the application on the terms that the costs were to be borne by the tenant-for-life, unless an Act of Parliament was obtained otherwise directing. Stanford v. Roberts, 50 —— married woman: election to confirm settlement. See ELECTION, 1.

—— motion for judgment against. See PRACTICE, 30.

—— sale of real estate of. See CONVEYANCING ACT, 2.

—— solicitor's lien for costs: property of infant declared charged. See SOLICITOR, 1.

Injunction—jurisdiction: negative clause]—An injunction was granted to enforce a contract not to sell fish refuse to any manufacturer other than the plaintiff. Donnell v. Bennett, 414 —— costs: infringement of trade-mark: innocent consignee. See TRADE-MARK, 2.

—— covenant: building estate: alteration of character of property. See COVENANT, 3.

—— sale by tenant-for-life, to restrain. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 1.

—— to restrain local board permitting continuance of nuisance. See NUISANCE.

—— to restrain publication in contempt of Court. See CONTEMPT OF COURT.

—— undertaking as to damages: delay in enforcing. See BANKRUPTCY, 22.

Inland Revenue. See SUCCESSION DUTY.

Innkeeper—lien: taking security: waiver: custody of goods detained]—The mere taking by an innkeeper from his guest of a security for the payment of his bill does not necessarily destroy the lien which the innkeeper has by the common law upon the goods of his guest; in order to destroy the lien there must be something in the facts of the case, or in the nature of the security taken, which is inconsistent with the retention of the lien, or which is destructive of it. An innkeeper who enforces his lien upon the goods of his guest for the payment of his bill is in the position of a gratuitous bailee, and is not bound to exercise more care in the keeping of the goods than he would do in the case of his own. Angus v. McLachlan, 587

Insurance—fund: interest of subscriber to fund. See CUSTOMS ANNUITY AND BENEVOLENT FUND.

—— policy: premiums: salvage: lien. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3.

Interest—rate of: mortgage debt: subsequent judgment. See BANKRUPTCY, 10.

—— rate of: power to charge portions. See SETTLEMENT, 3.

—— receiver: allowance of advances to. See BANKRUPTCY, 21.

Interpleader. See SHERIFF.

Investment. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 4; PRACTICE, 11; TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 7, 8.

Judgment—effect of, on covenant to pay interest. See MORTGAGE, 4.

Jurisdiction—administration: domiciled Scotchman: assets in England and in Scotland: administration in England: appearance of Scotch executors without protest: jurisdiction]—A domiciled Scotchman by his will appointed six executors; three of them were resident in England, and the other three were resident in Scotland. The bulk of the testator's property was in Scotland, but he was possessed of about 25,000*l.* in England. The will was proved in both countries by all the executors. A beneficiary under the will commenced an action in England against all the executors (who appeared without protest) to administer the entire estate. All the assets had, in the mean time, been transferred to Scotland. At the trial the defendants objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an administration order, and MANISTY, J., in the exercise of his discretion, refused to make the order:—Held, on appeal, that as the defendants had by appearing without protest submitted to the jurisdiction, there was no discretion to exercise, and that the plaintiff was entitled as of right to an administration order. In re Orr Ewing. Orr Ewing v. Orr Ewing (App.), 529

2. —— foreign law: title to land depending on law of Saxony as to immoveables]—An action was brought against the executors and devisees in trust under a will to recover a share of the proceeds of sale of a house at Dresden, which had been sold by the defendants' testator. The title of the plaintiffs to any share or interest in the house was contested by the defendants, and depended on the law of Saxony as to immoveables. All the parties were resident in this country:—Held, that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action. In re Hawthorne. Graham v. Massey, 750 —— bankruptcy, in. See BANKRUPTCY, 12, 13, 14.

—— Church Building Act: apportionment of charity. See CHARITY, 1.

—— Companies Act, under. See COMPANY, 5.

—— injunction: negative clause. See INJUNCTION.

—— probate: colonial will. See COLONIAL WILL.

—— production of documents: changing place of. See PRACTICE, 22.

—— sequestration: debt ordered to be paid into Court. See PRACTICE, 25.

—— to charge costs on settled estate of infant. See INFANT, 3.

—— to elect for person of unsound mind. See ELECTION, 1.

—— to restrain publication in contempt of Court. See CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Landlord and Tenant—contract to grant a lease: taking possession under contract: tenancy from year to year: distress: judicature acts]—Since the Judicature Acts, where possession has been given under an agreement for a lease, there are no longer two estates as formerly—one at common law a tenancy from year to year, and the other in equity an estate under the agreement. The tenant now holds under the lease to be granted in pursuance of the contract on the same terms as if the lease had been granted—e.g., he is subject to the same right of distress to which he would have been subject had a lease been granted. Walsh v. Lonsdale (App.), 2

2. —— right of distress: common law distress: distress under deed: concurrent rights: marshalling goods seized]—The common law right of distress, exerciseable immediately on default being made in payment of rent, is not destroyed by the insertion in a lease of an express right of distress, extending to articles which would not be affected by the common law right, but exerciseable only after the lapse of a certain time from default, if the lease contains no negative words; and, notwithstanding the existence of such an express limited right, the common law right may be exercised immediately on default, but only as to goods to which that right extends. In re The River Swale Brick and Tile Works (Lim.), 638

If in such a case the lessor distrains for two half-years' rent at once, before the expiration of the period after the second half-year's rent becoming in arrear which is fixed by the lease for the exercise of the power therein contained, and some of the goods seized under the entire distress are not seizable at common law, but only under the express power in the lease, the goods seized will be marshalled so as to set against the second half-year's rent in the first instance such of them as are seizable at common law, leaving the remainder of the seized goods to answer the first half-year's rent under the provision in the lease. Ibid.

3. —— surface flints: custom for tenant to sell: farming lease: reservation of minerals]—A custom for farm tenants to collect flints turned up in ploughing, and properly removed in the course of good husbandry, and to sell them for their own benefit, is reasonable. Tucker v. Linger (H.L.), 941

In a district where such a custom prevailed, a farm was let with a reservation to the landlord of "all mines and minerals":—Held, that the reservation was not inconsistent with, and did not exclude, the custom. Ibid.

Quære,—Whether flints lying on the surface of land are "minerals" within the meaning of such a reservation. Ibid.

—— agreement to pay for improvements: covenant running with land. See COVENANT, 5.

—— distress: liquidation. See BANKRUPTCY, 17.

—— distress for rent: company in liquidation. See COMPANY, 16.

—— easement: fascia. See EASEMENT.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ss. 21, 23, 38, 39, 68 and 85: notice to treat: expiration of powers: entry under section 85: rights of landowner]—Where a railway company give the usual notice to treat to an unwilling landowner, and he takes no steps whatever to ascertain the purchase-money to be paid, the company can follow up their notice and obtain a complete title to the land under sections 21, 23, 38 and 39 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, provided they do so before the expiration of their powers to complete the line. Lovesmore v. The Tiverton and North Devon Rail. Co. (App.), 260

For a company to enter, under the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, on the eve of the expiration of all their general powers applicable to the land on which they so enter, not for the purpose of making any statutory works, but for that of acquiring a possessory title to the land against the landowner, and then making a railway over it, not under the Act, but as under an ordinary landowner's title, is an abuse of the Act which can confer no right upon the company after the expiration of their powers which they would not otherwise have possessed; and this rule applies whether the entry of the company is, in the first instance, wrongful or not. Ibid.

Decision of FRY, J., reversed. Ibid.

2. Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (continued)—purchase-money: costs: fund exceeding 500l. not dealt with for fifteen years: payment out: costs of official solicitor: chancery funds rules, 1874, rule 91: chancery funds amended orders, 1874, rule 14]—Where a fund in Court, exceeding 500*l.* in value, representing the purchase-money of settled lands taken by a railway company, remained undealt with for more than fifteen years during the life of the tenant-for-life of the fund, and, accordingly, pursuant to the Chancery Funds Rules, 1874, rule 91, and the Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, rule 14, the official solicitor was served with the petition for payment out of the fund,—Held, that the costs of the official solicitor, having been occasioned by the neglect of the tenant-for-life in not applying for the dividends, were payable, not by the railway company, but out of the portion of the fund which belonged to the estate of the tenant-for-life. In re Clarke's Estate, 88

6. —— purchase-money: costs: reinvestment: section 80: charity: scheme]—The purchase-money for schools compulsorily taken was paid into Court. A petition was presented for the sanction of a scheme for the application of the purchase-money cy-près in the purchase of a site, and payment out to trustees to carry out the scheme. The costs, so far as they were increased by the necessity for a scheme, were excepted from the costs payable by the undertakers. In re The St. Paul's Schools, Finsbury, 454

4. —— purchase-money: lands taken by railway company: investment: cash under control of court]—Money paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act and under the Settled Estates Act is "cash under the control of the Court" within the meaning of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 10, and the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861, and may be invested accordingly. Ex parte St. John Baptist College, Oxford; in re The Metropolitan and District Railways (City Lines and Extensions) Act, 1879 (App.), 268

The words "cash under the control of the Court" mean cash standing in the name of the Accountant-General in any cause or matter. Ibid.

Cash under the control of the Court may be invested in East India Three and a half per Cent. stock created since the date of the General Order. Ibid.

In re Boyd's Settled Estates (42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 506) and Ex parte The Rector of Kirksmeaton (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 581; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 203) overruled. Ibid.

5. —— purchase-money: title disputed by crown: purchase-money paid into court: petition for payment out by party in possession ordered to stand over: lands clauses act, 1845, ss. 76, 78 and 79]—Where land is taken by a railway company under a notice to treat given to the party in possession, and the company having notice that the Crown assert a title to the land, the purchase-money is paid into Court under the 76th section of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the Court has jurisdiction, under the 78th section of the Act, on a petition by the party in possession of the land for payment out of the money to him, to direct the petition to stand over until the claim of the Crown has been disposed of. In re The Manor of Lowestoft (App.), 912

Quære,—Whether, if the adverse claimant is a subject of the Crown, the matter ought of necessity to be disposed of on a petition for payment out under the Act. Ibid.

6. —— special act: statutory easement, or privilege: lands and hereditaments] — The Swindon Company, formed with a certain capital, were, by their special Act (which incorporated the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845), prohibited from taking, entering upon or using any of the lands of the Great Western Company, further than was necessary for the construction of the railway authorised by the Act. And with respect to any lands of the Great Western Company which the Swindon Company were authorised to use, enter upon or interfere with, it was provided that the Swindon Company should not purchase or take the same, but the Swindon Company might take, and the Great Western Company should sell or grant, an easement or right of using the same in perpetuity for the purposes for which but for that enactment the Swindon Company might purchase and take the same—those purposes being the erection of a bridge over, and making a tunnel under, the railway of the Great Western Company. The Swindon Company desiring to build a bridge over the line of the Great Western Company, which they were empowered to do, gave notice to the Great Western Company to treat for the purchase of the easement or right of using in perpetuity certain lands mentioned in the notice, and offered to pay a certain sum. The Great Western Company not sending in any claim, the Swindon Company proceeded under sections 84 and 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and deposited the offered sum in Court and executed a bond. The Great Western Company brought this action to restrain the Swindon Company from entering or continuing upon the lands mentioned in the notice and putting in force any of their powers relating to the compulsory taking of land or any easement therein until the capital (which had not been all subscribed) should have been duly subscribed in accordance with section 16 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845: —Held (by CHITTY, J.), that, although as a general rule the promoters of a railway were not authorised to take an easement to be created de novo, and that therefore a new easement would not be included in the word "lands" in the 16th section, yet, as the Swindon Company were expressly authorised by their special Act to acquire the statutory easement or right of using in perpetuity the lands of the Great Western Company, the 16th section applied, and he therefore granted an injunction. On appeal, held by JESSEL, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J. (dissentiente COTTON, L.J.), that the right to acquire such a privilege was not a compulsory taking of lands within the meaning of the 16th section; that a statutory privilege or right of running trains over or under the line of another company was not land, and did not come within the definition of lands by the 3rd section of the Lands Clauses Act; and the fact that the special Act, with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated, authorised the taking of a right over land—which right was not land—did not give a larger signification to the word "land" than that which it has in the Lands Clauses Act. The injunction was therefore dissolved. The Great Western Railway Company v. The Swindon and Cheltenham Extension Railway Company (App.), 306

Semble,—Section 16 of the Lands Clauses Act limits the right to take lands compulsorily conferred by the preceding sections of that Act—per JESSEL, M.R. Ibid.

Per COTTON, L.J.—The special Act empowering the promoters to take an incorporeal right as regards the land, in construing section 16 the word "land," as including hereditaments, ought to be taken to include the incorporeal right as an hereditament. Ibid.

7. —— superfluous land: retaining wall: boundary line: encroachment]—A railway company has power to sell as "superfluous land" the whole of the land beyond their boundary wall, even though that wall be also a retaining wall, thicker at the base than at the surface, and part of the land so sold would be within a line drawn on the surface vertically above the line of the footings of the wall. Ware v. The London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co., 198

Mullner v. The Midland Railway Company (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 258; Law Rep. 11 Ch. D. 611) distinguished. Ibid.

—— "creditor" of company: unpaid vendor. See COMPANY, 11.

—— reinvestment: costs: taxation after payment. See COSTS, 11.

—— "taking" lands: condition precedent. See METROPOLITAN STREET IMPROVEMENTS ACT.

—— vendor and purchaser: title: unstamped deed. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 6.

Lapse—will of married woman. See WILL, 21.

Lease—agreement for: specific performance: "proper clauses": clause against underletting]—By an agreement in writing (contained in two letters) the defendant agreed to grant to the plaintiff, a brewer, a lease of a public-house for a certain term, at a certain rent, "a proper lease to be drawn up with all proper clauses, and approved of by" the defendant and his solicitor. Afterwards the defendant refused to grant a lease unless it contained a clause against underletting. In an action to enforce specific performance of the agreement,—Held, that the clause was not a "proper clause"; that the defendant was bound to grant a lease without putting in any such clause; and specific performance decreed. Eadie v. Addison, 80

2. —— option to purchase the fee-simple: conveyance to administrator of lessee]—An option to purchase contained in a lease goes with the lease to the legal personal representative. In re Adams, 758 —— agreement for, by tenant-for-life: grant of lease by trustees. See POWER, 3.

—— agreement for, "immediate possession if required." See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 1.

—— construction: incorporation of covenants by reference to prior lease. See POWER, 5.

—— contract to grant: effect of. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1.

—— disclaimer of, by trustee in bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, 33.

—— power to grant building and other leases: defective exercise of power. See POWER, 4.

—— renewable leaseholds: right to renew. See COVENANT, 1.

Legacy. See WILL.

Legacy Duty Acts—estate of British subject resident in China. See DOMICIL.

Legitimation—of children by subsequent marriage of parents. See WILL, 12.

Libel—injunction to restrain: contempt of Court. See CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Lien—bank, of, on shares of customer: estoppel. See BANKER.

—— brokers, of, for advances. See FACTORS ACTS.

—— innkeeper's: taking security, effect of. See INNKEEPER.

—— policy on wife's life: premiums paid by husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3.

—— solicitor, of, for costs. See SOLICITOR, 1, 2.

—— trustee advancing purchase-money. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 8.

Life Assurance—policy by husband "for benefit of wife and children." See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4.

Limitations, Statutes of—absolute acknowledgment of debt]—The defendant, whose debt to the plaintiff was barred by the Statute of Limitations, on the 18th of October, 1879, wrote to him the following letter: "At that time (next Christmas) both principal and interest will have been paid in full":—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. Green v. Humphreys, 659

2. —— mortgage: 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27, ss. 7, 25 and 34; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57. ss. 1-8]—A mortgage had been paid off more than thirteen years, but no reconveyance executed:—Held, that a purchaser could not require the concurrence of the mortgagee, on the ground that the mortgagor had become tenant-at-will to the mortgagee, and that time began to run one year thereafter. In re Sands to Thompson, 406

3. —— mortgage: 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 8: action on covenant: twenty years: statute: marginal notes: title]—Where no principal or interest in respect of a mortgage debt has been paid, and no acknowledgment in writing has been given for the space of twelve years, no action will lie on the covenant to pay. Sutton v. Sutton (App.), 333

The 8th section, which bars the mortgagee of his remedies against the mortgaged land after the expiration of twelve years without payment or acknowledgment, bars also his remedy under the covenant of the mortgagor for payment of principal and interest. Ibid.

Dictum of JESSEL, M.R., in In re Venour's Settled Estates (45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 409; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 522, at p. 525), that marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament are part of the Act, corrected. Ibid.

Hunter v. Nockolds (1 Mac. & G. 640, 651; 1 Hall & Tw. 644; 19 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 177) explained or overruled. Ibid.

4. —— mortgage: 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, ss. 8 and 80: bond: will: express trust]—The remedy on a bond given in respect of a debt secured by a mortgage of even date on land is barred by the lapse of twelve years from the last payment or acknowledgment. Fearnside v. Flint, 479

A testamentary direction to pay just debts will not keep alive the remedy on a debt otherwise barred by lapse of time. Ibid.

—— payment of dividends out of capital. See COMPANY, 3.

Liquidation. See BANKRUPTCY, 12, 13.

Liquidator. See COMPANY, 7, 13.

Local Board—contract under seal: compromise. See PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 2.

—— injunction to restrain nuisance by. See NUISANCE; PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

Local Government. See PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS.

Locke King's Acts. See ADMINISTRATION, 1.

Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), s. 26. See INFANT, 1; TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 1.

Lunatic—insolvent: maintenance: rights of creditors: preferential payments: practice]—It is the settled practice of the Court, even although a lunatic is insolvent, to consider—first, what is for the benefit of the lunatic; and next, the interests of the creditors. In re Pink (App.), 674

In such a case the Court will, after setting aside a sufficient fund for the reasonable maintenance of the lunatic, direct the residue

(if any) of his estate to be divided rateably amongst his creditors, with liberty to the creditors to apply on the death of the lunatic for the further distribution of the fund so set apart; and, semble, as a general rule, moneys properly expended by the committee of the lunatic, both before and after inquisition found, in the maintenance of the lunatic and of his wife and family, will be paid in priority to the claims of other creditors. Ibid.

—— not so found: jurisdiction of Court to elect for. See ELECTION, 1.

—— sale of stock specifically bequeathed by lunatic: ademption. See WILL, 22.

—— tenant-for-life: leases: no trustees of settlement. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 5.

Maintenance—lunatic: rights of creditors. See LUNATIC.

—— trust for, or power of: settlement. See INFANT, 2.

Marriage Settlement. See SETTLEMENT.

Married Woman: acknowledged deed: concurrence of husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2.

—— election by. See ELECTION, 1.

—— second action by, for same object: stay of proceedings. See PRACTICE, 13.

—— will: appointment: lapse of appointed share. See WILL, 21.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882—husband and wife: gift to a man and his wife and to a third person: moieties or thirds]—A testatrix, who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by her will, dated 1880, gave all her property both real and personal to A and B, and E the wife of B, "to and for their own use and benefit absolutely." She appointed the same persons by name her executors and executrix:—Held, that by the operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, husband and wife are no longer in the eye of the law one person as regards property, and that they each took one-third of the estate, and not, as under the old law, half between them. Held also, according to the doctrine laid down in Hasluck v. Pedley (44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 143; Law Rep. 19 Eq. 271), that the Act applied to the will, although the will was made before the Act came into operation. In re Fanny Elizabeth March (deceased). Mander v. Harris, 680 —— sections 5, 19: agreement to settle after-acquired property. See SETTLEMENT; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1.

—— life assurance: policy for benefit of wife and children. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4.

Memorandum of Association. See COMPANY, 4.

Merger—debt: mortgage: subsequent judgment. See BANKRUPTCY, 10.

Metropolitan Management Act. See PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

Metropolitan Street Improvements Act—lands clauses act, 1845, s. 18: conditions precedent: "take"]—By the Metropolitan Street Improvements Act, 1877, incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, the Board of Works were empowered to "enter upon, take, use and hold" lands specified in the deposited plans. By section 33 it was provided that before the board should, without certain consents, "take for the purposes of the Act" more than fifteen houses in one parish occupied wholly or partially by persons of the labouring classes, they should satisfy one of the Secretaries of State that they had provided accommodation elsewhere for the same number of persons as had occupied the houses to be taken. The board, without obtaining the requisite consent, and before providing such accommodation, served the plaintiff with notice to treat for the purchase of more than fifteen houses of his, occupied by the labouring classes, and also served notice of their intention to summon a jury. The plaintiff thereupon claimed an injunction to restrain the board from proceeding with their notices until they had complied with the conditions:—Held, by CHITTY, J., that the word "take" used in section 33 included purchasing and acquiring a title to, and was not to be confined to taking possession. Held (on appeal), by JESSEL, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J. (dissentiente COTTON, L.J.), that the land in question was land which the board were authorised to purchase or take within section 18 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that the conditions in section 33, being such as the board were able and could be compelled to perform, did not prohibit the board from proceeding with all necessary steps preliminary to acquiring a title, and that they were therefore entitled to serve a notice to treat and summon a jury. BOWEN, L.J.—The word "take" could not be confined to the mere taking possession of. Spencer v. The Metropolitan Board of Works (App.), 249

Mine—cost-book: custom: relinquishment of shares: mode of ascertaining the share of liabilities: variation of custom by agreement]—It is the general custom in cost-book mines that a relinquishing member should pay to the company, if insolvent, his share of the liabilities as at the date of the relinquishment, as if the concern were then being wound up; and if the company be solvent should as at the same date receive an aliquot share of the surplus, if any, of the assets over the liabilities. The amount of this share of liabilities must be ascertained, having regard to the solvency or insolvency of the continuing members at the date of relinquishment—that is, the total amount of the liabilities is divided by the number of the shares held by then solvent shareholders, and the quotient multiplied by the number of shares held by the relinquishing member. Whether the company be solvent or insolvent, its assets are to be valued as in a going concern. For many years by the custom in the F. M. Company, as appeared from the accounts of the company, in all cases of relinquishment, arrears of calls had been treated as good debts, and no enquiry made as to the solvency of any shareholder, the relinquishing member's share of liabilities being ascertained by dividing the total amount of liabilities by the total number of shares then held:—Held, that such alleged custom was unreasonable, and that the mode of taking the accounts could not be treated as evidence of any implied contract to vary the general custom, according to which the retiring member's share of liabilities must be ascertained. In re Frank Mills Mining Co. (App.), 457 —— lease by tenant-for-life. See POWER, 5.

—— reservation of minerals: custom for tenant to sell surface flints. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 3.

—— wrongful working: action for: survival of cause of action. See TRESPASS.

Misrepresentation—solicitor, by: effect of: survival of cause of action. See SOLICITOR, 3.

Mortgage—attornment by mortgagor: mortgagee in possession: foreclosure]—A mortgagor attorned tenant to a first mortgagee at a yearly rent equal to the amount of interest. The first mortgagee took no proceedings under the attornment clause. In a foreclosure action against a second mortgagee,—Held, that the first mortgagee was not to be treated as mortgagee in possession. Stanley v. Grundy, 248

2. —— attornment clause: effect of]—Although the insertion of an attornment clause in a mortgage-deed constitutes between the parties the legal relation of landlord and tenant, yet in equity their true position is not altered from that of mortgagor and mortgagee, and the Court will have regard to this fact, as well as to the rent reserved by the clause and the actual value of the property, in considering what terms should be imposed upon the trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor who has applied for leave to disclaim the tenancy. Ex parte Isherwood; In re Knight (App.), 370

3. —— commission: higher rate of interest: penalty]—Railway contractors applied to the plaintiffs for advances, which the plaintiffs agreed to make by instalments repayable six months after the date of advance, at a rate of interest varying with the bank rate, with a further provision that the contractors should pay commission at the rate of one per cent. for every month or part of a month that might elapse between the due date and the date of the repayment of such instalment upon the whole amount of such instalment:—Held, that the stipulation for commission was an independent valid contract, and could not be relieved against as being in the nature of a penalty for non-punctual payment. General Discount and Credit Company v. Glegg, 297

4. —— covenant: judgment: merger]—A mortgagor covenanted to pay principal and interest on a day certain, and after that day to pay interest so long as any part of the principal remained due on the security:—Held, that the liability on the covenant to pay future interest was not destroyed by a judgment for the principal sum and interest. Popple v. Sylvester, 54

5. —— foreclosure: sale: conveyancing act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 25]—In a foreclosure action, the plaintiff desiring a sale, and the defendant not appearing, the Court directed an account, and on certificate a sale of so much of the property as should be sufficient to satisfy what should be found due. Wade v. Wilson, 399

6. —— foreclosure: title-deeds: disclaimer: costs]—The plaintiff in a foreclosure action is not entitled to the delivery up of documents relating to the equity of redemption. Green v. Foster, 470

A puisne mortgagee disclaiming is entitled to all costs incurred subsequently to offer to disclaim. Ibid.

7. —— power of sale: shares: transfer in blank]—Shares transferable without seal were mortgaged by deposit of certificate and transfer in blank as to the transferee:—Held, that the mortgagee had no power of sale. France v. Clark, 362

8. —— priority: notice: fund in court: stop order]—A mortgagee of a fund in Court did not give notice to the trustees. A subsequent mortgagee gave notice, but did not obtain a stop order. The prior mortgagee then obtained a stop order:—Held, that he thereby obtained priority. Pinnock v. Bailey, 880

—— attornment clause: validity of, against trustee in bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, 35.

—— building society: unlimited power to borrow. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 4.

—— consolidation of charges. See POWER, 5.

—— covenant to pay: Statute of Limitations. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, 3.

—— equitable: lien of bankers on shares of customer. See BANKER.

—— foreclosure absolute, enforcement of judgment for. See PRACTICE, 24.

—— goodwill: right to use trade name. See TRADE MARK, 3.

—— investment in, by trustees. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 7.

—— misrepresentation by solicitor: postponement of mortgage. See SOLICITOR, 3.

—— power of leasing: mining lease by way of mortgage, validity of. See POWER, 5.

—— redemption by borrowing member of building society. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 2.

—— Statute of Limitations, effect of. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, 2–4.

—— subsequent judgment: merger of debt: interest. See BANKRUPTCY, 10.

Mortmain. See CHARITY, 2.

Next Friend. See PRACTICE, 13, 14.

Notice to Treat. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1.

Nuisance—local board: powers of: pollution of stream by third party: action to restrain board from permitting continuance of same: public health act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 21]—Under an agreement between A and a sanitary board, A was entitled to discharge surface-water from his land into a ditch which ran past B's house. A afterwards, without the leave or licence of the board, or of the local board which succeeded it, and contrary to the plan which had been approved by the board when the agreement was entered into, began to discharge sewage into the ditch through the same pipe by which his surface-water was discharged. B moved for an injunction to restrain the local board, as sole defendants, from allowing the sewage to pass into the ditch and so causing a nuisance:—Held, that the local board had power, both at common law and also under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to physically stop the flow of sewage through the pipe, even though in so doing they might also stop the flow of surface-water, since A was exercising his limited right in excess so as to produce a nuisance; and that it being therefore possible for the board to abate the nuisance without instituting legal proceedings, or devising a new system of drainage, or creating a greater nuisance than that which was to be abated, B was entitled to compel the board to do so. Charles v. The Finchley Local Board, 554

Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board (49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 89; Law Rep. 12 Ch. D. 102), The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 585; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 595) and The Attorney-General v. The Acton Local Board (ante, p. 108; Law Rep. 22 Ch. D. 221) explained and distinguished. Ibid.

—— And see PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

Official Liquidator. See COMPANY, 7, 13.

Official Referee. See PRACTICE, 15.

Official Solicitor—costs: fund not dealt with for fifteen years. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 2.

Onerous Property—election as to taking. See WILL, 26.

Option—power to grant lease with option of purchase: validity of option. See POWER, 4.

Parliament—election: expenses: payments by sub-agent: corrupt practices act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 29), s. 2]—A solicitor engaged by a candidate as a local sub-agent to assist in procuring his election employed canvassers, and paid them out of his own pocket:—Held,

Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Levinstein, 704

Where in a patent case the defendant denies infringement, but objects to state in open Court the process he actually practises, on the ground that it is the subject of a valuable secret, of the benefit of which he would be deprived by disclosure, the Court will first ascertain whether the defence fails in all other respects than infringement, and then, unless the defendant prefers to submit to an injunction, will hear the evidence and arguments with respect to the alleged infringement by the secret process with closed doors, and, with a view to further protecting the secret, will order the shorthand notes of the private hearing to be impounded until either an appeal is entered or the right to appeal is abandoned. Ibid.

Where a patent is obtained for the use of particular chemical materials for arriving at a particular chemical result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by the use of other chemical materials which were not known to be equivalents for the materials mentioned in the specification at the time when the patent was obtained. Ibid.

Where a patent is obtained for a new process for arriving at a known result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by a different process. Ibid.

Where a patent is obtained for a new result, and one process of arriving at that result is described in the specification, it is an infringement to produce the same result by any process. Ibid.

—— infringement: account of profits: bankruptcy of infringer. See BANKRUPTCY, 27.

Penalty—or liquidated damages. See CONTRACT.

—— relief against. See MORTGAGE, 3.

Pleading. See PRACTICE, 18–20.

Policy—premiums: payment by husband: lien. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3.

Pollution of Stream. See NUISANCE.

Portions—power to charge: power to fix rate of interest. See SETTLEMENT, 3.

Power—appointment: construction of: appointee, whether entitled to share in unappointed fund] —By a settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees upon trust, either in the lifetime of M., with his consent in writing, or else not till after his decease, to raise 12,000*l.*, and pay the same unto and between the two daughters of M. as he should by deed, attested by two witnesses, appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the two daughters equally, to be vested interests in them at twenty-one or marriage, and to be paid at such age or time if the same should happen after the decease of M., but if the same should happen in his lifetime, then immediately after his decease, "unless he should signify his consent in writing under his hand and seal that the said respective shares should be raised and paid in his lifetime." M., by deed attested by two witnesses, reciting the power, and that he was desirous of making some immediate as well as future provision for his daughter E., appointed that the trustees should raise two sums of 5,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*—the 5,000*l.* immediately, and the 1,000*l.* immediately after his decease—and pay the same to the said E., "to the intent that the payment of the portion or portions of the said E. under the said settlement may as to the said sum of 5,000*l.* be accelerated and take effect according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, anything in the said settlement to the contrary thereof notwithstanding." M. died without making any further appointment:—Held, that E. was entitled to one moiety of the unappointed part of the 12,000*l.*, in addition to the sums so appointed to her. In re Alfreton's Trust Estates, 745

2. —— appointment: defective execution: conditional appointment: fraud on power: aid: wills act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 10: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114]—The donee of a power of appointment by will or deed amongst his children, having a son and a daughter, by his will, in 1862, appointed the whole fund to his daughter M. absolutely. By the marriage settlement of M. in 1866 he affected to appoint the whole fund to her, reserving to himself the faculty of disposing in favour of his wife of the reversion of 10,000 francs during her life. By a codicil to his will, dated in 1871, and made in France, after reciting an arrangement between himself, his daughter and her husband, by which if the whole fund were appointed to the daughter the father's widow was to have 10,000 francs for her life, he declared, "In the case that my said daughter and her husband should respect my memory and their signature, then it is my will and desire that my daughter and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum"; but in case they should not respect their signature, then he desired that one-half should go to the son. This codicil was written and signed by the testator, but was unattested. It was, however, admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114:—Held, that as the codicil was intended to take effect as a testamentary instrument, the Court could not aid the defective execution of the appointment contained in it by treating it as an imperfect appointment.

by deed; nor, in view of the language of section 10 of the Wills Act, could the appointment be upheld as testamentary, for that the negative provision in the section that no testamentary appointment can be made unless attested by two witnesses is not affected by the later statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114. Held, further, that there was apparent on the face of the codicil an intention that the appointment contained in the will should be revoked if the daughter and her husband did not abide by their engagement, and that this was sufficient to bring that appointment within the controlling power of a Court of equity, and to render it invalid. Held, therefore, that the fund went as in default of appointment. In re Kirwan's Trusts, 952

Kennard v. Kennard (42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 280; Law Rep. 8 Chanc. 227) observed upon. Ibid.

3. Power (continued)—lease: agreement for, by tenant-for-life: death of tenant-for-life: infant tenant-in-tail: trustees]—A tenant-for-life, with a power of leasing, had entered into an agreement for a building lease within the power, and the intending lessee had done everything which was necessary to entitle him to require the tenant-for-life to grant him a lease. The tenant-for-life died without having granted the lease, and was succeeded in the possession of the estates by an infant tenant-in-tail, during whose minority the trustees could exercise the power of leasing:—Held, that the trustees had power to grant a lease in accordance with the agreement. Davis v. Harford, 61

4. —— lease: power to grant building and other leases: defective exercise of power: statutory aid: 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26]—Under a will which empowered the trustees thereby appointed to grant building leases for ninety-nine years at increasing rentals, and ordinary leases for twenty-one years at the best rents which could be obtained, and provided that a lease granted under either power might contain an option of purchase by the lessee, the trustees demised to C. a piece of freehold and a piece of leasehold land for thirty-five years, at a nominal rent as to both for the first quarter, and afterwards, as to the freehold at an increasing rent, and as to the leasehold at a fixed rent. The lessee did not covenant to build, but only to repair all buildings erected or to be erected on the land, and to insure; and the lease gave him an option of purchase as to any part of the premises during the first twenty-one years. In exercise of this option, C. purchased the leasehold portion of the land, which was accordingly assigned to him. Doubts having afterwards arisen as to the validity of the lease, a notice was indorsed upon it, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, and signed by C. and the trustees of the will, declaring that the lease should be considered in equity as a contract to grant a valid lease under the power to grant ordinary leases. Upon the sale by C. of the leasehold land purchased by him, objection was taken to the title on the ground that the lease, not being a building lease, and being granted for more than twenty-one years, was an invalid exercise of the power:—Held, that, inasmuch as the lease did not contain any covenant to build, it was invalid as a building lease; that the defect could not be remedied under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 26, by turning that which was a lease of one kind into a contract for a lease of another kind; and that, even if that could be done, the lease would still be invalid in consequence of the rent reserved in respect of the freehold portion being an increasing rent, which was not in accordance with the power to grant leases other than building leases. Held, also, that the lease being bad, the option of purchase was ineffectual and could not be exercised. In re Hallett to Martin, 804

5. —— lease: tenant-for-life: settlement: mines: power of leasing: mining lease by way of mortgage: charge on inheritance: consolidation of charges: incorporation of exceptions by reference to prior mining lease: removal of pillars: consent: injunction]—A testator devised real estates in strict settlement, and empowered tenants-for-life, who were unimpeachable for waste, to grant mining leases for such terms, and under and subject to such rents or reservations or agreements, as to them should "seem reasonable and proper." A tenant-for-life, in 1843, demised mines for a term of ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, by way of mortgage, to secure 6,000*l.* and interest:—Held, that this was a valid lease under the power, and binding on the inheritance. Taylor v. Mostyn. Mostyn v. Lancaster (App.), 848

Sheehy v. Muskerry (1 H.L. Cas. 576) approved and followed. Ibid.

On the 26th of April, 1850, the term of ninety-nine years and the mortgage debt were transferred to S. & Co., and by the same deed the tenant-for-life mortgaged his life estate to S. & Co. to secure further sums, and thereby made the term of ninety-nine years redeemable only on payment of the further sums as well as of the original mortgage debt:—Held, that the term of ninety-nine years was validly charged with the further sums. Ibid.

The lease of 1843 referred to a prior lease of the same mines granted by the testator in 1829, and purported to grant the mines on the "like liberties, powers, authorities and privileges as were thereby granted, and all other liberties, &c., necessary for working the mines, except as in the said lease of 1829 was excepted." The lease of 1829 excepted certain minerals from the demise, and contained covenants by the lessees not to remove the pillars of the mines without the consent of the testator, his heirs or assigns:—Held, that the lease of 1843 incorporated the covenants of the lease of 1829 against the removal of the pillars. Ibid.

On the 10th of May, 1850, the tenant-for-life, by arrangement with the mortgagees, demised the mines to a trustee for the mortgagees for forty years on an ordinary working lease, and the lease contained a covenant not to remove the pillars without the consent of the tenant-for-life, his heirs or assigns, or the person or persons for the time being entitled to the premises:—Held, that the covenant was for the protection of the equity of redemption, and that the mortgagees had no power to consent to the removal of the pillars by the lessee. Ibid.

Decisions of BACON, V.C., affirmed, with a slight variation. Ibid.

6. —— priority: insufficient fund: successive appointments]—The donee of a special power to appoint by deed or will a sum of 10,000*l.*, which was invested on mortgage, made successive revocable appointments by deed of sums of 3,000*l.*, 1,200*l.*, 1,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* (respectively described as part of the 10,000*l.*), to three objects of the power, and by his will confirmed these appointments, and appointed the remaining 3,800*l.* among objects of the power. The mortgage security eventually proved insufficient to realise the 10,000*l.*:—Held, that the appointees took according to priority of appointment, and not rateable portions of the fund. Gilbert v. Whitfield, 210

Stokes v. Bridgman (47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 759) followed. Ibid.

—— appointment by colonial will: English probate necessary. See COLONIAL WILL.

—— appointment by will: general power: Wills Act, section 27. See WILL, 5.

—— appointment by will: married woman. See WILL, 21.

—— discretionary powers of trustees: interference of Court with. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 5.

—— sale: tenant-for-life. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 1; SETTLED LAND ACT, 2–4, 7.

Practice—appeal to house of lords: point of law: staying trial of issues of fact pending the appeal: order LVIII. rule 16]—When an appeal upon a point of law is allowed, and the case is remitted to the Court below for trial on the issues of fact, the Court of Appeal will not, as a general rule, stay the trial of the issues of fact pending an appeal to the House of Lords on the point of law. In re Palmer (App.), 224

2. —— appeal: notice of: change of country solicitors after judgment: notice of appeal by new solicitors: same London agents: irregularity: order LVII. rule 7: order LVIII. rule 3]—A notice of appeal was signed by A & Co. as the London agents of B & Co., the appellant's solicitors. At this time, C & Co., who had been the appellant's solicitors down to the judgment appealed against, and who had throughout also acted by A & Co., were still his solicitors on the record, although B & Co. were now really his solicitors. On the error being discovered, the appellant obtained the usual order to change solicitors. The respondent's solicitors having intimated that they should, on the hearing of the appeal, rely on the mistake as a fatal irregularity in the notice of appeal,—Held, on motion by the appellant that his time for appealing might under the circumstances be extended, that, the notice of appeal being in other respects regular, the inaccuracy in the description of his solicitors did not invalidate it. Kettlewell v. Watson (App.), 818

Quære, whether it is essential that a notice of appeal should be signed by a solicitor. Ibid.

3. —— appeal: notice of: informality: order LVIII. rules 2, 3 and 4: parties opposing not served with, but appearing on, appeal: costs]—The mere communication by an unsuccessful party to his opponent of his intention to appeal is not a sufficient notice of appeal; nor, in the absence of other special circumstances, is it ground for an extension of the time for appealing. In re The New Callao Co. (Lim.) (App.), 283

Little's Case (Law Rep. 8 Ch. D. 806) and McAndrew v. Barker (Law Rep. 7 Ch. D. 707) explained. Ibid.

A party who appears in the Court below and gets his costs of appearance, but is not served with the notice of appeal from the order below, which affects his right to costs, may appear gratis on the appeal, and, if the appeal be dismissed, will be entitled to his costs of the appeal. Ibid.

4. —— appeal: security for costs: delay]—As a general rule an application for security for costs of an appeal must be made within a reasonable time, and if made after the appeal is in the paper will be too late In re The Indian, Kingston and Sandhurst Gold Mining Co. (Lim.) (App.), 31

A motion for security for the costs of an interlocutory appeal (the appellant being out of the jurisdiction) and the appeal itself came into the paper the same day. It appeared that the hearing of the motion for security had been delayed in consequence of the Court not having sat to hear such applications:—Held, that under the circumstances the application must be granted. Ibid.

5. Practice (continued)—appearance: counter-claim: person named as defendant but not served: appearance gratis: rules of court, 1875, order XXII. rules 5, 6 and 7]—A person, not a party to the action, named as a defendant to a counter-claim, but not served with a copy, has no right to appear gratis. He cannot appear till after service pursuant to Order XXII. rule 6. Fraser v. Cooper, Hall & Co., 684

6. —— appearance: judgment in default of appearance, subject to production of affidavit of service: time within which production must be made]—Where judgment is obtained in default of appearance, subject to the production of an affidavit of service, it is no longer necessary that it should be produced before the rising of the Court on the same day. Secar v. Webb, 832

Lord Milltown v. Stuart (8 Sim. 34) has no application to the present practice. Ibid.

7. —— attachment: discovery: service: order XXXI. rule 21]—Leave to issue a writ of attachment for non-compliance with an order for production of documents for inspection was given on motion where the order and notice of motion had been served only on the solicitor of the person to be attached. Joy v. Hadley, 471

8. —— chambers: order at: entry: enforcement: consolidated order XXXV. rule 32]—An order made by the chief clerk in chambers cannot be enforced by writ of attachment until after entry. Ballard v. Tomlinson, 656

9. —— evidence: cross-examination on affidavit: abuse of process of court: order XV. rules 1 and 2; order XXXVII. rule 2; order XXXVIII. rule 4]—The Court will prevent the process of the Court from being abused for the purpose of oppression. In re Mundell. Fenton v. Cumberlege, 756

The plaintiff in an administration action having without any necessity made an affidavit for the purpose of an application in chambers for accounts, the defendants proposed to cross-examine her on her affidavit, and on her refusing to appear, applied for an order on her to attend:—Held, that the affidavit having been immaterial to the relief sought, and no reason having been suggested for supposing that the cross-examination could be productive of any result, the application was an abuse of the process of the Court for the purpose of oppression, and must be refused. Ibid.

10. —— interrogatories: discovery: action of ejectment: rules of court, order XXXI. rule 1: affidavit of documents]—The plaintiff in an action of ejectment has the same right as the plaintiff in any other action to administer interrogatories to the defendant. Lyell v. Kennedy (H.L.), 385

The defendant in an affidavit of documents objected to produce certain documents described in a schedule, on the ground that they related solely to the defence of his title to the property in question in the action, and were communications between himself and his solicitors, their London agents, and his counsel in reference to the defence of his title aforesaid, and prepared or procured for the purposes and in contemplation of such defence. Ibid.

The description of some of the documents as given in the schedule appeared not to agree with the above claim of privilege:—Held, that the defendant must make a further and better affidavit. Ibid.

11. —— investment of exchequer bills in court: cash under control of court: money paid in under private act: 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. s. 10: general order, February 1st, 1861]—Money paid into Court under a private Act, and invested in Exchequer Bills, is "cash under the control of the Court," within the meaning of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, and the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861; and may be invested in any of the securities sanctioned by the Court, although such private Act directs the investment to be in Exchequer Bills. Jackson v. Tyas, 830

12. —— motion: short notice of motion: irregularity: order LIX. rule 1]—Where a party applies for leave to serve short notice of motion, he must distinctly state to the Court that he applies for leave to serve such notice, and the notice of motion itself when served must distinctly state that special leave of the Court has been obtained on such a day to serve short notice for the particular day. Dawson v. Beeson (App.), 563

Where a short notice of motion had been irregularly applied for and served, but the party served had not in any way been injured by the irregularity, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, under Order LIX. rule 1, disregarded the irregularity and heard the motion on its merits. Ibid.

13. —— next friend: costs: married woman: stay of proceedings]—An action was commenced by a married woman suing by her next friend, and an order that the next friend should give security for the costs of the action not having been complied with, was dismissed with costs. The married woman then commenced a second action by another next friend against the same defendants for the same object:—Held, that all proceedings in the second action must be stayed until the defendant's taxed costs of the first action had been paid. In re Payne. Randle v. Payne (App.), 544

Semble,—Hind v. Whitmore (2 Kay & J. 458) is no longer law. Ibid.

14. —— next friend: discovery: production of documents: rules of court, 1875, order XXXI. rule 12: next friend not a "party to the action"]—The next friend of an infant plaintiff is not a "party to the action" within the meaning of the Rules of Court, 1875, Order XXXI. rule 12, and therefore cannot be compelled to make discovery as to documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the action. In re Corsellis. Lawton v. Elwes, 399

15. —— official referee: report: motion to adopt report and for judgment: judicature act, 1873, ss. 56, 57 and 58: rules of court, 1875, orders XXXIII., XXXVI. rule 34, XXXIX., rule 1*a*]—Where a preliminary account has been referred to an official referee, and the referee has made his report, the proper course is not to set the cause down for hearing, but for the party in whose favour the findings are to move for judgment on the report, and for the opposite party to move to set it aside. Walker v. Bunkell (App.), 596

Per KAY, J.—The referee is not bound, and, as a general rule, ought not, to state his reasons for his findings. His duty is to state results in as concise a form as possible, similar to that of a chief clerk's certificate. Ibid.

16. —— parties, change of: action for injunction and damages against firm: death of sole member of firm more than six months after issue of writ: order to carry on proceedings against his executors under order L. rule 4: cause of action, survival or continuance of: 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 42. s. 2]—The defendant in an action for an injunction to restrain the fouling of a stream, and for damages, was sued as a firm, and, being the sole member of the firm, died more than six months after the issue of the writ:—Held, affirming the decision of HALL, V.C., that the defendant having died more than six months after the commission of the tort, no action either for damages or injunction could be maintained against his executors. Kirk v. Todd (App.), 224

17. —— payment into court: order XXX. rules 1 and 4: debentures: administration: costs]—In an action by one debenture-holder, on behalf of herself and others, for administration of the trusts of a deed securing the debentures, the defendants paid money into Court, which was accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction of her claim:—Held, that she was not entitled of right to her costs. Nichols v. Evens, 383

18. —— pleading: indorsement of writ: motion on admissions in pleading: judicature act, 1873, s. 100: rules of court, 1875, order II. rule 1, order XL. rule 11]—The indorsement on a writ is not a "pleading" within the terms of Order XL. rule 11, Rules of Court, 1875, so as to entitle a plaintiff to move for judgment without the consent of the defendant on admissions in the pleading, although the defendant admits the plaintiff's claim and has given notice that he does not require the delivery of a statement of claim. Wallis v. Jackson, 384

19. —— pleading: order XIX. rule 4: right of way]—In an action claiming a right of way over a farm, the mode of claim, whether by prescription or grant, and the termini and general course of the way should be pleaded. Harris v. Jenkins, 437

20. —— pleading: set-off: Rules of Court, 1875, Order XIX. rule 3]—Rule 3 of Order XIX. Rules of Court, 1875, is only a rule of procedure, and was not intended to give rights against third persons which did not exist before. It does not therefore extend the law of set-off. In re The Milan Tramways Co.; Ex parte Theys, 29

21. —— production of documents: arbitration: finality of order of reference: jurisdiction: rules of court, 1875, order XXXI. rule 12: liberty to apply]—An order having been taken by consent referring the action and all matters in difference between the parties to an arbitrator, the plaintiff afterwards took out a summons, under Order XXXI. rule 12, for an affidavit and inspection of documents:—Held, that the Court had no power to make any order, the only office remaining to be discharged by the Court being that of recording judgment according to the arbitrator's award. Held also, that liberty to apply is impliedly contained in orders not of a final nature, and in those orders only. Penrice v. Williams, 593

22. —— production of documents: place of production: subsequent order changing place: discretion of court: jurisdiction: London agents]—As a general rule, after a Judge has made the usual order for the production of documents at any particular place, he or his successor, or his representative on the Bench, has jurisdiction at any subsequent period, if circumstances appear to warrant it, to direct that those documents, previously directed to be produced at one place, or some of them, shall be produced at another place. Prestney v. The Mayor, &c., of Colchester (App.), 877

Such an order is an exercise of the Judge's discretion, and an appeal therefrom will not be readily entertained. Ibid.

Semble,—The same rule applies to orders which do not decide the rights of parties, but are merely directory in their nature, when circumstances arise that require the form of the order to be varied. Ibid.

So held on appeal from Pearson, J., ante, p. 346.

As a general rule the proper place for production of documents by a party to an action is the office in London of his country solicitor's London agent, and not the office of the country solicitor. But the Court has a discretion, where special circumstances render it desirable so to do, to order that the production shall take place elsewhere than in London. Per PEARSON, J., ante, p. 346

Where it appeared that the documents consisted of charters of a corporation and other ancient and valuable documents which were exceedingly numerous and peculiarly liable to be destroyed or lost in transit to or from London, the Court ordered that the production should take place at the muniment office of the corporation at Colchester; but gave the opposite parties leave to apply at the trial, whether successful or unsuccessful, for any additional costs incurred by them in consequence of the production having taken place at Colchester instead of in London. Ibid.

23. Practice (continued)—production of documents: privilege: trustee]—Letters between trustees and between trustees and their solicitors relating to the trust before action brought, are not privileged against the beneficiaries. In re Mason; Mason v. Cattley, 478

24. —— recovery of land: mortgagor and mortgagee: judgment for foreclosure absolute: writ of possession: recovery of possession of land: rules of court, 1875, order XVII. rule 2; order XLII. rule 3; judicature act, 1873, s. 24. sub-s. 3]—A judgment for foreclosure absolute is not a judgment for the recovery of the possession of land within the meaning of Order XLII. rule 3, of Rules of Court, 1875. Wood v. Wheater, 144

25. —— sequestration: jurisdiction: debt: costs]—The balance due from his bankers to a party to an action was ordered to be paid into Court on motion in the action, under a sequestration issued on judgment obtained in the action against such party. Miller v. Huddlestone, 208

26. —— service of writ out of jurisdiction: order XI. rule 1]—No leave will now be given to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction except in cases within Order XI. rule 1. In re Eager. Eager v. Johnstone (App.), 56

27. —— stay of proceedings: actions between same parties in this country and in a foreign country: same subject-matter: vexation]—The plaintiffs commenced an action in this country and in France against the same defendants, claiming delivery of certain cargoes of guano, or to be paid the value thereof: the only difference in the subject-matter of the two actions being that the English action extended to one more cargo of guano than the French action:—Held, that these facts did not of themselves amount to vexation; and a motion by the defendants that the plaintiffs might be put to their election as to which action they would proceed with was refused. The Peruvian Guano Co. v. Bockwoldt (App.), 714

28. —— stay of proceedings: actions in this country: action for same object pending in foreign court: representative actions: action in personam: action in rem]—When a plaintiff sues a defendant in this country and also in a foreign country for the same cause of action, the Court in this country has jurisdiction in a proper case to stay the proceedings in this country on the ground that the defendant is being doubly vexed by reason of the action being brought also in the foreign country. But if in the foreign country there are different forms of procedure and different remedies, the mere fact that the plaintiff is also suing in the foreign country is not of itself evidence of vexation. McHenry v. Lewis (App.), 325

Cox v. Mitchell (7 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 55; 29 Law J. Rep. C.P. 33) discussed. Ibid.

Lord Dillon v. Alvares (4 Ves. 357) explained to be no longer law. Ibid.

29. —— transfer of action: judicature act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66. s. 34: accounts: chancery division]—The Court refused to stay or transfer from the Chancery Division an action for account, though there was pending in a more advanced stage a common law action in which the same issues were raised by the plaintiff in the Chancery Division by counterclaim. Ladd v. Puleston. Puleston v. Ladd, 816; on appeal, 976

30. —— trial, mode of: infant defendant: default of defence: motion for judgment: affidavits: notice of trial: order XIX. rule 17: order XL. rule 1; order XXIX. rule 10; order XXXVII. rules 1 and 2]—In an action for sale in lieu of partition the sole defendant was an infant. The facts were simple, and no defence was put in. The plaintiffs moved for judgment, and supported their motion by affidavits which verified the statement of claim. The guardian ad litem did not object to the proposed minutes of judgment:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs had taken the proper course, and that notice of trial need not be given. In re Fitzwater. Fitzwater v. Waterhouse, 83

There is nothing in the Rules of Court, or in Ellis v. Robbins (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 512), or The National Provincial Bank v. Evans (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 97), to the contrary. Ibid.

—— administration action: appointment of new trustee after decree. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 5.

—— administration: wilful default. See ADMINISTRATION, 3.

—— appeal for costs. See COSTS, 5; VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.

—— appearance of executors without protest. See JURISDICTION, 1.

—— appointment of new trustees: affidavit of fitness. See TRUSTEE ACTS, 2.

—— claim and counter-claim: apportionment of costs. See COSTS, 2.

—— costs: administration action: bankrupt trustee. See COSTS, 1.

—— costs, security for. See COMPANY, 12; COSTS, 6.

—— damages: Lord Cairns' Act. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 1.

—— discovery: evidence: affidavit by official liquidator embracing distinct cases against different directors. See COMPANY, 13.

—— foreclosure: sale. See MORTGAGE, 5.

—— foreign charity: application to settle scheme. See CHARITY, 3.

—— infant: jurisdiction: settled estate: costs of: application to Parliament. See INFANT, 3.

—— partition: sale: pleading. See PARTITION, 1.

—— patent action: discovery. See PATENT, 2.

—— patent action: hearing with closed doors: scientific assistance to Court. See PATENT, 3.

—— payment into Court: right of residuary legatee. See WILL, 23.

—— petition: interim investment in railway debenture stock. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 1882, 6.

—— scientific assistance to Court. See PATENT, 3.

—— shorthand notes: costs. See BANKRUPTCY, 25; COSTS, 8, 9.

—— stop order: priority: notice. See MORTGAGE, 8.

—— title-deeds: delivery up of, in foreclosure action. See MORTGAGE, 6.

—— undertaking: delay in enforcing. See BANKRUPTCY, 22.

Premium—building society: right to charge. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 2.

—— sale: mortgage of shares. See MORTGAGE, 7.

Presumption—illegitimacy: presumption of legitimacy: child of married woman born in lifetime of her husband: evidence sufficient to rebut presumption]—A testator bequeathed 4,000*l.* stock in trust for his daughter Caroline D. for life, and after her death for her children. Caroline D. married G., a man of dissipated habits, and had by him two children, one of whom died in infancy. In 1831 or 1832 G. was in difficulties, a distress was put into his house, he and his wife and family were turned into the streets, and he deserted them. G. died in 1837. After the desertion Caroline D. went to live with H., a man in a respectable position of life, and, while living with him as his wife, had five children, of whom the eldest, Maria H., appeared to have been born in 1834. These five children all bore the name of H. (which name alone appeared in the parish registers and on a certain family tombstone), and the uniform reputation in the family was that they were the children of H. There was no evidence that G. ever had any communication with his wife subsequently to the desertion, though he appeared to have been living, and was buried, at a place only a few miles distant from the residence of H. There was some evidence that he had professed to marry another woman. In an action to administer the testator's estate, Maria H. claimed to share in the 4,000*l.* stock, as being the legitimate child of Caroline G. by her husband G.:—Held, that, under all the circumstances of the case, and especially having regard to the position in life of the parties, the fact that Maria H. and all the children afterwards born were called by the name of H., and the reputation as to their parentage which had always existed in the family, there was evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption that Maria H. was legitimate. Hawes v. Draeger, 449

Principal and Agent—sale of house: scope of authority. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1.

—— Factors Acts: goods consigned to agent for sale: brokers employed by agent. See FACTORS ACTS.

Priority—appointees: insufficient fund. See POWER, 5.

—— mortgage: notice. See MORTGAGE, 8.

—— winding-up of building society, in. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 4, 5.

Privilege—discovery. See PRACTICE, 23.

Probate—colonial will: appointment of funds in Court in England. See COLONIAL WILL.

Production of Documents. See COMPANY, 13; PRACTICE, 14, 21–23.

Proof. See BANKRUPTCY, 26–29; COMPANY, 14–16.

Public Health Acts—construction: local government act, 1858, s. 34: public health act, 1875, ss. 157 and 236: "new street": old country road]—The term "new street" in the Local Government Act, 1858, s. 34, and the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157, applies not only to a street constructed for the first time out of land laid out for building, but also to an old country road or lane in the neighbourhood of a town which, by the building of houses from time to time along it, gradually becomes a street. Decision of FRY, J., reversed. Robinson v. The Local Board of Barton, &c. (App.), 5

2. —— contracts under seal: local board: compromise: specific performance: public health act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 173 and 174 (1)]—An agreement between a local board and a defendant against whom an action is pending, compromising such action, not being "a contract necessary for carrying the Act into execution," can be enforced against the defendant, though not sealed with the board seal. The Attorney-General v. Gaskill, 163

3. —— local board: easement: sewage: injunction: local government act, 1868: metropolitan management act, 1855]—A local board was restrained, at the instance of the Metropolitan Board of Works from "directing or authorising" the discharge of sewage from new houses in their district into a natural watercourse the lower portion of which was a sewer vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works. The Attorney-General v. The Acton Local Board, 108

Quære,—Whether a local board can compel the disconnection with a sewer of drains once authorised. Ibid.

—— local board: easement: compensation. See RAILWAY COMPANY.

—— power of local board to stop pollution of stream. See NUISANCE.

Railway Company—agreement not under seal: reservation of easement: subsequent conveyance under seal: abandonment: companies clauses consolidation act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 16), s. 97: local board: public road: public health act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 147 and 149]—By an agreement in 1870 between the vendor and a railway company by their secretary, the vendor agreed to sell and the company to purchase a piece of land, with a provision that the vendor should have a right of access to other lands belonging to him by and over any of the slopes which the promoters might arrange in their intended works. In 1871 the vendor executed a conveyance of the land to the company without the reservation of any easement. The land was needed for raising a road over the railway, which road was raised accordingly, the slope of the approach of the road being separated from the vendor's neighbouring lands by a rail fence only. Recently the urban authority of the district had agreed with the company to repair and maintain the road and slopes, and had raised the level of the road, steepened the slope, and built retaining walls at the foot of the slope, cutting off the access to the slope from the adjoining lands of the vendor. The successors in title of the vendor claimed an injunction. There was no claim for rectification of the conveyance or specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that whatever right of access was reserved to the vendor under the agreement of 1870, it was abandoned on the execution of the conveyance. Action dismissed with costs. Teebay v. The Manchester and Sheffield Rail. Co., 613

—— directors: remuneration: revenue charge: advertisement of meeting. See COMPANY, 2.

—— lien for freight: jurisdiction of Court of Bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, 14.

—— notice to treat: expiration of powers: entry on land. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1.

Rates—company in liquidation: right of local authority to payment. See COMPANY, 15.

Receiver—business, of: advances and disbursements by. See BANKRUPTCY, 22.

—— right of retainer of executor as against. See EXECUTOR.

Redemption—building society: borrowing member. See BUILDING SOCIETY, 2.

Registration. See BILL OF SALE, 2–5.

Regulation of Railways Act, 1868. See COMPANY, 2.

Renewable Lease. See COVENANT, 1.

Restraint on Anticipation. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 5.

Retainer—by executor. See EXECUTOR.

Riparian Owner—right to flow of water. See WATER.

Romilly's (Sir S.) Act. See CHARITY, 1.

Sale of Goods—indorsement of bill of lading: sub-sale: stoppage in transitu before delivery or payment of freight]—The purchaser and consignor of a cargo of salt indorsed the bill of lading by way of mortgage to a bank. The cargo was sold "to arrive" by the consignees to sub-purchasers. The purchaser having become bankrupt, the unpaid vendor gave notice to stop in transitu before delivery to the sub-purchasers or payment of the freight:—Held, that the right to stop in transitu was not destroyed by the sub-sales, and that the vendor was entitled to the balance of the purchase-money received upon the sub-sales after satisfying the bank's claim. Kemp v. Falk (H.L.), 167

Per LORD BLACKBURN.—Where notice to stop in transitu is given to ship-owners, they are bound to forward it with reasonable diligence to the master of their ship. A notice so forwarded and received by the master is a valid and sufficient notice to him. Ibid.

—— contract for sale of chattels: injunction: negative clause. See INJUNCTION.

Salvage — policy: payment of premiums by husband. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 3.

Scotland—testator domiciled in: jurisdiction to administer estate in England. See JURISDICTION, 1.

Security for Costs. See COMPANY, 12; COSTS, 6; PRACTICE, 4.

Separate Use. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1, 4 SETTLEMENT, 1, 2.

Sequestration. See PRACTICE, 25.

Service of Writ, &c. See PRACTICE, 7, 26.

Set-off—bankruptcy: undischarged debtor. See BANKRUPTCY, 22.

—— costs, of. See COSTS, 7.

—— debt or damages. See COMPANY, 14.

—— Order XIX. rule 3, effect of. See COMPANY, 14.

—— principal and agent. See FACTORS ACTS.

—— winding-up: separate debt against joint liability. See COMPANY, 3.

Settled Land Act, 1882—money to be laid out in land: interim investment: "settlement": 45 & 46 Vict. c. 83. s. 2. sub-s. 1; ss. 21 and 33]—Money bequeathed to trustees upon trust for the purchase of land to be settled in strict settlement, with a direction for investment, until a proper purchase is found, in Government or real securities, but not in any other mode of investment, may, under section 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, be invested in railway debenture stock. In re Mackenzie's Trusts, 726

2. —— power of tenant-for-life to sell: ss. 2 (sub-ss. 1, 8), 38, 45]—sale of interest in remainder prior to the act: trustees to whom notice can be given: settled land act rules, 1882, rule 6]—The effect of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to give to a tenant-for-life of settled land, subject to his complying with the provisions of the Act, absolute power at his own pleasure to take the land out of settlement and convert it into money. Wheelwright v. Walker, 274

And this statutory power is not affected by the circumstance that prior to the commencement of the Act the estate or interest in remainder was sold to a bona fide purchaser for value. Ibid.

But under section 2, sub-s. 8, and section 45 of the Act, in order that the power may be exercised, it is necessary that there should be in existence trustees of the settlement either expressly appointed for the purposes of the Act, or else having, at the time of the sale, a present and immediate power to sell the settled land, or to consent to or approve of the exercise of a power of sale thereof, and that notice of the intended sale should be given by the tenant-for-life to such trustees. Ibid.

Where, therefore, lands were limited to trustees upon trust for A for life, and after his death upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst his children,—Held, that A could not sell the lands under the powers of the Act unless and until trustees had been appointed under section 38, and notice given to them as required by section 45. Ibid.

Upon an ex parte application the Court made an order that A should serve the assignee of the only child of A with notice of any application by A for the appointment of such trustees. Ibid.

3. Settled Land Act, 1882 (continued)—powers of sale and leasing: ss. 3, 6, 17, 33, 56, 58 and 60*: minority of tenant-for-life: conflicting powers: in whom vested: consents necessary: tenant-for-life: trustees: guardians*]—The effect of section 56, sub-section 1, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to reserve to the trustees of a settlement the right to exercise the powers conferred on them by the settlement, and to give them in addition the right to exercise, in accordance with the Act, the powers conferred on them by the Act, so far as such powers are larger than the powers conferred on them by the settlement. In re The Duke of Newcastle's Settled Estates, 645

The effect of section 56, sub-section 2, of the same Act is, in any case in which the powers conferred on a tenant-for-life by the Act are larger than the powers for the same purposes conferred on him by the settlement, to authorise him to exercise, in accordance with the Act, the larger powers conferred on him by the Act; and also to render his consent necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement of the powers conferred on them by the settlement, whether that consent is or is not required by the settlement. Ibid.

The right of the tenant-for-life to give or withhold such consent is a power which, under section 60, may be exercised on his behalf during his minority by the trustees of the settlement. Ibid.

In cases in which trustees are exercising powers not conferred upon them by the settlement, but only by the statute, they may do so without complying with the conditions imposed by the settlement on their exercise of analogous, but different, powers conferred by the settlement. Ibid.

By a settlement of land power was given to the testamentary guardians of an infant tenant-in-tail in possession (who was tenant-for-life for the purposes of the Act under section 58), during the minority, to grant ordinary leases for twenty-one years, building leases for ninety-nine years, and mining leases for sixty years; and power was given to the trustees of a term, at the request and by the direction of the guardians, during the minority, to sell or exchange or enfranchise parts of the settled estate; but this power did not extend to sales of surface, with a reservation of minerals:—Held, that during the minority the power of leasing must be exercised by the guardians, with the consent of the trustees; and the powers of sale, exchange and enfranchisement must be exercised by the trustees, at the request and by the direction of the guardians, except in the case of sales of surface, reserving minerals, in which case, as the power so to sell was entirely statutory, no request or direction was necessary. Ibid.

Semble,—A difference between the provisions of a settlement and those of the Act, with respect to the person who is to exercise a particular power, is not a "conflict relative to any matter" within section 56, sub-section 2. Ibid.

4. —— power to sell: section 63*: vendor and purchaser: trust for sale: sale by trustees: no life interest*]—A testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale (after the death of his wife) in trust for his children in certain proportions—the sons taking absolutely, and the daughters' shares being settled upon themselves for life, with remainder to their children, or, in default of children, as they should appoint. The wife and all the children were dead. In February, 1883, the trustees contracted to sell part of the real estate:—Held, that as there was not, at the date of the contract for sale, any person entitled to the income of the settled land "for his life, or any other limited period," under the will of the testator, "the instrument under which the trust arose," section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, had no application, and the trustees could make a good title, without the concurrence of the beneficiaries, just as they could have done before the passing of the Act. In re Earle, 828

5. —— practice: lunatic: tenant-for-life: petition by committee for power to grant leases:

no trustees of settlement: 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38. ss. 6, 8, 38, 44 and 62: settled land act rules, 1882, rules 4 and 5]—Where a tenant-for-life is a lunatic, and his committee desires to exercise the powers of leasing given by the Settled Land Act, 1882, and no trustees of the settlement are in existence, new trustees must be appointed for the purposes of the Act. In re Taylor (App.), 728

6. —— practice: costs: petition: money in court: interim investment in railway debenture stock]—The Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 32, provides that, where, under any special Act, money is in Court liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled, that money may be invested as capital money arising under the Act, on the like terms, if any, "respecting costs," as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act:—Held, that the costs of an interim investment in debenture stock of such money, paid into Court by the Commissioners of Sewers under their special Act (which did not authorise an investment in debenture stock), must be paid by them in like manner as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act. In re Hanbury, 687

7. —— tenant-for-life: limited owner: settled land act, 1882, ss. 44 and 58 (1), (ix.)]—A person entitled to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his life, subject to expenses of management, can exercise the powers of a tenant-for-life, although, owing to incumbrances, he is not actually in receipt of any income from the settled estate. In re C. R. Jones's Settled Estates, 969

8. —— trustee under: notice to trustee: solicitor of tenant-for-life: appointment of, as trustee for purposes of act: settled land act, 1882, ss. 2, 44, 45 and 46]—The solicitor acting for the tenant-for-life is not a fit person to be appointed a trustee for the purpose of receiving the notice required by the Act to be given on a proposed sale by the tenant-for-life, the object of the Act being that the trustees should act as a check on the tenant-for-life. In re Kemp's Estate (App.), 950

Nor does the fact that such solicitor is a trustee of the instrument constituting the settlement make any difference. Ibid.

—— power of sale: appointment of new trustee, pending action. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 1.

Settlement—agreement to settle after-acquired property: exception of property settled to wife's separate use: the married women's property act, 1882, ss. 5 and 19]—By a settlement made in 1862 upon the marriage of A and B, any property "settled to B's separate use" was excepted from the agreement to settle after-acquired property contained in the settlement. C, who died after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, by her will gave the residue of her personal estate to B. Section 5 of the Act provides that every woman married before the commencement of the Act shall be entitled to hold as her separate property all property her title to which shall accrue after the commencement of the Act:—Held, that as section 19 of the Act provides that nothing therein contained shall affect any settlement, section 5 must be omitted in construing the agreement; and that therefore the residuary bequest was not within the exception. In re Stonor's Trusts, 776

2. —— covenant to settle after-acquired property: will: precatory direction: "separate use"]—By a marriage settlement, the husband and wife covenanted to settle property to which the wife should become entitled for any estate or interest whatsoever. A testator left a share of his residuary real and personal estate to trustees on trust for the wife for her separate use independently of any husband, with a recommendation that she should dispose thereof, or of so much thereof as he might dispose of by will for charitable purposes in favour of charitable objects:—Held, that such share was bound by the covenant. In re Allnutt. Pott v. Brassey, 299

In re Mainwaring's Settlement (Law Rep. 2 Eq. 487) distinguished. Ibid.

3. —— portions: trust to charge: power to charge: interest: rate of: lands in Ireland]—By a marriage settlement certain lands in Ireland stood limited to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, upon trust to raise portions of 15,000*l.* for the younger children of the marriage, by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the said lands, in such proportions and at such time as Lord D. should by deed or will appoint, but there was no provision as to interest on the portions. Lord D. by his will appointed 5,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* to two of his sons, and by the marriage settlement of his daughter appointed 4,000*l.* in her favour to be raised with interest at five per cent., which sum was assigned to the trustees of the settlement. An action was brought by the trustee of the portions term for the purpose of having the trusts of that term carried into execution, and in that action the 4,000*l.* was ordered to be raised by mortgage, and a receiver was appointed to receive the rents and profits of the settled estates, and thereout to keep down the interest on the 4,000*l.* at four per cent. until the sum was raised. The trustee being unable to raise the 4,000*l.* by mortgage, the trustees of the daughter's settlement applied for an order that the receiver might apply the rents and profits towards discharge of the capital of the 4,000*l.*, and in payment of the interest thereon at five per cent. until the sum should be raised by mortgage:—Held, that the rents and profits must be applied in reduction of the capital sum of 4,000*l.* and the interest, and the lands being situate in Ireland the interest must be computed at five per cent., the legal Irish rate of interest. Young v. Lord Waterpark (13 Sim. 199) distinguished:—Held, however, that Lord D. had no power to fix the rate of interest at five per cent.; the rule laid down by Lewis v. Freke (2 Ves. jun. 507) and Boycot v. Cotton (1 Atk. 552), that the donee of a power of charging land with a particular sum has a right to fix the rate of interest, does not apply to a case where there is an absolute trust to charge with a certain sum, with a power to some person nominated to fix how that particular sum is to be distributed. Balfour v. Cooper (App.), 495

—— application to Parliament: jurisdiction to charge costs on infant's estate. See INFANT, 3.

—— election to confirm: married woman. See ELECTION, 1.

—— fraud on creditors. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

—— maintenance: trust or power: ability of father. See INFANT, 2.

—— mortgage: transfer in blank: power of sale. See MORTGAGE, 7.

—— power: insufficient fund: priority of appointees. See POWER, 6.

—— power to lease: mining lease. See POWER, 5.

—— sale by tenant-for-life: solicitor's remuneration. See SOLICITOR, 5.

Sewerage—powers of local board. See NUISANCE; PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

Sheriff—fi. fa.: wrongful seizure: action: interpleader: costs]—On the 20th of August the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against A, took possession of B's furniture in A's house. Both before and after seizure B gave formal notice to the sheriff that the furniture was his, and on the 23rd issued the writ in this action against the sheriff for an injunction and damages. On the 25th of August the sheriff issued an interpleader summons, under which an issue was directed and an order made for the sheriff withdrawing from possession on payment of 100*l.* into Court. The sheriff accordingly withdrew from possession on the 1st of September. B's title was afterwards admitted by the judgment creditor, and the 100*l.* paid out of Court to B. B now brought this action to trial against the sheriff for damages and costs:—Held, that the sheriff had not exceeded the scope of his duty in retaining possession till ordered to withdraw under the interpleader order, and that the action must be dismissed, but without costs, on the ground that the sheriff might have applied to the Judge, under the interpleader order, to dispose of the matters in question between him and the plaintiff. Aylwin v. Evans, 105

Shorthand Notes—costs of. See BANKRUPTCY, 25; COSTS, 8, 9.

Solicitor—lien for costs: attorneys and solicitors act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), section 28: "property recovered or preserved"]—The charge to which the Court is empowered, by section 28 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1860, to declare a solicitor entitled for his costs upon the property recovered or preserved, is not confined to the interest in that property of the person who employs the solicitor, unless it is only that particular interest which is recovered or preserved, but extends to the whole property recovered or preserved. Greer v. Young (App.), 915

The fact that an infant is interested in property recovered or preserved does not prevent the Court from declaring a charge upon that property; but the infant should be properly represented before the Court at the time when the application for the charging order is made. Ibid.

Berrie v. Hewitt (39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 119; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1) overruled. Ibid.

2. —— lien for costs: 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28: "property recovered or preserved": extent of charge]—Under section 28 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, the Court can declare a solicitor entitled to a charge for costs on the whole of the property recovered or preserved through his instrumentality, and not merely on his own client's interest in that property. Charlton v. Charlton, 971

Berrie v. Hewitt (39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 319; Law Rep. 9 Eq. 1) not followed. Ibid.

3. —— misrepresentation by, inducing client to advance money on mortgage: death of solicitor: personal action: statute of limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16), s. 3: Lord Tenterden's act (9 Geo. 4. c. 14), s. 6]—A client, in 1869, entrusted money to a solicitor to invest on mortgage of land, trusting to representations by the solicitor (who acted for both parties) that the property was of fee-simple tenure, and free from incumbrances. The mortgagor died in 1879, and the solicitor died in 1881, when the client discovered that part of the property was only leasehold for lives, and also that the solicitor held a prior mortgage on part of the lands. In an action to make the solicitor's estate liable for the deficiency of the security,—Held, that though on the evidence the solicitor would have had no defence to the action if brought in his lifetime, yet it was not maintainable against his executors. Held also, that the solicitor's mortgage must be postponed to the plaintiff's mortgage. Young v. Wallingford, 590

4. —— solicitors act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37 : bill of costs : signature : delivery]—A bill of costs for professional work done in part by one firm of solicitors and in part by another firm who have succeeded to the practice of the first firm is properly signed and delivered so as to enable the new firm to sue for and recover the whole costs, if, though itself unsigned, it is delivered together with a letter signed by the new firm referring to the bill. Professional work was done by a firm, which consisted at first of R. & P., and afterwards of P. & G. practising under the name of R., P. & G., the business and debts of R. & P. having been transferred to R., P. & G. Bills for the costs of the whole work were delivered unsigned, but enclosed with a letter signed by R., P. & G. referring to the bills :—Held, that the bills were properly signed and delivered to enable R., P. & G. to sue for and recover the whole amount—as to the earlier items, as assignees of R. & P.; as to the later items, in their own right. Penley v. Anstruther, 367

5. —— solicitors' remuneration act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), order I. rule 4 : order II. rule 2 : settled land act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 53 : remuneration : sale by tenant-for-life : auction : private contract : mortgagees : general orders under]—A tenant-for-life put up a settled estate for sale by auction at a reserve price at which no sale was effected, but on the same day the estate was sold by private contract :—Held, that the trustees ought to pay, out of the proceeds of sale, to the solicitor of the tenant-for-life commission for conducting the sale by auction, including the conditions of sale, and also commission for deducing the title and perusing and completing the conveyance, but not, under the circumstances of this case, an additional commission for negotiating the sale by private contract. In re Beck's Settled Estates, 815

The tenant-for-life had mortgaged his life interest, and the mortgagees employed separate solicitors :—Held, that the trustees ought to pay out of the proceeds of sale the charges of the mortgagees' solicitors in connection with the sale. Ibid.

—— bill of costs : taxation : third party clause. See COSTS, 10.

—— change of country solicitors : notice of appeal : signature of solicitor. See PRACTICE, 2.

—— executor : right of retainer. See EXECUTOR.

—— goodwill of business of. See PARTNERSHIP.

—— lien : costs : set-off. See COSTS, 7.

—— London agents : production of documents at office of. See PRACTICE, 22.

—— payment of purchase-money to : sale by trustees. See CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1.

—— purchase by solicitor of trustee or executor. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, 9.

—— service on : attachment. See PRACTICE, 7.

—— tenant-for-life, of : not to be appointed trustee under Settled Land Act. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 7.

Specific Gift—ademption. See WILL, 22.

Specific Performance—damages in lieu of : misrepresentation : Lord Cairns' act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27)]—In a purchaser's action for specific performance a plaintiff cannot recover damages for breach of contract unless he establishes misrepresentation on the part of the defendant. The object and intention of Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), which gives the Court jurisdiction to award damages in substitution for specific performance in all cases in which the Court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for specific performance, was not to give any new right to damages, b to prevent the mischief arising from two distinct methods of procedure, which, previously to the time of its passing, were in existence. In no case where damages could not previously have been recovered at law can they now be obtained under Lord Cairns' Act. The Rock Portland Cement Co. (Lim.) v. Wilson, 214

Semble,—In a contract for a lease the words

"immediate possession if required" do not fix the commencement of the term. Ibid.

2. Specific Performance (continued)—defeasible title]—The Court will not enforce a contract for sale at the instance of the vendor when it is in the power of a third person to destroy the title. Brewer v. Broadwood, 136

An action by the vendor for the specific performance of a contract to purchase a building agreement for a lease was dismissed where the conditions of the agreement on the part of the builder had not been complied with. Ibid.

—— agreement for lease: "proper clauses." See LEASE, 1.

—— chattels: injunction: negative clause. See INJUNCTION.

—— contract by local board not under seal. See PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 2.

—— misrepresentation by agent. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1.

Stamp—unstamped deed: title. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 6.

Statute—construction: marginal notes]—Dictum of JESSEL, M.R., in In re Venour's Settled Estates (45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 409; Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 522, at p. 525), that marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament are part of the Act, corrected. Sutton v. Sutton (App.), 333

—— construction of: easement, statutory, or privilege. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 5.

—— construction: "take." See METROPOLITAN STREET IMPROVEMENTS ACT.

—— construction: whether retrospective. See BILL OF SALE, 1.

Stay of Proceedings—foreign court, action in. See PRACTICE, 27, 28.

Stock Exchange—rules of. See BANKRUPTCY, 20.

Stop Order—priority: notice. See MORTGAGE, 8.

Stoppage in Transitu. See SALE OF GOODS.

Substitution—substitutionary gift. See WILL, 27, 28.

Succession Duty—cesser of: duty on letters of administration: succession duty act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 10 and 41: customs and inland revenue act, 1881 (44 Vict. c. 12), ss. 27 and 41]—In 1855 20,000*l.* was settled upon trust for a husband and wife respectively for life, and after the decease of the survivor for the issue of the marriage who attained twenty-one. There was issue one son, who attained twenty-one, and died intestate in November, 1881. The husband, the survivor, took out letters of administration, on which duty at three per cent., under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, s. 27, was paid, and claimed the whole fund, contending that, under section 41 of the same Act, no further duty was or would become payable either under the settlement or under the estate of the son:—Held, that the wording of section 41 was directly applicable to the present case, and that the father, having paid duty at three per cent., under section 27, on the value of the interest in reversion expectant on his own decease, was not liable to pay any further duty in respect of any succession created by the settlement or under the estate of the son. In re Haygarth's Settlement Trusts, 416

Tenant-for-life—power of sale: appointment of new trustee: pending action: settled land act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3 and 53]—Real estate was settled by will on D for life, with remainders over, and the will appointed two trustees, and empowered them to sell at the request and by the direction of the person entitled to the actual freehold, with the usual provisions for re-investment in land and interim investment in other securities. The will also gave a power to appoint new trustees vested in the same person. One of the trustees was dead. D, who was over eighty years of age, proposed to sell the estate. The remaindermen brought this action for the appointment of a new trustee and to restrain the sale as improper, adducing evidence to shew that the estate would sell to better advantage at a future date, owing to the existence of minerals at present unworked, and a projected railway which would pass through the estate. D had no re-investment in land in view, and proposed to invest in Consols. After action brought, the Settled Land Act, 1882, came into operation; and shortly before the action came on for trial, D, under the power in the will, appointed a new trustee without referring the appointment to the Court. The trustees consented to the proposed sale:—Held, that D was entitled to sell the estate as well under the power in the will as under the Settled Land Act. Held also, that the new trustee was properly appointed, notwithstanding the pending action. Thomas v. Williams, 603

2. ——power to postpone conversion: unconverted personalty subsequently falling in: apportionment between capital and income: compound interest]—Where a will contains a power for trustees at their discretion to postpone conversion, and outstanding personal estate of the testator has, together with arrears of interest thereon, fallen in many years after the date of the testator's death, the proper mode of apportionment between tenant-for-life and remaindermen is to ascertain what sum put out at compound interest at four per cent. from the date of the death of the testator would have, less income tax, produced at the date of the receipt the amount actually received; and the sum so ascertained is to be treated as capital, and the difference as income. In re The Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts, 958

Beavan v. Beavan (ROMILLY, M.R., February 22, 1869), reported and followed. Ibid.

—— lease by. See POWER, 4, 5.

—— powers of tenant-for-life under Settled Land Act and under settlement. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 3.

—— tenant-for-life and remainderman: purchase of Government annuities to satisfy annuities given by will. See WILL, 2.

—— sale by tenant-for-life: notice to trustees. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 2.

Title. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 4–6.

Title-deeds—delivery up of, in foreclosure action. See MORTGAGE, 6.

Tort — actio personalis: survival of cause of action. See PRACTICE, 16; SOLICITOR, 13; TRESPASS.

Trade Mark or Name—infringement]—The defendants, manufacturers of sewing machines, issued trade circulars which described certain sewing machines, therein stated to be manufactured by the defendants, as "Singer Sewing Machines," "Singer Systems." The circulars were sent only to wholesale dealers. The plaintiffs complained of the use of the name "Singer," on the ground that it had no other meaning than that the machines so named were manufactured by the plaintiffs, and that there was no system or principle common to such machines:—Held, that as the circulars expressly stated that the machines were manufactured by the defendants, and as they were issued only to persons who would certainly not be misled, the defendants had evidently not intended to represent their machines as manufactured by the plaintiffs, and had not infringed the plaintiffs' trade-mark. The Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (H.L.), 481

2. —— infringement: injunction: innocent consignee: costs]—The defendant, a manufacturer of earthenware, ordered 5,000 cigars to be consigned to him by a foreign dealer. He bought the cigars for family use, and until he was served with the writ had not only been unaware of the plaintiffs' name as manufacturers of cigars, but had not even seen the boxes consigned to him, nor even known that they had any brand. The cigars were forwarded to this country in boxes bearing a spurious brand purporting to be that of the plaintiffs. In an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling the cigars, for destruction of the boxes, and for damages, the defendant, immediately after service of the writ, offered the plaintiffs all the relief asked for; and, at the hearing of a motion for an interim injunction, assented to an undertaking in the terms of the writ, the question of costs being reserved:—Held, that the defendant had committed an infringement of the plaintiff's trade-mark, and must therefore pay the costs of the action. Upmann v. Forester, 946

3. —— mortgagee, action by: injunction: personal goodwill]—The mortgagee of the goodwill of a business and the right to use a trade name (who has never used the name, and does not allege that he intends to do so) cannot obtain an injunction to restrain persons claiming under the mortgagor from carrying on the business under the name. Beazley v. Soares, 201

Trader—Bankruptcy Act, under: who is. See BANKRUPTCY, 17, 18

Trespass—survival of cause of action: wrongful user of wayleave: judgment for compensation and damages for the trespass: enquiry as to damages: death of wrong-doer pending enquiry: cesser of cause of action: application of "actio personalis moritur cum persona"]—It is not every wrongful act, attended with advantage to a wrongdoer, that warrants an action against his executors. Appropriation of property, or the proceeds or value of property, by the deceased wrongdoer should be shewn—per COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J. Phillips v. Homfray. Homfray v. Phillips (App.), 833

In an action for compensation for tortious user of underground ways under the plaintiffs' land, judgment was given for the plaintiffs, and enquiries were directed as to —2. What quantities of coal had been conveyed; 3. What amount ought to be paid by the defendants for wayleave and royalty; 4. Whether the property of the plaintiffs had sustained any and what damage by reason of the manner in which the defendants had worked the coal. While these enquiries were being proceeded with, one of the defendants died. On motion by his executrix that the enquiries might be stayed as against her,—Held, per COTTON, L.J., and BOWEN, L.J., reversing the decision of PEARSON, J., ante, p. 401 (dissentiente BAGGALLAY, L.J.), that, although a personal benefit had accrued to the deceased defendant from his tortious user of the wayleave, it could not be said that there was anything amongst his assets that in law or equity belonged to the plaintiffs; and, therefore, that as the claims of the plaintiffs to which the second and third enquiries were directed were claims for unliquidated damages in respect of a trespass, and the object of those enquiries was to assess such unliquidated damages, such claims and the enquiries that related to them did not survive against the executrix of the deceased defendant. Held further, per Curiam, affirming the decision of PEARSON, J., that the subject-matter of the fourth enquiry, being a pure claim for damages for a wrongful act which did not result in any benefit to the wrongdoer, did not survive against the executrix of the wrongdoer. Ibid.

Humbly v. Trott (1 Cowp. 374) discussed and considered.

Trial. See PRACTICE, 30.

Trust and Trustee—appointment: Lord Cranworth's act (23 & 24 Vict c. 145), s. 27: executor: power to compromise]—An appointment under Lord Cranworth's Act of one trustee of a will which appointed two trustees was held good. The West of England Bank v. Murch. In re Thomas W. Booker and Co., 784

A sale of a partnership interest in real and leasehold and other property by an executrix and trustee in consideration of cash, paid-up shares in a limited company, and extinguishment of debts, was upheld as a compromise. Ibid.

2. —— breach of trust: employment of broker: negligence: loss of trust fund: liability of trustee]—A trustee is bound to conduct the business of the trust in the same manner in which an ordinary prudent man of business would conduct his own, and beyond that there is no liability or obligation on the trustee. In re Speight; Speight v. Gaunt (App.), 503

Therefore a trustee is authorised to employ agents to do that which in the ordinary course of business other people would employ agents to do; and if at the time of their employment such agents are in good repute, and the trustee has no reason to doubt their fitness, he is not to be held responsible for the dishonesty or insolvency of the agents. Ibid.

The Court should not be astute in finding reasons for fixing a trustee with liability; the law is not to be strained against him to make him liable for what he has done in the exercise of his duty, unless a plain case is made against him. Ibid.

A trustee directed a broker to invest 15,000*l.* in the securities of three corporations. On the 24th of February the broker handed the trustee what purported to be a bought-note for 5,000*l.* debenture stock of three corporations (two of which were issuing debentures only). The note named no date for settlement, and contained no charge for commission. But the trustee had made an agreement with the broker that he was to have a net price—the broker having to obtain his commission from the other side. The broker told the trustee he wanted the money for the next day, and the trustee drew three cheques for 5,000*l.* each to the broker's order. The broker misapplied the proceeds of the cheques, and filed a liquidation petition on the 28th of March, and absconded. Between the 25th of February and the 28th of March the trustee made enquiries for the securities, but was told by the broker that they were not ready. Evidence was adduced to shew that experts would have gathered from the bought-note that the bonds were to be purchased from the corporations direct; but the Court held that there was nothing in the form of the note to give such information to an ordinary man of business:—Held (reversing the decision of BACON, V.C.), that the trustee was not liable to make good the loss to the trust fund; that, assuming the broker to be in good repute at the time of his employment, there was no impropriety on the part of the trustee in paying to the broker the purchase-money for the investments. Bostock v. Floyer (35 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 23; Law Rep. 1 Eq. 26) explained; Hopgood v. Parkin (Law Rep. 11 Eq. 74) questioned. Ibid.

3. —— carrying on business: advances: right of creditor against trust estate]—By a deed, made on the marriage of Dr. S., a lunatic asylum was assigned to trustees on trust, at the request of Dr. S. and his wife, during their joint lives, to sell and to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale upon certain trusts (declared by a deed of settlement of even date) for the benefit of Dr. S., his wife and children. By this settlement it was declared that Dr. S. might carry on the business of the asylum for his own benefit without paying any rent. In 1875 Dr. S. filed a liquidation petition; and thereupon the surviving trustee of the settlement carried on the business until, in April, 1876, the asylum was sold for a large sum of money. During this period the plaintiff, a tradesman, supplied the trustee with goods necessary for carrying on the asylum. Afterwards he recovered judgment against the trustee for the price of the goods; and now brought this action, claiming payment of his judgment debt out of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that as, upon the true construction of the deed and settlement of even date, the assets of the business between the date of the liquidation petition and the sale were part of the property of Dr. S., the trustee would have had no right to recover moneys advanced by him for the purpose of carrying on the asylum; and that, consequently, the plaintiff had no right to stand in his place against the trust estate. Strickland v. Symons, 423

4. —— cestui que trust: conflicting interests: benefits acquired by trustee transferred to trust estate]—A trustee will not be permitted to place himself in a position in which his personal interests will conflict with those of the trust; and if he does place himself in such a position, and acquires benefits from so doing, those benefits will be transferred to the trust estate. Bennett v. The Gaslight and Coke Company, 98

On the insolvency of a person who had a lucrative agency agreement with a gas company for the sale by him, at a commission, of their sulphate of ammonia, the company renewed the agency agreement for a limited period to two of the trustees of the insolvent's estate appointed by a creditors' trust deed for the benefit of the estate. Before the expiration of that agreement and the winding up of the trust, one of those two trustees obtained for his firm from the company a fresh agency agreement, to commence from the expiration of that agreement, and to be on less lucrative, though still beneficial, terms:—Held, that the trustee was not at liberty, by obtaining a fresh agreement for the benefit of his own firm, to render it contrary to his own interest to press for a renewal of the old agreement, or a grant of a new one, for the benefit of the trust estate, and that the interest of the trustee under the fresh agreement must be transferred to the trust estate. Hamilton v. Wright (9 Cl. & F. 111) followed. Ibid.

5. —— discretionary powers: practice: administration action: appointment of new trustee after decree]—It is now the settled practice of the Court not to interfere, even after an administration decree, with trustees in the bona fide exercise of their discretionary powers; but the Court must be satisfied that the power is being properly exercised. In re Gadd. Eastwood v. Clarke (App.), 396

A power to appoint new trustees is a discretionary power. The right to appoint is vested in the donee of the power, and the Court sanctions the appointment if satisfied that the nominee is a fit and proper person; but if the Court disapproves of the nominee, then the donee of the power must nominate another person. Ibid.

Quære,—Whether repeated nominations of unfit persons by the donee of the power would not amount to a breach of trust or a refusal to act, and thereby give the Court jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee. Ibid.

6. —— indemnity: quia timet: company: shares: winding-up]—A trustee of partly paid up shares in a company in liquidation is not entitled to a judgment for indemnity against his cestui que trust without evidence that a call will be made. Hughes Hallett v. The Indian Mammoth Gold Mines Co. (Lim.) 418

7. —— investment on mortgage of agricultural land: valuation: rule as to two-thirds of value: liability of trustee]—In 1869 M. purchased a farm of 147 acres from the governors of Christ's Hospital for 6,895*l.*, being the valuation then made on behalf of the vendors. In 1870 G. and F., trustees of a will (with power to lend on contributory mortgage), advanced 2,400*l.*, while another person advanced 2,600*l.*, making 5,000*l.* in all, on contributory mortgage to M. on the farm. G. was one of the governors of Christ's Hospital, and also solicitor to the hospital, and also to the trust estate. No independent valuation was made on behalf of the mortgagees, but they relied on the valuation made on behalf of the vendors. Owing to agricultural depression the farm went out of cultivation and could not be let or sold, and M., the mortgagor, became insolvent. In an action by the beneficiary to make the trustees liable for the loss sustained,—Held, that the trustees had not acted otherwise than prudent men would have acted in the conduct of their own affairs, and were not liable. In re Godfrey. Godfrey v. Faulkner, 820

The rule that trustees are not to advance more than two-thirds of the value of agricultural land is not to be applied with mathematical accuracy. Ibid.

8. —— power to invest in real estate: purchase of property of greater value than amount of trust funds: advance of part of purchase-money by trustee: lien of trustee]—Under a power in a settlement trustees purchased real estate at a price greater than the whole amount of the trust funds, and in order to supply the deficiency, part of the purchase-money was borrowed by P., one of the trustees. On the death of P.,—Held, that his estate was entitled to a lien upon the purchased property for the amount advanced by him, subject, however, to the first charge of the trust estate for the full amount of the trust fund; and liberty was given to the trustee to apply to realise such lien. In re Pumfrey. The Worcester City and County Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Blick, 228

9. Trust and Trustee (continued)—solicitor and client: administration: sale]—C. was the solicitor of an executor, the defendant in a creditor's administration action. A life interest, part of the estate, was put up for sale, and C. obtained leave to bid. The interest was sold, after an abortive auction, to C. by private contract:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside by reason of non-disclosure by C. of circumstances affecting the value of the life interest. Boswell v. Coaks, 465

The trustee of an estate in bankruptcy had a large claim against an insolvent estate. Before the claim was admitted he joined in the purchase of assets of the latter estate:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside, Ibid.

—— agreement for lease by tenant-for-life: power of trustees to grant lease. See POWER, 2.

—— appointment of, by tenant-for-life under power pending action. See TENANT-FOR-LIFE, 1.

—— bankrupt trustee: costs of, in administration action. See COSTS, 1.

—— costs, charges and expenses: action to set aside voluntary settlement. See VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.

—— defaulting: attachment: inability to pay. See ATTACHMENT.

—— express trust: Statute of Limitations. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, 4.

—— maintenance: ability of father. See INFANT, 2.

—— precatory trust: "full confidence." See WILL, 24.

—— sale by trustees of real estate purchased in breach of trust: concurrence of one beneficiary. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 5.

—— sale by trustees: payment of purchase-money. See CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1.

—— sale of settled estate: costs payable by trustee. See SOLICITOR, 5.

—— sale: Settled Land Act: concurrence of beneficiaries. See SETTLED LAND ACT, 3.

—— set-off of costs by trustee. See COSTS, 7.

—— trust for sale: operative, though beneficiaries all sui juris. See PARTITION, 2.

—— to brick up house: invalidity of. See WILL, 19.

—— wilful default: practice. See ADMINISTRATION 2, 3.

Trustee Acts—appointment of new trustee: personal incapacity: trustee act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), s. 32]—Under section 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, the Court can appoint a new trustee in place of a trustee who, by age and infirmity, is incapable of acting as trustee. In re Lemann's Trusts, 560

In re Bignold's Trusts (41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 235; Law Rep. 7 Chanc. 223) considered. Ibid.

2. —— appointment of new trustees: will of deceased lunatic: trustee act, 1850, s. 32: trustee extension act, 1852, ss. 9 and 10: affidavit of fitness]—Where the trustees appointed by the will of a deceased lunatic both predecease the lunatic, the Court has jurisdiction under section 9 of the Trustee Extension Act, 1852, to appoint new trustees of the will. In re Orde (App.), 832

The affidavit as to the fitness of a new trustee must truly describe the position and occupation of the deponent. The term "gentleman" is an insufficient description. Ibid.

3. —— vesting order: copyholds: trustee act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), ss. 15 and 28]—Where a bare trustee of copyholds has died intestate, and without an heir, the Court has, under sections 15 and 28 of the Trustee Act, 1850, when read together, jurisdiction to make an order vesting the copyholds in the absolute beneficial owner. In re Godfrey's Trusts, 479

Ultra vires. See COMPANY, 4.

—— borrowing powers of company. See BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY.

Uncertainty—condition void for. See WILL, 9.

Unsound Mind, Person of—jurisdiction of Court to elect for. See ELECTION, 1.

Vendor and Purchaser—agent: authority to find a purchaser: false representations: scope of authority]—Where a principal employs an agent to let or to find a purchaser for a house, he authorises the agent to state any fact or circumstance which may relate to the value of the property. Where, therefore, an agent for sale of a house untruly represented to an intending purchaser that a third person was prepared to buy the house at a high price, and if he could not buy it would rent it at a high rent,—Held, that the principal was answerable for the representation by the agent, and could not enforce the contract. Mullens v. Miller, 380

A vendor represented to an intending purchaser that the property had been a security for 2,000*l*., but did not state, as the fact was, that it had proved a wholly insufficient security:—Held, a misrepresentation as to value disentitling the vendor to enforce the contract. Ibid.

2. —— condition of sale: misleading condition]—A condition of sale provided that the commencement of title should be an indenture which was a conveyance not for value of real and leasehold property on trust for the donor for life and then for sale, with power for the donor to revoke the trusts:—Held, that the condition was misleading by reason of its not stating the nature of the deed. Marsh v. Earl Granville, 189

3. —— notice of trust: mortgage-deed: foreclosure: deed of conveyance indorsed upon mortgage-deed]—By a deed of conveyance, dated the 1st of August, 1865 (indorsed upon a mortgage-deed), containing a recital that A (the original mortgagee) held the mortgage-money "on an account, under which C and D were then solely entitled thereto," B (the executrix and devisee under A's will), for a nominal consideration, conveyed the property comprised in the mortgage to C and D:—Held, that a purchaser from C and D might safely rely upon a recital so framed, although it appeared, from recitals in the deed, that B had absolutely foreclosed the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property eleven years before. In re Harman, 808

4. —— title: restrictive covenants: waiver]—A purchaser by making structural alterations after notice of restrictive covenants was held to have waived his right to object to the title on the ground of the restrictions. In re Gloag and Miller's Contract, 654

5. —— title: sale by trustees of real estate purchased in breach of trust: concurrence of one beneficiary: good title]—Trustees under a will which contained a power to sell real estate, but no power of investing the trust funds in real estate, bought real estate and had it conveyed to the trusts of the will:—Held, that they could sell and make a good title to the real estate wrongfully purchased with the trust funds, on obtaining the concurrence in the sale of one of the persons beneficially interested in the trust funds. In re Patten and the Guardians of the Poor of Edmonton Union, 787

6. —— title: unstamped deed: lands clauses consolidation act, 1845]—On a purchase (otherwise than by agreement), from a land society, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, of a plot of land which had been allotted and conveyed by the society to one of its members, and reconveyed by the allottee to the society, the deed of reconveyance not being stamped: the purchaser is not entitled to require that the deed of reconveyance should be stamped before completion at the vendor's expense, but it is sufficient that the allottee should join with the vendor in the conveyance. In re The Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, 777.

—— forfeiture of deposit. See CONTRACT.

—— sale by tenant-for-life: mortgage of life interest: solicitor's remuneration. See SOLICITOR, 5.

—— sale by trustees: payment of purchase-money to solicitor. See CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY ACT, 1.

—— specific performance of contract. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Vendor's Lien—exoneration: Locke King's Act. See ADMINISTRATION, 1.

Vesting Order. See TRUSTEE ACTS, 3.

Vestry—corporation: improper application of parish rates: injunction against corporation: individual vestrymen made parties: costs]—Members of a vestry who had voted for an illegal application of parish funds, were made co-defendants with the vestry to an action to restrain such application of parish funds, and costs were claimed against the defendants other than the vestry. The vestry submitted to a perpetual injunction:—Held, that the individual vestrymen ought not to have been made defendants, inasmuch as no wrongful application had been made, and could not be ordered to pay the costs of the action. The Attorney-General v. The Vestry of Bermondsey (App.), 567

Voluntary Settlement—costs of trustee: contract for: appeal for costs only: materiality of provisions in settlement]—Where the Court is asked to set aside a voluntary settlement, the question to be considered is whether the settlor really understood what he was about in making the settlement, and the particular provisions in the settlement are immaterial, except in so far as their character shews that the settlor could not have understood the effect of the settlement. Dutton v. Thompson (App.), 661

Where a settlement has been set aside, the contract of trusteeship under which a trustee is held to contract for payment of his costs, charges and expenses, cannot be treated as existing, and an appeal against the order of a Judge directing the trustee to pay the costs is an appeal for costs within section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and is not within the decision of Turner v. Hancock (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 517; Law Rep. 20 Ch. D. 303). Ibid.

—— fraud on creditors. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

Waiver. See COVENANT, 2.

Water—right to flowing water: riparian owner]—An action by an inferior riparian owner, to restrain the use of water taken from and returned to a stream by a non-riparian owner, will not lie unless diminution or pollution of the water is proved. Kensit v. The Great Eastern Railway Company, 608.

Riparian rights considered. Ibid.

—— nuisance: sewage: local board: watercourse. See NUISANCE; PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS, 3.

Water Company—supply of water for bath: measurement of water consumed: consumer to provide and pay for means of measurement]—The plaintiff company supplied water for various purposes, including domestic baths. The baths were supplied by the company keeping the water in their mains at high pressure, and the consumer making a connection between the main and his bath, and drawing off the water into his bath as required. The water used in the bath was paid for according to the quantity consumed:—Held, that the consumer was bound to measure the water drawn off by him for the purposes of his bath; that a mode of measurement by placing a line round the bath, so that, if filled up to that line, the bath would contain a certain quantity of water, and then causing to be entered in a calendar the number of times during the year on which the bath was so filled, was imperfect and unsatisfactory; and that the consumer must, at his own expense, supply or hire an automatic self-registering meter, or accurately measure the water taken by some other equally accurate instrument, or in some other equally accurate way. The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bingham, 624

The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Carter (51 Law J. Rep. M.C. 97; Law Rep. 8 Q.B. D. 26) distinguished. Ibid.

Way, Right of—pleading: Order XIX. rule 4]—In an action claiming a right of way over a farm, the mode of claim, whether by prescription or grant, and the termini and general course of the way should be pleaded. Harris v. Jenkins, 437

Wayleave—wrongful user: action against executors: actio personalis. See TRESPASS.

Wilful Default. See ADMINISTRATION, 2, 3.

Will—annuity: during widowhood: nullity of marriage: misdescription]—A testator gave his wife a legacy of 200*l.* and an annuity so long as she should continue his widow, or at her option a legacy of 2,000*l.* in lieu of such annuity. The person described as wife obtained a declaration of nullity of marriage:—Held, that she was entitled to the legacy of 200*l.*, but not to the annuity or legacy of 2,000*l.* In re Boddington. Boddington v. Clariat, 239

2. —— annuity: insufficient estate: rights of tenant-for-life and remainderman]—A testatrix, by her will, bequeathed pecuniary legacies and annuities; and, subject to the bequests thereinbefore contained, she gave the residue to A for life, with remainders over. The estate was not sufficient to satisfy the annuities and pay the pecuniary legacies; but if Government annuities were purchased for the annuitants out of the corpus, there would be enough left to pay the pecuniary legacies and leave a small surplus:—Held, as between the tenant-for-life and the remaindermen, that the tenant-for-life was not entitled to have Government annuities purchased to satisfy the annuitants; but that the income must be applied, so far as it would extend, in paying the annuities, recourse being had from time to time to the capital to make up the deficiency. In re Grant. Walker v. Martineau, 552

3. —— annuity: whether given free of income-tax: "deduction"]—A testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary personal estate, upon trust, by and out of the income thereof, to pay to his widow "the clear yearly sum" of 1,000*l.* for life; the said annuity "to be paid free from all deductions and abatements whatsoever":—Held, that the words of the gift were not sufficient to entitle the widow to have the income-tax paid by the trustees out of the testator's residuary personal estate. Gleadow v. Leetham, 102

4. —— annuity: whether given free of income tax: res judicata]—A testator directed his trustees to hold certain real and residuary personal estate upon trust, to pay thereout to his widow for life such an annual sum as, together with the income of a settled fund of 10,000*l.*, "shall produce to her a clear annual income of 1,500*l.*," and declared that "no deduction shall be made from any of the legacies given by this my will for the legacy tax, or any other matter, cause or thing whatsoever." The testator's estate had been administered by the Court, and by orders made in 1861 and 1863, the trustees had been directed to pay the annuity to the widow during her life, or until further order, free of all deductions except income-tax. On petition by the widow, in 1882, that the income tax, which had been deducted from her annuity during the previous years, might be repaid to her out of the testator's estate,—Held, that the orders of 1861 and 1863 were final as to the rights of the parties, and could not now be reconsidered; but, semble, those orders were right. Pearcth v. Marriott (App.), 221

Quære,—Whether In re Bannerman; Bannerman v. Young (51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 449) is good law. Ibid.

5. —— appointment: wills act (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 27]—Real estate was settled on the wife of J. G. for life, with remainder to such uses as J. G. should by deed or writing sealed and delivered appoint, with remainder to J. G. for life, with remainders over. The settlement contained a power to sell and a direction to invest the proceeds on real estate, and in the mean time on personal securities. The estate was sold and invested in bank annuities, which at J. G.'s death stood in the name of W. as sole trustee. J. G., who died in his wife's lifetime, by his will sealed and delivered bequeathed all moneys he died possessed of, whether in the public funds or in the care of W.:—Held, that the bequest did not pass the bank annuities. In re Greares' Settlement, 753

6. —— charge of debts: legal estate: general intention of will preferred to particular words]—A testator directed his executors to pay his debts, &c., and after bequests of sums of money, some of which were to be invested by the executors for the benefit of the beneficiaries, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and four daughters "in manner and form following." He then directed that the residue of his real and personal estate should be equally divided between his wife and daughters, and that his wife should enjoy her share for life; and that after her death his surviving executor should distribute her share among his daughters, or if a daughter should not survive his wife, such daughter's share should be distributed among her children; and he appointed an executor and an executrix, the latter being his wife, "to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions" of his will. After the death of the testator and his wife, and while the pecuniary bequests were still not fully satisfied, the surviving executor contracted to sell a part of the residuary realty:—Held, that he could sell the realty, and pass the legal estate therein, and make a good title thereto. In re Davies to Jones and Evans, 720

Oates d. Markham v. Cooke (3 Burr. 1684) and Anthony v. Rees (2 Cr. & J. 75; 1 Law J. Rep. Exch. 44) considered and followed. Ibid.

7. —— class, gift to: gift to children of A and B: lapse: direction to vest at testator's death]—A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay legacies, and subject thereto "unto and equally amongst all the children of my said brother-in-law, Dr. J. D., and the said R. A., and I direct that the same shall be vested legacies at the time of my decease":—Held, that the gift was to the children of Dr. J. D. and R. A. himself. In re Featherstone's Trusts, 75

R. A. having died during the testator's lifetime,—Held, also, that the words directing the vesting of the legacies indicated an intention on the part of the testator to give the whole of the residue to such only of the residuary legatees as should be living at his death. Ibid.

8. —— codicil: construction: confirmation of will by codicil: implied revocation of intermediate codicil]—G. F., by his will dated in 1875, after making certain specific bequests, gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his children in equal shares. By a codicil in February, 1878, he revoked a legacy given to his daughter M., and increased a legacy given to his daughter E., and concluded, "In all other respects I confirm my said will." In November, 1878, he made a second codicil, commencing, "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, G. F."; and after reciting that he was desirous of "altering" the residuary devise contained in his said will, and of making the specific devise thereinafter contained, he devised a certain house to his son W. and to C. P. in fee as tenants-in-common, and the codicil ended, "and in all other respects I hereby ratify and confirm my said will." He afterwards executed a third codicil, which commenced, "This is a codicil to the last will of me, G. F., bearing date on or about the 27th of February, 1875," by which, after reciting a promise made several years before to that effect, he directed his executors to grant to his daughter-in-law L. an underlease of a certain house, and gave to his wife a legacy of 50*l.* in addition to the benefit which she derived from his "said will"; and the codicil ended thus: "In all other respects I confirm my said will, except as altered by a certain codicil thereto made in 1878, whereby I revoked a legacy given to my daughter M.":—Held, that the words of confirmation used by the testator in his third codicil must be construed as meaning that he did not intend to alter his general testamentary disposition further than by making the gifts contained in that codicil, and that an intention to revoke the second codicil was not shewn with sufficient clearness to enable the Court to reject the devise thereby made. Follett v. Pettman, 521

9. Will (continued)—condition: defeasance: uncertainty]—A condition attached to a gift by way of defeasance must be definite in ascertainment of its operation as well as in its terms. Viscount Exmouth v. Praed, 420

A condition attached to a bequest of heirlooms to go with a title—that no person should acquire an absolute interest till twenty-one years after the death of all persons alive at the death of the testator who should attain the title,—Held void for the uncertainty of the mode in which it would operate. Ibid.

10. —— contingent future interest, transmissibility of: heirlooms: tenant-in-tail: heirlooms and personal estate resting in tenant-in-tail not indefeasibly entitled]—A testator directed that certain chattels should be considered as heirlooms, and should pass with his real estate in the same manner as if they were an estate of inheritance at common law, and should so continue annexed to his real estate as long as the law would permit. He devised and bequeathed all his real and residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for R. C. for life, and after his decease for his sons successively in tail male; and then upon trust for H. C., the eldest son of J. C., for life, and after his decease for his sons successively in tail male; and then upon trust for "the next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said H.C.," for life, and after his decease upon trust for "the first and other sons of the body of the said next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said H. C." successively in tail male; and, in default of such issue, upon trust for the testator's own right heirs. R. C. and H. C. both died without having married. G. C. was the next eldest son of J. C., who survived H. C. F. J. C., who was the eldest son of G. C., died an infant in the lifetime of R. C. and H. C.:—Held, that notwithstanding that F. J. C. died before it was ascertained whether his father would survive H. C., or whether there would be issue male of R. C. or H. C., the heirlooms and residuary personal estate vested absolutely in the legal personal representative of F. J. C. In re Cresswell. Parkin v. Cresswell, 798

Hogg v. Jones (32 Beav. 45; 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 361) distinguished. Ibid.

11. —— contingent remainder or executory devise: devise to children living at death of tenant-for-life or "thereafter to be born"]—A testator, who died in 1860, devised freehold hereditaments to his wife for life, and from and after her decease unto all and every the children of his son "living at the time of the decease of his (the testator's) said wife or thereafter to be born" equally as tenants in common. The son had several children, some born before, and some after, the death of the testator's widow:—Held, that the gift in remainder was an executory devise and not a contingent remainder, and that, therefore, all the children of the son whenever born were entitled to share. Miles v. Jarris, 796

In re Lechmere and Lloyd (Law Rep. 18 Ch. D. 524) followed. Brackenbury v. Gibbons (Law Rep. 2 Ch. D. 417) not followed. Ibid.

12. —— description of legatee: gift to great-nephews, sons of testator's nephew: legitimation of ante natus by subsequent marriage of parents: domicil]—A bequest of personalty in an English will to the children of a foreigner means to his legitimate children; and by international law, as recognised in England, those children are legitimate whose legitimacy is fixed by the law of the father's domicil. In re Andros. Andros v. Andros, 793

A testator bequeathed personal estate to "his great-nephews, the sons of his deceased nephew T. G. A." T. G. A. was a native of Guernsey. The plaintiff was the son of T. G. A., born before the marriage of his parents, who were domiciled in Guernsey at the time of his birth and of their marriage. By the law of Guernsey, children are legitimated by the subsequent marriage of their parents:—Held, that as the plaintiff's father was domiciled in Guernsey at the plaintiff's birth, and afterwards married his mother, so as to make him legitimate by the law of Guernsey, he was entitled to share in the bequest with the sons of T. G. A. born after the marriage. Ibid.

In re Goodman's Trusts (50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 425; Law Rep. 17 Ch. D. 266) and Boyes v. Bedale (1 Hem. & M. 798; 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 283) considered. Ibid.

13. —— description of legatee: "husband": divorce: "survive"]—A life interest was given by will on the death of a daughter of the testator to "any husband with whom she might intermarry if he should survive her":—Held, that a divorced husband who survived her took. In re Bullmore. Bullmore v. Wynter, 456

14. —— description of legatee: bequest of personalty to A and the heirs of his body]—A bequest of personalty to A and the heirs of his body, or to A and the heirs of his body in equal proportions, prima facie, and in the absence of indications to the contrary in the will, gives A an absolute interest. In re Barker's Trusts, 565

A will bequeathed "to W. B. and to the heirs of his body in equal proportions" the interest of the testator's residuary personal estate, "and in the event of W. B. dying during the life of S. H. without leaving heirs of his body," the interest of the residuary estate was given to S. H. for life; then "at the decease of S. H., W. B. and the heirs of his body," the residuary estate and interest were directed to be accumulated for a hospital:—Held, that W. B. took an absolute interest in the residuary estate. Ibid.

15. —— executor: undisposed-of residue: no next-of-kin: legacy to executors for care and trouble]—Testatrix devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to H. and G. upon trust for conversion and payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies, and the ultimate residue of her said real and personal estate she gave equally between H. and G. for their own use and benefit absolutely. She then appointed H. and G. executors and trustees of that her will. By codicil she revoked the gift of the ultimate residue to H. and G., and instead thereof gave them each 500*l.* for his trouble in acting as an executor and trustee of her said will. Testatrix died without leaving any heir-at-law or next-of-kin. There was a considerable amount of residuary personal estate:—Held, that on the face of the will and codicil the executors were not intended to take anything more than the 500*l.* legacies, and that the Crown was therefore entitled as against them to the undisposed-of residuary personal estate. In re Mary Hudson's Trusts, 789

16. —— gift over: "dying": lapse]—A testator gave legacies to three persons, and directed that, in the event of any of them dying, his legacy should go between the others, and he gave the residue to the same persons as tenants-in-common. The testator and one legatee were killed by the same catastrophe, and there was no evidence to shew which survived:—Held, that "dying" meant dying in the testator's lifetime, and there was a lapse of one share of the residue. In re Elliott. Elliott v. Smith, 222

17. —— implication: life interest by implication]—By deed, personalty was settled on trust for the wife for life, and after her death to pay the income during the husband's life as the wife should by will appoint; and if no children, then in the event which happened in trust for her appointees by will, remainder to her statutory next-of-kin. The wife, by will, appointed the fund after her husband's death, "but not to affect the income thereof during his life," to some (but not all) of her next-of-kin:—Held, that her husband did not take a life interest by implication. Woodhouse v. Spurgeon, 825

18. —— inconsistent gifts: residue]—A testator gave his residue upon exhaustive trusts for his daughters, sons and a granddaughter in unequal shares, and made a second residuary gift in favour of the same persons in equal shares:—Held, that the first gift must prevail. Bristow v. Mascfield, 27

19. —— invalid gift: direction to brick up house and furniture for twenty years: wills act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3]—Testatrix devised her freehold dwelling-house, yard, garden and outbuildings, and also her furniture, to trustees, with directions to them to block up the doors, windows and chimneys of the house, except the kitchens and hall, and to leave the house with the furniture in it so blocked up for the period of twenty years from her death; and further, to put a married couple in the occupation of the kitchens, garden and outbuildings, at a nominal rent of one halfpenny per week, in consideration of their looking after the premises, and in particular the blockade; and after the determination of the term of twenty years, and subject to the trusts aforesaid, the testatrix devised the premises to devisees beneficially:—Held, that the trusts of the real and personal estate were invalid, and that such real and personal estate passed as undisposed of for the term of twenty years from the death of the testatrix. Brown v. Burdett, 52

20. —— lapse: gift to daughter: gift to child: direction to settle: death of child in lifetime of testator, leaving children: wills act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 33]—A testator gave his residue to trustees in trust for his eight children in equal shares, and directed that the share of his daughter, Mrs. B., if she should survive him, should be deemed to be part of the funds comprised in her marriage settlement and subject to the trusts thereof. Mrs. B. died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving children who survived him:—Held, that as by the operation of the 33rd section of the

Wills Act Mrs. B. must be taken to have survived the testator her share must be paid to the trustees of her settlement. In re Hone's Trusts, 295

21. Will (continued)—lapse: married woman: power: appointment: lapse of appointed share]—By the will of a married woman she declared a desire that it should operate over all property which she had power to appoint, and she named executors and trustees. She then made a specific appointment, which failed by lapse:—Held, that the lapsed share belonged to her estate. In re Willoughby-Osborne. Willoughby-Osborne v. Holyoake, 331

22. —— legacy: specific legacy: ademption: lunacy: sale in lunacy of stock specifically bequeathed by lunatic: lunacy regulation act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 70), ss. 118 and 119]—Where a testator specifically bequeathed railway stock, and, after the date of his will, was found lunatic by inquisition, and by an order in lunacy the stock was sold, and the proceeds were invested in Consols, which were carried to the credit of the lunatic to an account entitled "Proceeds of the sale of stock in the G. Railway Company,"—It was held that the specific legacy was adeemed. In re Freer. Freer v. Freer, 301

Jones v. Green (37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 603; Law Rep. 5 Eq. 555) observed upon. Ibid.

23. —— legacy for life: residuary legatee: right to administration by the court]—A legacy was given for the separate use of the legatee, to be invested by trustees to be nominated by her, and after her death to fall into the residue:—Held, that the residuary legatee had no right to have the fund brought into Court in the absence of reasonable ground for the application, such as danger to the fund. In re Braithwaite; Braithwaite v. Wallis, 15

24. —— precatory trust: "full confidence"]—A testator gave all his property to his wife absolutely, "in full confidence that she will do what is right as to the disposal thereof between my children either in her lifetime or by will":—Held, that the wife took an absolute interest. In re Adams, 758

25. —— residuary gift: lapsed and void legacy]—A testatrix bequeathed all her personal estate, except a certain wharf, to C., and devised to C. an annuity charged on the rental of the wharf, such annuity after C.'s death to be paid to other annuitants in succession, and the surplus income of the wharf, after payment of the annuities, to be accumulated for payment of two mortgages on the wharf, and directed her executors, after payment of the annuities and payment and discharge of the two mortgages, to sell the wharf and divide the proceeds among such of her grandchildren as might be then surviving, as C. should appoint. An appointment by C., by her will, of the proceeds of sale of the wharf was, under the circumstances of the case, held void for remoteness:—Held, that the proceeds of sale were a void legacy, and passed to C. under the residuary gift. Blight v. Hartnoll (App.), 672

A gift is not the less a residuary gift because it is in form a gift with an exception of certain legacies. Ibid.

26. —— subject-matter of gift: chose in action: locality: onerous property: election]—A testator domiciled in Great Britain bequeathed all his estate and effects in Mauritius:—Held, to pass debts due from debtors in Mauritius. Guthrie v. Walrond, 165

Prima facie, a beneficiary under a will may disclaim one of two gifts, but must take or reject the whole of a single gift. Ibid.

Held, therefore, that the donee under a will of "estate and effects" in Mauritius could not repudiate onerous leaseholds, part of the gift, and take the rest. Ibid.

27. —— substitution: "to all the children of A or, in event of decease, to their descendants"]—Bequest by will of personal property "to all the children of A or, in event of decease, to their descendants, share and share alike." A had six children, of whom one died before the date of the will leaving a child, and the other five survived the testator:—Held, that the child of the deceased child of A was not entitled to share in the property. In re Webster. Widgen v. Mello, 767

In re Sibley's Trusts (46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 387; Law Rep. 5 Ch. D. 494) considered and distinguished. Ibid.

28. —— substitutionary gift to a class "or their heirs": "surviving": period of survivorship: "heirs" construed "next-of-kin"]—Bequest of personalty, in remainder after life interests, upon trust for sale and division among the "surviving sisters or sister of my wife or their heirs":—Held, that the gift being substitutionary, "heirs" must be construed to mean statutory next-of-kin. Held also, that "surviving" meant surviving the testator. In re Stannard. Stannard v. Burt, 355

Smith v. Butcher (48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 136; Law Rep. 10 Ch. D. 113) explained; Neilson v. Monro (27 W.R. 936) followed. Ibid.

29. —— resting: gift of real and personal estate by different clauses: interim income of real estate: mixed fund: suspense of resting]—Testator devised the residue of his real estate to trustees in trust for A for life; and, after her death, upon trust to apply such part of the rents as should be necessary for the maintenance of B until she should attain twenty-one; and, upon her attaining that age, in trust for her for life; and, after her death, in trust for her child and children who should attain twenty-one; but if no child should attain twenty-one, upon trust to convey to such persons as she should by deed or will appoint. And the testator gave the residue of his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust to convert and invest, and to pay the income to A for life; and, after her death, to B for life; and, after her death, upon trust for her child and children who should attain twenty-one; but if no child should attain twenty-one, as she should by deed or will appoint. B attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A, survived her, and died leaving the plaintiff, her only child, who was still an infant:—Held, that the testator had really mixed up the whole of his real and personal estate in one mass; and that, therefore, the intermediate rents of the real estate, until the same should vest in some person absolutely, must be accumulated, and did not go to the heir-at-law. Williams v. Murrell, 631 —— administration: Locke King's Acts. See ADMINISTRATION 1.

—— appointment: election by appointees. See ELECTION, 2.

—— colonial will: funds in England: English probate. See COLONIAL WILL.

—— power to grant building leases: defective exercise. See POWER, 4.

Winding-up. See COMPANY, 5–17.

Words — "Act of bankruptcy available for adjudication," 204

—— "Being a trader," 431

—— "Book," 67

—— "But not to affect the income thereof during his life," 825

—— "Cash under the control of the Court," 268, 830

—— "Children of A and B," 75

—— "Conflict relative to any matter," 645

—— "Contract necessary for carrying Act into execution," 165

—— "Creditor," 774

—— "Deduction," 102

—— "Defeasance or condition," 39

—— "Dying," 222

—— "Estate and effects," 165

—— "For benefit of wife and children," 642

—— "Full confidence," 758

—— "Goodwill," 537

—— "Heirs," 355

—— "Husband," 456

—— "Land," 306

—— "Minerals," 941

—— "New street," 5

—— "Party to the action," 399

—— "Pleading," 334

—— "Proper clause," 80

—— "Property recovered or preserved," 915, 971

—— "Revenue charge," 377

—— "Separate use," 299, 642

—— "Settled to separate use," 776

—— "Settlement," 726

—— "Superfluous land," 198

—— "Survive," 456

—— "Surviving," 355

—— "Take," 249

—— "To A. and the heirs of his body in equal proportions," 565

—— "Thereafter to be born," 796

Writ of Possession. See PRACTICE 24.

TABLE OF CASES.

CHANCERY DIVISION.—LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, VOL. LII.

Abbott, Ex parte; In re Devala Provident Gold Mining Co., 434
Acton Local Board; Attorney-General v., 108
Adam's Policy Trusts, In re, 642
Adams, In re, 758
Addison; Eadie v., 80
Aitken; Andrew v., 294
Alexandra Palace Co., In re; Ex parte Goodson & Co., 428
Alfreton's Trust Estates, In re, 715
Allnutt, In re; Pott v. Brassey, 299
Amor, Ex parte (App.), 138
Andrew v. Aitken, 294
Andros, In re, 793
—— v. Andros, 793
Angus v. McLachlan, 587
Anstruther; Penley v., 367
Armitage; In re, 711
——; Smith v., 711
Arundell v. Bell (App.), 537
Attorney-General v. Acton Local Board, 108
—— —— v. Bermondsey, Vestry of (App.), 567
—— —— v. Gaskill, 163
Aylwin v. Evans, 105

Badham v. Marris, 237*n*
Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Levinstein, 704
Bailey; Pinnock v., 880
Balfour v. Cooper (App.), 495
Ballard v. Tomlinson, 656
Barker's Trusts, In re, 565
Barton Local Board; Robinson v. (App.), 5
Basham, In re, 408
——; Hannay v., 408
Beazley v. Soares, 201
Beck's Settled Estates, In re, 815
Beeson; Dawson v. (App.), 563
Bellamy, In re, 89; (App.), 870
Bell; Arundell v. (App.), 537
Bennett; Donnell v., 414
—— v. Gaslight and Coke Co., 98
Bermondsey, Vestry of; Attorney-General v. (App.), 567
Berry, In re; Ex parte Wilkinson (App.), 657
Biggs v. Peacock (App.), 1
Bingham; Sheffield Waterworks Co. v., 624
Birch v. Mather, 292
Bird, Ex parte; In re Hill (App.), 903
Bird; Lydney and Wigpool Iron Ore Co. (Lim.) v., 640
Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, In re, 777
Birmingham Brewing and Malting Distilling Co. (Lim.), In re, 358
Birt, In re, 397
—— v. Burt, 397
Bishop of Oxford, Ex parte, 724
Blackburn, &c., Benefit Building Society, In re (App.), 894 —— and District Building Society, Official Liquidator, v. Cunliffe (App.), 92
Blaiberg, Ex parte; In re Toomer (App.), 461
Blick; Worcester City and County Banking Co. (Lim.) v., 228
Blight v. Hartnoll (App.), 672
Bockwoldt; Peruvian Guano Co. v. (App.), 714
Boddington, In re, 239
—— v. Clariat, 239
Bolland, Ex parte; In re Roper (App.), 113
Booker, In re; West of England Bank v. Murch, 784
Boswell v. Coaks, 465
Braithwaite, In re, 15
—— v. Wallis, 15
Brassey; Pott v., 299
Brewer v. Broadwood, 136
Bristow v. Masefield, 27
Broadbent v. Groves; In re Cockcroft, 811
Broadwood; Brewer v., 136
Brown, In re; Ward v. Morse (App.), 524
—— v. Burdett, 52
Buckley's Estate, In re, 439
Bullmore, In re, 456
—— v. Wynter, 456
Bunkell; Walker v. (App.), 596
Burdett; Brown v., 52
Burt; Birt v., 397
—— Stannard v., 355
Bushell, In re; Ex parte Great Western Rail. Co. (App.), 678, 734
——, In re; Ex parte Izard (App.), 678
Butcher v. Pooler (App.), 930

Cable v. Marks, 107
Calvert's Case; In re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (App.), 857
Campden Charities, In re (No 2.), 780
Capital Fire Insurance Association, In re, 20

Carew's Claim; In re Romford Canal Co., 729
Carriage Co-operative Supply Association, In re; Ex parte Clemence, 472
Cattley; Mason v., 478
Chapel House Colliery Co., In re (App.), 934
Chapple, In re; Ex parte Izard (App.), 802
Charles v. Finchley Local Board, 554
Charlton v. Charlton, 971
Chesterfield's (Earl of) Trusts, In re, 958
Clariat; Boddington v., 239
Clark; France v., 362
Clarke; Eastwood v. (App.), 396
—— v. Yorke, 32
Clarke's Estate, In re, 88
Clemence, Ex parte; In re Carriage Co-operative Supply Association, 472
Coaks; Boswell v., 465
Cockcroft, In re; Broadbent v. Groves, 811
Cocks, Ex parte; In re Poole (App.), 63
Colchester, Mayor, &c., of, v. Prestney, 346; (App.), 877
Collyer; Sayers v., 770
Cooper; Balfour v. (App.), 495
——, Hall & Co; Fraser v., 684
Corsellis, In re; Lawton v. Elwes, 399
Cowdell, In re, 246
Coxwell; Wilson v., 975
Cresswell, In re, 798
——; Parkin v., 798
Cumberlege; Fenton v., 756
Cunliffe; Blackburn and District Building Society v. (App.), 92

Darlow; Hickson v., 453
Davies to Jones and Evans, In re, 720
Davis v. Harford, 61
Dawson v. Beeson (App.), 563
De Geere v. Stone, 57
Devala Provident Gold Mining Co. (Lim.), In re; Ex parte Abbott, 434
Dodd; Kelsey v., 34
Donnell v. Bennett, 414
Doodson v. Turner; In re Knowles, 685
Draeger; Hawes v., 449
Dronfield Silkstone Coal Co. (No. 2), In re, 963
Dutton v. Thompson (App.), 661
Dyke, Ex parte; In re Morrish (App.), 570

Eadie v. Addison, 80
Eager, In re, 56
—— v. Johnstone, 56
Earle, In re, 828
Earl of Chesterfield's Trusts, In re, 958
East and West India Dock Co. v. Hill (App.), 44
Eastwood v. Clarke; In re Gadd (App.), 396
Edmonton Union Guardians, In re, 787
Elliot, In re, 222
—— v. Smith, 222
Elwes; Lawton v., 399
Englehart, In re; Ex parte Englehart (App.), 748
Evans; Aylwin v., 105
—— v. Evans, 304
—— v. Jones, 304
Evens; Nichols v., 383
Exchange Banking Co. (Lim.), In re (App.), 217 Exmouth (Viscount) v. Praed, 420
Ex parte Abbott, 434
—— Amor; in re Amor (App.), 138
—— Bishop of Oxford, 724
—— Blaiberg (App.), 461
—— Bolland (App.), 113
—— Clemence, 472
—— Cocks (App.), 63
—— Dyke (App.), 570
—— Englehart (App.), 748
—— Foster (App.), 577
—— French, 48
—— Goodson, 428
—— Great Western Rail. Co. (App.), 734
—— Griffith (App.), 717
—— Hall; In re Wood (App.), 907
—— Harper (App.), 117
—— Hauxwell (App.), 737
—— Hill; In re Bird, 903
—— Hudson (App.), 584
—— Isherwood (App.), 370
—— Izard (App.), 678; 802
—— Jacobson (App.), 561
—— Lister, 774
—— Lovering (App.), 951
—— Nichols (App.), 635
—— Popplewell (App.), 39
—— Price; In re Roberts (App.), 131
—— Reynolds (App.), 223
—— Ritso (App.), 535
—— St. John Baptist College, Oxford (App.), 268
—— Somerville, 438
—— Theys, 29
—— Voisey; In re Knight (App.), 121
—— Walker (App.), 653
—— Webster (App.), 375
—— Wilkinson (App.), 657
—— Willey (App.), 546

Falk; Kemp v. (H.L), 167
Faulkner; Godfrey v., 820
Fearnside v. Flint, 479
Featherstone's Trusts, In re, 75
Fenton v. Cumberlege; In re Mundell, 756
Finchley Local Board; Charles v., 554
Finn; Swainston v., 235
Fitzwater, In re, 83
—— v. Waterhouse, 83
Flint; Fearnside v., 479
Follett v. Pettman, 521
Forester; Upmann v., 946
Foster, Ex parte; In re Foster (App.), 577
——; Green v., 470
Fothergill v. Phillips, 401
France v. Clark, 362
Francis v. Hayward, 12; (App.), 291
Frank Mills Mining Co., In re (App.), 457
Fraser, In re, 469
—— v. Cooper, Hall & Co., 684
——; Yates v., 469
Freer, In re, 301

Freer v. Freer, 301
French, Ex parte; In re Trim, 48
—— ; Leslie v., 762

Gadd, In re; Eastwood v. Clarke (App.), 396
Gaskill; The Attorney-General v., 163
Gaslight and Coke Co. v. Bennett, 98
Gaunt; Speight v. (App.), 503
General Discount and Credit Co. v. Glegg, 297
Gilbert v. Whitfield, 210
Gleadow v. Leetham, 103
Glegg; General Discount and Credit Co. v., 297
Gloag and Miller's Contract, In re, 654
Godfrey, In re, 820
—— v. Faulkner, 820
Godfrey's Trusts, In re, 479
Goodson, Ex parte; In re Alexandra Palace Co., 428
Graham v. Massey; In re Hawthorne, 750
Grant, In re; Walker v. Martineau, 552
Granville, Earl; Marsh v., 189
Great Eastern Rail. Co.; Kensit v., 608
—— Western Rail. Co., Ex parte; In re Bushell, (App.), 734
—— —— —— —— v. Swindon, &c., Rail. Co. (App.), 306
Greaves's Settlement, In re, 753
Green v. Foster, 470
—— v. Humphreys, 659
—— v. Smith, 411, 921
Greer v. Young (App.), 915
Griffith, Ex parte; In re Wilcoxon (App.), 717
Groves; Broadbent v., 811
Grundy; Stanley v., 248
Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society, In re; Calvert's Case; Hawkins's Case; Scott's Case (App.), 857
Guinness v. The Land Corporation of Ireland (App.), 177
Guthrie v. Walrond, 165
Gutteridge; Ross v., 280

Hack v. London Provident Building Society, 225; (App.), 541
Hadley; Joy v., 471
Halifax and Huddersfield Union Banking Co.; Horsfall v., 599
Hall, Ex parte; In re Wood (App.), 907
Hallett to Martin, In re, 804
—— v. The Indian Mamoth Gold Mines Co. (Lim.), 418
Hanbury, In re, 687
Hannay v. Basham, 408
Harford; Davis v., 61
Harman, In re, 808
Harper, Ex parte; In re Tait (App.), 117
Harrald, In re; Wilde v. Walford, 435
Harris v. Jenkins, 437
—— ; Mander v., 680
Harrison v. Leutner, 927
Hartnoll; Blight v. (App.), 672
Harvey v. Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society, 349
Hauxwell, Ex parte; In re Hemingway (App.), 737
Hawes v. Draeger, 449
Hawkins's Case; In re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (App.), 857
Hawthorne, In re; Graham v. Massey, 750
Haygarth's Settlement Trusts, In re, 416
Hayman, In re; Ex parte Pratt (App.), 120
Hayward; Francis v., 12; (App.), 291
Hemingway, In re; Ex parte Hauxwell (App.), 737
Hickson v. Darlow, 453
Hill; East and West India Dock Co. v. (App.), 44
——, Ex parte; In re Bird (App.), 903
Holliday; Watson v. (App.), 543
Holyoake; Willoughby-Osborne v., 331
Homfray v. Phillips (App.), 833
—— ; Phillips v., 401
Hone's Trusts, In re, 295
Hood v. Newby, 204
Hopkins, In re, 736
—— ; Williams v., 736
Horsfall v. Halifax and Huddersfield Union Banking Co., 599
Huddlestone; Miller v., 208
Hudson, Ex parte; In re Walton (App.), 584
Hudson's Trust, In re, 789
Humphreys; Green v., 659
Hutton v. West Cork Rail. Co., 377; (App.), 689

Indian, Kingston and Sandhurst Gold Mining Co. (Lim.), In re, 31
Indian Mamoth Gold Mines Co. (Lim.); Hallett v., 418
In re Adams, 758
—— Adam's Policy Trusts, 642
—— Alexandra Palace Co., 428
—— Alfreton's Trust Estates, 745
—— Alnutt, 299
—— Amor (App.), 138
—— Andros, 793
—— Armitage, 711
—— Barker's Trusts, 565
—— Basham, 408
—— Beck's Settled Estates, 815
—— Bellamy, 89; (App.), 870
—— Berry (App.), 657
—— Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, 777
—— Birmingham Brewing and Malting Distilling Co. (Lim,), 358
—— Birt, 397
—— Blackburn, &c., Benefit Building Society (App.), 894
—— Boddington, 239
—— Braithwaite, 15
—— Brown (App.), 524
—— Buckley's Estate, 439
—— Bullmore, 456
—— Bushell (App.), 678; 734
—— Campden Charities (No. 2), 780
—— Capital Fire Insurance Association, 20
—— Carriage Co-operative Supply Association, 472
—— Chapel House Colliery Co. (App.), 934
—— Chapple (App.), 802
—— Chesterfield's Trusts, 958

—— Clarke's Estate, 88
—— Cockcroft, 811
—— Corsellis, 399
—— Cowdell, 246
—— Cresswell, 798
—— Davis to Jones and Evans, 720
—— Devala Provident Gold Mining Co. (Lim.), 434
—— Dronfield Silkstone Coal Co. (No. 2), 963
—— Eager, 56
—— Earle, 828
—— Edmonton Union Guardians, 787
—— Elliott, 222
—— Englehart (App.), 748
—— Exchange Banking Co. (Lim.) (App.), 217
—— Featherstone's Trusts, 75
—— Fitzwater, 83
—— Foster (App.), 577
—— Frank Mills Mining Co. (App.), 457
—— Fraser, 469
—— Freer, 301
—— Gadd (App.), 396
—— Gloag and Miller's Contract, 654
—— Godfrey, 820
—— Godfrey's Trusts, 479
—— Grant, 552
—— Greaves's Settlement, 753
—— Hallett to Martin, 804
—— Hanbury, 687
—— Harman, 808
—— Harrald, 435
—— Hawthorne, 750
—— Haygarth's Settlement Trusts, 416
—— Hayman (App.), 120
—— Hemingway (App.), 737
—— Hone's Trusts, 295
—— Hopkins, 736
—— Hudson's Trust, 789
—— Indian, Kingston and Sandhurst Gold Mining Co. (Lim.), 31
—— Jakeman's Trusts, 363
—— Jones (App.), 635, 969
—— Kemp's Estate (App.), 950
—— Kirwan's Trusts, 952
—— Knight (App.), 121; 370
—— Knowles, 685
—— Lemann's Trusts, 560
—— Leslie, 762
—— Liddell, 207
—— Lowestoft, The Manor of (App.), 912
—— Mackenzie's Trusts, 726
—— McHenry (App.), 653
—— March, 680
—— Mason, 478
—— Metropolitan and District Railways Act (App.), 268
—— Milan Tramways Co., 29
—— Milford Docks Co., 774
—— Morris (App.), 375
—— Morrish (App.), 570
—— Mundell, 756
—— Mutual Society (App.), 621
—— New Callao Co. (App.), 283
—— Newcastle's, Duke of, Settled Estates, 64
—— Orde (App.), 832
—— Orr Ewing (App.), 529
—— Palmer (App.), 224
—— Parker (App.), 159
—— Patten, 787
—— Payne (App.), 544
—— Phillips' Insurance (App.), 441
—— Photographic Artists' Co-operative Co. (Lim.) (App.), 654
—— Pincoffs (App.), 561
—— Pink (App.), 674
—— Poole (App.), 63
—— Pratt (App.), 120
—— Pumfrey, 228
—— Reynolds (App.), 223; 431
—— Ridler (App.), 343
—— Ritso (App.), 535
—— River Swale Brick and Tile Works (Lim.), 638
—— Roberts (App.), 131
—— Romford Canal Co., 729
—— Roper (App.), 113
—— St. Paul's Schools, Finsbury, 454
—— Sands to Thompson, 406
—— Smith, 411, 921
—— Sneyd, 724
—— South Eastern Rail. Co., 438
—— Speight (App.), 503
—— Stannard, 355
—— Stonor's Trusts, 776
—— Storey (App.), 39
—— Symons, 709
—— Tait (App.), 117
—— Taurine Co. (Lim.), 688
—— Taylor, 728
—— Thomas W. Booker & Co., 784
—— Toomer (App.), 461
—— Tootal's Trusts, 664
—— Trim, 48
—— Vallance's Trusts, 791
—— Wala Wynaad Indian Gold Mining Co., 86
—— Walton (App.), 584
—— Ward (App.), 73
—— Warren's Settlement (App.), 928
—— Watson, Kipling & Co., 473
—— Watts (App.), 209
—— Webster, 767
—— White, 232
—— Wilcoxon (App.), 717
—— Willoughby-Osborne, In re, 331
—— Wright (App.), 546
Ireland, Land Corporation of; Guinness v. (App.), 177
Isherwood, Ex parte; In re Knight (App.), 370
Izard, Ex parte; In re Bushell (App.), 678
—— —— ; In re Chapple (App.), 802

Jackson v. Tyas, 830
—— ; Wallis v., 384
Jacobson, Ex parte; In re Pincoffs (App.), 561
Jakeman's Trusts, In re, 363
Jarvis; Miles v., 796
Jenkins; Harris v., 437
Jervis v. Lawrence, 242
Johnstone; Eager v., 56
Jones, In re; Ex parte Nichols (App.), 635
—— ; Evans v., 304

Jones, Scott & Co. v. Nobel's Explosive Co. (H.L.), 339
Jones's (C.R.) Settled Estates, In re, 969
Joy v. Hadley, 471
Junior Army and Navy Stores; Maple & Co. v. (App.), 67

Kaltenbach v. Lewis (App.), 881
Kelsey v. Dodd, 34
Kemp v. Falk (H.L.), 167
Kemp's Estate, In re (App.), 950
Kennedy; Lyell v. (H.L.), 385
Kensit v. Great Eastern Rail. Co., 608
Kettlewell v. Watson, 818
Kingswood and Parkfield Collieries Co.; Little v. (App.), 56
Kirk v. Todd (App.), 224
Kirwan's Trusts, In re, 952
Kitcat v. Sharp, 134
Knight, In re; Ex parte Voisey (App.), 121
—— In re; Ex parte Isherwood (App.), 370
Knowles, In re; Doodson v. Turner, 685

Ladd v. Puleston, 816 (App.), 976
Lancaster; Mostyn v. (App.), 848
Lawrence; Jervis v., 242
Lawton v. Elwes; In re Corsellis, 399
Leetham; Gleadow v., 102
Lemann's Trusts, In re, 560
Leslie, In re, 762
—— v. French, 762
Leutner; Harrison v., 927
Levinstein; Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v., 704
Lewis; Kaltenbach v. (App.), 881
——; McHenry v., 16; (App.), 325
Liddell, In re, 207
—— v. Liddell, 207
Linger; Tucker v. (H.L.), 941
Lister, Ex parte; In re Milford Docks Co., 774
Little v. Kingswood and Parkfield Collieries Co. (App.), 56
London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co.; Ware v., 198
—— Provident Building Society; Hack v., 225; (App.), 541
Lonsdale; Walsh v. (App.), 2
Loog; Singer Manufacturing Co. v. (App.), 288; (H.L.), 481
Loosemore v. Tiverton and North Devon Rail. Co. (App.), 260
Lovering, Ex parte; In re Murrell (App.), 951
Lowestoft, Manor of, In re (App.), 912
Luke v. Tonkin; In re Symons, 709
Lydney and Wigpool Iron Ore Co. (Lim.) v. Bird, 640
Lyell v. Kennedy (H.L.), 385

McHenry v. Lewis, 16; (App.), 325
——, In re; Ex parte Walker (App.), 653
Mackenzie's Trusts, In re, 726
McLachlan; Angus v., 587
Maddever; Three Towns Banking Co. v., 733
Manchester and Sheffield Rail. Co.; Teebay v., 613
Mander v. Harris; In re March, 680
Mansel v. Norton (App.), 357
Maple & Co. v. Junior Army and Navy Stores (App.), 67
March, In re; Mander v. Harris, 680
Marks; Cable v., 107
Marriott; Peareth v. (App.), 221
Marris; Badham v., 237*n*
Marsh v. Earl Granville, 189
Martineau; Walker v., 552
Masfield; Bristow v., 27
Mason, In re, 478
—— v. Cattley, 478
Massey; Graham v., 750
Mather; Birch v., 292
Mello; Widgen v., 767
Metropolitan and District Railways Act, In re; Ex parte St. John Baptist College, Oxford (App.), 268
—— Board of Works; Spencer v. (App.), 249
Milford Docks Co., In re; Ex parte Lister, 774
Milan Tramways Co., In re; Ex parte Theys, 29
Miles v. Jarvis, 796
Miller v. Huddlestone, 208
——; Mullens v., 380
Morris, In re; Ex parte Webster (App.), 375
Morrish, In re; Ex parte Dyke (App.), 570
Morse; Ward v. (App.), 524
Mostyn v. Lancaster (App.), 848 ——; Taylor v. (App.), 848
Mullens v. Miller, 380
Mundell, In re; Fenton v. Cumberlege, 756
Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society; Harvey v., 349
Murch, In re; Mander v. Harris, 680
——; West of England Bank v., 784
Murrell, In re; Ex parte Lovering (App.), 951
——; Williams v., 631
Mutual Society, In re (App.), 621

Newby; Hood v., 204
New Callao Co. (Lim.), In re (App.), 283
Newcastle's, Duke of, Settled Estates, In re, 643
Nichols, Ex parte; In re Jones (App.), 635
—— v. Evens, 383
Nicholson v. Smith, 191
Nobel's Explosive Co. v. Jones, Scott & Co. (H.L.), 339
Norton; Mansel v. (App.), 357

Ommanney; Robinson v. (App.), 440
Orde, In re (App.), 832
Orr Ewing, In re (App.), 529
—— v. Orr Ewing (App.), 529
Oxford, Bishop of, Ex parte; In re Sneyd, 724

Palmer, In re (App.), 224
Parker, In re (App.), 159
Parkin v. Cresswell, 798
Patten, In re, 787
Payne, In re (App.), 544
——; Randle v. (App.), 546

Peacock; Biggs v. (App.), 1
Peareth v. Marriott (App.), 221
Penley v. Anstruther, 367
Penrice v. Williams, 593
Peruvian Guano Co. v. Bockwoldt (App.), 714
Pettman; Follett v., 521
Phillips' Insurance, In re (App.), 441
—— v. Homfray, 401; (App.) 833
——; Fothergill v., 401
Photographic Artists' Co-operative Co. (Lim.), In re (App.), 654
Pigott; Wilder v., 141
Pincoffs, In re; Ex parte Jacobson (App.), 561
Pink, In re; Ex parte Cocks (App.), 674
Pinnock v. Bailey, 880
Pocock's Claim; In re Romford Canal Co., 729
Poole, In re (App.), 63
Pooler; Butcher v. (App.), 930
Popple v. Sylvester, 54
Popplewell, Ex parte; In re Storey, 38
Pott v. Brassey; In re Allnutt, 299
Praed; Exmouth (Viscount) v., 420
Pratt, Ex parte; In re Hayman, (App.), 120
Prestney; Colchester, Mayor, &c., of, v., 346 (App.), 877
Price, Ex parte; In re Roberts (App.), 131
Puleston; Ladd v., 816; (App.), 976
Pumfrey, In re, 228

Randle v. Payne (App.), 544
Reynolds, Ex parte; In re Reynolds (App.), 223
—— In re; Ex parte Reynolds (App.), 431
Ridler; In re (App.), 343
—— v. Ridler, 343
Ritso, Ex parte (App.), 535
——, In re (App.), 535
River Swale Brick and Tile Works (Lim.), In re (App.), 638
Roberts, In re (App.), 131
——; Stanford v., 50
Robinson v. Barton Local Board (App.), 5
—— v. Ommanney (App.), 440
Rock Portland Cement Co. (Lim.) v. Wilson, 214
Romford Canal Co., In re; Carew's, Pocock's, and Trickett's Claims, 729
Roper, In re; Ex parte Bolland (App.), 113
Ross v. Gutteridge, 280

St. John Baptist College, Oxford, Ex parte; In re Metropolitan and District Railways Act, (App.), 268
St. Paul's Schools, Finsbury, In re, 454
Sands to Thompson, In re, 406
Sayers v. Collyer, 770
Scott's Case; In re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (App.), 857
Secar v. Webb, 832
Sharp; Kitcat v., 134
Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham, 624
Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog (App.), 288; (H.L.), 481
Smith; Elliott v., 222
—— v. Armitage, 11
——; In re, 411, 921
Smith; Green v., 411, 921
——; Nicholson v., 191
——; Wallis v. (App.), 145
—— v. Watts (App.), 209
Sneyd, In re; Ex parte Bishop of Oxford, 724
Soares; Beazley v., 201
Somerville, Ex parte, 438
South Eastern Rail. Co., In re, 438
Speight, In re (App.), 503
—— v. Gaunt (App.), 503
Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works (App.), 249
Spurgeon; Woodhouse v., 825
Stanford v. Roberts, 50
Stanley v. Grundy, 248
Stannard, In re, 355
—— v. Burt, 355
Stone; De Geere v., 57
Stonor's Trusts, In re (App.), 776
Storey, In re; Ex parte Popplewell (App.), 39
Strickland v. Symons, 423
Sutton v. Sutton (App.), 333
Swainston v. Finn, 235
Swindon, &c., Rail. Co.; Great Western Rail. Co. v. (App.), 306
Sylvester; Popple v., 56
Symons, In re; Luke v. Tonkin, 709
——; Strickland v., 423

Tait, In re; Ex parte Harper (App.), 117
Taurine Co. (Lim.), In re, 688
Taylor; In re, 728
—— v. Mostyn (App.), 848
Teebay v. Manchester and Sheffield Rail. Co., 613
Theys, Ex parte; In re Milan Tramways Co., 29
Thomas v. Williams, 603
—— W. Booker & Co., In re, 784
Thompson; Dutton v. (App.), 661
——; Sands to, In re, 406
Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever, 733
Tiverton and North Devon Rail. Co.; Loosemore v. (App.), 260
Todd; Kirk v. (App.), 224
Tomlinson; Ballard v., 656
Tonkin; Luke v., 709
Toomer, In re; Ex parte Blaiberg (App.), 461
Tootal's Trusts, In re, 664
Trickett's Claim; In re Romford Canal Co., 729
Trim, In re; Ex parte French, 48
Tucker v. Linger (H.L.), 941
Turner; Doodson v., 685
——; Wilson v. (App.), 270
Tyas; Jackson v., 830

Upmann v. Forester, 946

Vallance's Trusts, In re, 791
Voisey, Ex parte; In re Knight (App.), 121

Wade v. Wilson, 399
Wala Wynaad Indian Gold Mining Co., In re, 86
Walford; Wilde v., 435
Walker, Ex parte; In re McHenry (App.), 653

—— v. Morse; In re Brown (App.), 524
Ware v. London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co., 198
Warren's Settlement, In re (App.), 928
Waterhouse; Fitzwater v., 83
Watson; Kettlewell v. (App.), 818
——, Kipling & Co., In re, 473
—— v. Holliday (App.), 543
Watts, In re (App.), 209
——; Smith v. (App.), 209
Webb; Seear v., 832
Webster, Ex parte; In re Morris (App.), 375
——, In re; Widgen v. Mello, 767
West Cork Rail. Co.; Hutton v., 377; (App.), 689
West of England Bank v. Murch; In re Booker, 784
Wheater; Wood v., 144
Wheelwright v. Walker, 274
White, In re, 232
—— v. White, 232
——; Thomas v., 603
Willoughby-Osborne, In re, 331
—— v. Holyoake, 331
Wilson v. Coxwell, 975
Wilson; Rock Portland Cement Co. (L 214
—— v. Turner (App.), 270
——; Wade v., 399
Woodhouse v. Spurgeon, 825
Wood, In re; Ex parte Hall (App.), 907
—— v. Wheater, 144
Worcester City and County Banking Co. v. Blick, 228
Wright, In re; Ex parte Willey (App.),
Wynter; Bullmore v., 456

Yates v. Fraser, 469
Yorke; Clarke v., 32
Young; Greer v. (App.), 915
—— v. Wallingford, 590